FUSIONISTS DEFEY THE WILL OF THE MAJORITY

When Comrade Stedman proposed political co-operation at New York, Harriman asked this question: "What assurance can you give us that in this proposition you represent your party?" Stedman replied: "None whatever, except as individuals"—he intending, as did Comrades Haile, Berger and Debs, that the proposition should be submitted to the membership. What did Harriman do then? He entered into a bargain with Carey, Chase, Butcher and Hoehn, with the S. L. P. members of his committee, to organize a new party forthwith and to appropriate or steal the name, Social Democratic. Stedman's authority to speak for his party was called in question, but Mr. Job Harriman, does not hesitate, in the face of the expressed will of a majority of the Social Democratic party, to promote a scheme to steal our name. Social Democrats, now is the time to stand pat!

What was fusion proposed for? To make the strongest possible showing in the political field for Socialism? Not at all. When the opportunity for political co-operation was offered the fusionists, they rejected it with scorn. The plain, cold fact is that fusion was proposed for the sole purpose of capturing or destroying a successful organization. They never wanted union; they were out to head off the growth of Socialism manifested in a harmonious and successful organization not controlled by a New York clique.

It would have been a good thing for the Social Democratic party if the comrades who voted for fusion could have been present at the New York meeting. Many of them were honest, but misguided in their support of a scheme concocted long before the Indianapolis convention. Time will reveal the truth of this and all honest comrades who wanted union, but have not realized that they were being forced into it, will correct their mistakes and retrace their steps.

Ignore the New York report; reject any further overtures for fusion; attend to the business of the Social Democratic party and prepare for the campaign. To branches recently organized: Do not vote on any proposition that comes to you from New York. Now is the time to be loyal to Socialism by upholding the organization of which we are members.

Having failed in their scheme to destroy or deliver the Social Democratic party, the fusionists now dare to defy the will of the majority, repudiate the referendum and attempt the organization of a new party under the same name as that borne for two years by the party they attempted to rape. Social Democrats, stand pat and resent this outrage!

Comrade Stroboll, upon whose report of the New York meeting the action in this paper was based, was present at New York. New Jersey, as will be seen from the report, nominates Comrade Farmer of Texas for vice-president. Let the members be heard from everywhere.

They were not ready for political co-operation with Debs as a candidate, but wanted organic union. What for? If they are not ready to co-operate in the political field, what sort of unity would prevail if the fusion scheme had carried? On with the legitimate work of the Social Democratic party!

What most surprises the editor of The Herald in all this past rumpus is his own extreme moderation and that of his comrades who have had the audacity to stand by the work they have done against the sinister schemes of a few destructionists under the guise of unity.

If anybody has anything unusually false, mean and contemptible to say of Social Democrats opposed to the fusion deal, who have labored for the party since its organization, they can get it published in the Workers' Gall or the Volkszeitung People. No charge for this notice.

The Herald is published in the interest of the Social Democratic party. It is open to all friends of the party and the Socialist movement and closed to all others. Organize branches and push the subscriptions.

Immediately following the last meeting at New York, the comrades there held a meeting with Debs, Haile, Berger, McCartney and Stedman present, and, amid great enthusiasm, started a fund for campaign purposes with contributions amounting to $127.

The decision of a majority of the members voting on the question of fusion is final and conclusive. It stands as the expression of the will of the party.

No other vote will be taken on the question. The matter is settled. Are you loyal?

Over eighty new branches of the party organized since the convention testify to the esteem and confidence in which it is held by sensible people everywhere. That is more organizing than the fusionists have done in twenty months.

In the East some members of the S. L. P. joined branches of our party since the Indianapolis convention and before any vote was taken for the sole purpose of influencing the same. This is in complete accord with S. L. P. tactics.

Social Democrats know where to turn for reliable men. There is a boom started for Comrade Farmer for vice-presidential candidate of the Social Democratic party. He has been named by New Jersey and Texas.

The New York counterfeit of the Social Democratic party is founded upon defiance of the will of the majority of the Social Democratic party of America. Look out for counterfeits and repudiate tricksters.

The fusionists in both parties have not been following a policy, but working a game, and the game began months before the Indianapolis convention.

The comrades at Saginaw, Mich., write that "since the Social Democratic party will go it alone, we are ready to do our part."

Eugene V. Debs is the candidate of the Social Democratic party for president.

After all, a one-man party, if such were possible, is better than a party of traders.

DEFEAT THE ATTEMPT

To the members of the Social Democratic party in Massachusetts, greeting:

At a regular meeting of Branch No. 29, of Massachusetts, held May 25, 1900, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas, A vote by referendum is the highest authority by which any question can be decided in the Social Democratic party; and

"Whereas, Any attempt to overthrow such a vote is absolutely contrary to the spirit of Socialism, and a violation of the principles of democracy, and dishonorable from a moral point of view; and

"Whereas, During the recent controversy in regard to union with the S. L. P. faction and the vote upon it, our national executive board has conducted itself with perfect fairness and justice to all members, no matter what their views may be; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we affirm our entire confidence in the national executive board and our firm and unalterable resolution to abide by the decision of the referendum in refusing all union with the S. L. P. faction at the present time and under the proposed conditions; and we also condemn the action of those comrades who have repudiated the decision of the referendum by participating in the unity committee meeting in New York on May 20 and in taking part in the formation of a new party.

"We call upon you, comrades, as true Social Democrats, to join with us in this stand and rally to the support of our party. The present is a critical time in its history. Now is the time that its loyal and faithful members must stand firm to preserve it from the attacks of its enemies without and within. The party which has made such rapid progress during its brief career is the movement which is destined to free the wage slaves of America, and it would be a crime to allow it to be torn into pieces by faction and treachery. Let us solemnly promise to one another that this shall not be, and that we shall not permit it to perish from the face of the earth."

Signed in behalf of Branch No. 29, of Massachusetts. W. M. BIGGS, Secretary.

Labor vs. Capital
Labor cannot compete with capital in the legislature.

Nearly every member of the legislature is an agent of capitalism, elected by votes of labor.

Capital marches through the front door of the legislature, while labor can't rap at the back door.

This is because labor doesn't know itself.

Capital has its lobbyists, agents, engineers and "Black Horse Cavalry" to watch the legislature. Labor hasn't.

Within sight of the legislature, capital keeps what it calls the "stuff." Labor has none to spare.

Capital brings "pressure" to bear upon members whom it suspects. There would be fun if labor tried "pressure."—Newcastle (Pa.) Tribune.

In New York state 910 persons were killed and nearly 40,000 crippled in shops, factories and industrial pursuits in the year 1899. In the war with Spain 280 Americans were killed and 1,557 wounded. Based on the figures the total of killed and injured annually in the industrial pursuits of the United States would be nearly 20,000 killed and 900,000 injured.

The local authorities of Hamburg have forbidden a meeting there because the speeches were to be made in Polish. But there is no law saying that German is the only language to be used at meetings.

VOTE ON THE CONSTITUTION

The following constitution is submitted to the membership for a referendum vote. It was adopted at the Indianapolis convention to be referred to the members for approval or rejection. Branches are requested to take it up at once and report action through their local secretaries to the national secretary, 126 Washington street, Chicago, not later than June 23. The question is on the adoption or rejection of the constitution as it stands, and the vote must be Yes or No.

NATIONAL ORGANIZATION.

Section 1. This organization shall be known as the Social Democratic Party of America, and its headquarters shall be located at such place as the national conventions of the party may appoint, or as may be fixed by the National Executive Board subject to a referendum vote.

Section 2. The Social Democratic Party of America shall be organized as follows: First—Local branches limited to five hundred members each.

Second—A National Executive Board of nine members, five of whom shall be chosen from territory convenient to the national headquarters, and shall be called "resident members," and the remaining four shall be chosen, so far as possible, from other parts of the country. All members of the Executive Board shall have equal rights and powers; but the resident members shall have power to act and a majority of said resident members shall constitute a quorum. The non-resident members shall not be required to be present at all meetings of the board, but shall be kept advised of all proceedings of the board. The Executive Board shall be elected by the national convention.

Third—The form of state organizations shall be left to the branches in the respective states.

EXECUTIVE BOARD.

Section 3. The Executive Board shall have supervision of the party organization, and shall have power to provide such rules, issue such orders and adopt such measures as may be required to carry out the object of the organization; provided, that no action shall be taken which will conflict with the constitution and declaration of principles.

Section 4. The National Secretary, Treasurer and editor of the national organ, and such other officers as may be required, shall be elected, and their salaries fixed by the Executive Board, to be approved by the direct vote of the party members through the referendum; and they and each of them may be removed by the Executive Board, subject to such referendum.

Section 5. The office of National Secretary and Treasurer may be held by the same person. Such Secretary and Treasurer shall make a report of the financial standing of the party semi-annually, to be given to the branches, and shall make a report to the Executive Board whenever required by it.

Section 6. Members of the Executive Board shall receive no compensation for their services. They shall hold annual and stated meetings at times to be fixed by the Board, and such special meetings as may be required; reasonable notice shall be given to each of the members of the Executive Board of all meetings.

Section 7. Any member of the National Executive Board may be removed, and his successor elected by a referendum vote, as hereinafter provided. All vacancies in the Executive Board, however occurring, shall be filled by the remaining members of the board, subject to a referendum vote.

Section 8. At each annual meeting of the board the officers of the board shall render complete reports of the transactions of their several offices, and transmit a copy thereof to each local branch.

REVENUES AND FUNDS.

Section 9. The revenue of the organization shall be derived from an admission fee of twenty-five cents for each member, and quarterly dues of twenty-five cents for each member, payable in advance on the first days of January, April, July and October.

Section 10. The funds of the organization shall be deposited in such bank or banks as the board may direct; and the National Secretary and Treasurer shall be required to execute a bond for the faithful performance of his duties in such an amount as the board may require.

OFFICIAL PAPER.

Section 11. This organization shall continue the publication of the official paper, called the Social Democratic Herald, under the supervision of the Executive Board. Each member of the organization shall be entitled to a copy of the official paper in consideration of the payment of quarterly dues.

Section 12. The columns of the national organ shall be open at all times to reasonable criticism and discussion of party matters by members of the party.

NATIONAL CONVENTIONS.

Section 13. The national conventions of the organization shall be held quadrennially at some date prior to the first of June, and at such place as shall be decided upon by the National Executive Board, subject to referendum vote.

REFERENDUM.

Section 14. The National Executive Board may submit any question to a referendum vote of all the members of the party in good standing. The referendum vote may also be had upon the petition of ten local branches addressed to the National Executive Board, requesting such board to submit any proposition therein specified to such referendum vote; and upon the receipt of such petition said board shall forthwith so submit such proposition.

Upon the submission of any proposition to a referendum vote not less than three weeks shall be allowed for amendments to such proposition; and not less than six weeks, after the expiration of said three weeks, shall be allowed for the transmission of the votes to the Executive Board; provided, that if the votes transmitted by all the branches in good standing shall have been received by the board before the expiration of such time, the board shall announce the result of such vote forthwith.

LOCAL BRANCHES.

Section 15.—Any respectable person who subscribes to the principles of the Social Democratic Party and severs all connection, and renounces allegiance to all other political parties, shall be eligible to membership.

Section 16. A local branch shall consist of not less than five, and not more than five hundred members. Branches shall fix their own quorum.

Section 17. Any person desiring membership shall make application to the local branch, upon being recommended by a member of said branch. And if accepted by a majority vote, shall be enrolled as a member. Upon objection to his admission being made, the matter shall be referred by the branch to the Central Committee of the locality, which shall have power to act in the matter. In case the decision of the local committee shall be against the applicant, upon appeal by the said person, or by the branch to which he has applied, the National Executive Board shall have power of final action in the matter.

Section 18. Any member of good standing in one branch may, upon the request, be transferred to another branch; and the Secretary of the branch in which he holds his membership shall, for that purpose, furnish him with a transfer card.

Section 19. A member in good standing may terminate his or her membership by obtaining from the Secretary of such branch the card of withdrawal.

Section 20. Each member shall be entitled to a card of membership, to be furnished by the National Executive Board, and issued to the members by the Secretary of the local branch.

DUES AND FEES.

Section 21. The admission fee which shall accompany each application for membership shall be twenty-five cents, which shall be forwarded to the National Executive Board.

Section 22. The dues of the members shall be fixed by the branch; but such dues shall be sufficient to include twenty-five cents per quarter, to be paid on the first day of January, April, July and October in each year to the National Executive Board.

Section 23. At the close of each meeting of a local branch the Treasurer thereof shall transmit to the National Secretary the names of all members admitted at said meeting, their postoffice addresses, and a remittance by postal money order of their admission fee.

Section 24. A member admitted on or before the middle of a quarter shall pay dues for the full quarter. A member admitted after the middle of a quarter shall be exempt for that quarter.

Section 25. On or before the fifth day of each quarter the Treasurer of each local branch shall remit by postal money order the quarterly dues for the current quarter to the National Executive Board, and each local branch shall be responsible for and remit the full amount due for the entire membership of the branch.

Section 26. The officers of the branch shall consist of a Secretary, Treasurer and Organizer, and such other officers as may be determined by the branch; said officers shall be elected at each annual meeting and serve until their successors are qualified. They shall perform such duties as appertain to their several offices, and as the local branch may direct. Any officer of the branch may be removed by a majority vote of the members of the branch.

Section 27. Each local branch shall hold at least one business meeting a month, and such other meetings as they may see fit.

Section 28. At the annual meeting the officers shall submit complete reports of the transactions of their several offices for the preceding year.

Section 29. Branches shall be numbered with reference to states, the numbers to be assigned by the National Executive Board.

Section 30. The National Executive Board shall issue a charter to each branch, which charter may be suspended or revoked by the National Executive Board in case of violation of the laws, principles or regulations of the organization, subject to referendum vote.

Section 31. Persons intending to organize a new local branch shall apply to the then existing city or state committee of the locality where said branch is to be located, for its endorsement; and upon receiving such endorsement shall forward to the National Executive Board their application, together with the names and addresses of the proposed members, and their admission fees and dues. The National Executive Board shall thereupon, if they find the application in regular form, issue a charter to such person.

In case their shall be no such Central Committee the application shall be made direct to the National Executive Board.

Section 32. The local branch may adopt such by-laws as the majority of its members may determine, provided they do not conflict with this constitution or the platform and declaration of principles of the party.

Section 33. Any member violating the laws or principles of the organization may be suspended or expelled by a two-thirds vote of the members in good standing of the local branch of which he is a member; provided, that any charges against such member shall be preferred in writing, and the accused shall be entitled to a fair trial. The person so accused, if dissatisfied with the decision of the local branch, may appeal to the National Executive Board, and the person or persons preferring such charges shall have a like appeal to the National Executive Board. The action of the Executive Board on such case shall be final.

Section 34. This constitution shall be in force and effective from and after its endorsement by a majority in a referendum vote of the membership of the party in good standing.

Section 35. This constitution may be amended by a referendum vote as hereinabove provided.

Section 36. Under no circumstances shall the Social Democratic Party fuse with or act with any other political party, either in national or local elections, unless such party shall have substantially the same platform and principles as the Social Democratic Party.

"IF MEN WERE ONLY GOOD" INDIVIDUAL SALVATION HUMBUG

By Rev. Chas. H. Vall

It is a common error to suppose that if men were only good the evils that afflict society would disappear. This fallacy is due to a failure to trace the evils to their source. Assuming that the social and industrial ills result from the perversity of human nature, they inform us that we need only to make men good and the problem would be solved. "Good men," they say, "would make good conditions." Just what is meant by "good conditions" we are not informed. But judging from observation, the conditions which such men make are only such as minister to the well-being of the dominant class. Their morality is merely conventional—one that meets the requirements of the present system of industry. The demand to put such good men in office is only that the present system of government may be administered in accordance with the ideas of right, etc., which are the reflex of the present economic system. Those making this demand have no idea of altering in any way economic relations or changing the present capitalist method of production. They merely desire a better management of public affairs. This is laudable enough in itself, but to suppose that it is sufficient to remedy the social and economic evils from which we suffer is to evidence gross ignorance of the whole question. Were we to place men in office who are corruption-proof, it would not remedy the situation, for the evils from which we suffer are inherent in the system itself. The mere making men good, whether they occupy a private or public position, will not in itself make such conditions as will remove the cause of poverty and eliminate the evils which afflict humanity. The fact of a man's being good and well disposed does not imply a knowledge of the economic question, and consequently of the means necessary to secure justice and plenty for all.

The cause of social and economic evils today is due to the private ownership of the means of production and distribution. Here is the basis of servitude and exploitation. The private ownership of these means enables some to levy a tax of tribute upon the labor of others. Yet many a man called "good" appropriates the product of others' labor under the title of rent, interest and profit, apparently wholly in ignorance of the fact that he is living thus in idleness at the expense of his fellows. He does not perceive the moral wrong, because moral ideas, right, etc., are the reflex of the prevailing economic system—in other words, the ruling ideas of any age are the ideas of its ruling class, or those ideas are interpreted by it to suit its class interests. Thus under slavery it was considered right to own human beings as private property, just as today, under capitalism, it is considered right to own the instruments of production as private property.

A man's being good, then, does not insure that he will apprehend injustice and lend himself to its abolition. All men might be good, a la Rockefeller and Wanamaker, but so long as the means of livelihood are privately owned poverty and want will stalk hand in hand through the land.

It is not my purpose here to consider the quality of this good; suffice it to say that really good men can best be produced and kept good in good, healthy conditions. Those who talk about "making good men and good men making better conditions" put the cart before the horse. If it good, healthy conditions that make good men, rather than the reverse; the environment is the chief factor in shaping the man. Men's conduct toward each other is primarily determined by their economic relations. Under the present system of antagonisms, the brotherhood of man is an idle dream. Surround men with an environment where their interests are identical, and the conditions will inevitably produce good men. Those who reverse the process have failed to grasp the fact of the economic basis of progress. The economic structure of society at any given time forms the real basis of society and explains, in the last analysis, the whole superstructure of social relations.

A comprehension of this economic truth reveals the absurdity of those who imagine that all that is necessary to bring in the golden age is merely to make men good. We need to supplement the moral purpose with economic knowledge. We need intelligent men as well as men with good intentions—men with sufficient insight into the economic question to enable them to direct their efforts aright.

Socialists do not disparage any effort to make men better, but they call attention to the fact that individual salvation is no remedy for social ills. When the evil is social, it can only be remedied by social readjustment. Personal goodness may uplift the individual, but there is no assurance that he will remain uplifted, for as soon as he becomes plunged into the corrupt competitive environment he is almost sure to become contaminated. Socialism will produce the only good conditions—conditions that will not only make men good but keep them good.

REPLY TO INGALLS'S SILLY NONSENSE

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK JOURNAL BY REQUEST BUT NOT PUBLISHED

By Eugene V. Brewster

Before a man is competent to judge of the possibility or the impossibility of Socialism he should first know what Socialism is. This, Mr. John Ingalls does not. He may be able to give a dictionary definition, but his paper "Socialism is Impossible" (Journal, May 6) shows an utter misconception and an astonishing misinformation on the subject. This is why Socialism has not more friends.

Mr. Ingalls begins by erecting a house of glass which he calls "Socialism." With boyish glee he proceeds to demolish it and then with eminent self-satisfaction he proudly shows us the ruins.

Strip the essay of its charming rhetoric and beauty of expression, forget the masterly intellect and fascinating character that penned it, and what is there left but a conglomeration of misstatements and silly nonsense?

Mr. Ingalls' argument against our Socialistic postoffice is so old that it cannot stand alone. It has been answered so many times so conclusively that it is surprising to see it resurrected—especially by a statesman. He forgets that the errors and evils of the mail service are all traceable to the individualism of the natural monopolies that have not yet been nationalized. So long as we have railroads and the other means of distribution owned by private individuals we cannot hope for much better postal service, but when we consider the educational work being done by the department, the enormous amount of free government literature distributed, the extremely low rates for newspapers, books and magazines; when we consider the fact that privately owned railroads criminally swindle the department of millions every year, and that the government has no railroads of its own with which to perfect the service, we are inclined to be more charitable, and only wonder that we get such excellent service at such low cost, and with such a small annual deficit. Socialism would take over the railroads and thus it would destroy the corrupter, the briber and the criminal that now stand in the way of a perfect service.

Mr. Ingalls does not state precisely whether he favors competition in preference to co-operation, but if he does, perhaps he would destroy the present postal organization and go back to individual enterprise where every man is to deliver his own mail. That would be absolute individualism. But if he favors co-operation, what more perfect co-operation is possible than for the government to own and operate the railroads along with the other essentials in the postal service, such as the telephone, the telegraph, the manufacture and operation of printing presses, paper mills, etc.?

But to return to the straw man that Mr. Ingalls created and with which he so heroically and victoriously wrestled. The Socialism that he conceives is indeed impossible. No Socialist ever claimed that there is some power in society above and beyond individuals, and that government is an independent political being. Socialists believe in co-operation. In order to get the best co-operation they hold that society must be organized. This organization is at present called government. Government is not or should not be simply a president, a congress, etc., but all the people. Mr. Ingalls believes in co-operation because he believes in the trust, in the railroad, in public schools, in public highways, etc. He does not recognize the trend of evolution from individualism to collectivism, from single effort to solidarity, from competition to co-operation. The only quarrel we Socialists have with the trust is that we are not in one, and we propose that all shall be stockholders in all the trusts. The only question is, shall all the people co-operate for the benefit of all, or shall we permit only Mr. Rockefeller and a few others to do all the co-operating? Shall we go back to the time of the cliff-dwellers and have a lot of isolated, individual units all working in different directions, or shall we all combine our efforts to get the greatest yield from mother earth with the least possible effort? Shall we encourage a class of idle parasites who consume without producing, or shall we all co-operate in the business of supplying the human family with food, clothes and shelter? Yes, "the race is to the swift, the battle to the strong" now; but should it, need it, be so? Need there be a Man with the Hoe? Need there be Plenty and Poverty working hand in hand? Is there not enough for all, and can we not co-operate so that all will have plenty?

Mr. Ingalls entirely loses sight of the fact that the workingman's former individual tools have been replaced by social machinery. So long as a class owns these instruments of production there must be a class struggle, there must be injustice, inequality, strife and discord. Production now being socially performed, the product must go to the producers, and this cannot be till the instruments are owned by society collectively. Then, and not till then, will the producer get the full product of his toil. Then there will be universal co-operation in the food, clothes and shelter business. There will be competition, yes, but not competition for gold, but competition for applause and approval, which have always been man's greatest incentive and reward. There will be competition, but it will be not competition in getting, but competition in doing.

AMONG THE TOILERS

The twenty-five Italians who were arrested for inciting a riot during the strike at the Cornell dam have been discharged by the court before which they were arraigned. This outcome of the affair has a curious appearance. If the men were guilty, they should be punished. If they did not incite riot, the question naturally will be asked whether they were arrested for the effect upon the other strikers.

There are said to be 6,000,000 working people in the German empire, 800,000 of whom are connected with trade unions. Socialists have fifty-seven representatives in the reichstag, agitating labor interests.

The trade unionists of England have filed a petition containing 85,000 signatures declaring that the South African war is purely capitalistic aggression and is not favored by the working people.

A truant officer at Daleville, Ind., found a number of children 14 years old and under who attended school all day and then worked until 2 o'clock next morning in the glass works.

Full returns from the Typographical union election show the defeat of President Donnelly for re-election. Mr. James Lynch of Syracuse, N. Y., will be the next president.

A new machine in the shoe industry is being developed with which, it is claimed, one operator will do the work of five. The shoe machinery trust owns the new tool.

One judge alone had 400 cases before him on May day in which landlords desired to have their moneyless tenants dumped into the streets of New York.

The street-railway strike and boycott which was carried on in London, Ont., all last summer and fall is again being waged and the people are walking.

The by-election for member of parliament in the district of Nuremberg, Germany, resulted in the triumph of the Socialists by a large majority.

THE ETHICS OF THE FUTURE A CONJECTURE AND A HOPE

By Peter E. Burrows

The men who today are aware of the hideousness of our commercial anarchy, whose hearts have been touched, whose souls, quickened by the spark of social intellect which comes from God to us, through society, are not rebels, warriors, nor leaders in physical revolts. We are just thinkers, no more and yet enough; passive men whose place in the world it is to yield social thoughts out of this night of chaos, to the future, and the future will grow its own institutions from these seed thoughts of ours. Individuals as passive thinkers may and can help the civilization of the world; but individuals, as doers and willers from their own initiative, have always hindered and can do no other than hinder the progress of the race. Men must learn to think collectively and obey individually. When I commenced to think on these things I hastily concluded that because the environmentalists or practical socialists were for the most part also acknowledged non-religionists, therefore Socialism and religion were in conflict with each other, but I clung nevertheless to both, for I felt too deeply that both were true. Now I know that men like Owen, Marx and Morris were not in revolt against God, but against individualism. Realized or not realized, uttered or not uttered, the output of personalism was the common object of their disgust, their moral and intellectual resistance.

The ethics of the future collective society will be religious by recognizing this new revolutionary truth that all true life lies outside of the ego, both as to the source of its origination and the immediate object of its leading.

The social or divine germ can reach the individual cell only through its environments, and knowing this, the future society will bring every individual into touch with the same environments.

The intellectual activity of the world coming will, instead of wasting itself producing the weeds of self-culture or individualism, be devoted entirely to the improving of our old and the creating new and better environments—the good, the better and the best ethics being known and measured only by this rule. That which establishes familiarity and fellowship with people, with more people, with most people, and which is maintained while engaged in the business of the common life, making environments for the citizens, it will be a mechanical age because it shall be a spiritual age, vehemently longing for concrete expression, calling all else vanity. The abolition of all private business out of the world would follow one year's taste of any decent human co-operative order.

The individualist always has been and is now an anarchist, holding but hollow truce with society, and he must be disarmed. But the mental attitude of the new man will be loyal self-denial and true conservative public affirmation. Beside this, how contemptible will soon appear the ethics of individualism? Not all the subtlety of the phrase masters from the Pope to Herbert Spencer will suffice to conceal the sordid rags of selfishness when once this truth is flashed upon humanity. A society it will be of courageous democracy, of freedom of intercourse and an open-door life in which there will be no good society and no bad society, where each will be looking after everybody else's business because the unit will not have any business of his own, a whistling, singing, sawing, hammering, painting, plowing, reaping life; a frank, unpretentious, non-secretive, open-browed life where no one has any false reputation to prop, no pretended virtues to tap and no vices to conceal, a society whose vices and virtues are collective only and will be seen alone in its public works, a society whose unit men and unit women are but mechanics to think the social thought and do the social deed. A society which, bringing its individuals down to red earth, has no more room for shams and hypocrites, it will grow neither saints nor sinners; a society where each is taking root in all, a society believing its individuals to be each morally and intellectually nil, and yet holding the race itself to be the body of God; and the mind of the race to be all that is accessible to us in this aeon of the very God indeed. Such a race will cleanse itself and make its homes and cities as beautiful as ever Solomon desired to make the temple, and the units of such a race will socialize and beautify themselves that some of the race thoughts may come into them. A society all of whose better thoughts will be expressed in social and permanent operations.

Our preparation for such an age must be for a long time to come, I suppose, negative; an interregnum of self-repudiation of repealing, denying, revising,

I know not when we shall as units learn to affirm with that great life, but we can deny for it now.

The individual of this society is not in any sense a moral agent, not even a rational agent in his own affairs, until he becomes converted to public life; that is, a social man; the soul or mind of the race is the one active potential energy in all that pertains to intellect and to virtue; the individual man having no more productive kinship germane to virtue and public reason than does the brow of him who wears a civic chaplet of flowers bear to the flowers which society has for a moment placed upon his brow; it is a benediction from without.

Whoever has made religion a subject of critical observation as a student will recognize the truth that through all ages, among all races, and under all climatic conditions, it carries this one sentiment or experience, viz.: a mistrust of and dissatisfaction with the individual's moral sufficiency. This venerable unfaith in self is the holiest and the most resuructive of human convictions; it is as much a part of mankind as his bones; it is the framework, the foundational perception upon which all ethic achievement must rest.

In the hands of the priests, however, this mistrust became a partial depravity and was misused, as every other good has been misused, to make chains, saints and heroes with. On the other hand, the democracy of ethics will assert of the individual that he is merely nil, having no innate moral perceptions, only as he stands with or is influenced by a crowd of humans; that sin, his sin, is nothing but the social inertia of an isolate without sympathetic or moral affinities, an atom that can glow in the social fire, though it cannot burn, but which at last acquires from its environments a social consciousness, turning it from a dead isolate to a social man—an immortal life.

If the individual life be ethically nil whence the run amuck, the moral rough riding of ego through society? Ego is like unto a great stone misshapen and set in motion by social contact; it cannot roll uniformly; it wobbles and pitches over itself egregiously, being harmful only as it is a contiguous thing. He rolls over toes without malice pre-pense, having no pre-pense. He is only an incarnation of the inept, and the stupid; the social sight, outline or movement are not yet his; he is only self-conscious. At first not even that. The inertia of him to the many hands that needs must push him aside, developed in time into a push-back, but not against society per se, it is only a general push back against everything; this is the primary self-consciousness of the savage man. Of the genus Roosevelt which in process of time develops into a sense of othering and grouping in family, village, church, city, class consciousness and in the social manhood.

But the atomic life is not a social resistant of itself that were to give it an attribute inconsistent with nil. It is other atomic lives only that provoke the savage ego into the competing resistant; it makes no war upon the social, for it knows its rest is there, it is one note of music on one string, and it becomes conscious of the joy of being when at last it finds its place in a harmony. It is in the strife of competing and overcoming other atomic lives that the anarch individualist is developed. A number of persons present in this place, converging their united attention, interest, sympathy or indignation upon me constitutes on this occasion, here and now the ethic of the race. I use the word ethic in the sense of a moral and intellectual force acting upon me as its subjective; converging upon my life and causing me to think and say and do things that are socially organic and right. This force has no verbal definition; it is the un verbal reality of the human life and cannot but remain un verbalized while the mind and moral of the race is broken by individualism, conflict and anarchy. Religion has been trying to lip it; poetry has sought to throb it forth in words; music and the arts have followed after it, wrestling for its name till the break of day, but it has been forced to keep silent till the age was made ready for it—today that name is Socialism.

Thoughts are the things of life, or the thing makers if you will and the king makers. The commonwealth of the future will be a commonwealth of true organic thoughts crystallized into social forms of deed and word, just as the civilizations of the past have been composites of bastard inorganic thoughts held together by force and fraud and called society; of such thoughts is com-

NOTES AND COMMENT

Here is an interesting editorial paragraph from the Chicago Press—and it's no lie:

"The twine factory in the Kansas penitentiary is playing havoc with the profits of the binding twine trust. Warden Tomlinson says the farmers of Kansas, in buying twine made by the state, will save 2 cents a pound, or an aggregate of $200,000 this year. The Sunflower state has discovered and applied the cure for trust extortion. The remedy would work equally well in many other lines of production, and it is not necessary that the operatives in such plants should first commit a crime in order to become available anti-trust crusade."

There is no single industry from making twine to furnishing the house and supplying the table that Socialism could not operate without making criminals as capitalist production does.

Such occurrences as that at St. Louis, in which some of the striking street-railway men are reported to have taken part, are deplorable in the extreme and not to be condoned even by those in closest sympathy with the men. These exhibitions of passion and degradation are most repugnant to Socialists; there should be no attempt to excuse them. And yet neither should it be forgotten that these men, like their fellows in all parts of the world, are engaged in a terrific struggle for an existence. While the capitalist system lasts men who have no opportunity to gain a livelihood, except as a charity dribble from capitalists, will revolt. Resistance to tyranny may be obedience to God, but there are actions that hurt labor's cause. Let them be avoided.

"If," says the St. Louis Republic, "the various Socialistic organizations outside the democratic party and fusion populists could be combined into one party with the support of the more than million union workmen, it would immediately become a most formidable factor in national politics, controlling some states and with the balance of power in many others. Such a party is not an impossibility, but even a probability, before the campaign of 1904." The party is already here that union men will support. It is the Social Democratic party. Its candidate for president is Eugene V. Debs.

The Buffalo Express, noting that Kansas needs 20,000 men to harvest her wheat crop, says "it is a pity that the unemployed of the great cities cannot be turned into the grain fields of that state," and hopes that "when Socialism rules the land free transportation on the railways will be given to the poor." When Socialism gets that far it will probably make the most effective possible use of all modern machinery in gathering crops, rather than transport human beings like cattle merely to put them to work. Socialism will see that the people get grain, too.

The contract price for meals furnished to prisoners at Chicago police stations, formerly 25 cents a meal, has been cut down to 15 cents, and $150 a month saved to the city. This economy ought to go a little further. Fifteen cents for a meal! Why, this is public extravagance! Really, there are thousands of "free citizens" walking the streets of Chicago without the price of a 15-cent meal in their clothes.

A Washington dispatch tells us that the bosses of the republican party don't want "to alarm conservative business interests," though it is necessary to do something on the trust issue to offset the Bryan movement. Since the leaders of the Bryan movement, and more particularly Mr. Bryan himself, do not want to alarm conservative business interests, they should get together where they belong and set up one cry for the preservation of the "holy rights of property."

Here comes that name Fairbanks again! Senator Fairbanks is to prepare the republican anti-trust plank. Fairbanks? Where did he come from? Did he formerly live in Illinois?

Socialists adopt certain fixed principles and adhere to them. These principles, put into practice in industry and society, will free the workers from the slavery of capitalist production. Republican and democratic politicians adopt certain political planks, like anti-trust declarations to land suckers on. Adherence to these planks by the workers keep them in subjection to their capitalist masters.

The increase of the Socialist vote in Belgium over six years ago, as shown by the last election, is about 140,000. This "foreign importation" has remarkable vitality at home in some places. But watch and see the greater increase abroad—in the United States. It's just as well to know what it is, for it's coming, sartin!

Great Britain is in possession of the mines, and the cause of the war is thus removed, or passes into other hands. Now, let there be a special season in the English church for returning thanks to Almighty God for the triumph of British arms in the glorious cause of civilization.

So long as the Standard Oil company can sell oil that costs to produce only 2.9 cents a gallon at 18 cents, there should be no difficulty about big dividends, and Mr. Rockefeller will be enabled to continue his contributions to the spread of the gospel which teaches that the poor shall be rewarded "over there."

In the Italian elections last Sunday the Socialists all wore red neckties, and the women, wearing red carnations, handed the voters Socialist pamphlets on entering the polling places. Report says the Socialists elected eleven deputies and made great gains.

A constitutional amendment to deal with trusts proposed just as congress is about to adjourn is only offered for campaign purposes to fool the gullible voters.

It is pleasant to know that Lord Roberts, the successful butcher of South Africa, is in full sympathy with the things taught by the Galilean carpenter.

The administration of Cuban affairs has apparently been on the principle that whoever could get his hand on public money was entitled to keep it.

The Chinese government, which is having much trouble in suppressing the "boxers," should turn the job over to the editor of this paper.

The turn of events in the iron and steel industry seems to lend justification to the views of the late lamented Magnate Gates.

The big cotton slump is a "baleful" warning to the prosperity howlers who have got to have funds to re-elect Bro. McKinley.

Think of it—an anti-trust proposition from the republican party!

If this collapse of big concerns goes on, what will Hanna do for funds?

The Cuban frauds are the logical result of Hannaism.

KEEP TAB ON THE FUSIONISTS AND BOLTERS

Against the will of a majority of their own party, regularly expressed by a referendum vote, five members of the committee appointed at Indianapolis for the purpose of effecting a union of the Socialist forces, which union was effectually prevented by the perfidy of the S. L. P. committee, propose to force their scheme for fusion, not in the interest of Socialism and their national organization, but to promote their individual and local interests. This is what they call loyalty to the Socialist cause. Reject all overtures coming from them. They are a disgrace to Socialism.

While Job Harriman is recalling the incidents of the past three or four months in public talk, he should not omit to tell the people what was the procuring cause of the "unity issue" and fiasco, viz., his own individual failure to do the thing at New York that he promised at Indianapolis he would do. He may talk as much as he pleases, but no amount of talk can obscure the fact that he agreed to do a certain thing he did not do. Harriman is responsible for the fiasco. His subsequent prattle about "spirits" cannot cover the hideousness of his own guilt.

Bear the fact in mind that half a dozen Social Democrats who are now co-operating with a committee of the S. L. P. to capture or destroy the Social Democratic party are doing so in open and flagrant defiance of the will of the majority expressed in a referendum vote. They have repudiated the majority judgment of their own party. Their names are J. F. Carey, J. C. Chase, G. A. Hoehn, W. Butcher and W. P. Lonergan.

It is not true that the S. D. P. in New York and other states mentioned is working with the fusionists. It is true that a few individuals who propose to ignore and repudiate a majority vote of their party are working together with the S. L. P. promise-breakers and diplomats to destroy, if possible, an organization which they have failed to deliver. New York branches all stand pat.

"Before the tribunal of honest and unprejudiced opinion he made his plea," says the Haverhill Social Democrat in a report of a meeting held in New York at which Harriman spoke. The plea was against the charge of having "broken his pledge," and the applause, the report intimates, left no doubt that the verdict was that Harriman didn't do it. All this in the Haverhill Social Democrat, whose editor knows that the pledge was made and broken!

The "spirit" of the S. L. P. is permeating the eastern segment of the S. D. P. in fine style, as witness the following from a speech by Leonard D. Abbott in New York: "The hands of the Debs-Berger faction are red with the most dastardly crime ever committed against the cause." Just think of a union with that "spirit"! Gee! What a time we would have!

No report made up by the eastern fusionists has been or will be submitted to the membership of the S. D. P. The majority of the party will stand upon the decision rendered by the vote already taken. Fusionists and bolters, having failed in their designs, will follow their own inclinations, but Social Democrats will adhere to their own organization.

Indications point to an early exodus of Socialists from the played-out S. L. P. who are satisfied with the "spirit" and methods of the Social Democratic party. We give you this hint while the fusionists are counting chickens before they are hatched.

The Haverhill Social Democrat does not speak for the Social Democrats of Massachusetts. It speaks for some and for some only.

JACK POTTS' OBSERVATIONS

Three out of six men whom I induced some weeks ago to subscribe to a Socialist paper are now unalterably determined to vote for Eugene Debs next fall. There are probably hundreds of propagandists who are doing as well as I am. I guess the Socialist vote will make a pretty respectable showing!

This week I saw one of my insurance friends. I asked him how he liked our "prosperity" and he replied: "Another dose will kill us."

A man said the other day: "I am mighty glad I have got done voting the old party tickets. I feel as though I had got a great load off my mind."

A sensible man remarked recently: "There are many people these days who talk much of 'brotherhood,' but too many of them stop at talk; they don't VOTE it. Now it seems to me that as each man has a vote it would be more practical if every man who talks thus would vote with the Socialists. That is the least he can do. I think that all these men who talk 'brotherhood' and don't vote for it are, to use a slang phrase, simply making 'hot-air' conduits of themselves." There is much truth in what he says. The man who votes as well as talks for the brotherhood of man is terribly in earnest! A big, robust Socialist vote will beat metaphysics in some quarters. The "practical politicians" have their ears to the ground and they can hear the steadily growing rumble of the Socialist movement. They are scared, boys. Roll up the vote! Don't let any small frictions interfere with you. Whenever any of the old mossbacks ask you to vote for their candidates tell them that their proposition interests you only as a study in degeneracy.

We have got 'em on the run right now! Inside of eight years the industrial goblin will get them all, whether or not they "watch out."

JACK POTTS.

A Churchman on Socialism

Individualism regards humanity as made up of disconnected or warring atoms. Socialism regards it as an organic whole. The aim of Socialism is the fulfillment of service; the aim of individualism is the attainment of some personal advantage—riches, place or fame. Socialism seeks such an organization of life as shall secure for every one the most complete development of his powers; individualism seeks primarily the satisfaction of the particular wants of each one in the hope that the pursuit of private interests will, in the end, secure public welfare.—Dr. Westcott, Bishop of Durham.

At the convention of the Western Federation of Miners at Denver resolutions denouncing President McKinley and Governor Steunenberg of Idaho were adopted.

THE FISH IN THE WELL

A boy once caught a fish and put it into his father's well. There it lived for years, and because the well was small, it swam around and around, all day and day after day, in little narrow circles. After many years the boy drew the fish out of the well and carried it to the great lake near his father's dwelling. There he threw it in, and watched, expecting to see it swim merrily away, in the full enjoyment of its new-found liberty.

Now this was an immense lake that stretched far, far away, till its waters melted into the very margin of the skies. The big, blue waves flowed on and on, and seemed to be running races to the horizon, and even far beyond it. Before the little fish were space, freedom and infinitude. But it had spent so many years in the little well that it had lost its power of moving about freely in the great world of waters; so even in the boundless lake it swam around and around in tiny circles, just exactly the size of the narrow well in which it had lived its little life.

A Socialist party was once constrained by the force of circumstances to move in an exceedingly narrow sphere. The time was not ripe for its principles to be adopted by the people, and therefore for many years all its activities were cramped and its energies confined to one limited course of action. In this narrow circle its tactics grew narrow, its spirit grew narrow, even its language was narrowed down to a set of stock phrases. And this could not be otherwise under the circumstances which then prevailed.

But after many years there came a mighty change. Men began to wake, and waking they saw before them the great vision of the co-operative commonwealth. But this fresh strength, this new-born power, was not to be tied to a set of phrases or forced into one narrow groove of action. Here were men and women of all classes, of all creeds, of all cultures, from the East and the West, differing in everything else, but united together by one purpose of laying the foundations of Socialistic order. Here was the opportunity for a broad Socialist movement, founded on the love of Humanity, and the faith of common brotherhood, a movement which should be firm and elastic, and in which there should be room for all. Such an opportunity had never come before.

But alas! the Socialist party that had lived so many years in its own small round of thought and action, had now lost all power and desire for larger things. It persisted in moving around and around as of old in its own little narrow circle; in that circle it is moving still, and in that circle it will continue to move, even to the very last moment and the final hour of its existence.

Socialism in the Colleges

An intercollegiate Socialistic movement was launched at Boston May 30 by the meeting called in Foresters' hall of Socialistic students from many American colleges and universities. The purpose is to perfect an organization and formulate plans to spread the Socialistic doctrine next fall when the colleges reopen. In a circular issued by the promoters "the barbarous nationalism in France" and "the spread of imperialism in England and the United States" are violently assailed and "the dangers of militarism everywhere" are forcefully alluded to.

Invitations to attend the convention were sent to all the colleges by Henry B. Slade, Brown, '95, of Providence, R. I. The institutions represented include Harvard, Boston college, Tufts Medical school (represented by a woman), the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Wellesley, Amherst, Columbia of New York and the University of Chicago.

Muncie is Indignant

Muncie, Ind., where Mr. Neely is well known (we believe he runs a newspaper there) is scandalized. Throughout the rest of the country the Cuban postal frauds have awakened emotions ranging between deep disgust and mild indignation; but in Muncie the excitement is at fever heat. Little knots of men gather on the streets corners and denounce in bitter and unmeasured phrases—what? Neely's dishonesty? Not a bit of it. Here is the cause of Muncie's indignation, as set forth in a Muncie dispatch to an Indianapolis paper:

"The feeling against Corydon Rich, who, it is said, confessed to the defalcations in the Cuban postal service, is very strong here, and he is roundly condemned for peaching. He is under obligations to Neely for his appointment, and his confession is pronounced by his political friends the basest ingratitude."

Muncie contains the printing establishment suspected of turning out bogus postage stamps for Cuban consumption. Rich's treachery has given business in the town a setback. Hence the indignation.

Nice, moral place, Muncie. It really ought to be a suburb of Philadelphia. Indiana is a shade too respectable.—Chicago Journal.

NOT A REFORM BUT A REVOLUTIONARY PARTY

Eugene V. Debs in New York Journal

Eugene V. Debs in New York Journal. The Social Democratic Party is not a reform party, but a revolutionary party. It does not propose to modify the competitive system, but abolish it. An examination of its platform shows that it stands unequivocally for the collective ownership and control of all the means of wealth production and distribution—in a word, Socialism.

The modern tendency is toward centralization and co-operation. This has given us the trust, and there has been a great hue and cry about this latest phase of the economic development. The Republican and Democratic parties, yielding to the popular outcry, will declare in favor of destroying or restraining the trust, but just how puerile and dishonest such declarations are every member of the Social Democratic Party knows too well to be deceived into voting for either of said parties. As a matter of fact the trust is the inevitable outgrowth of the competitive system, and to declare against the private ownership of the trust is to declare against the system itself. That neither the large capitalists, who own the trusts, nor the small capitalists, who are opposed to them because they do not own them, favor the overthrow of the capitalist system of production and distribution is a foregone conclusion. The Republican party represents the former class and the Democratic party the latter class. Both stand for essentially the same system of exploitation, and the Socialist wage worker realizes that it makes precious little difference to him and his class whether they are exploited by a few great capitalists or an innumerable brood of small ones. They propose to put an end to exploitation entirely by abolishing the system and transferring the means of production from private hands to the collectivity and having them operated in the interest of all alike. To carry out this programme the first step necessary is political organization, and this step has been taken by the Social Democratic Party.

The Social Democratic Party is necessarily an international party. It is as wide as the domain of capitalism. It is everywhere and always the same. It takes no backward step. The reins of government is its goal. It refuses to be flattered, bribed, stamped or otherwise deflected from the straight course mapped out for it by Marx and Engels, its founders, and pursued with unflinching fidelity by their millions of followers. Before its conquering march every throne in Europe is beginning to tremble. The last one of them will fall to the earth while the century is still in its swaddling clothes.

Among the last countries to organize, for reasons so generally understood that they need not be discussed here, is the United States, but the conditions which develop Socialism have come upon us so rapidly during the past few years that it now seems certain that the American movement will soon become the most formidable of them all, and that here, where political democracy was first achieved, industrial democracy will gain its first triumph.

The Social Democratic Party has no interest in any of the so-called issues over which capitalist politicians fight sham battles. They care nothing about the currency question, the tariff or imperialism. They stand first, last and always for the collective ownership of all the means of production and distribution, and they will press forward unceasingly until they secure them, thereby liberating the race and solving the problem of the centuries.

The Freedom of Democracy

The violent unrest called labor trouble, is the striving for liberty on the part of the working class which asserts itself in a demand for higher wages, which the workers imagine the employers can give them. The inefficiency of individuals to solve the problem has been demonstrated and it still remains unsolved. Want and the dread of want should be removed. Inequality bores. That is why we have classes. We are getting more and more equality and therefore more good society. When we speak of equality to some women they imagine we mean to take their pretty clothes away and put them in the kitchen. They are afraid of a dead level. In a democracy no man is free without the means of livelihood. The rich are freer than the poor.—From a speech of William Dean Howells, printer and novelist, before New York Printers' Club.

The article in this number of the Herald by Comrade Peter E. Burrowes, entitled "The Ethics of the Future," is the first chapter of a book contemplated by the writer. The reader will find this article of special interest. It was at a recent meeting of the Brooklyn Co-operative Club.

SOCIALISM IS INEVITABLE

Lucien Sarrail in N. Y. Journal

Socialism is not a theory. It is a living force, evolved by the class struggle from the development of economic conditions and irresistibly increasing with that development.

Philosophers may philosophize, poets may poetize, theologians may anathematize, but for the very reason that capitalists capitalize, socialism will socialize.

Nor must "human nature" undergo a change before "human society" can pass from the present economic system to the next in the order of evolution. To be sure, no such change was required in Europe to bring about the fall of feudalism and the advent of capitalism; nor in this country to pass from colonial vassalage to national independence and from Jeffersonian middle-class democracy to imperialistic McKinleyism. Who in the light of history does not see to-day that it is the characteristic property of human nature to constantly modify its surroundings, while adapting itself physically, intellectually, morally and politically to its new conditions of social existence? And who, in the light of every day happenings, does not see also that, according to the economic environment, not human nature but its possible manifestations assume forms and aspects widely different?

Nor are the philosophers, the poets and other "intellectuals" seriously threatened by socialism with the loss of their "individuality," if they have any. True, the thing thus named may then be so defined and understood that it will no longer be possible for logomachists to connect it genetically with "individualism." The standard of it in an educated community may even be raised so high that not a few of those who to-day shine as stars in the intellectual firmament will have to do a little more thinking of the right kind or a little less talking of the foolish sort.

Of course Socialism will put an end to that kind of individuality which consists in monopolizing the means of production. By this very act, purely economic in its character, but pregnant with ethical consequences of the highest import, it will immensely broaden the field of all true kinds of individuality. Such ethical results are already flowing from the mere progress of Socialist sentiment, and this phenomenon of powerful individualities brought forth and strengthened by modern Socialism may be observed all over Europe. There numbers of "intellectuals," silent so long as they were only pauperized, are now rising in open revolt against moral degradation and flocking to the standard of social emancipation.

To refuse to see the inevitable or to fight it away when it is seen coming is not the act of sensible men. Socialism, I say, is inevitable and it is coming.

Every step that the capitalists are of necessity driven to take is of necessity also hastening its advent.

The law of capitalistic development is to-day as well known as the law of gravitation. Step by step competition leads to concentration. With the progress of invention, with the gradual transformation of the simple tool into machines more and more powerful and costly, the independent artisan is first supplanted by the small firm; the small firm is then superseded by the corporation, and the corporation by the trust. Evidence is not wanting that by the same law the trusts of each industry must some day be absorbed by a trust of trusts, or king trust. And as government, at any given time and in any forcible maintenance and full development of the economic system prevailing at that time and in that country, King Trust will say, like the Grand Monarch: "L'etat c'est moi." (I am the state.)

Let us suppose—as we may safely do—that this last stage is reached. A condition of affairs is established that might be termed "capitalistic Socialism" (productive of the highest possible despotism), in opposition to genuine Socialism (productive of the highest possible freedom). The whole enginery of production and distribution is jointly owned by capitalists in proportion to the amount of unpaid labor crystallized into wealth which they have respectively been able to appropriate during the previous period of "capitalistic anarchy."

All conflict between them is at an end. The middle class, from which the plutocracy emerged, has been annihilated by its own offspring. On one side stands the capitalist class, mighty in wealth, small in numbers; on the other side the great wage-earning class, mighty in numbers, economically impotent.

Not the manual worker alone, but the "man of brain"—from the technical director to the inventor—is a stipendiary, whose value as a value-producing labor power is arbitrarily determined by King Trust, and whose only stimulus to activity is the whip of want.

But long before this stage is reached capitalism appears in its true light, with all its baleful tendencies and inherent contradictions.

The function of the capitalist in society, formerly implying in the public mind a work of direction and certain qualities of thrift and foresight socially beneficial, is now seen to be the clipping of coupons, the waste of wealth and the corruption of government. His "saving," his "industry" his "wages of superintendence," when they are still trotted out by his Manchesterian mouthpieces, are looked upon by sensible persons as metaphorical travesties, all the superintendence, all the exertion and all the saving being done by other men. And while it remains true, or becomes every day truer, that under our present economic arrangements no one can work and save for a capitalist without his permission, it becomes also every day plainer that the capitalist has no more part in the creation of capital than the potato bug in the raising of a crop of potatoes.

In a word, some of the people have ceased standing on their heads and seeing things inverted. And from that moment the class struggle gradually takes another course. The demand of the laboring class is less and less for an increase of wages, which it cannot get, or against a reduction, which it cannot prevent, but more and more for all its rights as wealth producer. The ground of battle is shifted from the economic field, where that class is impotent, to the political field, where it can be sovereign. The issue, there, is direct between capitalism and Socialism—"Shall the trusts own the people, or shall the people, in their corporate capacity, own the means of production?"

And upon this single plain issue, identical throughout the civilized world, Socialism is marching with giant's strides to the conquest of the public powers. Who can stop it? In Germany it ran over Bismarck, whose iron hand for twelve years tried to choke it. In France, since 1893, it broke down a president and three cabinets. In Belgium it is already backed by a majority of the voters, and will soon have a majority of the votes, notwithstanding the "plural suffrage" feature of the constitution, which gives two, three, and even four votes to men of property. In Austria, as in Belgium, it gained the franchise for the workmen. In America, where its activity is of most recent date, the rate of its progress is even more rapid than in any other country. Since 1892, when it first entered the national field, its vote has more than quadrupled.

Viewed as an international factor Socialism is the only force today that preserves the peace of Europe, and it may soon be the only force capable of preventing a stupendous war between the British and the American "empires" for the absolute control of the markets of the world.

Aye, Socialism is coming, and no one needs to fear it who, understanding it, truly longs for peace and freedom.

A CRITIQUE OF THE DOMINANT THEORIES OF MORALITY

question. If, as a matter of fact, pity and the satisfaction of doing good really constitute the mainspring of human acts, then the social schism that is characteristic of the capitalistic economy would carry with it no sinister results. Nor would it involve usurpation, since the privileged classes, if inspired with such altruistic sentiments, would naturally endeavor to eliminate all chance of injury to the poorer classes resulting from their inferior conditions, and themselves abstain from the commission of all violent and illegitimate acts. It is scarcely necessary to add that nothing of the sort has taken place, but that, on the contrary, in the relations between capitalists and laborers free rein is given to exploitation and the most unprincipled spoliation. We are therefore forced to recognize that altruistic sentiments play no part in the more normal and really important relations among men; but that on the contrary absolute egoism there reigns supreme. If pity really affects human actions, its influence must therefore only be subsidiary, and exerting with a view toward mitigating and making partial amends for the wrongs done by the egoistic acts of man.

According to this view, egoism would supply the motive for the habitual and more important acts of life, and thus constitute the mainspring of morality, while altruism would merely form the motive of a secondary ethical code serving to blunt the too sharp and painful edges of egoistic morals. Men would act, in short—to follow a comparison made by Lange—like the English dealers in Indian idols, who in their capacity of merchants favor Buddhism, but as Christians give alms to Protestant churches and encourage their missionary work. That is to say, the individual in his capitalistic capacity might practice the most shameless extortion against his fellows, while as a compassionate being he loaded his own victims with kindness. But the co-existence of two such contradictory systems of morality must appear, upon a moment's reflection, to be the acme of absurdity. What importance are we to attach to sympathy of this kind, and how can we possibly regard it as an autonomous moral factor or take it as a guide to conduct when it does not succeed in directing us in the more serious and important affairs of life, but leaves us still under the sway of our egoism? But the moment we recognize the fact, and there is, indeed, no help for it—that pity is after all but a subsidiary moral factor acting within the limited sphere allowed it by our dominant egoism—the way is already opened to a more synthetic, harmonious and truer conception, according to which egoism determines not merely the essential but also the subsidiary moral code, and is only masked behind the altruistic sentiments which appear to dominate the latter. Sympathy is but the outward and visible mantle, while the unseen hand operating under this cloak is none other than egoism itself. It is the voice of egoism that advises the dominant class to relieve the sufferings it has caused, in order to avoid the danger of possible retaliation. To be sure, egoism of this character is far too remote to be directly appreciated by the beings it inspires. Their conscience merely perceives a mirage which causes their acts to appear like spontaneous outbursts of pity and love—for certainly no one would think of saying that he who succors the poor and unfortunate does so with the premeditated intention of avoiding possible reactions on the part of the downtrodden classes. But it is none the less true that the alleviation of misfortune is in the interest of the very classes that have unconsciously caused it, and it is this very interest that constitutes the unrecognized impulse of their benevolent acts.

All unattached Socialists in the state of Connecticut are requested to write Louis Schlaf, 26 Spring street, Rockville, for information concerning the organization of branches.

VOTE ON THE CONSTITUTION

The following constitution is submitted to the membership for a referendum vote. It was adopted at the Indianapolis convention to be referred to the members for approval or rejection. Branches are requested to take it up at once and report action through their local secretaries to the national secretary, 126 Washington street, Chicago, not later than June 23. The question is on the adoption or rejection of the constitution as it stands, and the vote must be Yes or No.

NATIONAL ORGANIZATION.

Section 1. This organization shall be known as the Social Democratic Party of America, and its headquarters shall be located at such place as the national conventions of the party may appoint, or as may be fixed by the National Executive Board subject to a referendum vote.

Section 2. The Social Democratic Party of America shall be organized as follows:

First—Local branches limited to five hundred members each.

Second—A National Executive Board of nine members, five of whom shall be chosen from territory convenient to the national headquarters, and shall be called "resident members," and the remaining four shall be chosen, so far as possible, from other parts of the country. All members of the Executive Board shall have equal rights and powers; but the resident members shall have power to act and a majority of said resident members shall constitute a quorum. The non-resident members shall not be required to be present at all meetings of the board, but shall be kept advised of all proceedings of the board. The Executive Board shall be elected by the national convention.

EXECUTIVE BOARD.

Section 3. The Executive Board shall have supervision of the party organization, and shall have power to provide such rules, issue such orders and adopt such measures as may be required to carry out the object of the organization; provided, that no action shall be taken which will conflict with the constitution and declaration of principles.

Section 4. The National Secretary, Treasurer and other officers as may be required, shall be elected, and their salaries fixed by the Executive Board, to be approved by the direct vote of the party members through the referendum; and they and each of them may be removed by the Executive Board, subject to such referendum.

Section 5. The office of National Secretary and Treasurer may be held by the same person. Such Secretary and Treasurer shall make a report of the financial standing of the party semi-annually, to be given to the branches, and shall make a report to the Executive Board whenever required by it.

Section 6. Members of the Executive Board shall receive no compensation for their services. They shall hold annual and stated meetings at times to be fixed by the Board, and such special meetings as may be required; reasonable notice shall be given to each of the members of the Executive Board of all meetings.

Section 7. Any member of the National Executive Board may be removed, and his successor elected by a referendum vote, as hereinafter provided. All vacancies in the Executive Board, however occurring, shall be filled by the remaining members of the board, subject to a referendum vote.

Section 8. At each annual meeting of the board the officers of the board shall render complete reports of the transactions of their several offices, and transmit a copy thereof to each local branch.

REVENUES AND FUNDS.

Section 9. The revenue of the organization shall be derived from an admission fee of twenty-five cents for each member, and quarterly dues of twenty-five cents for each member, payable in advance on the first days of January, April, July and October.

Section 10. The funds of the organization shall be deposited in such bank or banks as the board may direct; and the National Secretary and Treasurer shall be required to execute a bond for the faithful performance of his duties in such an amount as the board may require.

OFFICIAL PAPER.

Section 11. This organization shall continue the publication of the official paper, called the Social Democratic Herald, under the supervision of the Executive Board. Each member of the organization shall be entitled to a copy of the official paper in consideration of the payment of quarterly dues.

Section 12. The columns of the national organ shall be open at all times to reasonable criticism and discussion of party matters by members of the party.

NATIONAL CONVENTIONS.

Section 13. The national conventions of the organization shall be held quadrennially at some date prior to the first of June, and at such place as shall be decided upon by the National Executive Board, subject to referendum vote.

REFERENDUM.

Section 14. The National Executive Board may submit any question to a referendum vote of all the members of the party in good standing. The referendum vote may also be had upon the petition of ten local branches addressed to the National Executive Board, requesting such board to submit any proposition therein specified to such referendum vote; and upon the receipt of such petition said board shall forthwith so submit such proposition.

Upon the submission of any proposition to a referendum vote not less than three weeks shall be allowed for amendments to such proposition; and not less than six weeks, after the expiration of said three weeks, shall be allowed for the transmission of the votes to the Executive Board; provided, that if the votes transmitted by all the branches in good standing shall have been received by the board before the expiration of such time, the board shall announce the result of such vote forthwith.

LOCAL BRANCHES.

Section 15. Any respectable person who subscribes to the principles of the Social Democratic Party and severs all connection, and renounces allegiance to all other political parties, shall be eligible to membership.

Section 16. A local branch shall consist of not less than five, and not more than five hundred members. Branches shall fix their own quorum.

Section 17. Any person desiring membership shall make application to the local branch, upon being recommended by a member of said branch. And if accepted by a majority vote, shall be enrolled as a member. Upon objection to his admission being made, the matter shall be referred by the branch to the Central Committee of the locality, which shall have power to act in the matter. In case the decision of the local committee shall be against the applicant, upon appeal by the said person, or by the branch to which he has applied, the National Executive Board shall have power of final action in the matter.

Section 18. Any member of good standing in one branch may, upon the request, be transferred to another branch; and the Secretary of the branch in which he holds his membership shall, for that purpose, furnish him with a transfer card.

Section 19. A member in good standing may terminate his or her membership by obtaining from the Secretary of such branch the card of withdrawal.

Section 20. Each member shall be entitled to a card of membership, to be furnished by the National Executive Board, and issued to the members by the Secretary of the local branch.

DUES AND FEES.

Section 21. The admission fee which shall accompany each application for membership shall be twenty-five cents, which shall be forwarded to the National Executive Board.

Section 22. The dues of the members shall be fixed by the branch; but such dues shall be sufficient to include twenty-five cents per quarter, to be paid on the first day of January, April, July and October in each year to the National Executive Board.

Section 23. At the close of each meeting of a local branch the Treasurer thereof shall transmit to the National Secretary the names of all members admitted at said meeting, their postoffice addresses, and a remittance by postal money order of their admission fee.

Section 24. A member admitted on or before the middle of a quarter shall pay dues for the full quarter. A member admitted after the middle of a quarter shall be exempt for that quarter.

Section 25. On or before the fifth day of each quarter the Treasurer of each local branch shall remit by postal money order the quarterly dues for the current quarter to the National Executive Board, and each local branch shall be responsible for and remit the full amount due for the entire membership of the branch.

Section 26. The officers of the branch shall consist of a Secretary, Treasurer and Organizer, and such other officers as may be determined by the branch; said officers shall be elected at each annual meeting and serve until their successors are qualified. They shall perform such duties as appertain to their several offices, and as the local branch may direct. Any officer of the branch may be removed by a majority vote of the members of the branch.

Section 27. Each local branch shall hold at least one business meeting a month, and such other meetings as they may see fit.

Section 28. At the annual meeting the officers shall submit complete reports of the transactions of their several offices for the preceding year.

Section 29. Branches shall be numbered with reference to states, the numbers to be assigned by the National Executive Board.

Section 30. The National Executive Board shall issue a charter to each branch, which charter may be suspended or revoked by the National Executive Board in case of violation of the laws, principles or regulations of the organization, subject to referendum vote.

Section 31. Persons intending to organize a new local branch shall apply to the then existing city or state committee of the locality, where said branch is to be located, for its indorsement; and upon receiving such indorsement shall forward to the National Executive Board their application, together with the names and addresses of the proposed members, and their admission fees and dues. The National Executive Board shall thereupon, if they find the application in regular form, issue a charter to such person.

In case their shall be no such Central Committee the application shall be made direct to the National Executive Board.

Section 32. The local branch may adopt such by-laws as the majority of its members may determine, provided they do not conflict with this constitution or the platform and declaration of principles of the party.

Section 33. Any member violating the laws or principles of the organization may be suspended or expelled by a two-thirds vote of the members in good standing of the local branch of which he is a member; provided, that any charges against such member shall be preferred in writing, and the accused shall be entitled to a fair trial. The person so accused, if dissatisfied with the decision of the local branch, may appeal to the National Executive Board, and the person or persons preferring such charges shall have a like appeal to the National Executive Board. The action of the Executive Board on such case shall be final.

Section 34. This constitution shall be in force and effective from and after its indorsement by a majority in a referendum vote of the membership of the party in good standing.

Section 35. This constitution may be amended by a referendum vote as hereinabove provided.

Section 36. Under no circumstances shall the Social Democratic Party fuse with or act with any other political party, either in national or local elections, unless such party shall have substantially the same platform and principles as the Social Democratic Party.

THE INCLUSIVENESS OF THE CLASS STRUGGLE

By Outis

Words have a continual tendency to become our masters. The convenient phrase is first used to condense language, but in the end it narrows thought. The term becomes a shibboleth, a test of orthodoxy, a cant word of the narrow-minded, the tool of a dogma. The only remedy for this is to occasionally let in the air on our phrases, to turn them over, and find out what they do really mean.

What is meant by the class struggle? Is this a phrase that is degenerating into a cant term? Are the orthodox using it to narrow the Socialist movement? This is a question which cannot be considered too seriously, and a danger that cannot be too carefully avoided if it really does exist.

As this expression was first used, it broadly expressed the great economic struggle of the age, less a struggle of men than of the irrepressible forces that stand behind them. But who constitute the class, and who are to carry on the struggle, are the two points which we must make clear to ourselves before we can rightly understand the term and use it intelligently.

First then if we take the working class as the class for the struggle, must we narrow this down to mean exclusively the shop and factory workers? If so we are resting on a slender support for the formation of our co-operative commonwealth, and a support which is growing relatively smaller. The use of machinery, the rapid growth of the trusts, are constantly throwing the factory hands out of employment, and this will continue for years to come at a geometrical ratio. The remarkable development of manufactures in the United States has hidden this displacement of labor from our eyes; but this development cannot always continue. We have already too many rivals in the world-market, and new ones are springing up in the most unexpected quarters. As the markets of Asia are being thrown open, India with her cotton factories on one hand, and Japan with her great variety of excellent manufactures on the other, stand ready to flood the East with wares just as good as those manufactured in America or Europe. The great industrial nations of the world will soon find their supremacy disputed on every hand; and the Socialist who expects our manufacturing population to continue growing at the same rate as in the past, will probably be seriously disappointed. If it is on this class we are to rest our class struggle, then the struggle is decided against us at the start.

But let us open our ranks a little wider. Let us invite to our standard all the dispossessed. They at least are a growing class. Find your recruits with them, and we shall have an irresistible army, composed of the mass of the people. Only let us pitch our camp broadly enough, and never fear but it will be full of eager fighters. No narrow field is large enough for this great battle of the ages.

Who, then, are the dispossessed? Are not all men who do not own the tools with which they work either manually or mentally? Is not the writer who cannot give expression to his best ideas because the power of the press is in the hands of the capitalist—is he not one of the most cruelly dispossessed of men? The minister who eats the bitter bread of dependence on his wealthy parishioners—is not he a wage slave? The college professor finds that the capitalist supplies the tools with which he works, that is, the college buildings and equipments, and not to him if he offends his employer. Shall we exclude these men from our ranks, or shall we not rather expect a hearty support from all of these who have thought far enough to realize their own position?

Nor shall we stop here. There are other forces in the world besides self-interest and indignation at our own wrongs. "The august powers behind the veil" are also in league with sympathy, love and remorse. In the struggle before us many generous natures will stand with the class to which they do not belong; the stings of conscience and the sense of the world's suffering will drive many a man to act directly contrary to his own interests and the interests of his own class. The negroes were emancipated by the whites. Some of the Russian nobles suffered imprisonment and exile for their efforts to free the serfs. Perhaps no oppressed class was ever yet uplifted without the assistance of individuals of other classes.

Yes, it is a class struggle, but men will be found in all classes to fight for justice. Open the gates wide.

ranny and to maintain equal rights for all, but enemies have entered a door which we have neglected to guard. The policy of Jefferson and Jackson has degenerated into an infamous bureaucracy which holds the working classes by the throat while capitalists and tariff robbers plunder them.

Since government has become the defender of the monied classes, the masses justly and wisely hold it in contempt, but the worst of it is that any corrupt and mercenary judge has the power of consigning a labor leader to imprisonment for contempt of a contemptible court. Judges, too, are chosen that they may pervert justice in the interest of trusts, combines and plutocrats.

In view of these glaring abuses, is not our boasted freedom a thinly veiled form of insanity? We all know, or ought to know, that amidst our gigantic productiveness and superfluity millions of unemployed are existing within sight of starvation. The devil's doctrine of every man for himself, is now our industrial and business motto. Monopolists and corporations purchase legislation as they purchase land, lumber or any other commodity, and make rulers, judges and cabinet ministers to order.

This kind of language may, no doubt, appear very obnoxious and un-American to pensioners, office-holders and millionaires; but hard words, my friends, are softer than hard steel and bullets, and now is the time to speak out boldly if we desire to avert revolutionary violence and bloodshed.

A peaceful revolution is what the Socialist movement is intended to accomplish; but the inexorable law of evolution moves on kindly, yet cruelly, toward its vast ends. It seems to be a law of nature that war and the destruction of life and property is the heavy price we must pay for all that is greatly good. No Socialist, therefore, whose judgment is worthy of acceptance, can predict a peaceful solution to the tremendous problem that must be solved in the near future. The overthrow of capitalism and its long-established injustice, is no light work. The universal cry among laborers now is nothing earned, nothing saved, and countless millions stolen and squandered. The system that has caused this deplorable condition is capitalism, the parent of imperialism. A democracy, therefore, with a suitable industrial system, is our only remedy. Such an industrial organization is Socialism. Understand this, friends, and labor's battle is won.

Machine Gas-Blowers

The success of the machine glass-blowers at the glass works at Elmer, N. J., would seem to indicate that the invention is destined to ultimately supersede human lungs and hands. A prominent blower from Bridgeton remarked that it is only a question of a very few years when all glassware will be made in this way. The two factories are now completely equipped with the machines and are working satisfactorily. A year ago one of these machines was installed there as an experiment, and improvement after improvement has been made, until they are now perfect. Unskilled labor can be used.

A glassman went to Bridgeton recently and exhibited a patent "no-shutter," which is intended to take the place of a boy. If there is any one thing the average glass manufacturer would jump at it is a machine to replace the boy. In some plants a dozen "shops" have been idle almost daily on account of the scarcity of boys. This new contrivance does the work completely.

But what will the capitalist system do with the boys? Does it propose any way to provide for the boys who are not scarce? Not at all; Socialism alone can look after them and the human glass-blowers who will no longer blow their brains into glass bottles.

SOCIAL DEMOCRAT ON THE ISSUES OF IMPERIALISM AND MILITARISM

W. Liebknecht in the Clarion

Again and again I repeat the cry. It cannot be altered. Imperialism and militarism—that is the enemy. Clericalism, according to Gambetta, is the enemy, and is not dangerous any more. Mind, I say clericalism, not popedom or papacy, which will be a world power still long after the downfall of the last emperor, and which will be the last enemy of Socialism. But that fight is not a political fight. The last political form which grasping, accumulating, robbing capitalism takes is imperialism organically united with militarism. And as there is but one capitalism, there is but one imperialism and militarism, too. It may have a different shape in different countries; in substance it is the same everywhere.

In any case—and now I begin to refute the objections that have been made to me—in any case, imperialism has nothing to do with keeping together and defending the British empire. There is no need to plead the British empire against me. I dare say there are not many who have pleaded more and in deeper earnest for it than I have. The breaking up and downfall of the British empire would be the greatest disaster for humanity. It would be the triumph of Russia, and, consequently, of despotism and barbarity over liberty and civilization. This I have said and tried to make understood hundreds of times. And just because I have such a high opinion of England, and put so many hopes on England, I regret this South African war so much, and feel bound, in the common interest of liberty and civilization, to do what is in my power to avert the evil effects of this unfortunate war, and to prevent the catastrophe which growing imperialism and militarism are sure to bring upon you if the English people do not put them down before it is too late.

How much damage has this war already done to England. You, as free-born Englishmen, must know the value and power of public opinion and public feeling. And the public opinion and public feeling of the whole world have been turned against England by this war. And were it true what our jingoists and all other enemies of England say, that the war fever and lust to conquer, such as it shows itself at present, is inherent to the British nation, and not only a passing moral disease, then the friends and admirers of England would indeed have to confess that they were in error.

It is true the chief of your ministry, Lord Salisbury, does not see that public opinion and public feeling all over the world are against England on account of this war. "It is the press of the gutter that attacks and calumniate us," says my lord, haughtily and contemptuously. "Press of the gutter"! Lord Salisbury is wrong, as he has been so often already. He does not know the press of the continent, as there are many other things which he does not know.

Certainly, we have a "press of the gutter"—the press of our anti-Semites, our jingoists, our junkers and other reactionists of all sorts and kinds; and this press of the gutter is certainly hostile to England, and villifies it on every occasion and in every manner. But it has been so and has done so since it existed, England being to it the detested land of the free; the country which broke the holy alliance under Canning—a crime never forgiven and never to be forgiven, by our would-be resurrectionists of the holy alliance; the hated country which for the last eighty years resisted all attempts of the continental politicians and policemen—with us synonymous as to our statesmen, policy, politics and police mean the same thing—to force or entice it to surrender the right of asylum, and to participate in the common international police-chase for hunting down democracy and Socialism.

This "press of the gutter," of course, did not miss the opportunity, and makes use of the South African war to attack and calumniate England with redoubled violence; but it is only a small fraction of our press. There is another press in Germany, the press that always defends England against the "press of the gutter." There is the Liberal (not National Liberal, which is identical with "reactionary")—the Liberal press that looks upon England as the mother country of constitutionalism and parliamentary government. There is the democratic press that regards England as the great bulwark of liberty and sovereignty of the people. And there is the Socialist press—almost 300 newspapers in Germany—that always stood foremost in the defense of England against the "gutter press," and that believed in England as the only power able to cope with the Russian despotism, which drags behind it the Borusso-German junker and police empire and the French republic as far as it is under the influence of capitalism. "Press of the gutter"? No, the press of the German people.

There is not one newspaper in all Germany that advocates the cause of England in this universally condemned war—not one, except a couple of low stock exchange papers, written by the accomplices and agents of Rhodes and Chamberlain.

The same unanimity of condemnation in France, the same unanimity in Italy. Everywhere!

And how could it be otherwise? An empire of 400 millions against two dwarf commonwealths of, together, 300,000 men, women and children. That alone is sufficient to arouse the indignation of any human being with a sense of fair play. I know Lord Salisbury thinks there was a conspiracy between German adventurers and the Boers for the purpose of founding a Dutch-German counter empire; and I know, too, that some of these German adventurers have been in foolish relations with the German government, whose foreign policy is as silly and zig-zaggy as its home policy. But how could a man in his senses take such foolish plans seriously? Or has the world become a madhouse?

"Press of the gutter"! I return to the word. It is significant. There is a program in it—the program of hostility to the people. That your prime minister can use such a word is in itself a grave and a most alarming fact. It shows the progress of imperialism in England, of continental imperialism, the characteristic trait of which has always been and is:

Cult of power and contempt of public opinion. And public opinion is the peoples opinion, the feeling and thought of the people.

Not yet of your people. But that is only a question of time, of short time; and Lord Salisbury's "press of the gutter" betrays what is in store for you.

I have not yet done with imperialism. I am told imperialism in the mouth of Englishmen means national unity; and I am taught what blessings unity has brought to France and to Germany—how necessary it was to get rid of the division in many provinces and small states. Maybe. Much might be said about the blessings of national unity. There is a unity of the jail, as Heinrich Heine, the poet, called it, and of which we Germans and our fellow-victims of "national unity," the poor Italians, could tell a long tale. However that may be, the comparison with German, French and Italian unity is more than limping. The different parts of the British empire cannot be compared with the different provinces and small states (kleinstaat) of Germany, France and Italy, which had to be united in the interest of national unity. This national unity Great Britain had before any of the modern great states. She has had it for three centuries and a half—since the reformation, which to you gave national unity and to us national division. Whether it will be possible or not to weld together Great Britain and her colonies into one organic empire, or whether the colonies will grow into new independent states, like the United States of America, that is a question which I shall not treat here, as it has nothing to do with the matter before us. But I am sure all Englishmen will agree that there cannot be a national union or unity of Great Britain and the Indian empire.

A Course of Reading

Editor Herald: Recently a friend wrote me for a list of books for a special course of popular reading in Socialism. Here is the list of ten that I made out. Perhaps some comrade can suggest improvements in it:

1. "Traveler from Altruria," Howells.
2. "Equality," Bellamy.
3. "The Co-Operative Commonwealth," Gronlund.
4. "News from Nowhere," Morris.
5. "Women in Past and Present," Bebel.
6. "From Utopia to Science," Engels.
7. "Fabian Essays."
8. "Signs of Change," Morris.
9. "Communist Manifesto," Marx.
10. "Working Class in 1844," Engels.

To this should be added the recommendation to read the history of the movement in this country, given in the Red Book. Wayfarer.

[In addition to the above the editor suggests "Principles of Scientific Socialism," Vail; "Socialism," Sombart; "Merrie England," Blatchford; "The People's Marx," Deville.]

AMERICAN IMPERIALISM

By Charles Trench

(A discourse on the Boston Common.)

It was recently announced by Judge Cauty, who has just returned from the Philippines, that it will require a force of at least 300,000 soldiers to subdue the natives of those islands. He further stated that after a period of ten years, which would be required for the subjugation of the Filipinos, a standing army of a hundred thousand men would be necessary to maintain law and order in our recently acquired possessions.

And who is to benefit from the vast expenditure of life and treasure daily wasted in this diabolical scheme? The answer is: No one but gangs of politicians and capitalists, who are using the resources of this country for purely selfish and mercenary motives.

According to the avowment of the functionary above mentioned—who, by the way, is a Republican expansionist—the ultimate aim of the conspirators is to drive the Filipinos to the mountains, and then appropriate all the level and fertile lands of Luzon, and all other islands, which they intend to cultivate by Asiatic cheap labor. They will thus hold an absolute monopoly over the entire products of vast tracts of territory at the expense of the American tax-payers. The whole project, from beginning to end, is a gigantic and infamous fraud, and well worthy of the administration which is doing the dirty work of Hanna and his confederates.

According to the testimony of reliable eye witnesses, the devastation and slaughter in Luzon is appalling. It is described as war, merciless beyond any known degree of human ferocity. "Yet," says Judge Cauty, "it is as much as our army can do to hold even the ground under the soldier's feet." It is said, with truth, that the horror and hatred with which the Filipinos regard Americans and this government almost amounts to insanity. Stung to madness at the treachery and duplicity of the McKinley government, they have resolved, one and all, to drive out the odious robbers and usurpers from their country, or perish in the attempt. Let us hope and pray that their heroic efforts may continue to be crowned with success. Remember, oh workingmen! that these patriots are fighting for you as well as for themselves. Is there a workingman, let me ask, who has given this question any critical reflection, who can doubt that the triumph of Hannaism in the Philippines will be attended with disastrous results to our working classes? It must be clear to any one with a grain of common sense that the Philippine Islands, in the event of conquest, would be used as a sort of halfway house for capitalists to inundate this country with Chinese labor.

Let us turn now, for a few minutes, to Cuba—another profitable field of exploitation for bastard imperialism. Rathbone, McKinley's postmaster-general, nicknamed "the Great," raised his own salary from $5,000 to $45,000 a year! "The more the benevolent administration of affairs in Cuba," says the Boston Herald, "is probed, the worse it appears. Neely—another patriotic American appointee—has been pilfering the postal department out of millions. Official speculators and forgers have been so busy confusing accounts, and making false entries, that the whole administration of public affairs in Cuba is a chaotic muddle which no accountant can unravel."

I can tell you, my working friends, that something of a very radical nature must be done to save our country from unspeakable disaster. No greater calamity can happen a people than when criminals take an active part in its government. Oppression, spoliation and bloodshed are crying out as if no ear heard their voice; but mind you, the time is approaching when we shall experience a rude awakening to the blunder we are committing in passively submitting to the iniquity of an imperialistic oligarchy.

The moral sense of great masses of our people has been so perverted by martial tomfoolery that the most atrocious massacres, rapine and plunder carry with them no blame, and their perpetrators and abettors are sedulously sheltered from justice.

The government of our forefathers was established in 1776 to prevent ty-

NOTES AND COMMENT

Deprive the working class of their natural and social rights, deny them the opportunity to gain a livelihood by trying to galvanize a rotten-ripe system with middle-class reforms, compel them to pay rent for the privilege of occupying land (Does Bryan propose to abolish that "privilege"?), maintain the system which separates them from the means of production, burden them with war debts and the ruinous cost of militarism, invest corporations with power to hound them from the cradle to the coffin, and, if they are not model and contented citizens under such treatment, bring out the gatlings and murder them. That is the holy and sanctified business of capitalism and capitalistic government.

Currency reformers of the Democratic and Populist stripe want profits; they want to readjust the "skinning" business so that in place of a few big "skinners," like Rockefeller and Havemeyer, we will have a whole lot of little profit "skinners." But that stage of affairs has been passed; to it we shall never return. Social Democrats want productive capital socialized and operated by an industrial democracy for the benefit of all the people without profit. Every "skinner" is opposed to Social Democracy.

One of the friskiest corpses that ever disappointed and dismayed a funeral party is Deleonomism. After twelve months of the lustiest sort of assurance that the thing was dead, behold it bobs up with old-time vigor, stops the ceremonies, enters the lists with a national ticket; and the other fellow, who thought he had been attending the last obsequies, is beginning to say that he was deceived from the start to the finish—which isn't a finish.

There is no help for the working class, no relief for society, no higher attitude of civilization possible, so long as private individual ownership of the social means of production and distribution exists. All talk of abolishing every "form of privilege" that does not strike at the privilege of property in social capital—the means of life—is political humbug, which workingmen will do well to "pass up."

Mr. Bryan proposes the impossible against the class interests of the capitalists when he talks about the abolition of all forms of privilege. How, for instance, is he going to abolish that form of privilege known as the wages system without abolishing capitalism. And if that is not in his program, then is not his declaration about the abolition of all forms of privilege merely empty twaddle?

Social Democrats declare that the class which has the mastery over the economic power of the country, which controls social capital, also holds the mastery over the government of the country. The Bryanolators try to make you think they think if they could get control of the political offices they would then be able to control the capitalist class, but they don't believe it—not a single man of them.

What reason have you for supposing, since the wealthy class in any country and under any form of government has always been able to make or buy the laws they wanted, that the same class would not do the same thing if Bryan were president? There isn't a single human being living who can tell you, not even the "peerless one" from Nebraska.

The most iniquitous of trusts, as the Chicago Tribune looks at the matter, is the ice trust, in which Democrats are interested. But Tom Platt is represented in that trust by his son, and we are under the impression that Tom is a Republican boss.

The business failures for the month of May were the largest on record. But prosperity goes marching on.

Dr. Charles B. Spahr, author of "The Present Distribution of Wealth in the United States," says that for 4,650,000,000 shares of railroad stock now in existence, the original investors paid no more than $465,000,000, or only 10 per cent of their face value. A railroad that pays 3 per cent is actually paying 30 per cent upon the real invested capital.

The republicans of China, the Boxers, whose distinguishing characteristic is a fervent patriotism much resembling that of Hannait Republicans in the United States, are still making a rumpus and preparing the way for a possible universal war.

It seems that some one blundered in representing that Deleon was dead and done for. He turns up with a convention composed of eighty-three delegates, puts a national ticket in the field and positively rejects the overtures for a funeral.

Scratch a Bryan Democrat who is a "Socialist too," and you will find a fellow with the profit hunger. He believes in the social necessity of competition and the sanctity of every skin game known to the capitalist system. But he's a "Socialist too"! Yes, he is!

The Bryan Democrats want to make laws to check tendencies; the tendencies they are after make up whatever is important in human history and civilization. Bryanism is nothing more than a lusty protest against the inevitable.

The Nebraska Socialist is the name of a new weekly, just out and supporting the Social Democratic party, which we welcome to our exchange list. It is published at Omaha by Branch 1 of the S. D. P. in Nebraska; 50 cents yearly.

There is a brand of soulful, sublimated sympathy with Socialism that reminds one of a church steeple—the higher it soars the narrower it becomes. Church-steeple Socialism is as bad and useless as church-steeple religion.

Chicago corporations (all composed of patriots and model citizens) owe $473,916 in unpaid taxes. And they will to a man tell you this is the greatest country on earth. So it is—for chumps and looters.

A week ago 1,500 men employed by the McCormick company, Chicago, were laid off indefinitely. Cause: No work. But the advance agent and his satellites are still howling prosperity.

Progressive trades unionists will this year remember that it is better to vote for what they want and not get it than to vote for what they don't want and get it.

Concentration of the productive facilities and powers of society in fewer hands inevitably reduces opportunities for labor; yet it is the order and necessity of the times.

They have a rude and uncouth people in St. Louis, with no respect for a millionaire carrying a gun to protect property stolen from the community.

The world is going to be governed by an imperialism of capital or a fraternalism of labor joined to capital. Trades unionists, which shall it be?

Never estimate a working man by what he does not possess. No doubt the fellow he has worked for is well off.

The session of congress cost more than a billion dollars. All for liberty and civilization!

INTERVIEWS AND OPINIONS ON LIVE TOPICS OF THE DAY

President Kruger of the Transvaal: "Yes, it is quite true that the British forces have occupied Pretoria. That fact, however, by no means marks the end of the war. The burghers are fully determined to fight to the last, and will never surrender as long as 500 armed men remain in the country. Only now will the real struggle begin. I fear there is still to be much bloodshed, but the fault for that lies with the British government. The time has passed for us to talk. We have done plenty of that, but it has done no good. There is now nothing left for us to do but to keep fighting, keep fighting."

President Henry Wade Rogers of Northwestern University: "The tendency of the past has been to blame existing wrongs on the poor people. But it is a fact that the common people are at least no worse than the rich class. It does not follow because a man is wealthy he is a good man. Neither does it follow because a man belongs to the class known as common people he is a bad man. There has been too much of this sort of sentiment in this country."

August Bebel, German Social Democratic Leader: "The torpedo boat demonstration in China is ridiculous, and the Rhenish enthusiasm over it reminds us of cowards viewing a circus parade."

SOCIALIST PRINCIPLES IN UNEXPECTED PLACES

The United States presents many peculiar points of interest to the student of the world's economic development. In the prevalence of the trust we find a most marked advance toward associated or collective industry, existing side by side with political features of a most ultra individualistic type. Indeed, to the intelligent foreigners few facts surprise so much as the one that so many of the functions elsewhere performed by government are here left to the free play of private enterprise.

The keynote to our political institutions is found in the idea "that those governments govern best which govern least." Much of the unrest, uncertainty and disorder so characteristic of American political and industrial life can be finally traced to the constant and increasing antagonism between our associative method of wealth production and our antiquated individualistic political system.

It is my desire to show still another contradiction between our political theories and our social life. Have you ever noticed that while we proudly claim to be the most individualistic and competitive of nations, we have fostered and encouraged organizations—of a socialistic character—to minimize those evils that are direct results of unrestrained competition? To be plain, I allude to the remarkable development of fraternal and beneficiary societies in the United States, a development far surpassing that reached by any other nation. The cardinal principles of these fraternities, as exemplified in the Masons, Odd Fellows, Workmen, Knights of Pythias and kindred other societies, are identical with the ethical teachings of Socialism. Fraternalism teaches us the common brotherhood of man and our obligations to our fellow-members, that we should assist those members in distress, support the widow and educate the orphan, minister to the sick and bury the dead—in short, to do all in our power to make the lives of our associates prosperous and happy. This to be done not under the guise of charity, but as the result of sacred mutual obligations.

If these teachings are elevating and commendable when practiced by families and lodges, would they not be more worthy and potent if extended to the whole of the civilized world—instead of their benefits being restricted to coteries of selected individuals? This is a question I would ask all to seriously consider.

Socialism is merely the full and logical application of those lofty moral principles, preached so eloquently in our lodge room, to the details of our daily life.

Say, brother, are you in favor of this kind of expansion?

Ernest Burns, Jr.

PROBLEMS OF SOCIOLOGY

From "Some Problems of Life" by Annie Besant

The brotherhood which is a fact in nature is daily contradicted and defied in social life.

Society must again be based on a recognition of the fundamental laws of brotherhood; this alone can unite progress with order, assign social functions with justice, and insure abundance of material goods with propriety of distribution.

Conditions in the United States have brought about a complete disillusion as to republicanism in action, whatever arguments may be adduced for it theoretically by those who believe in human equality.

Men who twenty years ago were concerned in questions of government, now declare that whatever may be the form of government, it is a sound economic system which is needed to make a nation prosperous, contented and happy.

Trust and high honor are among the noblest and rarest of human qualities at the present stage of evolution, yet without these democratic Socialism must fail.

That a noble form of society is possible in which all the forces of the community shall be organized to subserve the general good, and in which all the plenty and happiness for which Socialists are rightly yearning, is indeed a truth.

The free combat that we call "civilization" is not a state that can endure.

In the older days those who were employed in supplying objects needed by the community were men who, to a great extent, had joy in their work, the joy of the creator in his finished product.

More and more in our modern life the man who tends a machine is becoming a machine himself, a flesh and blood lever of the thing of steel and iron.

The stunting of the mind in mechanical work is the justification of the cry for shorter hours of labor, and should be met by the co-operation of all classes in bringing them about

The fundamental unity of mankind is the central truth of the coming race, and the nation which first grasps and practices that great conception will lead the future, humanity falling into line behind it.

ECONOMICS WITHOUT ETHICS

We have all been used to the doctrine of ethics without economics, also economics without ethics. The solution of the problem that confronts us will be solved by bringing the two together.

It is time to ask seriously if the old style of preaching and practice is a success. If we find the world as a whole is not becoming better and mankind as a mass is not becoming happier, then it is a part of common sense and business principle to change our tactics.

Statistics tell us that all manner of crime is on the increase—not alone in numbers but in proportion to the inhabitants. That beggary, destitution, trampism and starvation is on the increase both in numbers and in percentage.

Our prohibition friends will tell you that where fifty years ago there were 1,000,000 kegs of beer manufactured for 32,000,000 inhabitants in this country, now there are 36,000,000 kegs of beer manufactured for 75,000,000 inhabitants.

The total consumption of spirituous and malt liquors and wines in the United States was in 1880, 506,076,400 gallons; in 1896, 1,170,379,448 gallons. (World's Almanac.)

Deaths from alcoholism have increased from 61 per million in 1860 to 68 per million in 1895.

Prison population has increased 16 per cent faster than the population outside of prisons.

In 1885 deaths from suicide numbered 978; in 1895 deaths from suicide numbered 5,750.

In 1885 murders committed were 1,808; in 1895 murders committed were 10,500.

Between 1860 and 1890 insanity has increased 50 per cent faster than the population.

What is the cause of this great retrograde movement in these vital particulars?

A few more statistics may show: Wealth per capita in 1850 was $345; wealth per capita in 1890 was $974. There is no cause for murder or suicide in that.

But wealth of workers per capita in 1850 was $239.50; wealth of workers per capita in 1890 was $184; wealth of non-workers per capita in 1850 was $1,293; wealth of non-workers per capita in 1890 was $8,085. The wealth of the worker per capita has decreased $55.50 in forty years, and the explanation of the whole dark tragedy lives in that statement.

The few have increased, the many decreased. As they go down in economics they decline in ethics.—From an address before the Social Democratic party at Los Angeles, by Walter L. Young.

Exploitation of Inferior Races

The Fabian society, London, recently listened to a lecture by Mr. Gilbert Murray on the "Exploitation of Inferior Races in Ancient and Modern Times." Mr. S. G. Hobson presided. After discussing the problem as it presented itself to the ancient world, Mr. Murray went on to speak of what was happening in the world to-day. The most important fact was the way in which the native races were being exploited in their own country. White men were working their factories in countries where black labor was cheap, and this might have an important effect on the future of work in this country. The whole status of slavery had little to do with the question. The essential object seems to be the world-wide division of labor between different breeds of men. The problem was a difficult one; and it yet remained to be seen whether the British were to be a great beneficent power, or whether its disappearance as a conquering race was to be the signal for humanity to raise its head with a sigh of relief.

No Man is Good Enough

The only remedy for trusts is trust. Shall we have trusts for the people or shall we trust the people? No man, we long ago discovered, is good enough to be trusted with absolute political authority. Neither is any man, nor any corporation, good enough to hold the control of any of the necessities of life in trust for the people. All vast power has in it the seed of abuse. The whole people alone are worthy of the control of the economic life and death of men. Democracy does not mean competition; it means co-operation. We are not units struggling against each other; we are fractions to combine into one great unit. Let politics, therefore, be enlarged. We must believe in the people. If we believe not we shall be condemned. What condemnation we already have is due to our unfaith.—Dr. Frank Crane, Chicago.

The fellows who have been holding steady jobs for a while, now scent an impending change. 'Twas sure to come, as we told you.

AMONG THE TOILERS

Montclair, (N. J.) bricklayers secured eight hours and $3.50 per day without trouble.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen has gained over 3,700 members in the past year.

In the first 20 days of the St. Louis street car men's strike seven people were killed and 72 injured.

There are said to be 4,000 idle furniture workers in Grand Rapids. Another evidence of prosperity.

The carpenters at Dallas, Texas, have secured the eight-hour day and several minor concessions.

The St. Louis Brewery Workmen's Union will contribute $1,000 per week in aid of the street car men's strike.

Five hundred master painters have signed the union scale at Philadelphia—the eight-hour day, at 2.70 per day.

The strike of the Westerly (R. I.) granite cutters has been settled, the men securing the eight-hour day at $3.

In the mines around Nevada City, Cal., Japanese are being introduced, who are paid $1 a day, boarding themselves.

Factory and mill hands, bench and machine men of Toledo, Ohio, have organized a branch of the International Woodworkers' Union.

The Women's International Trades Union Label League has organized a large branch in Chicago and is spreading to other western cities.

Blacksmiths and horseshoers at South Bend, Ind., have secured an advance of from 25 to 50 cents a day, and a reduction in the hours of labor.

Carpenters at Newport News, Va., demanded a nine-hour day with ten hours' pay and got it, and now other craftsmen are striking for the same.

Sixteen men at the Burlington shops at Hannibal, Mo., quit because they were getting 92 cents a day and 3 cents of that was taken for relief insurance.

The street car company at Kansas City has about $45,000 as deposits from employees, the interest on which is sufficient to pay nearly the entire running expenses for one day.

The strike in the copper district of Michigan has been settled. An increase of 10 per cent has been granted, and the underground employees will receive full time for half shifts on Saturdays.

The dispute between the International Typographical Union and Machinists as to the jurisdiction of typesetting machine tenders has been referred to an arbitration committee of nine—three from the I. T. U., three of the I. A. of M. and three just appointed by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor.

INTERNATIONAL NOTES

The trade unionists of England have filed a petition containing 85,000 signatures, declaring that the South African war is purely capitalistic aggression and not favored by working people.

The Austrian government has introduced a bill for limiting the working day in mines to nine hours a day—i. e., fifty-four hours a week. If the masters wish at any time to work more, this will have to be assented to by a joint committee of masters and men.

A committee of the landtag—the local parliament—of Bavaria has agreed to the Socialist proposition that delegates of the miners be allowed to assist in inspection of the mines.

There is a strike of men employed by the Berlin tramways, and the police have shown great brutality in putting down a manifestation of the strikers.

At Haarlem, Holland, at a recent election for the states-general the Socialist candidate, though unsuccessful, obtained 633 votes. This is a distinct advance. In 1897 only 156 votes were cast.

The 1st of May in St. Petersburg, as in other large industrial centers, was signalized by an immense amount of proclamations and various other publications, as well as by arrests.

In the opinion of the Labor World (Tokio, Japan), war in the far East will be unavoidable in the very near future, because "Russia is trying to secure a naval station or two on the Korean coasts with utmost force." In its quaint English, the World remarks: "A brutal thirst over poor Korea is so strong as to forget the international morality entirely, and now this old but steady bear is pushing on toward the war with Japan. We are sure of bloody conflict with the northern barbarism soon. We oppose the war because any and all the war will be very burdensome to the working classes. We believe there is one way to escape war between nations, and that is all Socialists of the world should unite in one body and oppose war in the future."

Trust fever is beginning to rage in Japan. The plate-glass, muslin, and watch manufacturers' trusts are already formed. The coal, silk thread, tea, silk-weaving, habutai (a kind of silk fabric), coal oil, rice, wine, beer, iron smelting, contractors' and spinning trusts are in process of formation.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

A new branch has been organized at South Milwaukee.

The Social Democrats of Texas will hold a state convention July 4 at Dallas.

The state convention of the Social Democratic party of Indiana will be held July 4.

Social Democrats of Omaha are holding open-air meetings and organizing new branches.

Branch 9, Milwaukee, will hold a basket picnic Sunday, June 17, in the vicinity of Forest Home.

Kansas Social Democrats are taking a referendum on a state ticket with G. C. Clemens for governor.

Resolutions of censure of the executive board, introduced at the Missouri state convention, were turned down.

Coming Events of Evansville, Ind., nominates Edward H. Meyer for mayor of the city in the local election next year.

German Brewers' Union, No. 114, at Providence, R. I., at its last meeting voted to support the candidacy and principles of Eugene V. Debs.

On June 24 Social Democrats of Milwaukee will have an excursion to Sheboygan. Tickets can be secured at 614 State street or of John Doerflinger, 701 Winnebago street, Milwaukee.

The Appeal to Reason, "Plan A," if carried out by Socialists and pushed vigorously, would give that paper a million subscribers at an exceedingly small expense to each one assisting in the work.

Comrade James T. Van Rensselaer, address 1618 Toberman street, Los Angeles, Cal., is starting out on July 1 for a speaking tour of several months. He would be glad to hear from Socialists in all parts of the country who desire a speaker to visit them, so that his time may be fully occupied during the campaign.

The new branch at Ware, Mass., which has been organized by Comrade MacCartney, is evidently very much alive. It held a large and enthusiastic meeting last Friday, addressed by Comrade Howard O. Gibbs, who reports that the young branch is a very promising and hopeful one.

The Herald again reminds its Chicago readers that the second annual picnic of the party will be on the 4th of July at Bergmann's Grove, Desplaines avenue and Twenty-sixth street. And in this connection we ask every Social Democrat to help the sale of tickets among his friends and make no other engagement for that day. We are going to have a great turnout.

The following is the ticket nominated in Missouri:
Governor—Caleb Lipscomb, Liberal.
Lieutenant-Governor—Leon Greenbaum, St. Louis.

Secretary of State—William H. Stripe, Kansas City.
Treasurer—W. M. Brandt, St. Louis.

Auditor—L. M. Richeson, Kansas City.
Attorney-General—John F. Delaney, Kansas City.

Railroad Commissioner—Thomas Hessler, Harviell.
Supreme Court Judge—Albert E. Sanderson, St. Louis.

Judge Court of Appeals, Eastern District—M. Ballard Dunn, St. Louis.
Judge Circuit Court, Western District—N. B. Vaughan, Kansas City.

Presidential Electors—G. N. Kuntz, Kansas City, and R. D. Morrison, Milan.

Every Tuesday night at 8 o'clock, meetings are held in the Hull House lecture hall under the auspices of the Federation of Social Justice, of which F. G. Strickland is field worker. The address next Tuesday will be by A. S. Edwards.

Miss Irene M. Ashby of England, a member of the Workers' Union, and of the Independent Labor Party, gave an interesting lecture on Socialism in Boston, June 10, under the auspices of the City Committee of the Social Democratic Party.

Indiana Socialists

For the purpose of organization of state and local branches and for the propagation of Socialism, all interested are requested to communicate with C. A. Thornton, No. 515 Law Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS HEARD FROM

Whereas, the attempt to unite with the Socialist Labor party faction has proven a failure; therefore, be it resolved, that it is the sentiment of Indiana Branch, No. 8, that the national executive board should submit a referendum vote to the branches for the purpose of selecting candidates for vice-president from the ranks of the Social Democratic party; also instructing the secretary to forward this resolution to the Social Democratic Herald for publication. Thomas Catton, Sec'y.

BALTIMORE WILL NOT VOTE

At a regular meeting of the branches of the S. D. P., held last week, it was recommended to the branches that—"They do not vote on the majority report submitted by the conference committee on unity; that this organization hold a nominating convention on the first Monday in July and that we invite all Socialists who indorse the candidates of our national convention—E. V. Debs and Job Harriman—to take part with us in this nominating convention." Levine P. Jones, Sec. Joint Meeting of S. D. P. Branches.

IT IS OUT OF ORDER

Comrade Editor: I am instructed by unanimous vote of Branch No. 3, S. D. P., to report the action of the branch at a meeting on the 6th, in regard to a communication from Wm. Butcher and associates, asking us to vote upon each of the several propositions submitted, in regard to the matter of union. It was the unanimous opinion of the members that the referendum vote of the S. D. P. settled the question of union for the present, so far as the said party is concerned, and that we cannot vote upon any proposition until it is submitted in conformity with the constitution and laws of the S. D. Party.

I. Hiatt,
Sec. Branch No. 3, Oregon.

BECAUSE THEY LOVED UNION SO

Branch No. 41, Everett, Mass., in regular meeting assembled, hereby passes the following resolutions:

Whereas, The Haverhill Social Democrat has stated that it would not print articles either in favor of or against union and the editor has printed four (4) articles in favor of and none against; therefore be it

Resolved, That Branch 41, Everett, condemns said undemocratic action of the Haverhill Social Democrat; also be it

Resolved, That Branch 41 condemns action of organic unity committee at meeting of May 20 by ignoring the S. D. P. Ordered that copies of these resolutions be sent to the Haverhill Social Democrat and the Social Democratic Herald for publication.

M. M. Pond, Sec'y.

BETTER BIDE A WEE

To the Members of the Social Democratic Party of America:

At a regular meeting of Branch No. 9 of Brockton, Mass., held June 5, 1900, we adopted the following resolutions:

Whereas, The S. D. P. of America is at present involved in a discussion as to the question of unity with the S. L. P., which is wholly unnecessary and unwarranted, and the wisdom and loyalty of the E. B. has been questioned and the recent referendum vote disputed; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, Branch No. 9 of Brockton, Mass., abide by the majority vote of the S. D. P. and stand by the national organization; and be it further

Resolved, That we use every effort to prevent a division of the party or forming organic union with the S. L. P. until such time as the sentiment of the members indicates that union would be in fact as well as in name.

Signed on behalf of Branch 9 of Massachusetts. A. B. Bosworth, Sec.

ABIDE BY THE REFERENDUM

At a meeting of Branch 5, Brooklyn, held on June 7, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, A referendum vote is the highest authority to decide any question in a Socialistic party.

Whereas, An attempt to overthrow a majority is a violation of the principles of Democracy.

Whereas, During the recent controversy in regard to union with the S. L. P. faction and the vote upon it, our N. E. B. has conducted itself with perfect fairness and justice to the members of the S. D. P.; therefore be it, Resolved, That we affirm our entire confidence in the N. E. B. and our unalterable resolution to abide by the decision of the referendum in refusing union with the S. L. P. faction at the present time; and we emphatically protest against the action of those comrades who have repudiated the decision of the referendum by participating in the unity committee meeting on Sunday, May 20, and in taking part in forming a new party. We call upon you, comrades, as Social Democrats, to rally and support our party in the crisis, and let us work for the coming campaign as we have never worked before. Comrades, rally around the S. D. P. and its standard bearer, E. V. Debs.

S. Pressman, Sec.

NEW YORK SETTLES THE QUESTION

At a meeting held by the local No. 1, S. D. P., on June 4 at 60 Broome street, a circular and a list of various questions were received from the secretaries of so-called conference committee—namely, William Butcher and I. Stone—asking us to vote on the majority report.

The following resolution was introduced and unanimously adopted:

Whereas, by voting on the proposition of our N. E. B., "Is unity desirable or not?" we have recognized the legality of such a proposition and committed ourselves to the decision of the referendum vote.

Whereas, by this decision all negotiations of the committee on unity were annulled and discharged, and be it further resolved that we, the members of Branch 1, cannot recognize the committee on unity, as a body which represents the party, and the legality of their report; and consequently we refuse to vote on the above named majority report; and be it further resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Social Democratic Herald, "the Anti-Saloon People" and Comrade William Butcher.

B. Gillman,
K. Remy,
Resolution Committee.

A DENIAL

When Harriman and Hilquit, over their signatures, stated that I had at the New York conference, exonerated the S. L. P. delegates from the charge of bad faith, I did not think it worth while to deny the accusation, because the falsity of it was characteristically delinquent. They (or Hilquit's stenographer) simply omitted a little qualifying phrase, which would alter the sense materially. What I said was: "This being so, then I believe you have lived up to your pledges," etc.

But now that they come out and, growing bolder because of my silence, charge me with having signed such a statement, it is time for me to call a halt and absolutely deny their charge. The fact is, that when I got through speaking, Mahlon Barnes, who was taking notes of the proceedings, asked me if I would write down what I had just said. I said I would willingly, and took his pencil and paper, and wrote: "If this is so, then I think there was no bad faith, but much misunderstanding." Remember that I was not present at the so-called "peace conference," and no pledges were made to me personally, though I shared the general impression given to the convention by the four S. L. P. delegates that they were committed to our party name and had heard Hilquit ask for two weeks' time after the convention in which to prepare his constituents for the change of name. When the charge of bad faith was made by Comrade Heath there were but two alternatives before us—either to withdraw from the conference altogether, as Heath did, or to grant for the time being that their excuses were valid, so that we might be in a position to go on with the negotiations, reserving final judgment, however, until we could hear the other side of the story. I chose the latter alternative. I absolutely deny that I ever said or wrote, without justification, that there had been no bad faith or that they had kept their pledges. The allegation that I signed my name to any such statement is absolutely untrue, as Mr. Mahlon Barnes well knows, and I challenge him or any one else to produce such statement signed by me.

Margaret Haile.

Call For Convention

All members of the S. D. P. of the Twelfth congressional district of Massachusetts are notified to meet in mass convention at Brockton, Socialist hall, 86 Main street, on Sunday, July 1, 1900, at 2:30 p. m., to nominate a candidate for congress and transact such other business as may come before the convention.

Charles E. Lowell,
Secretary District Committee.

Iowa Socialists

All reformers living in Iowa who are interested in the Social Democracy are requested to communicate with the undersigned. By unanimous vote of the S. D. P. branches of the state I have been made the party organizer for the state. I desire the name of every Socialist in Iowa.

Lone Tree, Iowa.

MILWAUKEE CITY COMMITTEE

The central committee of the S. D. P. of the city of Milwaukee assembled at a regular meeting on the 4th of June, 1900, and discussed fully the proceedings and results of the informal convention of the seven members of the S. L. P. (anti-Deleon faction) and eight of the former S. D. P. committee on union at New York on May 20 and arrived at the following conclusion:

1. The modus operandi of the delegates of the S. L. P. once more proved to every unbiased mind the undesirability of organic union.

2. The action of Comrades E. V. Debs, V. L. Berger, S. Stedman and M. Haile at this informal convention was perfectly consistent with the principles of the S. D. P. and Social Democracy in general.

3. The conduct of Comrades Carey, Chase, Hoehn, Butcher and Lonerson was opposed to the Social Democratic party and the principles of democracy in general.

4. While regretting deeply the confusion instilled by the fusion agitation in the minds of some unripe members of the S. D. P., the central committee is, however, confident that the spirit of loyalty to the party and the good sense of the members will in a short time eradicate every trace of the "storm in a glass of water" created by a few unscrupulous persons in both parties.

5. The committee respectfully urges all the comrades of the Social Democratic party, in the name of all that is most dear and sacred to them as advance agents of Social Democracy, in the name of the great historical mission of Social Democracy, to take a decided, unequivocal stand on the subject before us, and dismiss from their memory the ugly attempt of a forced union with a party whose spirit and tactics are entirely foreign and repulsive to the American proletariat. With fraternal greetings, for the committee.

Secretary.

KENTUCKY STATE CONVENTION

At a joint meeting of branches 1 and 5 of Louisville, held Thursday, June 7, the secretary was directed to have call inserted in the national organ, the Social Democratic Herald, for a state convention of the Social Democratic party of Kentucky, to be held in the city of Louisville on July 4.

The convention will assemble at Reeb's hall, 516 Fifth street, at 11 o'clock a. m. Wednesday, July 4, 1900.

The convention is to name thirteen presidential electors, form a state organization of the party and transact such other business as may properly come before the convention.

First—Each branch shall be entitled to as many representatives as there are members in good standing; any representative, if selected, shall be entitled to one vote for each member whose name is attached to his credential, and provided that no member shall sign his or her name to more than one credential.

Second—Branches not sending their own representatives may select those of other branches of this state to represent them; provided, that in each case the representative shall hold the proper credential with the signature attached, as herein provided.

Third—All signatures of members attached to credentials, as herein provided, shall be certified to by the secretaries of their respective branches.

James H. Arnold,
Secretary of Joint Meeting.

AGITATION IN MASSACHUSETTS

At a meeting under Social Democratic auspices held at Ware, Mass., Comrade H. A. Gibbs being the speaker, a large audience listened to an admirable address on Socialism. Dr. Gibbs said in part:

"What do Socialists want? Why, we want it? How are we to get it?" He said that the great stumbling block was ignorance and indifference. Fear of change also keeps men from studying the question. Yet there is change in the physical world always going on; there must be in the social world also. It cannot be prevented. Capitalism was necessary to pave the way for Socialism. It must now give way. Capitalism now penetrates and dominates the social and intellectual life. President Andrews of Brown University lost his position because he was a man, and the trustees went where for his successor? To a wealthy New York church and selected Faunce, and presently Rockefeller's check came for half a million dollars, showing how capital dominates over educational institutions.

"The whole superstructure of capital is founded on a monstrous wrong.

"First, all wealth is the product of useful labor. Capital is the accumulation of the plundered labor product of the workers. Capital is thus the result of the exploitation of labor.

"Society has thus been divided into two classes, producers and non-producers.

Capitalists or hobos are both social parasites. Only by giving back to every producer the full value of his product can the existing wrong be righted.

"Statistics showing that the average laborer produces $2,204 of wealth each year; he receives but $445 in wages.

"How can the change from individual ownership be brought about? There must be a new social superstructure. It can be done by the wage workers uniting. It must be done by education to united political action.

"Under capitalism war is necessary. It should not be. The right basis of the social structure is that the man receives what he produces, not what he possesses. Socialism will bring forth peace and love in the educational, political and religious world. If the question is settled by war, it will be a war forced by the capitalistic class.

"Can the big parties bring about the change from individual to collective ownership? The Republicans will not, and Mr. Bryan's scheme to regulate trusts is defeated by the fact that the trusts own the government."

A MODEL DEMOCRATIC MAYOR

The New York Journal gives Mayor Van Wyck's record in ice as follows:

The cat is out of the bag at last. The Journal has given to the people of New York the name of every person who holds stock in the criminal ice trust. The names were transcribed from the official record of the ice trust's stockholders. The list is absolutely accurate. The transcript was made by an expert accountant. It cannot be questioned. It will not be.

The record is fatal to Mayor Van Wyck. It proves that he acquired (just how will be shown later) on June 1, 1899, 750 shares in the trust. These were never cancelled and he still holds them. On the same day—portentous coincidence—John F. Carroll acquired 1,750 shares.

Richard Croker's name is put opposite 500 uncanceled shares, acquired the same day, and Augustus Van Wyck is credited with still another 500. The ice trust was feathering its nest in a lively fashion upon that day.

April 20, 1900, was another busy day for the trust in placing its shares where they "would do the most good." On that day Mayor Van Wyck vetoed the Ahearn bill, passed by the legislature, which would have taken from the plundering trust the city piers, the possession of which was the basis of its monopoly.

Early in April the mayor blusteringly declared his opposition to the ice trust.

Before April 20 he "saw the light" and changed his opinion of the iniquity of the trust. On April 20 he had come to the conclusion that an ice trust was a good thing for the people of New York, and on that day he vetoed the Ahearn bill, which would have destroyed the monopoly.

On April 20 (mark the coincidence) he possessed himself of 2,000 shares of ice trust stock, par value $200,000!

On the very same day (veto day) his brother, Augustus Van Wyck, got 1,000 shares of trust stock.

The mayor's veto of a bill that would have destroyed the ice trust was coincident with his getting hold of his first batch of ice trust stock.

Queer coincidence, that? Deadly, too.

The official stock records show that the mayor got stock in the ice trust with regularity. Between April 20, 1899, and July 9, 1899—seventy-eight days—he bought and sold 6,200 shares of preferred stock, par value $620,000; the actual cost of which (if he paid it) at the then market price was $434,000.

During these same seventy-eight days, the mayor acquired a liking for the common stock of the ice trust and got hold of and sold 6,100 shares; par value $610,000, the actual cost of which (if he paid it) at the then market price was $244,000. He is in ice up to his neck.

"LOOKING FORWARD"

The Rock Island Argus gave the following sketch of Debs' recent lecture at that place:

"At Harper's theater last night a thoughtful audience was held for one hour by Eugene V. Debs, the great labor leader and orator, who was introduced by E. C. Berry, president of the Tri-City Labor congress. His subject was 'Looking Forward.'

"Mr. Debs painted with artful stroke the wrongs and inhumanities of man to man—the accumulated curse of centuries, all centralized—a ghastly and horrible picture misnamed Fate and Destiny; slavery—slavery, as he sees it, all through the centuries from feudalism to the modern form of greed as expressed in the present and last slavery—the industrial.

"Then he pictured deftly, but with master strokes, wealth and society for the privileged classes, and the inevitable conflict that marked it all with the stain of blood.

"The history of civilization was outlined, and the evolution of governments from the barbarian days through monarchy, the church and kings, to free inquiry under out of it all the light dawned, the emancipation of the human intellect was pre-empted. From free cities to free institutions was but a step. The American republic wrought the change on the map of the world, and hope for all peoples was inspired.

"Enemies, however, in our great development, said he, sprang up, and then began the great modern warfare for wealth that now has culminated in the tyranny of greed as it never was witnessed before. Now are we in the transition stage—the great change is at hand, and the world is to witness the transformation of hell to heaven right now and right here on earth.

"Mr. Debs is an optimist and has an abiding faith in the dream of social and political reformers. He has for his cure Social Democracy, of which he is now the leader, and his only weapon is an educated ballot. He believes that Socialism is the great and only panacea, and hence builds his arguments along the line of such theorists and doctrinaires.

"Mr. Debs had all the well-worn terms and phrases at his tongue's end and used them with telling effect, evoking applause and laughter at his humorous illustrations and apt and happy hits at capital, private ownership and the great captain of colossal fortunes. Mr. Debs is intensely in earnest and he imparts his enthusiasm to his hearers.

"The man is a study—once the living flame that caused the great railway strike—now the calm but interesting lecturer. His figure is bent, his limbs unsteady, his features showing the mental battles of his restive mind in its struggle to solve the problem, the answer to which no man can foretell.

"Mr. Debs pictured the better future so as to make one hate the present in spite of all its progress and advantages. The lecture abounded in witty sallies, sprightly aphorisms and good humor. He has many graces of oratory and gesture, is brimming with illustrations and anecdotes, is a master of elocution and diction.

"Speaking of the scope and influence of trusts, Mr. Debs said if there were no new markets in the Philippines, there would not be war there, and if there were no gold in South Africa the British soldiery would never have invaded that country."

ETHICS OF THE FUTURE

A CONJECTURE AND A HOPE

(Conclusion)

petition and all its kindred brood of unrealities and falsities. Over against those such other thoughts as these, the public, communication, fellowship, co-operation, justice, duty are among the organics which to crystallize into words, deeds and hand products will be the business of the future generations. To the social man of coming times it will be more gratifying to be permitted to build one foot into the walls of the city sewer than to build a hundred feet into the walls of a palace which he would be constrained to call his own.

Of course such a time will have a mental philosophy peculiar to its conditions as we have to ours. One of the characteristics of our mental make-up now is seen in the habit we have of individualizing each thought. Public speakers of our times are constantly bringing us this little thought and that little thought, considering each as a thought standing of itself apart. Such an isolation of thoughts is natural under individualism. Socialism, on the contrary, will only know thoughts as trends or tendencies towards an ultimate moving from an isolate uttermost to the collective central or master thought of that series. I not only deny that there is any proper individual thought but that there is any individual thinker; conceiving the whole faculty of thought to be a social function to which the individual rightly adjusted tends by the formation chiefly of industrious habits of doing things obediently and making things socially; that is assisting in the making of things for collective use, and making them collectively. This assisting in the making of things for collective use lies at the root of true society.

All work of the future will be social, for that which is not social is not work, but bondage. There will be, there can be no individual positive-builders. At the best the individual can only do the negative work of the world, his chief duty will be the removing of that which intervenes between the natural and true foundations of social life and the social corps of builders. Much of this excavation and removal will consist of the obstructions to social life found in the makeup of the individuals themselves; thus to take one's self out of the way of the builders will constitute much of the work of the future. And in this sense is to be taken what I say that the work of ego in future reconstruction will be negative for a long time. What, under those conditions will regulate our personal intercourse with each other? We shall feel every man, woman and child, that we have no other position in life but that of society's representatives to one another. With this great master thought dominating each life we will speedily grow human beings of such a spirit, mould and feature as the world has not yet known. Our material cities then will be great masses of crystallized thought, firmly built, human environments having these two qualities towards man, defensive and expressive. As turned to the individual they shall express the largeness and unity of social life and the defense of its integrity, and they shall express the individual to the state as a thing of dependence in need of protection and loyalty. Towards the divine life our cities shall be as palaces of glass giving entrance to every ray of light.

The individualist conception of life turns society into a swarm of secretive, self-concealing, stinging hypocrites, the majority of whom fear to admit the thought of a higher unit, lyingly assert that it is religion that makes hypocrites. No, it is not religion, but plain secular everyday individualism that makes liars and hypocrites more or less of us all. In the mart or the workshop, or the court house, or wherever we are compelled to take advantage of each other for a living, it is there, by that act, and under that compulsion, that we are made false.

The Pastry Cook's Fable

Once upon a time there was an island inhabited only by men and pigeons; pigeons formed their only food. The inhabitants had neither traps, guns nor bows and arrows, but depended solely on a single piece of rock, which was common property and used by all in turn. First one man took up the rock and with it killed his pigeon, then a second, and so until all were satisfied. By and by a man came along who was stronger and smarter than the rest, and when he had killed his pigeon, instead of restoring the rock to its place for the next man's use, he put it in his pocket and claimed that it belonged to him. Thereupon there was great misery and hunger, and some of the inhabitants were starved to death. A deputation was then got up to ask for the restoration of the stone. But, to their great surprise, the owner demanded purchase-money for the return of the stolen rock. After further negotiation the owner of the rock offered to loan the use of the stone, if the inhabitants would undertake to give him two pigeons out of three that should be killed.

Moral: The owner of the rock is more liberal than landlords, who get all the pigeons, and give only the tail for "bare subsistence" to their tenants, and this because death would put an end to further service and also entail the cost of burial.—Nineteenth Century.

Production and Distribution

The result of our mechanical development has been a vast increase in accumulated wealth. In France and England the wealth accumulated during this century is more than five times as great as the total accumulation of all preceding ages in those countries. In America the wealth of the Union in 1800 was about $1,000,000,000, while now it is well toward $90,000,000,000, or, taking fractions into account, an increase of eighty-five fold, which is over six times the growth of population in the same period, the per capita wealth having risen from $200 in the year 1800, to $1,200, or thereabouts in the year 1900.

While, however, the creation and accumulation of wealth have progressed in this unexampled way, the diffusion of wealth has met with no corresponding improvement. On the contrary, there has been a progressive concentration of wealth into relatively fewer hands, until now, according to the data collected by Dr. Spahr of the Outlook, "one-half of the people own practically nothing; one-eighth of the people own seven-eighths of the wealth, or forty-nine times their share; 1 per cent of the people own 54 per cent of the wealth—one family in every 100 being able to buy out the other ninety-nine families and have something left besides; and finally, about one-two-hundredths of 1 per cent of the people, or 4,000 millionaires and multi-millionaires, have 20 per cent of the total wealth, or over 4,000 times their fair share on the principles of partnership and brotherhood."—Prof. Frank Parsons.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC HERALD

THIRD YEAR. No. 1.

CHICAGO, ILL., U.S.A., SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1900.

Whole No. 103.

ANOTHER ADVANCE IN WISCONSIN FOR SOCIAL DEMOCRACY

Score one more for Socialism! The annual convention of the State Federation of Labor of Wisconsin, held in the city of Sheboygan last week came out square for Social Democracy, passing strong resolutions and electing well-known Social Democrats to the leading offices. The pledge went through with a whoop, the vote being 45 to 9. Each succeeding convention of the federation, which is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, has shown an increased socialist sentiment and it was only a question of time when the organization would take its stand in the international advance of labor. Members who have "scabbed" each election day have become less yearly, just as in other labor organizations, and the day is not so far distant as people suppose, when the workers of the Badger state will march solidly to the polls to take possession of government and to not only run it in the interests of labor but also in the interests of the demand for changed fundamental conditions. The socialistic plank which the convention endorsed reads as follows: "For the collective ownership by the people of all the means of production and distribution. By this is meant that when an industry becomes centralized as to assume the form of a trust or monopoly, and hence, a menace to the best interests of the people, such industry should be assumed by the government. This is true protection to the weak, those least represented in legislation." The resolution was introduced by comrade Howard Tuttle, chairman of the committee on resolutions.

Resolutions were passed condemning child labor in factories and the legislative committee was instructed to draft a bill for presentation at the next state legislature.

The officers elected were:

Executive Board—S. McCarthy, Paul Huebner, Charles Nicholas of Milwaukee, and Edward Mahneke of Sheboygan.

Secretary-Treasurer—Fred Brockheisen, Milwaukee.

General Organizer—Frank J. Weber, Milwaukee.

The next regular convention will be held at West Superior.

SOCIALISM IS LARGER THAN ANY ONE CLASS

By Arthur Allen

I am bound to confess that I am one of those Socialists "who have nothing to gain but everything to lose" by the advocacy of the ownership by society of the means and sources of production. Although a member of a profession, I am one who through the sacrifices of my father (a workman) and others was enabled to obtain what passes for education. I have always felt that those sacrifices were made for the purpose of fitting me more completely for the service of my fellows. I cannot understand why either my profession or training should in any way interfere with my being a loyal Socialist. As far as work is concerned, I presume but few men have toiled harder or longer hours than I did from the time I was 12 years of age until I was 24. These statements have been called forth by certain things that have been said recently by certain persons who bear the name Socialist but whose sympathies are as contracted as those of the most bigoted individualist. I do not understand what a Socialist means when he proclaims that the coming conflict is between the academic Socialist and the proletariat—meaning by the former the editors, the lawyers, the ministers and the physicians in our ranks. Neither do I understand the spirit which prompts some few Socialists to speak contemptuously of the farmers of the country. Let me ask those who dream that among the so-called wage-earners are to be found the materials exclusively of founding the co-operative commonwealth; if they have faced the fact that if they converted every wage-worker, that still they would not possess a majority of the voters of this country? The number of small tradesmen and professional men is rapidly increasing in proportion to our population. The greatest appeal that can be made to these is the appeal to their moral sense. Are we going to say to the men who risk their all to identify themselves with the movement, which is not for one class, after all, but for the larger interests of humanity, that they are not worthy to be Socialists? Where have the great leaders of Socialism in the past come from. What are you going to say about Cabot, the lawyer and former attorney-general of Corsica; of Count Henry de Saint-Simon, the first advocate of pure Socialism—that is, the ownership of the means and sources of production by the people. St. Simon spent his fortune in the advocacy of this principle. He was forced to become a copyist at $200 a year in order to live. He then robbed himself of sleep and proper food in order that he might advocate his ideas. Is this a man who is not worthy to be a Socialist? Not one of the great founders of Socialism among the French came from the proletariat. It was the condition of the working people that aroused them to do something to ameliorate their conditions. Robertus was a judge, and yet he was in a large measure the founder of German Socialism. La Salle, the son of a wealthy Jewish merchant, fitted himself for a university professorship. Yet we are told that he went up and down Germany arousing the workingmen to a realization of their condition. He found them like oxen and left them as men. Marx was the son of a converted Jew whose social position was high and who held a civil service position. Marx himself fitted himself first for the law. He afterward studied philosophy and intended himself for a professorship. He finally entered politics and became the editor of the Rheinisch Gazette. After his expulsion from Germany he supported himself as newspaper correspondent. In England the Socialist movement has had the inspiration of such men as Morris and Hyndman and many others who according to the theories of some should be looked upon as dangerous to the Socialist movement. If no one can be a true Socialist who is not a so-called wage-worker, what are we to do with the great leaders of the past? I do not mean to contend for one moment that some of the most far-seeing and noblest leaders of our movement are not to be found among the wage-workers of the world. What I do stand for is the recognition of a spirit of brotherhood that will recognize every honest Socialist, no matter what his previous or present condition of servitude may be. It is not bigotry or intolerance that will win the day, but fairness and tolerance.

With this marked and clear indication in the evolution of society we find Mr. Bryan, instead of assisting this growth and attacking the feebleness, contradictions, inadequacy and failures of the capitalist system; and instead of proposing the logical and natural solution, he stands opposing the trusts and syndicates and proposing legislation which he hopes will send us back to primitive conditions. Those who would discard the trip hammer for the simple one of hand use, the thrashing machine for the flail or the spinning machine for the spinning wheel would be regarded as idiots. The change which this evolution in the methods of production has created in society; this candidate proposes to alter by simple legislation. He would stem the natural tide of economic progress and go back to a system through which we have passed never to return. It does not require a scholar nor a professor to see the folly of such a position. Bryan was asked if he believed in Socialism. He answered no. He was asked if he believed in single tax. He answered no. He was asked if he believed in the nationalization of railroads. He answered: "We will settle that when we get through with the money question," and this is the wondrous leader which so many laboring men cheer. He is leading, or trying to lead, a retreat. Nature will prepare the abyss for him. While feudalism was disappearing Don Quixote with Sancho Panza and their little mule run over the hills to find wind mills upon which to charge, and this modern chevalier with a mule of no greater intelligence, is trying to find new wind mills upon which to demonstrate his valor and his wonderful system of atmospheric propulsion.

The municipality of London, England, acquired one of the street railway systems about a year ago. At that time the service was wretched and the employees were compelled to work seven days in a week and furnish their own uniforms. In a year of public ownership the service has been reorganized, the employees are furnished uniforms and given one day's holiday a week, the fare has been reduced from one penny to a half-penny, and the highways committee reports to the city council a surplus of $170,000.

The officials of the government are investigating the complaints entered by the trades unions of the Pacific coast that the provisions of the Geary exclusion act are being openly violated and that the Chinese are again pouring into the country, the claim being made that 10,000 have been landed in San Francisco alone in the past two years. It is generally known that the grossest frauds have been practiced in the administration of the law to exclude the Chinese.

Bull-headed bosses are responsible for more labor troubles than unreasonable workmen. If employers were as willing to be as fair as the workers are, nine-tenths of the strikes might be avoided.

The Western Union Telegraph company is about to install a modern telephone plant in the city of New York and to enter into active competition with the Bell telephone monopoly.

ORGANIZATION WANTED IN EVERY STATE OF THE UNION

In this column will be found calls upon the unattached Socialists in many states to communicate with comrades of the Social Democratic party. To these imitations special attention is called. The Social Democratic party stands (and moves) in this country for the principles of International Socialism. It seeks to organize the movement in every state and territory of the Union and solicits correspondence from Socialists wherever branches have not yet been started. Letters should be addressed to the National Secretary, The Social Democratic party is controlled by no individual, nor by any set of individuals short of its entire membership through the referendum. From its inception in June, 1898, to the present time it has stood for the principles of genuine democracy, notwithstanding all representations of designing and unscrupulous men to the contrary. Communicate with the organizer in your state. Full instructions and all necessary supplies for organizing local branches may be obtained by addressing the national secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

California Socialists

Socialists resident in California and not members of the Social Democratic party are requested to communicate with John Carter, 929 Twenty-second street, San Francisco.

Oregon Socialists, Attention

You are requested to communicate with J. D. Stevens, Box 204, Portland, organizer for the S. D. P., with a view to instituting branches of the party in your community. The future belongs to Socialism. Lend a hand and get your state thoroughly organized.

Iowa Socialists

All reformers living in Iowa who are interested in the Social Democracy are requested to communicate with the undersigned. By unanimous vote of the S. D. P. branches of the state I have been made the party organizer for the state. I desire the name of every Socialist in Iowa. A. W. Ricker, Lone Tree, Iowa.

Arizona Socialists

In every community should correspond with M. J. Casper, Box 178, Globe, Tucson, Ariz. We have plans for keeping organizers in the field to organize branches in every town in Arizona before November; 500 Socialists

EUGENE V. DEBS TO ORGANIZED LABOR OF ST. LOUIS

In answer to an invitation to visit St. Louis Eugene V. Debs sent the following letter to the Central Trades and Labor union:

"Terre Haute, Ind., June 6, 1900.
"Central Trades and Labor Union, St. Louis, Mo.

"Dear Sirs and Brothers: Your communication in behalf of the executive committee of the C. T. and L. U., under date of the 2d inst., is with me and has been carefully noted. Unfortunately the appeal of the striking street-railway employees finds me confined to my bed, under the care of a physician. I am suffering from rheumatism, the result of exposure and overexertion.

"From the very beginning of the strike in your city I have been profoundly interested in its progress and final outcome, and had not imperative engagements, previously made, prevented, I should have voluntarily tendered my services to President Mahon and the Amalgamated Street Railway Employees' Association in their struggle to defend their members against the Transit company.

"In this struggle it is not necessary for me to say that my sympathies are entirely with the striking employees, and I only regret that my physical condition is such that I cannot put myself squarely on record in their interest by giving them my active support.

"The turbulence incident to the St. Louis strike has excited the usual flow of capitalistic comment. Of course it is claimed that the strikers are responsible for all the trouble. It is so easy for people who live out of the labor of others to talk about law and order. If only they were compelled to run a street car through crowded streets for nine or ten hours for a paltry wage, they would not wonder why honest and peaceable men are driven to extremities, in which fine points of law as to their conduct are simply mockery. As a matter of fact, they are not striking for their rights; but against tyranny and exploitation; and as the struggle involves not only their means of living, but their very lives, as well as the lives of their wives and babes, it would be strange indeed, and far more to their discredit than acts of violence incident to the strike, if they did not exert all the means at their command to prevent defeat and degradation.

"The St. Louis strike is an important battle in the great warfare for the liberation of the working class from the oppression and robbery of capitalism. Whatever may be the outcome it will be a victory for labor, for no strike is ever lost.

"I do not doubt this strike has opened the eyes of many of the working class pledging 25 cents per month each will do it. Don't miss it—write at once.

North Dakota Socialists

Socialists residing in North Dakota and desiring to organize for effective propaganda work in that state are requested to correspond with Math. Eidsness, Tower, N. D.

To Our Washington Readers

Comrade D. Burgess of New Whatcom, Wash., has been selected as organizer for the state and is prepared to assist the Socialists of Washington in organizing branches of the S. D. P. Correspondence addressed to him will receive prompt attention.

Michigan Socialists

All Social Democrats and all unattached Socialists residing in Michigan are requested to write at once to Henry Ramsey, 84 Railroad street, Battle Creek, Mich., and thus aid in placing a Social Democratic state ticket in the field this fall.

Socialists of Tennessee

For the purpose of organizing branches and putting a ticket out this fall, the undersigned urges that you write to him at once. Also send him a list of all unattached Socialists. Wm. L. Hamilton, Organizer Branch No. 1, 323 Russell street, Nashville, Tenn.

Southern California, Attention

All Socialists in the seven southern counties of Southern California should now get to work and so far as possible form branches in every voting precinct. To further this end communicate at once with James T. Van Rensselaer, 1618 Toberman street, Los Angeles, Cal.

Attention, Nebraska

Persons living in Nebraska and accepting the principles of Socialism are requested to communicate with T. A. Edwards, 3220 California street, Omaha, with a view to the organization of branches of the Social Democratic party.

To Texas Socialists

For purpose of state organization, the Bonham Social Democratic branch requests that every Socialist in Texas who reads this notice, will please send name and address to the undersigned. Please attend to this at once. W. E. Farmer, Bonham, Texas.

to the power of capitalism in such a crisis. All departments of government are subject to the class which owns the means of production and distribution. Only the capitalist class can secure the issuance of injunctions, call into action the posse comitatus, swear in deputy sheriffs, call out the militia and command the federal troops to commit crowning acts of capitalistic despotism. The working class have only to submit—or be jailed or shot down. But surely such object lessons are not in vain. The Transit company, in its blind cupidity, is hastening its own doom. Collective ownership is the lesson taught, and the demand for it will spring spontaneously from such a situation.

"I wish you to tender my profound sympathy to President Mahon in this trying hour. I know him well, and there is not a more honest or courageous leader of the working class. I have seen him tried, and he has proven himself worthy of the confidence and esteem of all men. Under his leadership the men at St. Louis have made and are making a brave fight, and most heartily do I wish that complete victory may crown their struggle. The Central Trades and Labor union and the organized workers of St. Louis generally cannot be too highly commended for their loyal support of the strike. They have given to the country an exhibition of devotion to the cause of labor worthy of universal emulation. Mrs. Debs, who is writing this for me, and all our family, unite in the earnest wish that victory may come to the striking comrades. Yours fraternally,

"Eugene V. Debs."

PROGRESS IN MONTANA

Miners' union day is a great day for parading, but it is also a good day for doing a little thinking. The sooner the workingmen of this country begin to find out where their true interests lie, the better for Socialism. A number of far-seeing leaders among the union workers in Montana have taken up this question in earnest, as the proceedings of the last convention at Denver will show. For instance, the resolution of creating an educational bureau for the purpose of distributing Socialistic literature was introduced by citizens of Montana. Those workers of the Social Democratic party who started the movement in this state feel greatly encouraged by such favorable signs. The dawn of a new era in American politics is upon us. Under the leadership of Eugene V. Debs the Socialists are marching forward, and when next November the votes will be counted, the first battle will have been fought for the emancipation of the wage-workers.—The Reveille, Butte, Mont.

SOMETHING ALL CAN DO

There is one way open for every member and every reader of this paper to help the campaign. It is to get out among friends and neighbors and secure new subscribers to the Herald. The circulation of this paper should go up to 50,000 in the next three months, and 5,000 men can put it there, too, if they will just hustle. We are not sending out "gentle notifications" that your services will be greatly appreciated in the coming campaign. We tell you here in the columns of your own paper that if you are a Social Democrat and anxious for ripening sympathizers into active workers and voters this year, you will quit the "patience on a monument" act and get down to business for Socialism—get subscribers to the Herald.

The Herald proposes to co-operate with its readers to the fullest extent possible to increase its list and help the campaign. To this end we have concluded to make a special campaign rate for new subscriptions covering the period from the first week in July to the close of the year—twenty-six weeks. The rate under this campaign offer will be 20 cents for the twenty-six weeks. With two months' canvass and enthusiastic work the members can enable us to start the campaign with 50,000 subscribers on the Herald list. That is worth striving for and means a tremendous vote for Socialism next November.

WHAT WE ARE DOING

While the wind blows and our enemies bellow the Social Democratic party continues without interruption its work of organizing the people for the great campaign and revolutionary Socialism. It is a proof of the splendid esprit du corps of the organization that it has weathered a storm and is giving every week evidences of growing strength and vitality. With charity for all, with malice toward none, it presses forward—a living movement, a potent factor and an unconquerable division of the Socialist army—to the realization of its hopes. Again this party hears from the people who are turning their faces toward it from every section of the country, and again we are enabled to convey cheering news to the readers of this paper. Eleven new branches organized and enrolled since the last issue of the Herald went to press, testifies as no other fact could to the accelerating growth of conscious Socialist sentiment in the country and the high favor in which the Social Democratic party stands with the people who are coming to accept our principles. There is everything to encourage and enthrall Social Democrats in the present prospect. Since the first day of the present month thirty-one new branches have been reported to this office, the last being one of fifty-two charter members (included in this week's list) at Cokeville, Pa.

Surely and irresistibly the Social Democratic party is generating its old-time power and re-enforcing its ranks for the historic campaign upon which it is about to enter.

Everywhere Socialism is the chief topic of conversation among men. Let Social Democrats everywhere take advantage of the present hour and prevailing sentiment and push forward the work of organization.

PRESENT DAY OPPORTUNITIES

When Justice Brewer of the United States Supreme court was asked if a young man of ability, integrity and industry nowadays could do what he had done, he made this reply. Note in it the support given to the argument of Socialists:

"I do not believe he would get the opportunity, for all the conditions are so changed. I could not have got such a start in any eastern city then. There are no frontier towns like Leavenworth now. I was a raw youth, with a very inadequate legal education, even though I had had a year in my Uncle David Dudley Field's office, and another year at the Albany Law school, and I had been admitted to the bar at Albany without examination and before I was quite 21. I could not have been elected to so important a judgeship as that of probate and criminal jurisdiction anywhere in the east, and I suppose there is no place in the west where a similar young man could be elected now to a similar position. Opportunities, at least in my profession, are not so numerous now and the conditions of success are much harder. Of course, if a young man with the necessary qualifications has influential friends to get him a place with one of the great law firms in our largest cities and he is pushed along, he may succeed rapidly; but as a rule success even to the most favored comes slowly. No one can succeed without ability, attainments and persistent, concentrated hard work; but opportunity is equally essential."

The International Socialist Review

The first number of the International Socialist Review, appearing the first of July, will contain a number of interesting features. There will be an article by Rev. W. T. Brown on "Plutocracy or Democracy" that is one of the best things this well known Socialist writer has produced. "Socialism in England" is treated in a most thorough way by H. M. Hyndman, who has long been known as one of the pioneers of international Socialism, and as the author of "The Economics of Socialism" and "The Historical Basis of Socialism," both among the classics of the subject. Marcus Hitch of Chicago treats the subject of "Karl Marx and the Money Question" in a new and original manner that is sure to provoke much thought and discussion. Jean Longuet, a grandson of Karl Marx, and member of the editorial staff of both La Petite Republique and Le Mouvement Socialiste, sends a contribution on "French Political Parties and the Recent Elections," that not only gives some interesting news but also tells just what everyone has been wanting to know about the positions and relative strength of the different French political parties. "The Legislative Elections in Belgium" are discussed by Prof. Emile Vinck of the Nouvelle Universite of Brussels, who is also the secretary of the League of Socialist Municipal Councillors. One or two other articles have been promised but cannot be definitely announced as yet. In addition there will be the editorial review of the month, events in the labor world and general foreign news.

Among the delegates to the convention of that great "workingmen's" organization known as the republican party were the following:

John Lambert of Joliet, president American Steel and Wire company of New Jersey.

Isaac L. Ellwood of DeKalb, chairman board of directors American Steel and Wire company of New Jersey.

H. D. Judson of Aurora, superintendent Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad; travels only in a private car.

Frank O. Lowden of Chicago, Pullman Palace Car company.

Charles H. Deere of Moline, of the Moline Plow company and the so-called "plow trust."

Martin B. Madden of Chicago, president Western Stone company.

Frederick H. Smith of Peoria, banker and capitalist.

F. C. Rice of Galesburg, division superintendent Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad.

Pleasant T. Chapman of Vienna, railroad builder, capitalist and railroad director.

Because the street-car company broke its agreement with the employees and preferred force to arbitration, St. Louis has this object lesson: The strike at the end of thirty-two days has these totals: Persons killed 11; made insane, 2; persons shot, 57; persons injured, 167; children shot, 8; loss to city trade, $22,500,000; loss in street-car fares, $600,000; loss in wages, $500,000; police on duty, 1,000; extra officers, 3,000; cars wrecked, 76.

The Socialists of Marion county, Ore., in order to test the strength of the Socialist sentiment, nominated F. A. Myers for school superintendent. The vote cast, 1,698, was a great surprise to the old parties, and gives the Socialists much encouragement. The republican candidate was elected by a vote of 3,030.

Signor Gallo, the government candidate for the presidency of the Italian chamber was elected by 242 votes against 214 cast for the Socialist candidate. It is thought that the present session will be even more stormy than the last.

The place to work for Socialism is in the organized Socialist movement. The clabbered nonsense about promoting the cause by holding aloof from it has no influence with a sane mind. Get into the Social Democratic party and push.

There is a great difference between a trust and a union—a trust is formed to increase the profits of a few men who have already wealth enough, while a union is formed to secure living wages for all underpaid working people.

Van Wyck, the notorious ice-trust man will give Bryan a cordial support on an anti-trust platform.

TO MAKE MEN FREE

To make men free has been the dream
Of every noble soul on earth—
To bring a better time to birth:
To see the future's hills agleam
With the first, holy light
Of a new era bright,
From which the human might
Of ages speeds away.
Its sable folds withdrawn
Before the golden dawn,
Where earth goes rolling on
Into the grander day.

To make men free from court and throne,
Free from the money-changer's greed,
Free from hypocrisy and creed,
Free from the dreaded lash of need,
And free to reap where they have sown;
Free from earth's scourge, the conqueror,
Free from the murderous lust of war,
Free from the robber's cry of more,
And free to have their own;

Free voluntarily to share
Their blessings for the common good;
Free to each other's burdens bear,
In helpfulness and brotherhood;
Free in security to live
And seek the blessing of content;
Free in the freedom love can give,
The freedom of enlightenment!

To make men free! It is with me
The dearest purpose of my heart,
That I may know and do my part,
To help the cause of liberty;
My energy and life to be Made consecrate to the one theme,
The single purpose and the dream,
In every land, to make men free—
To make men free.

A SUPREME FARCE

By Chas. French

When Lord Russell, Chancellor of England, visited this country a few years ago, he was asked by a reporter what he thought of "our glorious Constitution." To his questioner's blank surprise his lordship frankly avowed that the document referred to was quite beyond his comprehension. "How can I understand it," added the chancellor, "when it appears to be beyond the legal acumen of the justices of your supreme court? You, no doubt, are aware, as well as I am, that in 1862, under Mr. Lincoln's administration, the supreme court decided that an income tax was constitutional; but, later on, under the Cleveland administration, it declared that the income tax, which had become law by act of Congress, was not constitutional."

Any well informed and outspoken citizen could have informed the British chancellor that the obscurity lay not in the constitution, but in the pettifogging judges who had distorted its meaning at the dictation of their masters—the money kings and monopolists.

It may be affirmed, without fear of contradiction, that the whole administration of justice in this trust-ridden country has become a by-word of contempt in the mouth of every well meaning and intelligent American. It is not only the foe of honest labor, but the worst enemy of honest government.

It is too notorious to need repetition that our plutocrats and railroad wreckers purchase law as they purchase land or other property. Indeed, American administration of justice may be likened to a spider's web, which catches the small insects, but allows the big gold bugs to break through its slender meshes with impunity. It cannot be denied that a defaulting bank president or cashier is occasionally confined in "durance vile"; but he rarely remains there after he places a part of his booty where, in popular phrase, it will do him the most good.

On the other hand, it may be interesting to observe that our laws are usually administered with tyrannical rigor on delinquents who lack the arguments so effectively employed by rich offenders. A few years ago, for example, a poor inhabitant of a town in New Jersey was imprisoned for his inability to pay a tax of fifty cents upon a dog. After several days of incarceration the prisoner was released by proving, beyond doubt, that the dog did not belong to him! Again, a pauper in Staunton, Va., was imprisoned for life for stealing 37 cents worth of bacon. Another offender, in the person of a poor Russian widow, was fined $5 and sent to jail for selling a pair of shoestrings in New York on the "Lord's Day."

I tell you, my working friends, it is simply absurd to expect our judges to be honest under this regime of competitive terrorism. Falsehood, corruption and trickery spring out of the capitalistic system as stench rises from carrion. Under its pestilential influence the majority of us are more or less dishonest than we wish to be. One of the most audacious falsehoods ever put in circulation is the ancient adage that "Cheating never prospers." In this rough-and-tumble scramble for unearned wealth the honest competitor will always be beaten hollow by the artful dodger and plausible rogue.

But Socialism is at length illuminating the long and dreary nightmare of capitalism, and telling the masses, in trumpet tones, that the present economic and social system is driving them down into the ways of brutes by giving them a bare subsistence, in good times, and starving them in dull times. There is no denying that large masses of the wage slaves of New England have by a long course of depressing treatment, been made slavish in their spirit, and debased to the belief that there is no higher motive of existence than enriching their already wealthy masters.

It may be plausibly affirmed that such people may be unfit for a Socialistic form of government; but it cannot, on the other hand, be too often insisted that Socialism is the only system that can help them up into developed manhood, and qualify them for a higher form of government. Under present conditions you may vote and "resolute till the cows come home," but any legislation in favor of labor which you may secure by suffrage will be declared unconstitutional by the supreme court. It is about as futile for you to fence with this powerful antagonist as it would be for a simple rustic to play with an accomplished card-sharpener. Your old enemy, the capitalist, will always have a trump card up his sleeve in the form of a supreme court decision, and annul your statutes every time.

In view of these considerations it must be as apparent as any evidence can make it that if we desire to emancipate ourselves from the bondage of capitalism we must accept Socialism as only another name for a series of struggles, the aim of which is to accomplish the economic and social deliverance of the working classes.

THE ECONOMIC JUGGERNAUT

Hoarse, horrible and strong
Rises to heaven that agonizing cry,
Filling the arches of the hollow sky,
"How long, O God, how long?"
—Whittier.

The trail of the Commercial Serpent is over us all!

Any keen observer who meets many people cannot help noting how our economic juggernaut is smashing morality, out of humanity. The whole world is writhing in the throes of commercialism. No matter how good your life or how great your nobility of soul, my friend, your acquaintances will rate you high or low—a "failure" or a "success"—according to whether you have accumulated much or little temporal goods. Great questions of state are delayed or expedited just as they decrease or increase dividends. The question is not "Is it true and noble?" but "Is there anything (financial) in it?" The usefulness of statesmen is gauged by this same commercial instinct, and they rise or fall as they cater to or oppose it.

Dozens of men have confessed to the writer that they are tired of the terrible grind. They feel that "something is wrong," but just what it is they don't know. When pressed they say they would like to "read up" on Socialism, but they are so intensely engaged in earning a mere living that they have no time. A bright, strong woman who travels out of Chicago for a certain firm, on being asked how the situation appeared among her customers, replied: "It seems that they have to work much harder and longer to get the same results as formerly." She said she would be glad to learn something about Socialism, but "At the end of each day," she remarked, "I am so dead tired that I just tumble into bed, sleep till morning, and then arise and renew the treadmill." But she gladly agreed to read a small book which was furnished her by one who is helping to hold up the hands of those great souls who are fighting the battle of right against organized greed—nay, against even the oppressed themselves; for the latter are too often amazingly dull and obstructive.

I noted with approval a week or so ago, in "Jack Potts' Observations" in the Social Democratic Herald, his complaint that many men who preach brotherhood do not work and vote for it. Can these men not see the crying necessity for doing something objectively as well as subjectively? Can they not see the lax morality of women as well as men which in thousands of cases is directly traceable to our unscientific commercial system? True, all reform, like charity, should begin "at home"—in the individual; but to be collectively symmetrical it should proceed along economic lines as well. There is much apathy on this subject among my brotherhood friends. More than that—sometimes, actual hostility! But in many cases this has changed to strong sympathy on gaining a more intelligent viewpoint. To all men who believe in the brotherhood of humanity, without regard to "race, creed, sex, caste or color," comes the question: Are you willing to do even so little as to vote for it? You vote, don't you? A Catholic priest said to the writer recently that the reform contemplated by Socialists would minimize crime. Of course it would. The principle of Socialism is not an ephemeral thing of barter and trade. It aims to objectify the brotherhood of man, which exists esoterically; and in that esoteric brotherhood at least, we are all on the same "dead level"! The cold, "clammmy lie of negation" will not keep it down forever. You can help it by your vote! And you will be in good company. Note how the men and women of broad, deep religious minds are lining up on our side; and some of them are losing good jobs by so doing. After all, it is a religious as much as a political matter. No living man can refute the Socialist argument, for it is founded on a rock.

AMONG THE TOILERS

J. J. Eager, another populist leader of Texas, has left his party and is stumping the state for Socialism.

The tin plate trust has closed down some of its plants indefinitely. Several hundred men are out of jobs.

The theatrical trust of New York city has entered into a new contract extending the life of the trust to 1904.

Ten seats were won in the municipal election of Chaux de Fonds and eleven at Locle, Switzerland, by the Socialists.

In Wasungen, Germany, Socialist candidate for legislature was elected. Capitalist parties combined against him.

In the election for members of the legislature of Meiningen, Germany, the Socialists won six out of twenty-four seats.

When a man can think of no good argument against unions, he abuses those who are active in the labor movement.

The greatest hotel in the world is being built at Mecca by orders of the sultan. It will accommodate 5,000 guests.

Prof. C. W. Gibbs, a negro educator of note, has become a convert to Socialism and is making speeches in the southwest.

Waiter girls in Munich restaurants seldom receive any pay from their employers. Their fees amount to from 50 cents to $5 a day.

While the Standard Oil company has raised the wages of 2,000 employees 10 per cent, it is said ten of its owners are making 2,000 per cent.

A contract has been secured by an American firm to furnish 60,000 tons of coal per month to a large German manufacturing syndicate in Germany.

The tube trust has closed down some of its branch establishments and about a thousand more workers have time to think of the beauties of capitalism.

The works of the Pressed Steel Car company at McKees Rocks, Pa., will be enlarged at once so as to make the output 180 railroad freight cars per day.

At the State Federation of Labor convention in Colorado it was shown that the only labor law to stand the test of courts was that legalizing union labels.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

A desire has been expressed for the organization of a women's Socialist club for Chicago, which promises to be realized at the Social Democratic picnic on the Fourth. Wives of members and their friends who think a club composed wholly of women would be helpful to the cause of Socialism as well as to themselves are urgently requested to send name and address to Mrs. Mary Horgan, 1495 Fulton street, as soon as convenient, in order that proper arrangements may be perfected for the organization at Bergmann's grove.

We are sorry to announce that Comrade E. V. Debs has been confined to his bed for several days and is advised by his physician that absolute rest is necessary to an early restoration to health. The difficulty is due to over-exertion and exposure incident to our comrade's remarkable lecture tour of the country during the past year.

At a meeting of Branch No. 4, Chicago, last Friday, the new constitution was taken up and acted upon. It was unanimously adopted. Three new members were admitted at the same meeting. This branch has never been in more flourishing condition than now.

Branch No. 10, New York city, rejected the overtures of the New York and Massachusetts committee on fusion, declined to send a delegate to the fusion convention and voted unanimously in favor of the constitution.

The reply of Branch No. 1 of Skowhegan, Maine, to the Butcher circular was that the referendum of the organization is supreme, that the members abide by it and have full and entire confidence in the national officers.

Every branch in Chicago is requested to forthwith organize a picnic committee for the purpose of disposing of tickets for the annual picnic on July 4. Communicate with Organizer W. C. Horgan, 1495 Fulton street.

There will be no attraction for Socialists in Chicago on the Fourth equal to the Social Democratic party picnic. This is the second annual outdoor gathering of the party, and a big crowd is expected.

Ten days remain in which comrades and friends may push the sale of the picnic tickets. If you can dispose of ten, drop a postal card to Comrade W. C. Horgan and say so.

In going to the picnic grounds, Bergmann's grove, on the Fourth, take the La Grange electric line from Forty-eighth street, and look out for big sign near the grove.

The Social Democrats of Pike county, Illinois, have nominated a full county ticket and are preparing for an aggressive campaign.

The comrades of San Antonio, Texas have decided to put a full county ticket in the field and great enthusiasm prevails.

Ferdinand Svoboda has been elected secretary and Frank Hlavacek re-elected organizer of Branch 2, Chicago. State Organizer Fred Brockheisen of Wisconsin has organized a Scandinavian branch in Milwaukee.

Comrade Gus Geisler has been elected organizer of Branch No. 2, Massachusetts.

National Bohemian Council

At a joint meeting of the Bohemian branches of Chicago last Sunday the most encouraging reports of growth and progress were made. Branch No. 5 will organize a Social Democratic bicycle club. Branch No. 8 will organize a new branch at Grand Crossing. Requests having been made from friends outside Chicago that a national body of Bohemian Social Democrats be organized for the purpose of extending the organization and promoting co-operation for more effective propaganda, the meeting decided upon such organization which will be composed of two representatives from each local branch throughout the country. All Bohemian branches are requested to elect immediately two delegates to this central organization. A meeting of the delegates will be called in the near future to perfect the organization. When the central council is in working order a national congress of Bohemian Social Democrats will be held.

New Haven Endorses the Board

At the last meeting of Branch No. 3, S. D. P., of New Haven, the following resolution was adopted and ordered published in the Social Democratic Herald and the Forwards:

"Resolved, That Branch No. 3, S. D. P., of New Haven, has indorsed the action of the national executive board in reference to the claim that the referendum settles the question of unity at present."

Charles Vollmer, Secretary.

Bingham's Loyal Branch

Whereas, It has been decided by a referendum vote of the Social Democratic party refusing to unite with the Socialist Labor party; and,

Whereas, In defiance of said decision, five members of the nine composing the Social Democratic party committee on unification—namely, Butcher, Chase, Hochu, Carey and Longtree—united with a faction of the S. L. P., thereby openly defying the will of the majority and thwarting the power of the referendum and actually united with a faction of the S. L. P. in starting an imitation S. D. P.; therefore, be it Resolved, That we condemn the conduct of Butcher, Chase, et al., and fully indorse the worthy conduct of our esteemed Comrades Debs, Haile, Berger and Stedman at the convention on May 20.

We also appeal to all true Socialists to rally around the original standard of the S. D. P. and support its candidates.

W. J. Burdette, Secretary.

MASSACHUSETTS CONVENTION

To the Members of the Social Democratic Party in Massachusetts: The annual state convention of the Social Democratic party in Massachusetts will be held on July 8, 1900, at 10 o'clock a. m., at Paine Memorial hall, 9 Appleton street, Boston, for the nomination of a state ticket and of fifteen presidential electors and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

Each branch is entitled to be represented at said convention by one delegate at large, and one additional delegate for every ten members or major fraction thereof, who shall be certified by the secretary and chairman of the branch to have been upon the books of the branch on June 12, 1900, the date of the issuing of the call.

It was voted by the state committee that "the S. L. P. be entitled to send delegates to said convention upon the same basis of representation as the delegates of the S. D. P.—viz., one to every ten members—said S. L. P. delegates to be admitted to all rights and privileges of the convention after the election of a state committee by the S. D. P."

Margaret Haile,

Secretary State Committee S. D. P.

From Far-Off Olympia

At a called meeting of Branch No. 6, Olympia, Wash., held June 10, the matter of the new constitution was presented, discussed and the same accepted by a unanimous vote.

The following resolutions were presented by Comrade J. B. Cutter, and, after much discussion, accepted, and the secretary was requested to mail them to the S. D. Herald and Appeal to Reason:

"Whereas, The referendum vote of the S. D. P. puts an end to an undesirable proposed unity; and,

"Whereas, Our gallant standard-bearer, E. V. Debs, and our loyal executive board, who have nobly and courageously discharged their duty, are at this time the subjects of infamous and unmerited censure, when entitled to earnest and hearty support; therefore,

"Resolved, That Branch No. 6, Olympia, Wash., emphatically upholds them and indorses the numerous protests which have been put forth against overtures and compromises with any party for any purpose whatsoever. Be it further

"Resolved, That we object to being flooded with literature hostile to our known convictions, sent out by persons who audaciously and shamelessly denounce and defame our presidential candidate, whose unparalleled self-sacrifice, ability and heroic devotion to principle have consistently culminated in a party whose membership can neither be cajoled nor stampeded.

"We therefore pledge our unqualified fidelity to the only and original Social Democratic party, and call upon all comrades everywhere to stand shoulder to shoulder in the conflict now upon us."

H. S. Geneva Lake, Chairman.

"The transformation of the crowd into the people—profound task! It is to this labor that the men called Socialists have devoted themselves during the last forty years. The author of this book, however insignificant he may be, is one of the oldest in this labor. If he claims his place among these philosophers it is because it is a place of persecution."—Victor Hugo, in "Shakespeare."

States His Objections

At the last regular meeting of Branch No. 4, Social Democratic party, of Bingham, Utah, action was taken on the constitution, which was adopted by an overwhelming majority, there being but one dissenting vote, which was cast by myself.

One of my objections to the constitution is that many sentences in various sections could be shortened without any loss of effect. It has long been my opinion that the constitution of the successful Socialist party must be brief; that the greatest caution should be taken against a copious use of words; but I admit that this objection is trivial. It embarrassed me to stand alone in opposition to the judgment of all the members of my branch. But as my objections were based on a firm conviction, I resolved not to yield. I have no talent for public speaking, and therefore could not make my objections very clear. I have been a Socialist for many years, and for the success of the Socialist cause my enthusiasm knows no bounds.

I have at all times been under the impression that the fundamental principle of Socialism is majority rule; that the expressed will of a majority is to be supreme—from which there can be no appeal. It seems to me that sections 17 and 33 conflict with this principle.

Section 17 says: "Any person desiring membership shall make application to the local branch, upon being recommended by a member of said branch, and if accepted by a majority vote shall be enrolled as a member."

This part of section 17 I would not hesitate to support, for in my judgment it sufficiently covers the whole subject. But the section proceeds: "Upon objection to his admission being made, the matter shall be referred by the branch to the central committee of the locality, which shall have power to act in the matter. In case the decision of the local committee shall be against the applicant, upon appeal by the said person, or by the branch to which he has applied, the national executive board shall have power of final action in the matter."

Then it is the national executive board that has power of final action—not a majority of the branch members.

I find in section 33: "Any member violating the laws or principles of the organization may be suspended or expelled by a two-thirds vote of the members in good standing of the local branch of which he is a member; provided, that any charges against such member shall be preferred in writing, and the accused shall be entitled to a fair trial. The person so accused, if dissatisfied with the decision of the local branch, may appeal to the national executive board, and the person or persons preferring such charges shall have a like appeal to the national executive board. The action of the executive board on such case shall be final."

It seems to me that part of section 17 and all of section 33 should be changed. If the delegates who drew up the constitution believed in majority rule, why did they adopt this intricate form? The executive board is the creature of our organization, and is to have power to overrule the expressed will of a majority of the members of a local branch in local matters. If it is safe to admit a member by a majority vote, why should it be dangerous to suspend or expel without a two-thirds majority vote? Cannot the members of the local branch settle its local matters without appealing to this creature? I am opposed to delegate power in every form that it can be avoided.

Any one claiming to be a Socialist if he objected to majority rule, would appear very ridiculous, would he not? This "two-thirds vote" to expel is certainly a departure from majority rule. My apprehensions may seem groundless to all who can make clear the true import of the sections to which I have taken exception. But I have believed at all times since I began to study the situation that straight-up majority rule is the only system by which all questions can be settled to the entire satisfaction of the majority.

Freedom and Liberty

Till a man is independent he is not free. The man who is in danger of want is not a free man, and the country which does not guard him against this danger or does not insure him the means of livelihood is not a free country, though it may be the freest of the free countries.

Liberty and poverty are incompatible, and if the poverty is extreme liberty is impossible. The unrest which we call labor troubles is nothing more nor less than an endeavor for the liberty which the working classes think they see the employing classes possessed of.—William Dean Howells.

Oh, labor, labor! Creator, sacred creator! It is thou who ennobles. It is thou who consoles. Under thy footsteps ignorance is dissipated and pain flees. By thee humanity has leaped over the barriers of the night and mounts unceasingly toward that luminous and serene region where, one day, will be realized the ideal and the perfect accord of the power of justice and of good.—Millerand, Socialist, in his opening speech at Paris Exposition.

EDITOR'S LETTER BOX

Dear Comrade Editor: We are being told by a comrade who has recently returned from the west, and is therefore presumably well posted, that the N. E. B. are in the party for revenue only. As you are on the spot, perhaps you can tell us how much revenue they have derived from it. We would like to know how much they are getting out of the funds of the party, and will feel obliged for the information.

Lochbuy.

[If the "recently returned" has any knowledge of the relation of the members of the N. E. B. to the movement and the party since June, 1898, he knows that he lies; he knows that not a single man of them has received one penny from the organization for any service rendered; he knows that each and every one of them has paid out of his own pocket money to meet expenses connected with the work in which he was interested; he knows that hundreds of dollars have been expended by these men for the sole purpose of advancing the interests of the cause and the welfare of our organization, and all with no prospect whatever of return from any source, immediate or remote.]

M. H.—The document styled a "call" for a convention and signed by "R. A. Morris, Sec.," was received, read and thrown into the waste basket. SITUATION IN MASSACHUSETTS

Congratulations to you, comrades of Indianapolis, Oregon, Baltimore, New York, Brooklyn and Milwaukee, upon the noble stand you have taken, as announced in this week's Herald. I regret that Massachusetts lags behind; but we are still in the thick of the fight here, as is natural, this state having been the headquarters of the rebellion. But we're coming, boys, we're coming!

Alas for our one-time harmonious organization in this state! And alas for the attempt to force upon us an untimely union, the fruits whereof are contention and disruption!

Our hitherto united branches are divided into two factions by the action of those who, in defiance of the will of the majority, are still determined to carry their point. One faction believes in the rule of the majority, and stands by the referendum of May 7, the S. D. P. and Debs, and is willing to co-operate politically with the S. L. P. in the coming campaign; the other does not want political co-operation, but insists upon organic union forthwith. Of the latter faction Haverhill takes the unworthy lead, while Brockton heads the faction which is loyal to principle and to party. One mayor and one representative took part in the illegal conference of May 20 and the attempted organization of a new party. The other mayor and representative, Coulter and MacCartney, stand solid as a rock for democracy, for Debs and for the S. D. P. Up to date twenty-five branches have lined up with Brockton; probably fourteen are with Haverhill; three are about evenly divided and eight are uncertain.

Hitherto the principal scene of contest between the two factions has been the state committee, but it will undoubtedly be transferred to the state convention on July 8, if the minority still insist upon organic union. Our state committee had to have three different meetings over the calling of the state convention. The first was held immediately after the result of the referendum was known, and resulted in a deadlock, eight members out of twelve being present, four of whom voted for a united convention with the S. L. P., and four for a separate convention and political co-operation. At the next meeting, all twelve members being present, a motion for a united convention was carried, by 7 to 5, at which "the S. D. P. delegates should be admitted with the same powers and privileges possessed by the representatives of the S. D. P." Some voted for this, on the misunderstanding that it meant only political union; and as there immediately arose among the branches much discussion as to what it really did mean, and also a vigorous agitation for a separate convention, a third meeting was called, at which it was finally decided to call a state convention of the S. D. P., to which "the S. L. P. shall be entitled to send delegates on the same basis of representation as the delegates of the S. D. P.—viz., one to every ten members—said S. L. P. delegates to be admitted to all rights and privileges of the convention after the election of a state committee by the S. D. P." This also was voted for by some on the understanding that it signified political union only, and not organic union.

But the comrades may as well understand before they get to the convention that the door has been left open for organic union. If it is political co-operation we are after, the only clean and proper method would be to have separate conventions and nominate separate tickets, leaving it to the two state committees or campaign committees to retire an equal number of candidates from each ticket and make up a joint ticket satisfactory to both. This plan, however, they (the disruptionists) rejected at our first meeting, making it evident that they want more than political union, and will try to get it.

If you doubt it, just try and answer this conundrum: The report of "the highest constituted authority of the two parties" is to be voted upon by June 26, at which "90 per cent" of our party will declare for union (?). Now, if union is to be consummated on June 26, why do we need a convention on July 8 to arrange for political co-operation? Isn't that really laughable?

Of course it is just possible that 90 per cent of our party will not declare for union, and it may be necessary to try the alternative plan of "uniting by states."

A joint convention would be safe enough, if all our members were loyal to our own party and desirous of keeping it separate; but where an active minority is doing its best to drag us into the S. L. P., whether we will or no, it is a step to be taken with great caution, and with eyes wide open and alert.

Under the specious argument of "state rights" the disruptionists claim that what we do in the state has nothing to do with the national organization. I wonder what they think the national organization is made up of! This, comrades, is the doctrine of disruption and of anarchy! Had the national party taken no action in this matter, with which our local action would conflict, the question would be open; but where the party as a whole has decided upon a certain course, we, as a state, cannot act contrary to that decision without severing ourselves from the national organization. Get this point clear in your minds, comrades of Massachusetts (and New Hampshire, too): We are a national, not a state organization, and we cannot unite organically with the S. L. P. in this state, in defiance of the decision of the national party, without seceding from it.

The referendum of May 7 does not "settle the question of union for all time"; certainly not. But it does settle it until such time as that decision shall be reversed by the party, by a new referendum, after further agitation by legitimate means and a full discussion upon "newly discovered evidence."

It is settled for the time being, and the movement for "union by states" is simply an attempt to bring about by other means the very union which the party has declared against. It is illegitimate and should be nipped in the bud.

Delegates should be instructed by their branches how to vote upon this question, which is sure to come up in some form or other. If you believe in upholding the principles of democracy, if you believe in the S. D. P. and its mission, if you believe in maintaining our separate organization until the majority of our party shall see fit to reverse its decision in a legitimate way, then instruct your delegates to vote for political co-operation but against a union of the two organizations in the state, however disguised in form. The decision rests with you. Consider the question carefully.

So long as there had to be a division in our ranks, it is well that the lines should be drawn upon a clear question of principle, which allows no room for personal feeling or mere sentiment, and affords a sheet anchor which will prevent our being carried away by any torrent of oratory or whirlwind of sophistry, or any appeal to prejudice or passion. It is a time for the exercise of calm, cool, clear-headed judgment.

We understand, all of us, that an organization is only a means to an end, and not the end itself; but we also understand that it is a means without which the end cannot be accomplished; and that the more compact and harmonious the organization is and the more loyal and reliable every member of it, the more effective will be its work. It is a very easy thing to break up an organization; but is it wise? It is not by any means so easy to build one up. I know, and you know, fellow-comrades of the rank and file, and brave comrades of the national executive board, struggling, working and sacrificing in silence, without applause and without recognition—we know, I say, the cost in energy and self-denial of getting this Social Democratic Party started, and keeping it alive through its most crucial years. And now, just at the moment when it has become able to stand alone, and to require less toil and sacrifice on the part of a few, are we to allow disruptionists, under the fair-seeming mask of "socialist unity," to destroy and scatter to the winds the socialist unity we already have within our own ranks, and in the sacred name of Socialism, to set back the cause of Socialism in this country for years, by breaking up the first Socialist political party that has ever taken root in American soil?

Not if we can help it. The S. D. P. in its brief existence has proved that it is on the right track; and that its distinctive ideals, spirit, tactics and methods are such as to appeal to the American people and to build up within a few years a party that will be able to bring about the transition from capitalism to the co-operative commonwealth. To throw this party off the track now or to go back on all it stands for, would be treason to the Socialist movement and to the suffering millions of our fellow-wage slaves, whose only hope is in Socialism.

I have faith to believe that on July 8th Massachusetts will rise to the occasion, and decide to continue upon her accustomed way, but with a little added wisdom gained from the hard experience of the past three months.

Margaret Haile.

Indiana State Convention

Social Democrats will hold a state convention in Indianapolis on the Fourth of July for the purpose of nominating a state ticket and perfecting the state organization. Each member of the party in the state is entitled to a vote in the convention, and if unable to be present may vote by proxy. Thus each member of the convention is entitled to as many votes as he has signatures to his credentials. On the evening of July 9 the branches of the party in this county will hold a county convention in the C. L. U. hall in this city for the purpose of nominating a county ticket. It is likely that no township ticket will be nominated, as it would be impossible to find a member of the party who would consent to make the race for justice of the peace or constable. As one member expressed it, "If we have any members who are not too honorable to hold such offices, we will expel them." The membership of the local branch is growing steadily, and the branch will make a lively campaign. At present the members of the party in this county are devoting their time to circulating Socialist literature where it will do the most good and endeavoring to make Socialists.—The Toiler, Terre Haute.

THE CAPITALIST CLASS

The growth of a class whose sole claim to recognition is the number of dollars its members possess must always be an interesting study. In the first place such a class did not come into being as did the classes of bygone days. The powerful military chieftain who led his hosts to successful battle, and who afterward had allotted him the lands of a conquered people, was the founder of the upper class of one period. Such a man, whatever he may have been deficient in, had at least such virtues as bulldog courage.

In more recent times men were distinguished by their genius and rewarded more or less justly. It was still the recognition of those traits in human nature by which societies and nations have been built up.

Coming to the present day, we find a class growing up whose sole aim is the accumulation of money. Not for the sake of what is beautiful in art or nature does this money-grubbing contest become so feverish. The vulgar upstarts engaged therein are too low in the scale to understand the meaning of things beautiful. And the only taste they possess is in their mouths. This class owes its existence to no virtue, however rude. Avarice, the greatest of the vices, is its guiding star, its sole object in life. With such a paltry passion for its foundation, what must its other feelings be? We do not need to look very far to see their workings. Their religion is not a matter of faith, it is only a fashionable gathering. Their politics is not a question of conviction, nor of principles; they only ask, Will it be easier for us to accumulate money under such an administration? Can we reduce the wages of the workers, or increase the profits to the consumer if such a one is elected? If so, in he goes.

In the matter of fashion our fat-necked, would-be aristocrat waits until the members of the Parisian half-world have set the season's style for his wife and daughter to ape, and try to wear in an awkward sort of a way what the sinful daughter wears gracefully.

And what kind of literature satisfies this class? Do they yearn for the pearls of thought and expression which the skillful have strung so beautifully? No, indeed. The daily newspaper is good enough for them; some prefer the luminous "yellow journal," which "makes truth hideous in the morning," and with its levity that is paraded as wit; the other prefers the ponderous evening paper which "makes vice attractive in the evening," and which, disdaining light things, tries in a ponderous way, to make people believe its owl-like gravity is wisdom.

At every turn there is evidence of a state of society unnatural, unscientific and vicious in everything where it has full sway. Such a society cannot endure. Even its votaries must in time weary of it and conclude on the whole that "it does not pay."—The Miner's Magazine.

Overthrow the Capitalist System

The various personal interest and the many temperaments that go together to build the machine we call man, are so easily construed to mean such vastly different things that we find the workingman unorganized and in the midst of a reign of chaos, and it is only when we are tried in some really vital point that the class lines are closely drawn and we act in true union. Of all the hard things that the workingman has to learn, the hardest of all is that there is upon us an irresistible class struggle and that the only way out of this condition is a class organization, which has for its purpose the complete overthrow of the present system of organized society. Or more explicitly speaking, "capitalism which dominates in our social, legal and moral relations." I might add further that our economic surroundings are so closely allied without every thought and action, that even our religion is made to fit the governmental forms, no odds how inhuman and despotic that government is. I have only to cite you to the case of the late Cuban war, where the Catholic church of Spain supported the despotic Spanish monarchy in Spain, and the same church supported the inhuman and grasping reign of capitalism in the United States.—Caleb Lipscombe.

New Hampshire Shoemakers

The state labor commission of New Hampshire has recently published the statistics relating to the shoe industry in that state.

It is shown that there are employed 12,937 hands. They received $5,055,521 for one year's labor, or an average of less than $399 for each worker. The factory value of the product was $22,902,788. The retail price or the cost to consumer, is increased on the average more than 50 per cent, making the retail value of the product $34,354,182.

Subtracting the cost of raw material, $15,027,802, and the wages, $5,055,521, and the balance is $14,270,859 that the shoemakers of New Hampshire produced last year and never received a cent. And even measured by the factory price these workers produced $2,819,465 for which they received not one cent.

But Socialists are people who want to divide, you know. Can you see anything, or are you just a simple, everyday, plain, working imbecile?

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America. The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

CAPITALISM AND LIBERTY FREEDOM AND SOCIALISM

Examination of Pseudo-Socialistic Fetishes from the Stand-Point of a Race-Conscious Social Democrat

By Isidore Lador

The capitalistic mode of production leads inevitably to the socialization of industries. The gigantic development of the principle of combination of individual fortune for the purpose of exploitation of organized and unorganized labor, in the shape of stock companies and trusts in our time, is a phenomenon of far-reaching importance and of deep significance as a transitory stage of socialization. The individualistic principle of competition is gradually superseded by its opposite. The purpose of stock companies and trusts is to eliminate entirely the element of competition and substitute co-operation and combined action.

The socialization of economic activities under the capitalistic regime is, however, accomplished in the interests of one class and to the detriment of the race in general. The capitalistic class takes advantage of the applied principle of socialization in its own, and only its own, interest. Capitalists are one-sided Socialists. They strenuously oppose any attempt to apply the principle of socialization in the interests of the people at large and the laboring class in particular. Out of mere selfishness they preach for popular use the gospel of individualism and hypocritically erect altars to the fetish of liberty—of the competition of the economically weak among themselves. Indeed, the more competition there is among the unorganized and economically weak, the easier it will be for the socialized and economically strong to exploit the former in all stages and in all ways. This is obvious enough. The strange thing, however, is that some not especially clear-headed men try to deduct socialistic theories from the anarchistic principle of liberty. They somehow do not distinguish between two entirely different terms—freedom and liberty; and this leads them into an abyss of confusion of thought.

Liberty is an individualistic ideal, while freedom is a truly socialistic ideal. Socialists want to abolish capitalistic liberty and inaugurate real freedom, by the means of all-sided and complete socialization of economic functions in the interests of the whole human race.

Now, what is liberty? In the first instance it is but a mere negation—the absence of open coercion. To build a system of thought on the basis of a mere negative term is a striking absurdity. Suppose somebody would attempt to build a system of public hygiene on the principle of absence of physical pain. What could be said in favor of such a system? The worshippers at the shrine of the capitalistic and anarchistic fetish, liberty, forget the old truth—the Sabbath is for men, not men for the Sabbath. They are never tired of repeating the platitudes that men are born for liberty. They forget that liberty is—as it necessarily must be—the deadly foe of freedom? Liberty means the rule of the physically and economically strong and the actual unfreedom of the rest. Liberty is incompatible with real equality, while freedom is unthinkable without it. Liberty is a principle of the sub-human world, while freedom is a purely human ideal. A tiger is at liberty to kill any animal weaker than himself. A man, however, can be free only in case he lives in a perfectly organized community, where he—in return for certain functions performed by him in the interests of society—is assured all the necessities of life and happiness.

Another term derived by Socialists from the capitalistic dictionary is the so-called class-consciousness.

If liberty is a fetish of the somewhat muddle-headed neophytes of Socialism, class-consciousness is the idol of narrow-minded, dogmatic, pseudo scientific Socialists of the orthodox type. Dogmatism, orthodoxy and narrow-mindedness are, however, dangerous symptoms of spiritual atrophy and degeneration. There was and is too much of it in continental and S. L. P. Socialism.

Let us now analyze the terms class-consciousness, class-struggle, which are so commonplace in the socialistic vocabulary. We have knowledge of the struggle between slave and master, between the privileged classes of the feudal period and the middle class, and witness now with our own eyes the combat between the middle class and the proletariat. Historically speaking, the class struggle was and is a mighty dynamic power for good or bad, owing to conditions. At certain periods of history the one or the other class represents the interests of the race in general and the fate of that class is closely linked with the general interests of the race. So, the middle class not long ago represented the advanced guard of humanity in its struggle against feudalism which outlived its utility. At present, however, this same class is not only conservative, but rather reactionary, and the role of the advanced guard of humanity belongs by right to the proletariat. There was hardly a class in the history of humanity more conscious or rather self-conscious than the middle class. In fact, class-consciousness is a distinctly middle-class virtue or vice—just as we choose to view it. As a matter of tactics the proletariat has to fight the middle class with its own weapons and possess class-consciousness in order to be successful in its battle against a class-conscious enemy.

Let us not, however, make a virtue out of a necessity.

Class interests are in the end only a little better than individual interests as a motive for revolutionary activity. If the struggle of the middle class against feudalism would be only a struggle in the exclusive interests of that class, no earnest thinker, public-spirited man or poet would feel inspired to take part in that struggle. It was the interest of all humanity—rightly or wrongly conceived—which imparted the inspiration to noble needs and sacrifices on the part of the great actors of the French revolution. The middle class, after its selfish class interests were secured, became satisfied and used the new conditions to the advantage of selfish class interests.

Shall the proletariat be trained in the same narrow and selfish channels of thought and sentiment? Shall the proletariat repeat the same sad and sordid comedy of achieving only class interests under the guise of euphonious but empty phrases of fraternity (of the Cain variety), liberty (tiger liberty) and equality (after death) connected by the middle class at the dawn of its victory? Are not the class-consciousness and class struggle so emphasized by some fanatical antediluvian Socialists, exceedingly narrow and near-sighted? There must be a struggle between the proletariat and middle class, but this struggle is of an eminently deeper and broader significance, than any other class struggle in the history of humanity. It is only a class struggle, if viewed from the surface, but as a matter of fact a struggle of all the human race against social institutions, which have outlived their utility, a struggle of all the human race for the entire reconstruction of our present social fabric on principles of reason and justice, a struggle of a truly human philosophy of life against a conception of life peculiar to the beasts of prey.

And the S. D. P. is the party not of a single class—however large and worthy of sympathy—but the party of all the toilers, all producers, all the people working for a living, all those who honestly and without reserve have at heart the interests of the laborer in the broadest sense of that term.

Let us, therefore, preach race-consciousness instead of class-consciousness.

The struggle between classes in history is—if analyzed closely and candidly—in the end a struggle between old and new forms of life. Let the dead bury the dead and the living take their places with a sense of continuity of life and activity of the human race of which we all form infinitesimal links.

Profits of labor, and all wealth which is the product of labor, are one and the same thing. If you possess wealth that you did not create, you are in the possession of the profits of labor, and between your working neighbor's lack of wealth and your excess of it there may be an inseparable relation, if you will look for it. The man who lives on the profits of labor that some other man performed, is living on what belongs to the other man. That the law calls the profits of labor property, and helps you get possession, does, of course, make your holding legal, but it does not make it right. There are no laws for the men who produce; they are made for the men who steal.

The idolatry of profit is the worst heresy of the age. It consists in buying for one dollar that which is worth five, and of selling for five that which is worth one.

The fortunes of the rich are limited only by the work and forbearance of the poor, and the more the poor work and forbear the more the rich possess.

THE DO-ALLS AND THE DO-NOTHINGS

By Sevenoaks

What confusion would reign among the Do-nothing rich people, if they could be made to realize what the Do-all poor people are to them. How—if they are not void of conscience—they would be covered with shame and shrink with fear at the sight of their own meanness. The Do-alls are to the Do-nothings what rain is to the parched land. Rain revives and reincarnates earth's productive forces. The Do-alls, by applying labor to land, or to land in its varied and modified forms, revive and reincarnate wealth. As the replenishing of the earth comes only through the action of moisture, of air, of heat and of cold, so the replenishing of the private fortunes of the Do-nothings comes only through labor—the sacrifice and the suffering of the Do-alls. Without the Do-alls doing the work, there would be no Do-nothings doing nothing. With the Do-nothings stealing and swaggering there will always be Do-alls sacrificing and starving.

The Do-alls earn all that they get and all that the Do-nothings steal. The Do-nothings devastate the earth by taking from it without giving an equivalent; they impoverish and ravish the Do-alls; they smite the hand that feeds them. Justice demands service—Duty. The Do-alls render service and measure up to her demands. The Do-nothings fail in this; they are a burden on the heart and a stone in the hand of the industrious. Consumption involves reproduction—or the race ends; the Do-alls consume less than is rightfully theirs and reproduce for all. Manipulating stock is not useful service; wrecking railroads is not useful service; living on per cents, "wrung from the hard hands of peasants," is not useful service; yet all who live on per cents, wreck railroads and conjure with stocks, are wearing clothes, eating food and living in houses, and their food, raiment and shelter is obtained at the expense of the Do-alls who sacrifice and suffer and do the work.

SOCIALISM AND NATIONALITIES

The amazing muddle which the war has raised in the minds of the public finds nowhere a better illustration than in the arguments with which some naive fellows in our ranks try to justify their indifferent or pro-British attitude at the present juncture. What, they ask, do we Socialists care about the war? What concern is it of ours that a couple of small peasant republics are being wiped off the face of the earth? Are we not internationalists? Does not Socialism strive after the abolition of frontiers and the welding together of all peoples into one common human family.

The argument is a striking illustration of the hold which formulas sometimes get over our minds. With our national aptitude for thinking in schemes, we often express an entire complex relationship of phenomena in a simple and handy formula which through frequent use soon loses its conventional representative value and becomes in our eyes the exact equivalent of the relationship itself. It thus becomes, so to say, petrified. Like the proverbial man who cannot see the wood for trees, so we cannot see for our formula the living thing it represents, and we turn it into a fetish devoid of any tangible reality, but none the less revered.

The good honest souls who use the above argument are fetishists of this kind. They approach the idea of Socialism as a negation of nationalism in the same spirit in which devout Catholics approach their crucifix. They see in it not a mere symbol of a thing, but the thing itself, and handle it about divested of all its concrete meaning and contents. For did they not act in this fetishistic spirit, they would have noticed that the socialistic principle of "no frontiers," etc., cannot possibly mean the extinction of nationalities pure and simple, that is, as a matter of duty or as a condition of existence. They would have noticed, on the contrary, that Socialism, being primarily an acknowledgment of the fullest possible right of every human being to his personality, cannot in the same breath refuse that right to a nation, which is but a group composed of human beings. A man, be he a fair Englishman or a black Kaffir, has a complete right to his speech, thought, feelings, habits, and even prejudices; how can we refuse or suppress it in a group of them called a "nation"?—Th. Rothstein in London Justice.

Workingmen who carry the hod, lay brick, make shoes, run a lathe, rivet a boiler, print a book, or do anything useful, think they are working for themselves. So they are for about two or two and a half hours a day; the balance of the time they are working solely for a master.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS STAND PAT! REVIEW OUR SPLENDID PROGRESS

By Eugene V. Debs

The unprecedented growth of the Social Democratic party during the last few months is a vindication of the past and a guaranty of the future. The showing is most remarkable; it is extraordinary and must extort exclamations of surprise and delight from the most pessimistic.

Since Jan. 1, 144 new branches have been organized—an average of twenty-four per month. Since the first day of the present month twenty-nine branches have been instituted—the largest number in the same space of time in the history of the party.

In view of these facts it is evident that the "manifesto," the referendum, vote thereon and the comment and controversy that followed, have not checked the growth of the party. Indeed, it is more rapid at this hour than ever before, and will continue at an accelerating rate, all predictions to the contrary notwithstanding.

The plain meaning of this progress in the face of all kinds of opposition, from within as well as without, is approval of the policy and tactics of the party and indorsement of the administration of its affairs.

Through all these weeks of controversy, at times violent and acrimonious, the party has expanded with undiminished vigor, and promises even better for the future. There is, therefore, all reason for Social Democrats to be serene, hopeful and confident—not the slightest for despondency or despair. The storm has been weathered—the gale has spent its force, the waves are receding and the skies are brightening.

Comrades, stand pat!

The Socialist movement is having its trials. This is to be expected. The transition from capitalism to Socialism will be tempestuous at times. It were folly to even hope for all smooth sailing. The storm is as necessary as the calm. It is a part, an essential part, of the development.

Let no comrade despair of the future. Above all the quibbles and quarrels of individuals the movement sweeps on.

The Social Democratic party has struck root in American soil. Its general course has appealed to the American people and its propaganda has quickened the heart-pulse of the American proletariat. It has made mistakes enough to demonstrate that it is a human institution.

The cry of "bossism" heard in certain quarters can safely be ignored. The work accomplished, the results achieved, the progress made, which none can dispute, proclaim the truth and defy denial.

Karl Marx and Ferdinand Lassalle were violently denounced as dictators and usurpers by their own followers. The "bosses" are sometimes those who in wind and wave hold the party true to its destined course.

It is the storm that makes the sailor, the battle that makes the soldier, and it takes them both to make a Socialist.

Comrades, stand pat!

The question of "union" need worry us no more. Let those of our comrades who desire to join with the S. L. P. do so. That is their unquestioned privilege. Let the rest remain where they are. That is their absolute right. A united party is "a consummation devoutly to be wished," but it is a matter of growth and not compulsion. When conditions favor a united party, no power can prevent it. As long as cause exists for separate parties, no power can unite them. The matter will in time automatically adjust itself, and all the sooner if wrangling ceases and sense has sway.

Others may act as they choose, but I do not propose to be a party to an attempt to force men out of a party that suits them into a party that does not.

Whether we have one Socialist party or a dozen, we can fight capitalism, the common enemy, as one, if we only will, and he who seeks to prevent this is the real enemy of Socialism. Union of parties is of small consequence compared with union of action; and those who imagine that compulsory union would insure united action have something yet to learn about human nature.

Political co-operation has gone forward splendidly thus far without organic union. What has been done in some states can be done in all states. The question of party allegiance need not interfere with harmonious co-operation and vigorous action. Besides, only an insignificant part of the Socialists are members of any party. They are not interested in our imbroglio; they are only disgusted with our kindergarten contentions.

Let us rise above the level of bickering and strife and vituperation. The columns and pages of accusations, insinuation, denial and counter-charges alter nothing. I can better afford to permit a hundred falsehoods to go unchallenged than descend to the plane where they have their origin.

For the national and state campaigns each state can act for itself. The national candidates are already nominated. In each state a united ticket can be placed in the field by joint convention or otherwise, and this is the supreme demand at this time. The question of organic union is settled as far as it can be for the present.

This is the sane, sensible course to pursue, and will lead up to the highlands. We can then appeal to the hundreds of thousands of American Socialists and multiply them into a million or more at the ballot box in November.

Comrades, once again, stand pat!

INTERNATIONAL NOTES

The municipal council of Zurich has decided to institute municipal insurance for all its employees. The insurance will be against accident, sickness and old age.

Some of the results of the Italian elections are known and so far the Socialists have more than held their own; at Milan especially, where there has been a great deal of petty persecution, they have gained several seats.

From reports from Bombay, British India, the condition beggars description. The starving people are afflicted with both cholera and smallpox. Thousands of dead are left unburied and are food for the dogs and vultures.

On a recent Sunday no less than 700,000 leaflets explaining Socialist principles were distributed in Berlin and its suburbs. The distribution was effected by thousands of voluntary distributors, and it is hoped in that way to bring knowledge of Socialism to many people, and to sow the seed for a rich harvest at the next election.

It is twenty-five years ago (May 26, 1875) that a union was effected at Gotha between the Eisenach and Lassalle parties. The party then took the name of the Socialistic Working Men's Party. Since then in spite of much persecution the Socialists have increased in power, and no better testimony to their might could be given than the fact that by their action they have practically defeated the Heinze bill.

The result of the elections is now known. The Clericals were formerly 112 and are now only 85 in number. Though some Socialists have lost their seats there is a net gain of five. If we turn to the number of votes cast we find that no less than 464,813 votes were given for the Socialists, an increase of over 140,000 votes since 1894. The system of proportional representation has worked fairly well, for if in some places the Socialists have not carried so many candidates as they would have done under the old system as at Brussels, they have in other places, as at Louvain, Namur, Dinant and Antwerp, got seats which they would not have had.

The official count of the election in Paris disposes of the claim that the reactionary Nationalists are in a majority, though they apparently control the municipal council. The vote polled by the various parties was as follows: Socialists, 142,772; Radicals, 59,473; Republican, 22,717; Independent Republican (Loyal League), 26,795; Monarchists, 20,220; Nationalists, 122,650. In other words, 224,962 votes were cast for the republican form of government against 169,665 for reaction.

Private advices received by prominent Socialist leaders in London from St. Petersburg and Moscow indicate that the Russian government has entered on another vigorous campaign to prevent the spread of Socialism among the students of the universities. This is shown by the sentences passed on the 146 students who recently were arrested for participation in last year's disturbances. One student who owned a secret printing press has been sentenced to six years' incarceration in a fortress. Others have been sent to prison for shorter periods and prohibited from appearing in any university town for periods varying from one to three years. The rest have been ordered to spend the next three years in the eastern provinces of the empire on pain of a severer punishment in case they refuse to comply.

ENGLISH CO-OPERATORS DISAPPOINTED

The ideals of the founders of the English co-operative movement have not been realized. Starting with much hope and promise and advocated strenuously as the lever for the social emancipation of the people by men of great ability like Geo. Jacob Holyoke, it has for years degenerated until, in these present days of triumphant commercialism, it is regarded as little more than a mere joint-stock, profit-sharing, shop-keeping affair. The hope long entertained that it might become a great influence for social regeneration is practically abandoned, a result quite natural and in line with the narrow views of the practical managers.

At the recent congress of co-operators at Bristol the chairman delivered an address which showed how completely they have failed in their mission. He pointed out the need for political action, indicating that the co-operators are beginning to discern the futility of their methods so far as any general social advance is concerned. The success of co-operation as a business enterprise in England has been accompanied with a loss of the founders' ideals.

PRODUCTION AND WAGES

Socialism would abolish money, as we know it. This would be accomplished by the socialization of the means of production, the abolition of private capital. To the capitalist system of industry money is essential; it is an instrument of robbery. The skilled workman and producer of wealth is deceived by the wages system, which is well adapted to blind him to the manner in which he is wronged. He may be paid as high wages as he demands, but he is never paid more than the value of his services regulated by the supply of other skilled workmen in his craft. Of the value of his product in use the workman knows nothing, and it is this—the amount which the consumer must pay for the product—that the employer receives for the workman's services. Under the wages system, the workman creates so much value that the employer grows rich, but the workman himself remains poor. This is because wages are estimated and paid in money. The employer is enabled to appropriate the surplus value created by the workman. The wages system deals with human beings as one sucks an orange, casting away the skin when the juice is extracted.

Money which can be hidden away and hoarded, is not a true medium for the exchange of commodities; but that is the kind of money which the capitalist system requires, the kind that breeds and enslaves the human race. Socialism, by abolishing the wages system, would also abolish speculation in human life. It would secure equitable distribution of products upon the basis of labor time, and that every thinking man must see, if his mind is not perverted, is the primary measure of all value. With a system of labor time certificates, representing certain amounts of crystallized labor time which the laborer can carry conveniently in his pockets and exchange conveniently for crystallized labor time in goods, the workman in every branch of social exertion, manual, mental and moral, will receive all that he earns, gratify every want, live in the sunshine instead of the shadow, and be forever free from the refined cruelties of metal money and the wages system.

THE NEW YORK OUTRAGE

The comrades of the Social Democratic party have a right to know what is going on among those who, in spite of the referendum vote deciding against organic union, have defied that vote and resorted to the most irregular and discreditable methods to force us to accept their terms. These methods have reached a fitting (and ridiculous) climax in New York state, where, in advance of any report on their own referendum, before the votes were all in and recorded, and, therefore, before the will of the members who choose to pay any attention to them could be known, the Socialist Labor party faction, with the aid and connivance of half a dozen Social Democrats, have had the temerity to declare that union had been perfected in that state. Having declared weeks ago that the vote on the "manifesto" was "spurious," "illegal," "padded" and "dishonest," they went into a "joint" state convention on June 16 and solemnly declared by resolution that upon the alleged "illegal" and "padded" vote "the union of both parties in this state is definitely accomplished."

Now look at the facts concerning the "joint" convention which resorted to this culminating trick; first, however, remembering that the vote on their unity report was called for Tuesday, June 26, and that the state convention which declares the union of the parties "definitely accomplished," without waiting for the vote on the national issue, was held June 16, ten days before. Now the facts concerning this boastful state union convention are briefly these: It was made up of sixty delegates, as follows: Fifty-three S. L. P. and seven S. D. P. Of the latter two represented branches long since defunct or moribund, and one individual delegate resigned from the S. D. P. months ago. The fact is that not more than four branches of the S. D. P. in New York state were represented in this convention, while all the rest, with a great majority of the individual members, entirely disapprove of the course pursued by four or five fusion promoters and protest against so foul an outrage in the name and under the guise of unity.

REPUBLICAN PROSPERITY ROT

The Chicago Tribune says that Senator Lodge in his speech before the republican convention "touched the heart of the matter" and "put the issue in a nutshell." And what did this Bay state statesman say? Among other things that McKinleyism has carried the country to the heights of prosperity, that wages are high, that good times everywhere prevail, that employment is abundant and that business men are forging ahead over calm waters. All of which is in beautiful republican accord with the sentiments of the statesmen of the Hanna and McKinley stripe, but entirely at variance with facts of common, every-day observation. Senator Wolcott, in his attempt to juggle with the truth, followed the same line of misrepresentation and repeated the old McKinley chestnut that there is employment for every man who wants it.

The matter to be most lamented in this tiresome reiteration of notorious falsehood is that it passes current with great masses of workingmen, even the fellow with patches on the broadest part of his pants, and children hungry at home, while he roams the streets with no job and no prospect of one, accepting the assurances of capitalist statesmen that he is prosperous. These flabby partisans in patches never pause to inquire why it is if business men are having such smooth sailing the month of May broke all records in the number of that class who were compelled to surrender and become bankrupts. They are unable to see that wages paid to labor in 1900 have less purchasing power than wages paid ten or twenty years ago, or that if wages in some industries have been increased 10 per cent over the prevailing rate five or ten years back, the prices of all essential commodities that laborers must buy have been raised from 10 to 30 and even 50 per cent. Their idea of prosperity has been soaked into them by republican statesmen; it is a paltry rise in wages accompanied by an exorbitant rise in the level of prices. Then as to steady employment, there is absolutely no substantial ground for the claims made. On the contrary, employment is precarious and thousands of men in every large city and manufacturing district are without work and destitute. In Senator Lodge's own state only a few days ago over 200 men were discharged from a single mill at Worcester, and it is notorious that thousands of workers who are seeking employment in Massachusetts are not able to find it. In Connecticut the testimony of the secretary of a large manufactory is that every day men come there begging for work, and a visit to the factory doors in any city in the country will convince anybody save a republican politician or his duped and prosperity-doped followers that the claims of good times are false.

It is well that workingmen remember that not only are the blustering claims of republicans plainly and undeniably contradicted by actual facts and conditions, but that the expenditure of millions of public treasure with the avowed and much vaunted object of expanding trade and commerce and, quite incidentally, of course, providing more jobs for them, has so far counted for naught in their favor. The policy of imperialism has not benefited the average American workman one farthing's worth. It has neither added to his pleasures nor taken from his burdens. For him there is no better condition in store under capitalist "liberty."

At Copenhagen the First National Congress of Danish trade unions has been sitting. Over seventy trade unions, representing 83,110 adherents, were represented by delegates. Delegates were also present from Sweden and Norway. Resolutions were passed asking that help be given to workmen out of work, and it was determined to found a workmen's bank and to establish co-operative stores.

PLAIN TRUTH TERSELY TOLD

What is the use value of gold and gold standard laws to famishing men? Neither will now, nor ever did, produce a bushel of wheat or a peck of potatoes. Neither gold metal nor gold money can supply those things which are essential to sustain human life. Law and legality never yet fed the hungry or clothed the naked. Law and legality, impressed on a gold disc, never yet relieved human anguish or satisfied human needs. The needs of humanity can only be met by equitable distribution of the products of labor, and labor, though dragged in the dust and trodden under foot, is king—not law, not legality, not courts nor congresses.

The predatory rich proceed with their devastations on the assumption that they have a right to rule. By legal and illegal methods they have come into possession of the surplus values of labor. By making laws and breaking laws they have come into possession of government. There are humane and progressive rich people, but the predatory ruling rich of this "free" land are inhuman and retrogressive, and the sooner the people realize it and become their own rulers the better for them and for freedom.

You think that capital produces value and wonder how we could get along without capital. But have you ever known capital to produce anything? Did you ever see a plow that capital forged, or a locomotive that capital built, or a yard of cloth that capital produced? That watch in your pocket, or the shoes on your feet—did capital make them? This pen we write with, or this paper we write on, did capital make either? The source of all value is labor. Labor is also the source of all capital.

If there are men in your community who live without work, isn't it perfectly clear to you that some other men are producing what they consume? Does food grow and get itself prepared without labor? Does clothing weave, cut, fit and sew itself without labor? Do houses spring up without sacrifice of human energy? How do the men who build the houses, weave the cloth, make the clothing and raise the food live, compared with the men who live without work?

Did you ever think what heroic lives the rich live? They abstain from work, so the poor will not be deprived of a job; they steal the wealth of a man who works, so that he may not be burdened with taking care of it; they own and operate the government, so that the poor will not lose any time. O, the rich are very heroic, and it is hard to see how the country would get along without them. Then what a calamity it would be for the poor to have no rich.

The exploiting rich sometimes build hospitals for the poor; but they make the poor to occupy them.

They sometimes give charity to the poor; but they often withhold from the poor what belongs to them and would make charity unnecessary.

They sometimes build churches and pay preachers to tell the poor about the glories of the world to come; but they also infringe upon the rights of the poor in the world that now is.

Without laborers capitalists could not operate their capitalistic properties.

Without laborers capitalists could not accumulate fortunes from the land.

Without laborers capitalists would have no food to eat or clothes to wear.

Without laborers capitalists would be naked and hungry savages.

The laborer makes the capitalist and supports him when made.

The legality of the methods of the rich is beyond question. Having seized upon government and the law-making power, they have had the opportunity to legalize robbery, and it would be wholly their own fault if their methods were illegal. The justice of their methods is another matter. Legality has usurped justice.

Under wage-slavery the reward of the slave diminishes in proportion as his productiveness increases. With the aid of machinery the slave bestows on the wealthy an increasing amount of wealth and comfort, and on himself an increasing amount of wretchedness and want.

Individuals and corporations are able to procure the passage of laws because they are the lawmakers, masters and masters of the economic power of the country. They are able to practice extortion on the people because the people are economically powerless.

The rich are indebted to labor for the houses they live in, the clothes they wear and the food they eat. Labor is indebted to the rich for nothing. The rich would be unknown and capital unthinkable without labor.

No man goes without his dinner after he has earned it in order that another, who has not earned it, may eat, except the workingman.

The poor are equally entitled to the protection of law with the rich, but the rich make the laws, and laws that the rich make never protected the poor. To have a title to protection and be continually subject to plunder is to be a slave to a delusion.

In a true democracy, administered to secure to all social needs and comforts, the indispensable resources and utilities of the nation should be owned and controlled by the people collectively, and not by a class hostile to the public welfare.

There is only one landlord by divine right—mankind; only one land question—how can it be used to the best advantage?

NOTES AND COMMENT

The model American college president is a promoter with a pull on the surplus values of labor appropriated by the capitalist class.

Gallifet, the butcher of the Paris communards, is out of the French cabinet; but Millerand, the Socialist, remains. And the latter, by the way, is the chief orator in the functions connected with the great exposition.

The Northwestern university is to be commercialized, to keep pace with the "pillared pile of plunder" in South Chicago. But Harper, with Rockefeller's backing, has a long lead and the Northwestern's promoter must be up in the morning early to catch up.

The Baltimore Herald says that "Socialistic tendencies are far more prevalent in higher educational institutions than is generally supposed." Yes, and you're going to discover within six months that Socialist principles are far more prevalent in American homes than you suppose.

Chairman Hernly of the republican state committee of Indiana comes to the front with the very timely and very truthful statement that the trust question will really cut no figure in the campaign, for the very good reason that democrats are as much interested in the trusts as individuals as republicans.

Twenty-four hours after the promulgation of the Republican platform, every thinking, honest man realized that the country had been given a compound of deliberate misstatements, false claims and partisan buncombe, quite in keeping with the record of the party and fully up to its usual standard of hypocrisy.

The discovery has been made that a fellow employed as a detective by the St. Louis Transit company planted dynamite under one of the company's bridges. He is under arrest. He has been an office holder and is the son of the clerk of the Appellate court of the Fourth district of Illinois. It is hard to understand why this man, Havill by name, should be arrested for doing what the Transit company wanted done, while members of the posse comitatus who have killed striking workmen, also for the Transit company, go free.

The trend of the financial institutions of Chicago is strongly toward consolidation, although the two parties to which the financiers belong are professedly opposed to their schemes. The latest combine announced is that of the Lincoln National and Bankers' National banks. The first named, being the smaller, goes out of existence. Absorption is not the only process that is going on, for within four years six banks have failed. But the fellows with the biggest capital survive, and so prosperity is kept up.

Lord Roberts has invited the "Outlander Committee" to send thirty representatives of commercial houses of the Rand to Johannesburg to "assist the military authorities in the work of pacifying the mining districts." So this is the British idea of equal rights for all white men; to destroy the government of the native-born Boers and place the nondescript gold-hunting aliens in authority over them. And yet there are those who deny that this war has been instigated by and carried through in the interests of the capitalists!

It soaks into the apologists for capitalism very slowly that Socialism is spreading at an "alarming" rate in the United States. But we know of no country where it is needed more. Somebody named Thompson, hailing from Huntsville, Ala., has been making an egregious ass of himself, and giving another exhibition of the invincible hatred of the American capitalist class for freedom, by denouncing Socialists and labor leaders as "traitors." And as we read his class-conscious howl we expected him to wind up by advocating the thumb-screw and the rack for the intelligent workman who has mind enough to understand the class struggle and courage enough to cry "Down with the capitalist system of production, which makes the struggle necessary!"

OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

At a meeting of the national executive board held at Chicago, Friday, June 22, the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That a national campaign committee of fifteen be chosen from Chicago and vicinity, and that the chairman of each state committee become ex-officio a member of said national committee, the respective states to select as many members of their committees as they deem advisable."

In accordance with the foregoing resolution the following comrades were named to constitute the committee of fifteen:

John Doerfler, Robert Meister, Edward Zeigler, Gust Richter, August Mohr, Eugene Rooney, James Beattie, Joseph Finn, Philip Brown, W. C. Horgan, J. H. Greer, James Wright, Frank Kozak, Jacob Winnen, E. D. Wheelock.

This committee is chosen for the purpose of taking charge of work connected with the campaign and requiring immediate attention, and stands as the recommendation of the board unless otherwise ordered by the membership.

The attention of members is called to the fact that with the adoption of the constitution the tenure of office of the present executive board expires and the election of a new board of nine members becomes necessary. The clause of the constitution relating to the executive board reads as follows:

"A national executive board of nine members, five of whom shall be chosen from territory convenient to the national headquarters, and shall be called 'resident members,' and the remaining four shall be chosen; so far as possible, from other parts of the country. All members of the executive board shall have equal rights and powers; but the resident members shall have power to act, and a majority of said resident members shall constitute a quorum. The non-resident members shall not be required to be present at all meetings of the board, but shall be kept advised of all proceedings of the board."

The constitution also provides that the board "shall be elected by the national convention." But the interests of the party, to say nothing of any other consideration, require that the constitutional provision for nine members be complied with and a new board chosen immediately. Suggestions are, therefore, in order as to the best method of procedure to facilitate the election of a new board in accordance with the provisions of the constitution above quoted.

EDITOR'S LETTER BOX

Comrade J. M. Reynolds of California sends the following question and asks for an answer through the columns of The Herald:

"Did the vote against the uniting of the Socialist Labor party and the Social Democratic party organizations mean that Comrade Job Harriman should be taken off the national ticket?"

The "manifesto" was directed solely against organic union with the anti-DeLeon faction of the Socialist Labor party. A majority of the members of the Social Democratic party voting on the question declared for no union, and subsequent developments have justified both the "manifesto" and the vote. That decision has been accepted by all loyal members of the party. The "manifesto" contained no proposition, or even a suggestion, to remove Job Harriman from the national ticket. He was nominated by the Social Democratic party convention at Indianapolis, and is today the nominee of the party for vice-president. The question as to whether he will continue in that relation or not rests entirely with him. Although the matter of organic union with the organization to which Job Harriman belongs was decided emphatically in the negative by our members through a referendum regularly instituted, the Social Democratic party, by its representatives, has repeatedly declared for political co-operation. This was rejected by those who favored organic union at any cost and under any conditions, and the expressed will of the majority voting on the question was repudiated and defied.

Notwithstanding this surprising and unsocialistic turn of affairs, the members of the Social Democratic party, including all who are temporarily in charge of its affairs, stand, as they always have stood, for political co-operation in the approaching campaign. Organic union was not perfected at Indianapolis, but political co-operation was made possible.

S. K.—What's the use? Such intellectual flubdub, while it may suit a large but certainly diminishing section of the flabby multitude, disturbs nobody and will get no "reply" from us. Let 'em splutter.

FACTORY LIFE IN ENGLAND

Hard and gray Lancashire. I have been to the land of the hard-headed weavers; nay, I have done my share in those filthy factories. Know ye not, gentle reader, of the privileges and benefits which accrue from assiduously fulfilling the duties of factory life?

Working over my looms, my custom all day long, upon my secluded moments a thought did steal. I raised my head and looked around for inspiration, for some hope of relieve. Only yesterday I had wandered over breezy moors, had bathed in a clear northern stream, heard the birds twitter, seen the lark soar, and lost myself for hours among trees covered with honeysuckle and ivy. But now I say with Hamlet:

My sinews grow not instant cold,
But bear me stiffly up.

The scene is changed, for, instead of things beautiful, there is a dirty, white-washed wall, black, greasy, rumbling wheels, and myriads of pale faces on every side. It is fearful to realize, as I have many times done, that there is hardly a healthy, happy face to be seen in such a place. Often have strenuous efforts been made to find such faces, but, alas, those thin white dials are alone characteristic. I have noticed boys and girls at the age of ten enter the mills with bonny, cheerful faces, bright eyes, and with smiles that only children can wear. Watch them, and sooner or later the palor, weariness, and headaches have crept into their lives, and the sight of them ceases to gladden your heart.

Is there any wonder when you know that the air of the factory is filled with microscopic and large pieces of china clay, fat, and iron. In addition you have scores of persons breathing their waste products into the same receptacle, and the lavatories of the place are only a few yards from you. I well remember the occasions when I could not partake of my breakfast on account of the stench proceeding from the latter. Twice per week every loom has to be swept, and on those days the filth of perhaps a thousand looms is brushed off the machinery, and after floating in the air finally settles on the floor. The deposition of fine dust often forms layers half an inch in depth on undisturbed parts of the machinery. From this one can judge the amount which must reach the lungs of the weaver, and the subsequent stagnation of the blood is obvious.

This is not all. In winter you commence at 6 a. m., half asleep, tired from yesterday's work, and with very little, if any, hope for the day. You enter the place, the noise from which deafens you, and the hundreds of yellow lights make you almost sick. Bah, I can feel the cold steel even now, and the sad weary monotony of those days, haunts me. There is so little cotton, and so much artificial coating of wax and clay, that the frost snaps the delicate threads, and then your drudgery begins. To prevent this frequent breaking of the threads the law allows the manufacturers to send steam into the mill, and only the experienced know what those steam jets mean. Yes, I have felt my clothes growing damp, I have wiped the condensed water from the surface of the cold steel, and after a few years the indelible seeds of rheumatism have been sown in my body. All this time the noise is as loud and irritating as ever, the air is getting sickly, the lights are consuming the air, and your heart is growing weary.

Can you imagine that such slaves find pleasure in their work? Would you expect to find human beings sanctioning such conditions of life? The truth would shock you. I am just thinking of a group of women—many of them mothers—who got me sacked for opening one of the ventilators on a hot summer's day. These women were absolutely ignorant of the necessity for pure air, their faces were pale and shriveled, and they bore children almost periodically. There was one poor wretch who continued at her work until a month prior to giving birth, and who tried to obtain re-employment a fortnight after the event. It is impossible to exaggerate the horrible influence which such a life must have on the future generations.

I have not mentioned anything about the life in summer. I would rather take you to one of the weaving sheds on some glorious July day and let you smell the place. The weaving sheds stink, and what wonder when the temperature is often 90 degrees F., steam jets are playing over your shoulders, and perspiring bodies are covered with damp, dirty clothes. The law states that from .04 to .06 per cent of carbonic acid gas is the limit for pure air, but I have made quantitative experiments with limewater, and found the quantity to be as much as 2 and 3 per cent. Any scientist knows that this quantity of carbonic acid gas is over fifty times that fixed as the limit by sanitary law, and it means absolute destruction of health to all the unfortunate victims.

I once tried to grow some peas in a flower-pot under my looms. My God, it was a lesson to all biologists. To see that pale, sickly, straggling thing attempting to reach sunlight was pitiful. Not a single specimen ever bore good leaves, never tell of flowers and fruits. The weavers saw these things, and I pointed out what was only too obvious, that the whole organization of the plant was stunted and diseased and suggested a like fate for ourselves. In consequence, they designated me a crank.

I intended criticising a noted labor man of the north, who stated that factory life had a stimulating effect on the minds of young people. His ideas were based on the fact that a certain young man, once a half-timer at the mill, had been placed at the top of a government scholarship list open to the United Kingdom. Enough, when you learn that this leader kept every one of his children out of the mill.

Meanwhile, the wheel goes round, and our army is preparing the way for extension of such diabolical industries.

LAND VALUE TAXATIONISM

Who is the land monopolist, so far as the working-class dweller in towns is concerned? Surely it is the man who draws rent from him for the place in which he sleeps. In most cases this individual is the leaseholder who pays a ground rent to the freeholder—the land monopolist, from the land-taxer's point of view—but whether he be freeholder or leaseholder, what difference can the taxation of land values make to his tenant, or how can it free the latter from the evils of land monopoly? Generally speaking, a man having a house to let lets it for as much as he can get. Whether he is a leaseholder or a freeholder makes no difference to the tenant as tenant, and whether the total ground rent goes into the pockets of the individual freeholder or a considerable portion goes into the national or municipal exchequer makes no difference either. That it makes a difference to the other direct taxpayers or ratepayers we readily admit; but we are just now considering the matter from the point of view of its effect on the monopoly of land, and it is clear to us that in this respect the taxation of land values can produce no effect whatever. The man who holds land to cultivate it for profit, or to build houses on it for profit, is the real, active monopolist so far as the common people are concerned, and whether he, as freeholder, pockets the whole of the "swag" himself, or, as leaseholder, shares it with another thief in the background, or is made to hand part of it over to the state or the municipality in order to relieve other capitalists of part of their burdens, makes no real difference to his actual monopoly of the soil.

In the main the monopoly of land is pretty much the same as the monopoly of other means of production; the monopoly is held for the purpose of exploiting labor in one way or another. It makes no material difference to the exploited workman whether the employer rents or owns the machine with which he (the workman) is exploited. So with a factory, and so also with the land upon which the factory stands. When a man rents a factory he does not do so for amusement, but for profit. That profit he makes by the exploitation of the "hands" whom he employs. Now, he exploits these hands in precisely the same fashion and to exactly the same extent whether he simply rents the factory or it actually belongs to him. But say he rents it at, say, £50 a year; his rates and taxes would be about another £10 a year. The ground rent—forming part of the £50—would be, say, £10 a year. Now, suppose the £10 a year which the factory holder at present pays in rates and taxes were taken from the ground rent, it would simply increase the balance of the sum total of his exploitation left in the hands of the factory holder. No one supposes for a moment that he would, therefore, reduce the exploitation of his hands in proportion to the amount of taxation of which he was relieved. Thus, at the utmost, the taxation of land values in this instance would simply mean shifting the burden from the shoulders of the capitalist exploiter and putting it on those of the ground landlord.—From Justice, London.

Slavery in Hawaii

Mr. Sewall, special agent of the United States in Hawaii, has just submitted a report on labor conditions in the islands. It is so sugar-coated that the average reader might imagine it a seventh heaven of bliss to be permitted to labor under contract in the islands. It reads like those special pleas which used to be made to show what a beneficent institution slavery is. The few cold facts which cannot be concealed in the document are what the working people of this country want to know. They are:

1. Contract labor exists in the islands. 2. Agents of the United States scour Europe and bring laborers to Hawaii under contract. 3. The terms of the contract are such that the laborers are practically slaves for many years, if not for all time. 4. Whipping, fining, and all the barbarous adjuncts of such compulsory labor are in full force. Many men desert and face starvation rather than stay in contract labor slavery.

The people of this country have made their fight against the horrors of contract labor. It is in some respects even worse than slavery. It is now permitted and excused, even commended, in Hawaii, one of our possessions, and, presumably, an integral part of the United States. What will be the next step?—Washington Correspondent

California Socialists

Socialists resident in California and not members of the Social Democratic party are requested to communicate with John Carter, 929 Twenty-second street, San Francisco.

Oregon Socialists, Attention

You are requested to communicate with J. D. Stevens, Box 204, Portland, organizer for the S. D. P., with a view to instituting branches of the party in your community. The future belongs to Socialism. Lend a hand and get your state thoroughly organized.

Iowa Socialists

All reformers living in Iowa who are interested in the Social Democracy are requested to communicate with the undersigned. By unanimous vote of the S. D. P. branches of the state I have been made the party organizer for the state. I desire the name of every Socialist in Iowa. A. W. Ricker, Lone Tree, Iowa.

Arizona Socialists

In every community should correspond with M. J. Casper, Box 178, Globe, Tucson, Ariz. We have plans for keeping organizers in the field to organize branches in every town in Arizona before November; 500 Socialists pledging 25 cents per month each will do it. Don't miss it—write at once.

North Dakota Socialists

Socialists residing in North Dakota and desiring to organize for effective propaganda work in that state are requested to correspond with Math. Eldness, Towner, N. D.

Michigan Socialists

All Social Democrats and all unattached Socialists residing in Michigan are requested to write at once to Henry Ramsey, 84 Railroad street, Battle Creek, Mich., and thus aid in placing a Social Democratic state ticket in the field this fall.

Southern California, Attention

All Socialists in the seven southern counties of Southern California should now get to work and so far as possible form branches in every voting precinct. To further this end communicate at once with James T. Van Rensselaer, 1618 Toberman street, Los Angeles, Cal.

Attention, Nebraska

Persons living in Nebraska and accepting the principles of Socialism are requested to communicate with T. A. Edwards, 3220 California street, Omaha, with a view to the organization of branches of the Social Democratic party.

Montana Socialists

All unattached Socialists in Montana please communicate with J. F. Fox, 71 E. Park street, Butte, for the purpose of furthering Social Democratic propaganda.

To Texas Socialists

For purpose of state organization, the Bonham Social Democratic branch requests that every Socialist in Texas who reads this notice, will please send name and address to the undersigned. Please attend to this at once. W. E. Farmer, Bonham, Texas.

AMONG THE TOILERS

The strike of the journeymen horse-shoers in Buffalo has been settled.

The Massachusetts legislature is considering a bill for the establishment of a state printing office.

The United Brewery Workers of America will hold their twelfth national convention at Detroit on Sept. 9.

General housework girls of Decatur, Ill., are holding meetings for the purpose of bettering the condition of this class of workers. It is stated that a union will be organized.

The Buffalo Trades and Labor council and the directors of the Pan-American Fair have reached an agreement that guarantees union wages and citizen labor in the construction of the exposition buildings.

The Building Trades council of Minneapolis, Minn., has issued a circular to the architects and contractors, stating that hereafter no mill work, bars or bar fixtures will be set up or put in a place unless they bear the label of the Amalgamated Woodworkers' union.

Business Agent W. J. O'Brien of the New York branch of the National Granite Cutters' union, states that after a strike of fourteen weeks the eight-hour day has been granted in all of the 103 cities of the United States under the jurisdiction of the union.

A late accounting by the Tobacco Workers' union shows that seventy-nine manufacturing concerns are now using the organization's blue label, and list and patronage are both growing rapidly. With the foregoing fact in view there is no occasion for unionists to claim that there is no union label tobacco on the market.

Gen. Gallifet resigned nominally on the ground of ill-health, but it is said that he disapproved of the way in which Waldeck-Rousseau referred to the officer who communicated some official documents to a Nationalist deputy. Now the reactionary newspapers are praising the general, but they are very disappointed in another minister of war having been appointed. No one can like Gallifet, remembering the part he played in the suppression of the Commune, but he undoubtedly helped the republic by taking office last year.

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes: first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

SOCIAL DEMOCRAT'S LETTER TO THE CAPITALIST CLASS

The Position of the Uninventive and Useless Owners of Capital in Society Clearly Defined.—Story of the Ungrateful Donkey

By Hon. Atterbury

I would like to have a straight talk with you, Mr. Capitalist. The business of life and the struggle to live is very serious business to most men. To you living consists chiefly of a round of pleasures. No wish the gratification of which money can buy, provided your health is good, is denied you. I do not, of course, mean to be understood as saying that all very rich men enjoy life. Far from that. There are those among you who think too much of a dollar to enjoy the beauties of anything of anything but compound interest. They have little bits of weazeny souls that sometimes cast very serious reflections upon many Biblical statements I might quote, were it not for the misery of being misunderstood. I might, with equal chances of making an impression, go and talk to a state legislature, filled with pot-house politicians, about the rights of man—as a man—and not as a party man. And you can readily imagine how hopeless an undertaking that would be. This is an assumption on my part; it may be, however, that many of you never thought of it. It is, then, to those of your number who really enjoy life and have the power, under the law and over the law, to add to your present vast accumulations of wealth by monopolizing land and capital—the resources of nature, and the means of transforming these resources into things necessary to the sustenance and the comfort of human beings.

And the first thing I have to say to you is a word about land. You cannot successfully combat the proposition that the present distribution, use and disse of the bounty of nature denies to millions of men, quite as worthy and intelligent as yourself, access to opportunities of gaining a livelihood. You cannot, I think, deny that in nature, independent of law, there is nowhere to be found any sanction for your class to distribute land with so little reference to justice and the absolute necessities of the human race as to make the earth for millions a living tomb, instead of a glorious habitation. You will not dare, I venture to say, to supplement your last donation to the fund for saving the heathen in foreign countries, with the contention that while the earth and all its fullness may have originally been the Lord's, some Yankee or British syndicate has, by discovering a defect in the title, come into undisputed and perpetual proprietorship. There is no defect in the title of the human race, gentlemen! That is superior to your title, superior to any individual right, though the latter has the sanction and seal of all the governments that ever existed. Your titles to the land were mostly obtained by force and are maintained by fraud. While your class holds land out of use, owns, as you say, millions of acres of the fertile lands of the world that you cannot use, your selfishness, and cruelty, and greed, is accomplishing the degradation and ruin of the human race. Like the great thieves of Rome, who gradually stole the common lands of the people, you are slowly, surely driving the people from nature's bounties and have sanctified your larcenies by forms of law.

The foregoing is fundamental in your scheme of usurpation of common human rights. Yours is a system that could not exist without the protection of governments, and that protection you have obtained by methods of force and corruption. You pride yourselves, no doubt, that you have by legality banished justice from the world, and like Cervantes, who thought he had laughed the last dying breath out of the body of civilization, you imagine the soul of democracy is extinct, and to you has forever fallen the task of writing the laws for seventy millions of people. But as in the history of social and industrial progress we find system after system decay and pass away, so you shall find one day that the people are supreme and that the political sovereignty with which you fool them will not always suffice. Make no mistake, gentlemen, the ghastly mockery and grinning farce you now call freedom will not do; it will rot last, for the fundamental principles of human welfare are planted in the human brain and your fences will go down.

But your monopoly of the land is not yet quite so complete as that of machinery and things which the brain and muscle of ingenious and industrious men have transformed from land into what your class calls its capital. You are the owner of a railroad—which you did not build; the principal work in building a railroad, I understand, is done with pick and shovel, but you never turned a shovelful of earth on the railroad you own. You may claim that you paid the strong-limbed men who did, but you didn't; that is one of the great mistakes you capitalists make, viz., that you pay the wages of workingmen. All wages are paid by the men who do the work, workingmen pay their own wages. More than that, they pay your income. Your income and their wages came from the same original source—labor applied to natural resources. You neither created the resources nor performed the labor, but the property is yours, yours by a systematic confusion of the moral sense of mankind.

Did you ever think how much work was done for society and the building of railroads before you could own one? Is it any merit of yours that you can fly over the rails in the president's car at sixty miles an hour? How much did you have to do with building a locomotive, or an eighty-pound steel rail, or the hewing of ties, or the bridging of rivers, or the mining of iron? I can't put my finger on any work done by you. You didn't even invent so much as a screw, or a nut, or a bolt, all of which had to be discovered before a locomotive could be built to run on your railroad. All these things required thought and patience and a thousand experiments before you could enjoy the luxury of owning a railroad, and most of your class, I am inclined to believe, never had the power of thought, the patience or the skill to do any of them. If I am wrong in this send me the name of a capitalist who has ever built a railroad, or any part of a railroad, I shall be happy to acknowledge that your class is not as bad as I have believed it to be.

Why should you monopolize the thought, the patience, the experiments and the skill of thousands of men in the past? These things could not belong to you but for one fact, you have been protected in your scheme of monopolization by laws enacted as often as not by governments or legislatures which you have seized and perverted to your own selfish ends. You are a punctual man, I have heard it said. How did you learn to be punctual? By the aid of the watch you carry. But you didn't invent the watch and you couldn't make one. With you "time is money," but you would be as ignorant of the divisions of time as you appear to be of human misery, save for the ingenuity, experiments, patience and thought of the Harries and the Barlows of three centuries ago, and the skill of the Arabians a thousand years before them.

You may take an inventory of what you own and be accounted a very wealthy man; but if you will follow that with another of things you have made, your credit, I imagine, will be exceedingly small. You are much given to deluding yourself and trying to delude other folks with the idea that what you call your capital is your savings. That is a fallacy. If capital is the result of savings, one of your class, John Rockefeller, is the most deserving man in America! Now isn't such a thought preposterous? If Jay Gould was able by disposing of mouse traps made with his own hands to save one dollar a day, that was clearly saving from his own labor; but just as soon as a maker of mouse traps becomes an employer of other men engaged at turning out mouse traps, he becomes, under your system, an appropriator of other men's earnings; he is then able to live better, but he does not live on his own savings. That idea has been in an advanced stage of decay for a long time. So I am unable to see what there is to set down to your credit. You owe everything you have to men now living and working and to other men who worked and died long before you came into this world to preempt its natural wealth, get a cinch on pendants and slaves of human beings who, on the score of merit, outrank you and all your tribe. No one man invented the steam engine or the clock; neither did you, Mr. Monopolist, make your own fortune. Your self-made man is a pure humbug and your talk about thrift man's social inheritance and make de- and saving sheer nonsense.

There is a little fable about a donkey and his master. It is quite suggestive in its way; and, as you may not have heard it, I will venture to recall it:

The master employed the ass to carry upon his back great sacks of oats. One day the patient burden-bearer stopped suddenly in the highway.

"Go on, beast," said the great Man. "I can go no further," brayed the Ass.

"Thou ungrateful beast," said the Man, "do I not give thee work by which thou dost earn thy feed?" "Alas!" said the Ass, "my burdens are so heavy and my feet so light that I am too weak to trudge farther." "If thou dost not go on I shall lose the market for my oats. Go on, or I will goad thee!"

But the patient Ass still refused to go, whereupon the Man began to goad him severely. The Ass resented this by kicking and shaking every sack of grain from his back to the ground, which so frightened the great Man that he called to a Passer-by for help.

There was a kind look in the Stranger's eyes as he said to the great Man: "Thou art rightly served; the Ass can carry the whole load if he has less on his back and more in his stomach!"

Now, Mr. Capitalist, there is a lesson for you—and another for the asses in that fable. I think the asses are learning theirs, and when they have it thoroughly you had better "look a leedle out!" As sure as you are a living glutton, the ass will suddenly stop in the road some day and "dump" you with your stolen property. Study Socialism and begin to do something useful for the human race and the rescue of men, women and children from the pit into which your beastly commercialism is plunging them.

INTERNATIONAL NOTES

The bitterly fought municipal election in Vienna resulted in a victory for the anti-Semites, which party is composed of the nobility, capitalists, clericals and other factions that are antagonistic to Jews. The combination, by the most bare-faced frauds and shameful gerrymandering, won 131 seats in the council, while the Progressives secured but 21. For the first time the Socialists are represented, winning two seats. The popular vote shows the infamous manner in which the capitalistic government has gerrymandered the city. The anti-Semites polled only 77,608 for their 131 seats, while the Socialists secured only two seats with 56,306 votes. Thousands of workingmen were also disfranchised, and this farcical condition will cause more fights in parliament.

The third annual meeting of the Trades Union Congress is being held at Vienna. Since 1896 there has been an increase of 40,000 members, but even now there are only 157,773 trade unionists in the whole country. That, undoubtedly, is one of the chief reasons why strikes generally fail; battles cannot be won unless the army is well organized beforehand. The chief subject for debate was the question of organization.

At Kronstadt, in Transylvania, the first congress of the Transylvanian Socialist party has been held. The inhabitants of this part of Austria are nearly all Roumanians, but the congress determined to take no part in the nationalist quarrels, but to agitate for federation and for universal suffrage. Two papers are to be started. They are to appear monthly, one being in Roumanian and one in German.

The West Ham Corporation, England, maintains an artificial-stone factory for supplying flagging stones. The department is making a profit of over £1,500 a year on what is as yet a very small turnover. The West Ham Corporation has also a stable depot and supplies horses to the health department and the highways and park committee.

Paul Iglesias is going on a lecturing tour through the south of Spain. He is to lecture at Malaga, Gibraltar, Sevilla, Cordova and several other places. It is also stated in El Socialista of Madrid that the Socialists in the Argentine Republic will hold their third congress on July 1, and that a Workmen's party is to be formed at San Domingo, in the West Indies.

"Richard Croker, the New York politician, recently purchased a bulldog for which he paid the sum of $4,000," says the Typographical Journal. "According to a decision of a New York judge, rendered some time ago, a baby is worth $1, hence one bulldog is worth 4,000 babies. Do you believe?"

The English delegates to establish a labor college in this country arrived in New York, and a big mass meeting will be held July 8 to inaugurate the plan. The Britishers contribute $20,000 toward the proposed college.

In New York state 910 persons were killed and nearly 40,000 crippled in shops, factories and industrial pursuits in the year 1899. In the war with Spain 280 Americans were killed and 1,557 wounded.

A congress is to be held at Amsterdam to try and form a united Socialist party, so as to secure the co-operation of revolutionary and parliamentary Socialists.

COMRADE CLEMENS OF KANSAS REPELS A "BAYONET" CHARGE

If a Man Due in California Got Into a Wagon Going to New York, What Would You Think of Him?

From Western Socialist News

Although I have said nothing about it in these columns, it is a fact that I am supposed to be a candidate for governor of Kansas—the nominee of the Social Democratic party. I am not yet nominated, for a referendum is pending and some other man may be "it." For this reason, and a few others, I have not been worrying over my candidacy, and up to this date I have not promised a single job to anybody. I have not even bethought me of the selection of a private secretary. But I am beginning to feel important now, for the fusion press and the fusion fixers and bosses are going after me in a style that seems to indicate they are afraid I may, through the thoughtlessness or carelessness of the stupid masses, actually get some votes! I am going to get a silk tile if this row over me keeps on a while longer. A good fusion paper published at Wichita by a contract-labor editor imported by Jerry Simpson from Washington has just gone after me with a three-column bayonet charge. The kind-hearted, if misguided, editor pays me this handsome compliment:

"Clemens, as simply Citizen Clemens, is no more to me than I am to Clemens; but Candidate Clemens who declares he is running for governor in the interests of the people, but is in reality an assistant Republican, needs some attention."

Hear that? But that is not the only nice thing he says about me. Read: "It is more than a right, it is a duty, to take to task a man who, claiming to be a friend to the people, is giving their enemies his ablest assistance in keeping locked the gate to reform."

That is to say, I am liable to keep locked the gate through which the pure and holy office-seekers, who have fused with not only the Democratic party, Tammany and all, but the railroad companies of Kansas as well, must pass to the enjoyment of the jobs they have agreed among themselves to permit "the people" to give them in the name of "reform." Whatever I can do toward it I shall certainly do to keep "locked the gate to reform" while the "reform" is of the peculiar brand that requires the most disgraceful and most brazen trafficking for mere office ever witnessed on this politics-cursed earth since the days of Walpole. My esteemed contemporary, which, by the way, has not offered to exchange with the News, will please accept the assurance of my distinguished consideration for the unsolicited send-off it has given my humble candidacy. I am everlastingly glad that the fusionists have at last conceded that as a candidate for governor I "need some attention."

But the particular thing I wish to speak of is the following Bayonet thrust:

"Suppose a man who wanted to go to China was offered a seat in the conveyance of a man who wanted to go only to California, refused the seat with scorn and abuse and started to walk, just because the man who was going to California refused to agree that he would continue on to China, what would you think of him anyway?"

My dear Bayonet, I must confess I must look upon him as a man acting very much like a fool. But suppose a man wishing to journey to California should chance to meet a wagon on its way back to New York, and the driver should say to him: "Brother, we are bound in the same direction. Get into my wagon and you will reach your destination much sooner than on foot." If the man due in California got into that wagon to ride, "What would you think of him; anyway?" As Socialism is the very antithesis of competition, and as Mr. Bryan and his crowd are determined to "restore competition," kindly enlighten me, my dear Bayonet, whether my supposition or yours more truly presents the actual situation. Mr. Bryan does not stand for a single new idea. His entire program is reactionary. His one aim is to get back to the old state of things in every direction. He is the most conservative candidate today running for the presidency. Why free silver? To restore old conditions. Why "smash the trusts"? To restore old conditions. Do everything Mr. Bryan urges and the country will not have taken a single step in advance; it will merely have returned to "the good old times." Socialists do not wish to return to the past. They wish to preserve all the advantages civilization has gained for mankind, including the concentration of industries and all other industrial machinery. Socialism does not propose that mankind shall retreat a single inch toward the past. It wishes to carry over into the new social order, everything of use or of beauty the world possesses today. In short, Socialism's aim is not to destroy anything the world has in it, but to give the enjoyment of all the world possesses to all the people instead of to a class. Socialists are progressive, not reactionary. What good would a ride in Bryan's wagon do us?

SWEET CHARITY AND CAPITAL

Sweet Charity was one day passing down the street dressed in the height of fashion, and showing in every line of her figure and in every feature of her countenance evidences of taste and refinement, when she came upon Industry lying beastly drunk in the gutter just able to drag himself up on his elbow and curse a well-dressed gentleman by the name of Capital, who was passing in a stylish carriage. Sweet Charity and Capital exchanged greetings, agreed that Industry was in a shocking state of demoralization, tossed him a dime to sober up on, and then congratulated one another that their names had been changed by act of legislature so that nobody would ever suspect them of being daughter and son of that loathsome wretch, or that everything they had in the world they received from him.

There is in New York a certain benevolent millionairess whose income is a thousand dollars a day or such a matter. She gives money away liberally and her "benevolences" are widely heralded in the newspapers.

She knows very well that there are a thousand young women in New York whose combined income is less than hers, and yet that each one of those thousand young women renders more useful service to society every day than she does in a month. They work like slaves for their pittance. She merely holds her embroidered apron, and money rains into it faster than she can get rid of it.

Her father accumulated the money from which her income is derived by methods that are little short of diabolical. Thousands of men were ruined through his financial manipulations. She probably has never taken the trouble to look up her father's record, or, if she has, she feels herself powerless to remedy it. Her share of the fortune would not go far in making restitution even to the people she knows about who are in financial straits through her father's genius for money-making. Her great wish is to make herself honored and loved by the American people as her father is despised. So she is giving dollars in benevolence where her father took thousands by perfidy.—The Straight Edge.

Bryanism and Social Democracy

Social Democracy is not Bryan Democracy. Bryan Democracy is mainly political. Its chief object is to get the presidency and other places of profit and power. It does not propose to change any of the elements of our present economic system out of which have arisen our present economic difficulties. It does not intend to stop the machinery which, to manufacture millionaires, multiplies paupers. It would not crucify labor on a cross of gold, but would leave untouched the old-fashioned cross made of the wage system as a base, with rent, interest and profit as head and arms. It desires to eat the cake of imperialism and keep it at the same time. The Social Democratic party stands for radical remedies. It believes in putting a stop to concentration of the country's wealth in few hands. It believes that private ownership of the sources and instruments of wealth production is the groundwork of wealth concentration. To get rid of the evil public ownership must, through government action, be made to take the place of private ownership of those things.

This is the economic side of Social Democracy. It involves social interests, for all society is interested in an equitable distribution of wealth. It is democratic, for it puts the wealth-making and wealth-distributing power into the hands of all the people. Is this desirable? or is plutocracy better? One or the other seems inevitable. We favor the program of Social Democrats.—Civic and Social Problems.

The Kansas City convention proposes that the asses shall change riders; but a change of riders won't help the asses.

WHAT HAS CAPITAL DONE?

Would there be any clothing without labor, or any houses, or ships, or railroads, or machines without labor? Would there be any food for anybody without labor? Can capital produce pictures, write or print books, raise wheat or corn, make machines, build houses or ships, construct railroads or cut and sew clothing? Has capital anywhere ever done any of these things? Do you know of a single mile of railroad in all the 180,000 miles, that capital has built? Ever seen a pair of socks that capital knitted or a horseshoe that capital forged? Do you think that all the capital in this world could produce this week's paper? If capital can do none of these things, and the doing of them is so essential to human comfort, why should it hog five-sixths of all that labor, joined to capital, produces? The answer is plain, and to understand the answer is to see the hopelessness of the wage slave's condition. Capital, under the present system, must appropriate the lion's share, that is, all the surplus value of labor it can, to preserve itself. Under this system of labor it cannot do otherwise. Hence, Socialists declare for the abolition of the system, because of its monstrous injustice.

FOLLY OF MONEY REFORM

If money reform should be carried to the point of utterly destroying every dollar, pound, franc, florin, shilling and penny on earth, and the whole diabolical vocabulary of money rooted out of every language, the world would be no poorer than now. It is work and not money that increases with wealth. It is the workers and not financiers who maintain progress. And Socialists want work done without reference to price or profit, but with reference to social requirements and the demands of justice. Socialists want productive capital, which includes machinery, socialized and operated, without profit, to supply the needs of society. Money reformers want profit; they want to readjust the "skinning" business, so that in place of a few big "skinners" we will have a whole nation of little ones. But as high tariff, and low tariff, and no tariff, have failed, so will currency reform also fail, for there will be more inventions, more emporiums of trade driving the small merchant to the wall and more monopoly of nature's raw materials. The only way to check the universal concentration of wealth and the consequent universal growth of Socialism, is to abolish human stomachs and deprive the human brain of the power to think, so that men can live without eating and work without inventing.

REPUBLICAN CLAIMS DISPROVED

It was announced in the Republican convention that every man who desired a situation and was willing to work could find a job. The day after, to prove that Republicans always tell the truth, David Ross, a Republican secretary of the Illinois Bureau of Labor Statistics, issued a bulletin giving the result of the three state free employment bureaus during the forty-four weeks ending June 9 that they have been in operation. The number of applications filed were, males 25,565, females 14,432. The number of positions secured, males 14,787, females 14,129. The total number of applications for help were, for males, 18,103, females 17,015. Thus it will be seen that there were 7,000 males who could not possibly be provided with a situation because the applications for help did not come within 7,000 of those applying for situations.

Now, if the statistics of Illinois show men to be out of employment with no jobs awaiting them some bright (?) reader will probably think of the prairies and wonder why those out of work do not pick up their families, with five or six children, and pay from $100 to $200 railroad fare and take a vestibule car to the prairies of the West, where lucrative employment awaits "the penniless." Their chances there we see from the Chicago Chronicle of June 22, which contains an article by one who had a similar dream, who went West seeking a fortune as a farmhand. Perhaps he was a bachelor and figured that some heiress would relieve him of his daily discouragements, but, far from that this conservative Democratic paper says 10,000 applicants for work are stranded in Kansas and a few who are lucky enough to be working are getting 50 cents a day and of the 10,000 tramping the state about 3,000 went from Chicago. The glowing accounts of prosperity sent out by Kansas promoters reaped a harvest of tramps.

It further states "how penury has attacked the visitors to such an extent that thievery has been resorted to and farmers have sought police protection." "Their chicken coops have been looted and their storehouses raided." It is a daily occurrence for one to be pushed off a train while in motion by the brakeman or conductor, and in Kansas large groups are complaining of their ill fortune, and bonfires at night may be seen in many places around which the unfortunate job hunters are gathered. This gold standard sound money paper tells this freely, without suggesting a remedy, and thus we find in the country and in the cities the dismal song of the stranded and unemployed; but never mind, we are raising money to assist the starving people of India, and charity balls will soon give joy to those who have neither the manhood to protest against complete subjection nor the intellect to observe and see that which will bring the blessedness to be.

It is proper here to observe that if there were no unemployed the capitalist system would immediately fall. If every man had a situation he would demand the full product of his labor, which would leave no surplus value for the capitalist. The reason that they do not today receive the full product of their labor is because the reserve army of the unemployed stand ready to take their positions at a far lower salary or wage than that which the full product of labor amounts to. If there were none out of employment to step in and take the positions and compete with the wage worker they would take nothing else than the full product created by them, because when they ceased to work, industry would stop; but the unemployed today step in and take their places and continue production; therefore the unemployed are necessary and the salvation of the capitalist system.

LOOKING FOR JOBS AND NOT RIGHTS

Everything that ever was essential to be done for the perpetuation of the human species and the comfort of human life on the planet has been done by labor. The achievements of labor almost exceed the comprehension of man—they surpass the understanding of the average laborer to-day. The toilers of the world have been so busy doing the world's work that they have had no time to think about rights, and with only the dull and monotonous round of labor, multitudes of them are to-day totally ignorant of all questions touching human rights. Even where the masses have political liberty, they fear to exercise it in a manly and independent way, and life to them has become a condition of leaning on and cringing to the private capitalist who sometimes has the power to give them a job, and at all times has the power to deny them a job. The workers have been too much engrossed with looking for jobs then, to look for their rights and security. So that to-day, while they are "political freemen," they are economic slaves. And they have been made slaves by work—blind, unintelligent, almost hopeless work; work that has bound all the nations of the earth together in a net-work of related interests; work that has mined and molded the resources of nature into forms of beauty and utility and created wealth beyond the dreams of avarice, but work that is without meaning to the workers.

His Eyes Opened At Last

S. Christensen of Berwick, a hard-working, honest Dane, and formerly an employee of the Monmouth potteries, gave me this account of his experience there: "After wheeling those heavy trucks and performing other heavy labor for ten hours I would feel more dead than alive. I would sometimes be too tired to eat my supper, so like a jaded ox I would drop asleep. I was in no condition for thinking or reading; as Markham has said, I was in fact a partner of the ox—and all for a dollar and a quarter a day. I found after a few weeks that the work was undermining my health, and at best I was simply working for a poor living with no margin. So I quit. Had I worked there ten years I would have been no better off, and doubtless broken in health. My experience is only that of thousands of workmen over the country, and this we call 'prosperity.' At last I have my eyes open, and I intend to vote for Debs this fall if I live."—Galesburg Labor News.

Farmers' Review: The present commercial system makes poverty for the many and riches for the few. Therefore, the man who defends the present system stands on the side of the capitalist class, and when you vote the Democratic or Republican ticket you vote for poverty for the many and wealth for the few. This is a class-conscious struggle, and you must either vote for the wealthy few or the poverty masses. Bryan and McKinley stand for the capitalist class and Debs for the working class. Which side are you on?

SOCIALIST FLASHLIGHT TURNED ON CURRENT IDEAS AND EVENTS

From blowing hot on the subject of union and making its columns the vehicle for all the misrepresentation, slander and vilification that the unionists could pour into them, the Coming Nation (which was "for union, too") has again found its normal level, and in its last issue says that Socialists can "vote for the Democratic party if it gives us a good, sound, direct legislation plank" and be "perfectly consistent, honest and patriotic." It also sees that the "way has been left open" by the Republicans "for the Democrats to win the greatest victory that ever graced the laurels of any party" and hopes the Kansas City convention will "rise to the hour"! At the same time its sapient editor is opposed to Socialist parties (although he meddled in a quite ineffectual way in their affairs) and avers that while the paper hopes "to get direct legislation this year from the Democratic party," its interest in the cause of Socialism "has not declined"! Only a little vague and wobbly, perhaps?

The common people of the world who do useful work, love freedom and despise conventional patriotism with its attendant shams and hypocrisy, may take heart and courage from the fact that modern capitalist England had to employ 250,000 men, exclusive of camp followers, doctors and nurses, to thrash less than 40,000 farmers. And, although the job was begun more than eight months ago, it is not yet completed. The English have their hospitals everywhere filled, and the total loss—dead, wounded and sick—numbers at least 50,000 men, or fully 10,000 more than the entire Boer army. The war still drags and there is no gala spirit in England.

The economic power in the State of the Standard Oil Company is measured by two hundred million dollars, and only the working people of the nation, united at the polls to gain control of the government, will ever be able to destroy that power. It will never be done by a "licensing board" administered by democratic politicians from the prairies of Nebraska and the political jungles of New York.

The difference between a "new democracy"—of the Bryan order—and Social Democracy, is the difference between wealth makers with no wealth and wealth makers with all the wealth. A Social Democracy is of necessity a state of economic freedom. Bryanism wants you to be satisfied with "individual liberty"—to steal or commit suicide.

Socialism would, by abolishing production for individual profit, create those social conditions that would contribute to the improvement of the race. It believes in the regeneration of mankind through right generation. It seeks to correct heredity by improving environment. Therefore, it encompasses the welfare of man in all its aspects.

The people might just as well vote for McKinley, imperialism and the Philadelphia splutter of words, as to be hoodwinked by Bryan and the retrogressive democracy which proposes to preserve the present capitalist system of industry—if they can't get sense enough to vote for Debs and a national advance in the direction of freedom.

Socialism would abolish the private ownership of capital (the control of machines which have developed from individual tools by the skill and ingenuity of workmen) and make its use and control in production a social function. All the means of production (which are a social growth) should be socially administered.

Ever thought of the difference between the capitalist and his slave, the workingman? The workingman gives all he can make and takes as little as the capitalist will allow him. The capitalist takes all he can get and gives as little as he must to maintain the slave market.

Stupidity at the bottom has always been as much of a hindrance to progress as selfishness at the "top"—perhaps more. The people will this year have an opportunity to show whether experience with hypocritical political parties controlled by the capitalist class has taught them anything.

The Republican platform declares against foreign immigration. So it does. But Gage, a Republican secretary of the treasury, is arranging to admit thousands of foreign contract laborers over the protest of the immigration commissioners—for the convenience of railroad corporations.

The rich, like the politicians who serve in a servile way the present system because it gives them jobs, thrive on the people's superstitions, and the hoary superstition that the rich must have all the wealth so that they can have all the power has surfeited one man and stripped a million.

The poor are not "blessed," and lack of employment is not a "means of grace."

Unity among the workers, not for domination in a political organization, but for the common ownership of the tools of production (which is a human right), means the triumph of Social Democracy, and that is the goal of the labor movement.

Three sorts of men in every community are commonly opposed to Socialism: Men who skin for a living, men who preach for a living and then who work for a living. The skinners prey, the preachers pray and the workers pay.

The possibility and the necessity of Socialism are demonstrated by the concentration of wealth and the means of production in the hands of a class. It is a condition that is not final and can not endure.

There is nothing under the stars that is not amenable to change, except perhaps the poor, ignorant, deluded Republican workingman who thinks that a Republican platform which is half buncomb and half lies is to be taken seriously.

The Republican platform says "the American government must protect the person and property of every citizen wherever they are wrongfully violated or placed in peril." Just as it did, for example, in the Idaho outrage.

In a society where capitalist and workman merged in the same individual and no single individual had economic power or control over another, Social Democracy would prevail.

Wealth was never produced except by the association of labor with the resources of nature. No combination of mere capitalists has ever produced wealth anywhere.

Capital controlled by society at large would be a means of supplying every human need; in the hands of private owners it is a means of increasing human misery.

What will become of the trusts under Bryan—suppose he were elected? Well, what became of them under Cleveland? Went right on multiplying and expanding, didn't they?

The capitalist ideal is the dominance in the state of those who possess property; the Social Democratic ideal is the dominance of those who create property.

Social Democracy would be an order of the affairs of men administered not by state's men, but by mine's men, farm's men, shop's men—and women.

A commodity is worth the labor cost of producing it. Labor should form the basis of the measure of value, because it is the source of value.

What is the difference between John D. Rockefeller buying you a meal and paying for your education? It's up to you, John Smith.

When you tell us of the humble beginning of the rich, tell the means of their ascension.

A workingman ought to live on a dollar a week—provided he don't care to live long.

The best laws are those that have been outgrown, that society has learned to ignore.

WHAT EDITORS ARE SAYING

The Farmers' Review: The labor unions are discussing the economic question, and the more they discuss the question the faster they travel toward Socialism. The unions of this country must ultimately sustain the same relation to the Socialist movement that they do in Europe. In Germany a large part of the 2,000,000 Socialist votes comes from the trades unions. There is no place the union workers can consistently go politically but to the Socialists.

Galesburg Labor News: Thomas I. Kidd, one of the brightest workers in the trade union movement, said to me a few weeks ago: "I wouldn't remain in this movement twenty-four hours if it were not for its educational work. Trade unionism is at best only a means to an end. The wage system must be abolished. Under any president of any capitalist party so long as the wage system remains labor will receive practically but a subsistence wage; it should and must have all it produces."

Lancaster (Pa.) Tribune: On every hand, when we pick up a leading party paper, we are informed that the great campaign issue is to be the trust. Down with the trust. Our Republican friends tell us that their party is down on the trust. That it has had introduced into congress an amendment to the constitution as the means of dealing with the evil. Yes, and we remember when that same party a few years ago introduced a bill which was passed and is now known as the Sherman anti-trust law. But it did not do any suppressing, and the same party that introduced that, now, by the introduction of the present constitutional amendment, admits that it was a fraud.

THE POOR MAN A SLAVE

A Man in Want or the Dread of Want is Not Free

What chance has the poor man today? Has his condition improved? These are questions not hard to answer.

No man has a chance who hasn't got a job. The circumstances surrounding the poor man have improved, but the conditions are the same.

The conditions are no different today from what they were in the ancient days of white slavery in Greece and Rome. This is indeed a beautiful, a grand country in many ways. It is rich with the spirit of progress and invention, rich by nature, but the poor man's condition is no better than if he were a slave.

All this country has done for him has been to give him a little more elbow room. He has a great, beautiful country to roam over, but he is no better off than—in fact, not as well off as—the slaves of old.

We used fondly to figure the American who earned his bread in the sweat of his brow and voted with his party as a sovereign, and we invited him to regard himself in that light.

Really, however, without the means of livelihood in his own hands, but in the hands of another, he is scarcely the regal shape we figured him. The workingman out of a job can have little joy of his vote, and if he is very poor, if he is not making both ends meet, he can hardly will good to others, the sovereign act of the freeman, because he has none to will.

It is true that he may rebel, that he may renounce his employment when he has one and does not think himself justly paid, but without the means of livelihood he has no chance except to seek some other employment, and this choice is scarcely freedom. He may, of course, become a tramp, and in the loose play of our circumstances he may not suffer more than many others who remain patiently at work.

But, then, it is our circumstances that befriend him, and not our conditions; these are the same for him as the workingman's conditions everywhere.

The only moment of sensible positive political sovereignty for him is that of voting, but in that moment he parts with his sovereignty for a term of months or years, without respect to the men who shall make his laws, judge them and execute them.

He chooses, he elects, he gives, and "the gods themselves cannot resume their gifts," much less a poor devil who has voted with his party and has nothing to eat.

For such a citizen of the freer state liberty can scarcely be said to exist in the sense that it exists for the more fortunate. He cannot choose, he cannot sacrifice himself for others, for he is already sacrificed. He can impart no advantages, for he has none, and he can have none until he has bettered his fortunes. He remains in the savage necessity of self assertion, in the warfare which manifests itself in strikes, riots, mutinies, murders. The poor man knows, if the rich man does not know, that the poorer man has always less liberty than the richer man, just as certainly as that he has less money. If he has not the means of livelihood in his own hands, he cannot come and go when he will, he cannot command his time, he cannot choose the kind of work he will do, as the richer man measurably can. He is often enslaved to hateful and loathsome services for others, such as each should do for himself. Until a man is independent he is not free. As long as he must look to the pleasure or the profit of another man for his living he is not independent. His employer may not mean to oppress him. He may be his oppressor unwillingly, as when his own adversity obliges him to cut down his hiring's wages, but he oppresses him then, however unwillingly, and he oppresses him when he casts him off to seek some other support, not knowing whether he can find it or not. This fact often comes home to the humane employer, especially in the case of hirelings who have served him long and well, and more than any other it tells with the conscience against the whole relation of "hiring and him that hires."

The hiring man may have all those rights which we vainly suppose are the proofs of liberty. He may have the right to speak freely, print freely, pray freely, vote freely; but he cannot manfully use his right, though warranted in it by the constitutions and the statutes of all states, if he is afraid another man may take away his means of livelihood. It is needless to say that the personal equation will have much to do with the character of the event. Many—perhaps most—employers are of a make so noble and of a self-respect so fine that they would abhor to interfere with the constitutional rights of their hirelings, and there are hirelings so brave that they would starve and see their wives and little ones starve before they yielded their rights. But slavery was none the less an evil because most slaveholders were kind and good people or because there was now and then a heroic slave. The man who is in danger of want or even in dread of want is not a free man, and the country which does not guard him against this danger and this dread, or does not assure him the means of livelihood is not a free country, though it may be the freest of all the freer countries.—William Dean Howells.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Although a new branch, Dedham has gone to work, as all new branches should. An open-air meeting was held there in Stone Park on the 24th. Comrade MacCartney gave an interesting address, literature was distributed and the meeting was a complete success.

Representative MacCartney addressed the Rosindale branch on the 26th. Five new members joined the branch at the close of the meeting.

The Social Democratic party of Calhoun County and State of Michigan will hold a mass convention at Battle Creek July 9, 1900, at International Congress Hall for the purpose of organizing the County and electing a county committee. All persons who have or will affiliate this fall with the S. D. P. are cordially invited to attend. Committee.

A good list of new subscribers has been received on the special offer of twenty-six weeks for 20 cents. The offer is still good and as the period will cover the campaign, the comrades are urged to do their level best to increase The Herald's circulation during the next thirty days.

Officers of branches when communicating with headquarters are requested not to omit their street address and branch number. This is necessary owing to the increased correspondence due to new branches and to insure prompt reply from the national secretary.

Thirty loyal branches are now in line in Massachusetts—thirty that take a definite stand against organic unity and are resolved to stand by the result of the referendum. The old Bay State is all right, comrades. She stands pat!

The National Christian Citizenship League has severed relations with the Social Reform Union and is now located in room 64, Metropolitan building, 163 Randolph street, Chicago.

Comrade Eugene Dietzgen, who is now at Falkenstein, Germany, writes us that his health is much improved and is slowly regaining strength. Mrs. Dietzgen has several relations with the S. L. P. and joined the S. D. P.

Nominating petitions for the state and national candidates of the Social Democratic party of Illinois were filed at Springfield last Wednesday, June 27.

W. H. Mills is conducting an interesting and instructive department of Social Democracy in Common Sense, published at Dallas, Texas.

A WORD FROM GERMANY

Editor S. D. Herald: As in November last, I am still against the union proposed by our S. L. P. friends, and now, of course, more than ever.

In the interest of desirable and true union I am opposed to a union that stands for continued discord and disruption. For fear of hurting the successful development of our party, we cannot unite with the members of the S. L. P., whether of the De Leonite or of the anti-De Leonite faction, as long as they give us not the best assurance of having discarded their mischievous tactics, inspired by personal animosity, fanaticism and ignorance of American conditions.

The entire history of the S. L. P., dating back about 25 years, is a continued record of discord and disruption of the pettiest kind; a veritable storm in a teapot, ridiculous and shameful at the same time. But still both factions of the S. L. P. adhere to the same tactics and to the identical spirit of old, of which De Leon is an exceptionally loud representative at present.

I do not question the honesty and sincerity of our S. L. P. comrades, as far as Socialism is concerned, but I condemn their methods as apt rather to delay than to hasten our cause.

Endorsing the action of our N. E. B., I beg to inform you that my wife, Mrs. Anna Dietzgen, has this day severed her connection with the S. L. P. and become a member of the S. D. P.

Yours truly,

Eugene Dietzgen.

PROGRESS IN MONTANA

Comrade P. J. Cooney of Butte, Mont., was among the visitors at headquarters during the week. He is enthusiastic in his predictions for the future of the party and as to the outlook in his own state, he said:

"The movement in Montana is meeting with gratifying success. The Anaconda or Amalgamated Company is in full control of the Republican machine, while the Democratic party is torn asunder. There are now two Democratic state conventions, one owned by Clark, the other by Daly, manager of the Anaconda Company. The shrewd politicians claim that Daly's fight in the Democratic party is only a bluff and that he intends to win through the Republican party. The Populist party is looking forward to what they call a union of the reform forces. They are praying and hoping for the financial support of Hinz, to whom they will give the judicial candidates. Amid all this, the Social Democrats are pursuing the even tenor of their way. As far as they are concerned there will be no 'union of reform forces,' and the labor men who are Social Democrats will not be used as a tail to the Populist kite. This week the branch at Butte is sending out a state organizer who will remain in the field until the close of the campaign. A state convention will be called, presidential electors and a full state ticket nominated. We hope by that time to have an organization in every county in the state. To the comrades outside of Butte we would say that no effort will be spared in pushing the work. Let each branch do all it can towards assisting the organizer in every possible way, and this fall we will poll a vote that will be a paralyzer."

OREGON STATE CONVENTION

The election just held in Oregon has shown the Socialists of the state the hopelessness of political reforms emanating from either the Republican, Democratic or fusion parties. Our only hope is in ourselves and an earnest effort to bring about the necessary reforms through the ballot box. For this purpose the Social Democratic party of Oregon will hold a convention in Portland, Ore., on Thursday, July 12, at 7:30 p. m., at the Washington Hotel. Third and Flanders streets, to nominate four presidential electors to be voted for on Tuesday, Nov. 6, 1900. Every branch in the state should send its representative or proxy, and we would respectfully recommend that the four representatives be taken from the four different parts of the state, so that equal representation in area and population be accorded. We urge the immediate formation of branches, so that as large a Socialist representation as possible shall be had.

It is also essential that a state union of the Social Democrats of America be formed and a state executive committee be elected to more effectively advance the cause of Socialism and to transact any business that may properly come before the convention. An early answer is requested. By order of Branch No. 1, S. D. P. A., Portland, Ore.

J. D. Stevens, Chairman.
T. C. Wendland, Organizer.

SOCIALISM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

The recent elections in British Columbia were prolific in many surprises, none, however, created so much consternation in the minds of the old party politicians as the enormous Socialist vote as evidenced by the poll in Vancouver.

For the four seats in Vancouver three labor candidates were nominated, two by the Trades Council and one by the United Socialist Labor Party of British Columbia.

The vote of our comrades was as follows: Joseph Dixon (ind. lab.), 856; E. Williams (ind. lab.), 728; Will McClain (Socialist), 684, as against an average of 1,600 votes polled for the successful candidates. Roughly we polled twenty per cent of the vote cast. If we could have contested all four seats our vote would have been easily twenty-five per cent of total. This is the first time that candidates have been run on a Socialist platform in British Columbia, and if such a showing can be made on the first attempt success is surely near at hand.

In the City Streets

A Chicago daily gives the following account of the eviction of an old woman who has grandsons in the Philippines fighting to maintain the honor of the "land of the free and the home of the brave":

"Mrs. Sarah Elliott, a woman who has lived for more than a century, was found by the police shivering under a tattered blanket in an alley back of Princeton avenue, near Thirty-Seventh street. Born in a peasant hut in Northern Ireland in 1799, the old woman finds herself, after more than 100 years of hardship, a charge of the county at Dunning. Over forty years ago she came to America to escape the fate which overtook her a few days ago at the hands of a Chicago landlord.

"For some time she had lived in a bare room near where she was picked up by the night patrolman. Her daughter, now an old woman, is sick in the county hospital. Her grandsons are soldiers in the regular army fighting in the Philippines. She could not pay her rent and was evicted.

"Despite her age and the recent exposure she has passed through, Mrs. Elliott is surprisingly active and possesses all her faculties. She had been without food or shelter for twenty-four hours when the officer stumbled over her in the alley at the rear of 3722 Princeton avenue. Unable to write to her grandsons of their mother's illness, Mrs. Elliott found her little fund exhausted. She was too proud to beg, and in her helplessness lay down in the alley to suffer. She says her grandsons would send her money to keep her and their mother comfortably if they but knew of their needs. She was taken to the poorhouse yesterday morning."

LABOR IN THE AFRICAN MINES

A pamphlet just published in England gives the following account of Cecil Rhodes' relations to the workmen in the diamond mines:

"There is one thing that an employee of De Beers learns very soon—that is, if he wishes to remain in his employment. It is that the interests and wishes of the company are everything and his own individual interests absolutely nothing. There is, he finds, an organization running through the concern from top to bottom, commencing in the personality of Cecil Rhodes and descending to the most casual drudge who, in utter want of a job of any kind, undertakes the thankless office of a convict guard. The colonial government hires out its native convicts to De Beers; the usual work of a convict guard is to sit for twelve hours a day—from six in the morning till six at night—on an empty paraffin tin, in sun or storm, prohibited from the relaxation of a book or a newspaper, and watch a gang of native convicts as they turn over the diamondiferous soil deposited on the 'floors'—the wide-level spaces where this soil is left to dry and disintegrate in the sun. As in all probability the convict guard has his lodging a couple of miles or more from his 'work,' the twelve hours comes out at very much more like fourteen."

"If the servant of De Beers is employed in one of the mines, it is the same arrangement of twelve-hour shifts, lengthened out by the time occupied in getting to or from the mine, accompanied by the underground risks—no light ones—and the risk of pulmonary disorder resulting from the sudden changes from the close and heated atmosphere of the mine to the cold piercing air of the winter evening at 4,000 feet elevation above the sea level. If he is in the shops or in the electrical department, there are the same hours. And, be it observed, in every department the same atmosphere of repression, suspicion and espionage prevails. No man can safely trust another. An insubordinate or complaining word carelessly spoken, and in all probability the next time the utterer goes for his wages he is met with the fatal yellow envelope, the symbol of dismissal. There is no appeal; there is no reason given; still less is there any prospect of a recommendation to another employer. He has sinned against De Beers, and that is enough."

How much like a description of labor conditions in the United States it all reads.

THE CHINESE BOXER CASE

The New York Tribune tells of the abuses practiced by the German and Belgian railroad builders in China, which, it says, are in part accountable for the present Boxer uprising. That paper says:

The portion through which the tracks were being laid was one of the most densely populated in all China, and on the earth, for that matter. The people have a desperate struggle for existence.

Every foot of the land not occupied for sleeping is cultivated. It is a battle for life from one end of the year to the other. Everything is utilized in the fight against starvation. Twigs and particles of vegetation are converted into edibles. The country is divided into little farms, and these are cultivated until one cannot find a bare piece of ground. The subsistence of the families depends upon these efforts. The very life blood of the children and their parents awaits daily the portion which the earth will yield.

In some parts cultivation of foodstuffs is impossible. There are gravel hills and barren places where even a hardy burdock could not live. And there the dead are buried, for the people cannot spare the fresh ground—the good earth—for even the remains of those who have carried on the fight and have died in the midst of their struggling compatriots. But the natives labored on, and each year brought its toll and its crying children, until finally the railway magnates sent their engineers and workmen. It was through this crowded country where an inch of ground is worth a life that the companies began to lay their tracks.

Indifference was shown to the rights of the people. Across the farms the tracks were placed. Where houses interfered with the work the houses had to come down. Even villages were burned, it is said; even crops were destroyed, and the natives stood mute and watched the depredations with their souls slowly swelling to an indignant protest. Supplies were seized that the workmen might be fed and the natives starved; labor was sometimes impressed.

But there came a time when the cord of silent contemplation broke. There were meetings—resentful sessions—and then came the mysterious "Boxers," organized, many say, to resist and revenge the outrages which had been heaped upon them.

THE SITUATION IN ITALY

No elections have ever been more exciting, more important both politically, economically and socially, than those which have just taken place in Italy. Monarchy has received a serious check there. The good and honest citizens have had to struggle with very unequal arms against the sanguinary and wicked band of bankrupts who have not only weakened the nation, and enslaved a whole people, but have also dishonored and debased them abroad. Socialists, Republicans, Radicals and even some Monarchists who are still honest, have all combined to fight against the stupid brutalities of Pelloux. For the last two years Pelloux has dragged the Italian people, which will one day awaken. Tears have never given bread to a nation, and much less liberty. Nations—the whole of history proves it—have only got prosperity and liberty by fighting, even though at first defeated. The oppressor will not give way to speeches, but he will to force. Force keeps him in power, and by force he must be expelled. Pelloux sought to enslave the Italian people because force alone keeps the monarchy in power. The Revolutionary party and the Extreme Left must act together and then they will triumph, and this is why D'Annunzio joined the Extreme Left. We must be ready sooner or later to fight. Pelloux had 300 deputies on his side out of 500; but he wanted a larger majority, and so he dissolved parliament. He was reckless in breaking the law, in dissolving municipalities and in doing other revolutionary acts. The country answered him by returning Socialists and Republicans in Lombardy, in Piedmont, in Romagna, in Tuscany, in Venetia, in Umbria and at Palermo; at Messina and at Naples opposition candidates were returned. It is the beginning of the end, and Pelloux will have either to submit or to resign, as Gambetta said to Mr. Mahon, "Va fuori d'Italia," or, in English, "Get away." That is the answer of Italy. Who is to succeed him? Is it Crispi, the murderer of the Sicilians? Is it Rudini, the murderer of the Milanese? Is it Sonnino? Is it Zanardelli? Is it Giolitti? It does not matter, for Italy is moving towards a new birth, and this is seen by all, even by our opponents. As she has gained this great victory let her go on valiantly towards the social republic.—Amilcare Cipriani, in La Petite Republique.

JOHN MORLEY AND SOCIALISM

The following interesting item is taken from the I. L. P. News of London:

"The fury which Mr. Morley's attitude towards the South African war has excited in the bulk of the Liberal Capitalist as well as the Tory press, has been perceptibly inflamed by the few words that fell from him concerning Socialism and Socialists in the peroration of his recent address at Oxford. As Mr. Morley is usually very careful in the phrasing of his statements, and as reference to his opinions on Socialism have been frequent in the past and will probably be no less frequent in the future; it may be well to put on record his exact words. After strongly arraigning the Imperialist policy he went on to say:

"The day when the Liberal party forsakes its old principles—I don't call them catchwords or shibboleths—of peace, economy and reform, the Liberal party will have to disband and to disappear. And who will take its place? The Socialists will take its place. My friend here on the left, Dr. Spence Watson, knows that I stood year after year with my back to the wall against the Socialists, not because I did not respect the fervor of the men, but because I did not sympathize to my very heart's core with their pity for the toilers' lot, or with their resolution to make the toiler more intelligent and his home more secure, but because I thought, and think, their means were ill chosen, would do mischief to the character of the individual and would handicap us in the struggle, the vital struggle, for an industrial position, upon which the lot of the toiler depended as much as the lot of the capitalist. [Hear, hear.] But really, if I were unfortunately called upon to choose between the Socialist and the Militarist, with all his random aims, his profusion of the national resources, his disregard for the rights and the feelings of other people, I declare to you that I consider the Socialist's standards are higher and his aims are not any more wild. [Cheers.] The Liberal party will not disband. [Cheers.] I for one am enormously encouraged by what I perceive to be the temper of this very important gathering."

"Referring to this part of Mr. Morley's speech the special correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, who was present during its delivery, remarks, 'In a series of very careful phrases Mr. Morley made a curious and rather puzzling offer of reconciliation to the Socialists. It was certainly not very cordial or gracious, especially as he passed rapidly from it and almost instantly ended his speech. But the offer is there, and the rapprochement has a curious analogy across the channel in the alliance between M. Waldeck-Rousseau and M. Millerand. Will it go further here?'"

"We confess we do not discern in Mr. Morley's statement that suggestion of an alliance or rapprochement which so strikingly impressed the correspondent of the Manchester Guardian. The declaration by Mr. Morley is, we believe, a perfectly sincere expression of an intellectual issue in his mind. He would preferably, we have no doubt, as a matter-alike of conviction and inclination, were the choice compelled upon him, range himself on the side of the Socialists rather than on the side of the Commercial and Military Imperialists."

"But either eventually would, it is evident, be a Hobson's choice to him. Towards neither Socialism nor the new Imperialism would he willingly be drawn, but of the two evils he would prefer Socialism as the lesser one. Even as a matter of compulsory opportunism we doubt if Mr. Morley contemplated for a moment any probable rapprochement with the Socialists."

"Mr. Morley, we regret to think neither looks upon the plight of the Liberal party as sufficiently hopeless, or upon the position of the Socialist party as sufficiently hopeful to feel persuaded that an alliance between the extreme Radicals and the Socialists is either a possible or desirable contingency."

William Morris, Craftsman and Socialist

William Morris, "poet, artist, manufacturer and Socialist," author of "The Earthly Paradise," was proudest, it is said, of the title, "craftsman." His life-work was directed toward the realization of Ruskin's idea that "art is man's expression of his joy in labor." Francis Tiffany writes in The New World: "Through and through he deplored and hated that fatal divorce between the mechanic and the artist, the toiling hand and the creative brain, to which he traced back the source of all our modern woes—a divorce, he insisted, ruinous alike to master and to man, to designer and to his human tool, to art and to all native common joy in it."

"Here, then, lay the root characteristic of the man, and out of it instinctively grew all his theories, esthetic and social, all the herculean toil of his life. A roundly fashioned man all through, his muscles craved their stint of work as consummation as his brain, and palpable sense of the reaction bred of the wrestle with rough-and-ready matter was as needful to his fullest joy as lying off dreaming on any heights of Parnassus. Nothing short of this divine unity of soul and sense meant to him the earthly paradise, the kingdom of heaven on earth, and never till it was restored once again to the modern world would society cease to be a chaos of ugliness, brutality, discord, and hate. Blunt, brutish human tools on the one side, supersensitive esthetic weaklings on the other, this summed up to him the outcome of the modern caste-divisions, of the hideous divorce between brain and hand, of the limitation of art to an emasculating luxury for the idle and too often vicious."

ORGANIZATION WANTED IN EVERY STATE OF THE UNION

California Socialists

Socialists resident in California and not members of the Social Democratic party are requested to communicate with John Carter, 929 Twenty-second street, San Francisco.

Oregon Socialists, Attention

You are requested to communicate with J. D. Stevens, Box 204, Portland, organizer for the S. D. P., with a view to instituting branches of the party in your community. The future belongs to Socialism. Lend a hand and get your state thoroughly organized.

Iowa Socialists

All reformers living in Iowa who are interested in the Social Democracy are requested to communicate with the undersigned. By unanimous vote of the S. D. P. branches of the state I have been made the party organizer for the state. I desire the name of every Socialist in Iowa. A. W. Ricker, Lone Tree, Iowa.

Arizona Socialists

In every community should correspond with M. J. Casper, Box 178, Globe, Tucson, Ariz. We have plans for keeping organizers in the field to organize branches in every town in Arizona before November; 500 Socialists pledging 25 cents per month each will do it. Don't miss it—write at once.

North Dakota Socialists

Socialists residing in North Dakota and desiring to organize for effective propaganda work in that state are requested to correspond with Math. Eldness, Towner, N. D.

Michigan Socialists

All Social Democrats and all unattached Socialists residing in Michigan are requested to write at once to Henry Ramsey, 84 Railroad street, Battle Creek, Mich., and thus aid in placing a Social Democratic state ticket in the field this fall.

Southern California, Attention

All Socialists in the seven southern counties of Southern California should now get to work and so far as possible form branches in every voting precinct. To further this end communicate at once with James T. Van Rensselaer, 1618 Toberman street, Los Angeles, Cal.

Attention, Nebraska

Persons living in Nebraska and accepting the principles of Socialism are requested to communicate with T. A. Edwards, 3220 California street, Omaha, with a view to the organization of branches of the Social Democratic party.

Montana Socialists

All unattached Socialists in Montana please communicate with J. F. Fox, 71 E. Park street, Butte, for the purpose of furthering Social Democratic propaganda.

To Texas Socialists

For purpose of state organization, the Bonham Social Democratic branch requests that every Socialist in Texas who reads this notice, will please send name and address to the undersigned. Please attend to this at once. W. E. Farmer, Bonham, Texas.

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man. As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements, for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

THE TORTURES OF HELL IN A STEEL TRUST PLANT

Men Killed by the Heat of a Fiery Furnace and the Foreman
Discharged Because he Showed Mercy

The campaign orators will soon begin to tell you that "Socialism means slavery," and that to "retain your freedom and independence" you must vote the Republican or Democratic ticket and continue to maintain our beautiful competitive system. You voting kings will be told again and again that you are free and unhampered individuals, who cannot be coerced or enslaved and that you have no masters! Read this, ye "freemen"!

The newspapers of Chicago have been printing some stories about a labor difficulty in the Illinois Steel Company's plant at South Chicago. Here is what the Tribune had to say about it this morning:

"The feeling of unrest among the employees of the Illinois Steel Company has now somewhat subsided. The crowd of men who gathered in South Chicago saloons on Thursday night and plotted mischief was not visible during the day, and the police expect no trouble for them. All dynamite owned by the company has been carefully guarded and its whereabouts is kept secret from the excited men. A strong force of private detectives and policemen is on guard at the mills, and the force in blast furnace No. 4, where the trouble on Wednesday night occurred, is under surveillance.

"There appears to be no dissatisfaction visible among the employees of the company who are not connected with the blast furnace, and the force of 300 policemen and detectives is considered well able to cope with the 40 men employed in the blast furnaces. All of these men are not disaffected, however.

"The rumor that several hundred men were imprisoned within the gates of the company for two days proves to be false. The men were kept inside the gates from Wednesday evening until 6 o'clock on Thursday morning without being given food, but they were allowed to leave after they had worked twelve hours."

Other papers tell of the "hot reception" that will be meted out to the "malcontents" in case they "attack the works."

One would think that a bunch of Chinese Boxers were in South Chicago waiting for a chance to burn the steel trust's mill and massacre all peaceful citizens.

Here is the story of the way the "trouble" started. It is the "other side." There is always "another side," but it seldom gets printed.

Listen to the other side:
Jack Roedder is foreman of blast No. 4 at the steel trust's South Chicago plant. Under him was a big gang of men. Their work is the hardest and the hottest in all the great mill. Their wages are of the same generous proportions generally allotted to workmen by trusts.

On Wednesday, the Fourth of July, Independence day, the trust didn't celebrate. Instead it sent its white slaves into the furnace-like rooms and drove them on to toil.

The hot wave was on. The air was stifling. Other people, enjoying a holiday, could barely keep alive. The white slaves of the trust toiled on. Finally one fell to the hot floor, and then a second dropped like an ox in his place.

They were carted away to the trust's hospital, and there they died. They are John Leach of 9142 Mackinaw avenue and Andrew Cushman, 8500 Mackinaw avenue.

The other men in the gang gasped in agony, and finally Roedder could drive them no longer; he would drive them no longer.

"Get out into the air, boys," he cried. "Take a five-minute rest in the yard." Gratefully the men filed out, and then came Superintendent J. W. Maket. He called to Roedder angrily:

"Why aren't your men at work? What are they loafing there for?" Roedder explained that two men had been fatally prostrated and that the others could not stand the strain any longer. They would work overtime and make up the five-minute breathing spells.

"Get 'em to work," was the trust superintendent's answer. "We've got to get this work out, and never mind the men."

Roedder protested and was treated to instant dismissal. "Go to the office and get your time," shouted Maket.

Roedder went to the office; got his pay and made his way to the entrance in the great stockade—the stockade that surrounds the trust's plant and keeps everybody from seeing how the blood of men is coined into gold. Roedder went to the gate, and there he found twenty-four of his "boys" clustered like frightened sheep.

They were defying the trust! The great thing which they hated and feared and which they felt held their lives and the lives of their wives and babes in its cruel hands.

They were defying it, but they must show their love and appreciation for the man who dared to take their part. When Roedder walked out—discharged for being humane—twenty-four men walked out with him.

That was the strike. The detectives, perhaps, were called. Perhaps inside the stockade the cases of Winchester were opened and boxes of cartridges broached. The Tribune says the trust's store of dynamite was double guarded.

What is the trust doing with dynamite? It won't tell.

City police, paid by taxpayers, were called to protect the trust's stockade against the twenty-five men.

The trust feared that the story might spread so, having gotten the twenty-five men out, the stockade gates were swung shut and workmen were made prisoners for twenty-four hours, though, the trust explains, they were only compelled to work twelve hours. The imprisoned men got no food, but that was to teach them what to expect if they should decide to stand by the men who walked out with Roedder.

Within forty-eight hours at least fifteen men were prostrated by the heat in the works. None was allowed to go home or to send word outside the stockade. They were hauled to the trust's hospital.

That is what has happened at South Chicago. There is no strike.

There is something else. The noble and "independent American workman" is not a "wage slave." Oh, no! Only the deluded Socialists refer to him as such. The gifted and highly paid Republican and Democratic orator will give him the same old "jolly" about the "dignity of labor" and the "independence" of the laborer, and the intelligent working mule will forget the above if he reads it, and vote the ticket of his master next November.

Socialism would give the steel works and all other industries to the workers, and they could choose their own superintendent, and fix their own hours of labor, but that would be "slavery," you know! If you really want to be Free Men, vote for Eugene V. Debs and the Social Democratic party. F. R.

INTERNATIONAL NOTES

The French Socialists and Trade Unionists have every reason to be gratified with the work performed by M. Millerand, the Socialist minister of commerce and industry, says Fred Brocklehurst in the Clarion. By the law Millerand-Collard of the 30th March last he has reduced the hours of labor to 11 per day in all establishments employing men and women, with the promise of further reduction to 10 per day four years hence. He has pleased the Council of Labor on a democratic basis, and nominated M. Jaures to a seat thereon. In his presidential address to the opening session he informed the members of the council that their duty would be that of furnishing authoritative information to the legislature, and of suggesting the line of progress in labor matters. In a speech delivered in the Chamber of Deputies a few days ago he declared that the dominant idea of his administration was the development of trade union organizations. The work people employed in the postoffice have passed resolutions thanking him for reducing their hours of labor, increasing their salaries and granting them other benefits and reforms. His latest act has been the establishment of baths for the telephonists, with the promise that if the plan succeeds they will be provided for postmen and other minor officials as well. This is a splendid record of service. It has disarmed the criticism of those of Millerand's colleagues in the chamber who originally opposed his acceptance of the portfolio of commerce and industry.

At a meeting of the British Electric Traction company, recently held, the chairman, Sir C. Rivers Wilson, stated that the company was concerned in the development of fifty-seven companies; fifty-three were for tramways and light railways, and probably some were undertaken for the supply of electric light and power. They had one omnibus company, one electric launch company, one company recently formed for developing land in the neighborhood of the electric works, and one electric power company. Of the 53 tramways and light railways 31 were in operation and working at a profit, six were in course of construction, and orders for 15 had been recently granted. The 31 in operation comprised a length of 200 miles. Of these 50% were worked by steam, 73% by horse, 62% by electric traction, and 19% were in process of conversion to electric traction. Six undertakings in course of construction measured over 30 miles, 15 new undertakings authorized would measure 104 miles, and when completed this company would be interested in or control 350 miles of tramway and light railway lines. The number of shareholders was 1,800 and debenture-holders 300.

Owing to the imperial censure upon the Russian press, and the difficulties which surround the spread of information respecting Democratic movements in the empire governed by the knout, we are only just getting to know what happened in Russia on May Day. In St. Petersburg, the workers' committee distributed 5,000 copies of a proclamation addressed to the working men of the city. Sixty persons were imprisoned for taking part in this act. Moscow and Kiev also issued proclamations inviting the workers to celebrate the first of May. The working men of Rostov, on the River Don, printed bills and pasted them on the walls demanding freedom of combination, the liberty of the press, electoral reforms, a universal eight-hours day, suppression of overtime, compulsory insurance, the liability of employers for accidents, etc. In Ekaterinosaw, the authorities prevented the holding of a demonstration by imprisoning a large number of persons. Fifteen thousand workers held a demonstration in Varsovie and came into collision with the troops. Demonstrations took place in other towns and many arrests were made.

Mr. Jaures has carried a resolution in the French Council of Labor in favor of a special study being made of the question of industrial arbitration. The Socialists in the Chamber of Deputies have carried a resolution in favor of compulsory arbitration. M. Jaures in a long article on the subject lays down the proposition that it is possible, even before we have overturned the capitalist regime, to reduce, or almost to reduce to vanishing point, the causes of conflicts between capital and labor. He says that arbitration substitutes the regime of discussion for the arbitrary power of capital.

The following are the professions of the Belgian Socialist deputies: Fifteen are workmen, three are barristers, two are professors, two are shopmen, two are managers of co-operative stores, two are schoolmasters, two are doctors, two are journalists, one is a foreman, and one is a manufacturer.

THE SPREAD OF SOCIALISM AMONG THE MIDDLE CLASS

The Pressure of Capitalist Development Forcing them to See the Terrible Injustice and Wrong of Present System

By a Chicago Business Man

At the present time ideas favorable to Socialism are rapidly spreading among that class of people which is usually known as the middle class. The cause of this is not far to seek. Keen competition, resulting in the concentration of all business enterprises in the hands of the few, has steadily and rapidly reduced the incomes of the middle class, until multitudes who once considered themselves wealthy and independent now find themselves, even in times of greatest business activity, reduced to a condition in which they are obliged to practice the most rigid economy in order to avoid becoming hopelessly in debt.

The effect of the great department stores upon the small retail business men is so well marked that it no longer excites comment. Miles of streets in the great cities are filled with vacant stores where formerly were prosperous retail dealers. And these stores either stand empty or are rented for purposes which enable the occupants to pay only a trivial rent. Capital is so plentiful, and there is so little advantageous use for it, that only the possessors of large fortunes can live upon the small amount of interest derived from their investments. In Chicago thirty years ago money easily brought 10 per cent per annum, where now it brings but 3 or 4 per cent. Small manufacturers are a thing of the past in all the staple industries, and with a very few exceptions only possessors of large capital can start in a manufacturing business with any hope of financial success.

The destruction wholly or in part of the incomes of the great middle class of business men and small real estate owners and investors disastrously affects professional men, doctors, dentists, preachers and the parasites of the middle class, diminishing their incomes and reducing them to poverty.

The smaller business men, being forced by competition to enter into trusts and other coalitions of capital, soon find themselves frozen out by their larger co-conspirators, and see their property swallowed up by those whose superior "business ability" enables them to do it.

Contemporaneously with this decline of the middle class has arisen the great capitalist, whose display of wealth makes the middle class man feel like a pauper. The palaces, yachts, establishments and unbounded luxury of the great capitalist tend to make the middle class man inquire into the means by which this great wealth was obtained; and it is often found that honest exertion, unaccompanied by fraud or wrongful oppression, was the least factor in its acquisition.

The arbitrary raising of prices on nearly all commodities, making the cost of living higher, has also greatly excited the middle class. The already dwarfed incomes of this class are thus still further lessened by this increase in the cost of living.

Notwithstanding this diminution of income of the middle class, taxation has greatly increased of late years. Extravagance and corruption in government have greatly increased, and greater forces of police and militia have become necessary to preserve order. Useless wars are also being prosecuted, and nations are increasing their armies and navies to prevent each from flying at the throats of others in a struggle for commercial advantages. All this increases taxation.

All these causes have aroused the fears of the middle class; and with the arousal of their fears for their own future comes an aroused conscience. The members of this class now begin to see the terrible injustice and wrong, moral as well as economic, of the present capitalist system, and, casting about for a remedy, have had their attention called to Socialism.

Socialism, long a bugbear to the middle class when that class was prosperous, is now beginning to be looked upon by it as a means of rescuing the smaller bourgeoisie from threatened destitution. The works of Edward Bellamy, "Looking Backward" and "Equality," have been largely instrumental, in connection with changed economic conditions, in working this revolution of ideas among this class, although other books have also had an influence in that direction.

The writer's attention has lately been forcibly called to this spread of Socialist ideas among the middle class by certain experiences in the Eastern states. Riding for a day on a Pullman car, the writer met two gentlemen, one a lawyer and the other a merchant, who, of their own accord, began to advocate Socialism, and upon being informed that the writer had been a Socialist for many years, they expressed their satisfaction. Again, stopping at the house of a friend in a large Eastern city, the writer again encountered two gentlemen occupying responsible positions in large business concerns, both of whom announced themselves Socialists; and one of them stated that one of his employers also was an ardent Socialist. They further said that there were many others of their acquaintance, both men and women, who entertained the same ideas. Again, the writer met and talked to an eminent engineer, drawing a considerable salary, who spoke favorably of Socialism and expressed his hope of its realization. All these persons, except perhaps the one last mentioned, broached the subject without any suggestion from the writer.

The immense power of aggregated wealth threatening to completely control the nation, to abolish the middle class and reduce them to practical slavery seems to have excited almost beyond measure people who are even now well-to-do.

Political demagogues will in the present campaign use this fact to get votes for their respective parties. But neither the Republican nor the Democratic party has any weapons in its political armory which can possibly be used to combat the evils which threaten society from the great aggregations of wealth. Socialism alone has the only weapons which can be used for that purpose.

Socialist Argument Irresistible

P. D. Bingen of Dallas, Texas, writes to the New York Journal on the extravagant rates paid for carrying the mail, and while denying that he is a Socialist, makes a point or two very clear. He says:

"I am not a Socialist; but a believer in individuality in government, the man above the state. Mr. Ingalls' recent article, like everything he writes, is fine in words and contains some argument, but is not above criticism. He cites the excessive rates paid by the government for carrying the mails. Haven't the Socialists the best of this fact? It results because the government does not do the work itself as in the delivery of individual mail, but lets it out on contract, the very act to which the Socialists object."

"The railroads get the extravagant rates by corrupting the government officials, from the lawmakers down. If the government did this work, employing those who do it, as with the carriers, this opportunity would not be presented. And this cause and effect exist everywhere, especially in cities. And it has become what has well been termed 'commercialism.'"

"The opportunity presented to make money out of government contracts is the incentive to bribe-giving. The Socialists say where this incentive does not exist the public official is not debauched nor the public treasury looted. And this is an argument of force, and if the laws do not soon prevent it or public officials become more honest it will become irresistible."

"The Socialist ranks are being increased now by people who are coming to believe that a government can better employ those who are to serve it than stockholders of a corporation who act for their own interest, and many good people believe that if all those who are in office and in the employ of the government were not allowed to vote, there would be less corruption and better service rendered than seems to result from letting out by contract the performance of public duties."

"All politics is fast becoming intensely 'practical' and business-like, and the good citizen who does not perform his duty on convention and election day casts half his influence and vote for the other side."

San Diego Chieftain: A person who has been "born and raised" an idiot generally takes great pride in being a fool. The years may come and go, conditions may change, war pestilence and poverty may threaten society, but the idiot will continue to be a fool just the same. Environment or changed conditions cannot effect his mind and he is not responsible. We wonder whether some of our old party friends who boast of their political heredity can see any point in this.

The Herald will be sent to any address in the United States 26 weeks for 20 cents.

BUILD AND GO FORWARD

"Blest be the tempest and kind the storm that drives us nearer home."

The differences within the Social Democratic Party arising from the effort to unite with the S. L. P. emphasises the fact that Socialism needs a more compact organization of its working force in America.

What we need is practically a bullet-proof organization, one that can confront any condition, deal with any question, and be its own "Savior." Of course we have comrades on both sides of this question, who feel that it is their divine mission to "save the movement." But those who understand the historic development of the movement and appreciate what is being done for Socialism without as well as within the organization realize that the organization is the important factor; not the number of its members, but the harmony and efficiency of its working force, and the marvelous growth of the party since the convention is evidence of the splendid work they are doing. New branches are being organized, new members admitted, and on every hand there is evidence of life and progress.

The party is just entering its first real battle; much depends on the showing made for our presidential candidate, and the comrades who are sincere in their efforts to advance Socialism will have no time to croak or inclinations to whine. Let us have united action now—the united party will come without a fight if you are ever ready for it; but now there is work, earnest work to be done, and the comrades should join in one supreme effort to strengthen and build the party.

"The duty of the springs and streams everywhere should be to babble forth the word Forward."

Sylvester Keliher.

Others, I doubt not, if not we, The issue of our toils shall see; Young children gather as their own The harvest that the dead have sown The dead—forgotten and unknown.

PROSPERITY ABOVE PERSONS

Very much of the talk now prevalent in defense of property was used as an argument by men who framed the constitution and founded this government. It was asserted that "property is certainly the principle object of society." From the beginning of this republic, so-called property has possessed rights superior to those of persons. And we have evolved up to that point where the property of a thief gets more consideration than the man who creates the property. The constitution of the United States once pledged the federal government to the protection of property in men with a black skin. But we have advanced from that position, and now protect monopolies of those things which men, black and white, must have to sustain life. Under the old policy it was the property-holder's interest to care for his property; under the new his only interest is in the things which cost him nothing and he did not make, but which law guarantees him the full enjoyment of, and punishes the man who protests against the injustice. The new, like the old, is slavery, and the law now, as then, protects the man with property.

ABOUT BRYAN'S PLATFORM

Referring to the Kansas City platform it will be well for workingmen to ask themselves a few questions. For instance:

If Porto Rico were given a government such as the United States has, that is, a government administered by capitalists in the interest of property, how much better off would the working class be in Porto Rico?

If the Filipinos are given the same political liberty we enjoy in the United States and are denied economic freedom, will their condition be improved, and is expansion and the "extension of the republic's influence" under the flag without freedom to work and to live any better than out-and-out imperialism?

If the trusts and corporations should be "protected in all their rights and legitimate [legalized] interests," what more has the republican party ever done and so long as the rights of trusts are respected will not the wrongs of workingmen go unredressed?

If the proposed department of labor were created and a capitalist politician put in charge of it, with a seat in the cabinet along with the others of the same kidney, how would that tend to the elevation of American workingmen under the wage system?

ARE YOU WORKER, BEGGAR OR THIEF?

What are you doing on God's fair earth and task-garden, where whosoever is not working is begging or stealing?—Carlyle.

Socialists combat the orthodox opinion that each one is responsible for his own condition, good or bad, and while recognizing inequalities of individual talents and capacities, contend that the possession of talent and capacity by the individual is something that society bestows.

The individual, of whatever ability or skill, is a debtor to society, not alone for all he has, but for all he is capable of doing. Socialists contend that if all were workers and rendering their best service to society, the workingman would not, could not, be poor.

The poverty and wretchedness of the workingman originate in a system which gives the highest awards to those who are not working. The man who lives on interest is not working. The man who lives on rent is not working. The man who does not do a lick of intellectual or manual labor on a railroad, and yet draws dividends from the road, is not working.

All forms of income that result from no labor on the part of those receiving them are unjust and immoral. By far the larger portion of the "earnings" of business go to those who do not work. Men do not beg for interest, rent and dividends; they do not work for them.

Whosoever is not working (manually or intellectually) is begging or stealing. Stealing is theft. Are you a worker, beggar or thief?

The Socialists in the Italian chamber are going to bring a bill proposing to repeal the duties on corn in Italy.

SOCIALISM THE CIVILIZER

You may go on believing that the democracy of the world, which has destroyed kings and overthrown empires, will go down before porcine aristocrats, oily monopolists and swagbilly politicians, but the people are thinking; they are coming to see, and

Some day, by laws as fixed and fair
As guide the planets in their sweep,
The children of each outcast heir
The harvest-fruits of Time shall reap.

Time will destroy all your speculations of profit in human industry and confirm the "wild and woolly" notions of many a simple Socialist whom you affect to despise. True democracy—political and educational—carries us inevitably forward to the co-operative commonwealth. Time often flies too swiftly to be marked and in its flight shows slight regard for our fictions of opinion. At the beginning of this century human beings were sold with oxen in the streets of St. Petersburg, and buyer and bought thought it was a fixed and permanent order of the universe. Today the press, though secret and hunted by the police, has splintered the auction block, and the czar has to reckon not so much with brute force and dynamite as with the truths and logic of Socialism. Socialism civilizes the world by degrees in advance of its final triumph. It was the seer, Emerson, who said five years before black slavery was abolished that it would not be done in the next generation. When you speculate on what time will do, don't be so sure. Nothing is fixed.

SOCIALIST FLASHLIGHT TURNED ON CURRENT IDEAS AND EVENTS

Admitting for the moment (what is not true) that there is employment for all men who want it, what kind of employment is it? When a man has found work under capitalism, what has he really done? He has simply placed himself in a position where he can procure a small part of what he produces merely to sustain life. But even the opportunity to sustain life involves the transforming of all the energy he acquires from his pittance of a wage into more surplus which the capitalist appropriates. Meanwhile the preacher tells him to love his fellow-men, in the hope of a blessed future beyond the grave—right at the time, too, when his stomach is empty and his employer's is full, and when his torn and tattered coat prevents him attending "divine" service to see his well-groomed master "in the midst of them."

Have you ever thought what a real comfort the machine must be to the capitalist employer who owns it? The machine was never known to join a union, or ask for a day off, or go on a spree or go to sleep, or grow weary, or organize a strike, or babble about its "rights," or be moved by "sympathy." It never "dreams," is always active, industrious and obedient. There is only one drawback, one source of annoyance to the capitalist, and that is that while there are machines, there are also human beings with stomachs to feed, backs to clothe and heads to shelter. What a paradise for capitalists this would be were there no stomachs! Would it?

Did you notice how the Cuban scandal and embezzlement had been smothered by the McKinley administration? Do you know why? The criminals (friends of Hanna), it is said, have been "exposed," and there it ends. "Thou shalt not steal" is understood nowadays to apply to the poor man who is hungry, has no money, can't find work and takes bread to sustain life; it has no application to the rich who take advantage of a system which permits them to separate the laborer from the means of gaining a living and takes from him three-fourths of what he produces, when employed, under an iniquitous wage system. Law is not for the Neelys and Rathbones, who "stand in" with the Hannas and McKinleys.

The taxed man raises corn, the taxing man raises corruption; the taxed man raises wheat, the taxing man raises war; the taxed man raises potatoes, the taxing man raises perquisites; the taxed man raises hogs, the taxing man raises hell; the taxed man raises sheep, the taxing man uses the "sheep"; the taxed man improves the land, the taxing man is ruining the land. Hurrah for McKinley and the "best government on earth!"

Modern capitalism has created an environment for the millions of the world's workers that breeds disease and culminates in death. Its apologetic writers, looking at surface manifestations only, lay the blame of individual failure, mental deformity or immorality upon the suffering victims themselves. They are wholly unmindful of the fact that the capitalist is chiefly responsible for the depravity and misery in the world.

An advertiser in one of the city daily papers wants "clerks for the country," who must be good penmen and "able to endure hard living," at low wages. This is a fascinating opportunity for young college graduates desirous of rising in the world—plenty of work, hard living and small pay—it is under similar conditions that every millionaire laid the foundation of his fortune. So it is!

If the young man with small capital undertakes to invest it for "profit," the chances are as ten to one against him. His own experience, tact, judgment and small resources are not equal to the struggle, and, in spite of his best efforts, his small capital is soon absorbed in the larger one of the capitalist class. This process goes on without intermission, and the people of small means are disappearing wherever the capitalist system holds sway.

Wages are in large degree measured by the necessities of the employing capitalist. If it is necessary for an employing capitalist to maintain his reputation as a philanthropist, he cuts down wages; if necessity obliges him to invest more capital to secure more profits, he cuts down wages. The wants and privations of the workingmen—well, they don't count.

None understand better than Socialists the need of capital to promote human existence and carry on production. And none have as clear a comprehension of the waste of capital under capitalism as Socialists. No Socialist, dead or alive, ever advocated or favored the destruction of capital.

The "union" convention of Pennsylvania, called by the S. L. P. (with the assistance of a paper called Public Ownership) consisted of seventy-one S. L. P.'s and the editor of P. O. Small game that, after the expenditure of so vast an amount of ammunition.

Your power in the state, Mr. Dollaraday, is measured by a single vote. But the power of the Standard Oil company in the state is measured by two hundred million dollars. Not till you throw your vote with the Socialists will your power count against the other.

The poor are equally entitled to the protection of law with the rich; but the rich make the laws, and laws that the rich make never protected the poor. To have a title to protection and be subject to plunder is to be a slave to a delusion.

In his first inaugural address McKinley said: "Legislation helpful to producers is beneficial to all." But in all the legislation enacted since he became president, not a single measure has helped the producers.

Four years ago the wage slaves voted to protect the capitalists; now they are asked to do it again. Every vote cast for a party not opposed to the present system is a vote for capitalists.

The remorseless logic of Karl Marx was directed, not against capital, but against capital privately employed as an instrument to exploit and rule the laborer who creates capital.

Every workingman who would rather build homes for other men to own and get rent for than to build for himself, will vote the Republican or Democratic ticket.

The man who works for wages works for the boss who pays the wages and is a slave; most of the results of the slave's work necessarily goes to the boss.

SELF INTEREST

"Oh, you can't change human nature," is so frequently used in arguments in opposition to socialistic principles. Human nature is as unchangeable as the fixed laws that govern the universe. It is pointed out that human nature has never changed, but that conditions and environments have and are constantly changing; self-interest is the incentive of all action and evolution through which society has and does pass.

History gives us accounts of the warfare of barbarians and the method of treatment of their captives, by being cut up and consumed; following the instinct of self-interest brought out by the struggle for existence, as cannibalism was then highly moral. As these tribes became more numerous and more intelligent and had to depend on the ground for subsistence, they found out that their prisoners could furnish more subsistence by letting them work the land, instead of eating their flesh.

Had human nature changed by doing this? Not at all, the economic system had changed and they were simply following the incentive "self-interest." The prisoners were not asked to consent to this change, but the better condition produced by the captives' labor and produce and so in following their self-interest, cannibalism became immoral, slavery and serfdom highly moral.

Next in line in evolution we come to the feudal lords who claimed the land and every one living on it. Had human nature changed and mankind become more humane? Not at all; the economic system had once more changed, the possessing classes, the feudal lords, acting in self-interest, demanded that production should be carried on in their interest by the people being tied to the land, so that land slavery was highly moral, and the other two immoral.

We now come to the middle ages. A new class began to appear to down the existing class; this was the trading or commercial class, the forerunner of our capitalistic class. These traders handled the product of the free workers and began to extend the existing markets, established factories on a small scale, inducing the workers to co-operate with them to widen the scale, placed the workers in districts, thereby opening the way to individual production. Soon they began to work for the downfall of feudalism.

Did they feel sorry for the serf and his condition? Not much; the main factor in this change, the serf, was not asked at all, the rising capitalist class was simply following as its predecessors have done, its self-interest. Competition was then looked upon and encouraged as the life of trade, only a free worker would be useful for that purpose, work for the cost of production and not be dependent on its master when production ceases. The only way in which this point could be gained was through the abolition of the feudal system, under which the laborer was attached to the land. Finally capital succeeded in overthrowing this system, and in its place was introduced the last stage of slavery for the working class. The incentive of action, self-interest, must in the final struggle end in the interest of the working class.

Thus has the evolution of society changed in the past, not human nature; morals had nothing to do with it; all advancement was in spite of the then existing morals, but steadfastly clung to its self-interest, and all the progress that has been made up till now is selfish progress. In none of these changes or evolutions of society, those most interested, the captives, slave or serf, have not been asked to consent, but the ruling or exploiting class in each case simply following its self-interest, and this has caused a new organization of society.

Through all these evolutions there has been a hard struggle to rule between the classes. Each system contained within itself the germs of the system which would supersede it or destroy it as soon as the time was ripe.

With the commencement of the capitalistic system, the struggle has been narrowed down to the possessing and exploiting class. It is the final struggle and when finished once will usher in a system that will be just and equitable. The capitalistic or ruling class does not contain the germ of any new exploiting class. Human nature has not yet changed, self-interest is the incentive to usher in the new society.

In the economic field stands the trades unions, not yet intelligent enough in their class interest, but fighting along the line of self-interest, as the strikes in the different lines of employment indicate. Sooner or later this struggle will make them conscious of their interest, and this interest is in the political field of Socialism, following the line of self-interest, doing as their exploiters are now doing, control the political field. The leaders of the old parties fear this new party because it is world wide, the potentates of Europe fear and hate it, as they see their downfall in its ascendancy. The entire laboring world will be forced into the ranks of Socialists, simply through self-interest; when this is accomplished, the present system will be overthrown and the co-operative commonwealth established.

Self-interest of the worker dictates that work can and shall be had if wanted, and to receive the full social value for it; this can not be had now, as the capitalist is the legal owner of the means of production and distribution, his self-interest is opposed to that of the laborer. The next great change or evolution in society will come about simply because human nature does not change, but that its incentive, self-interest, will change the present system. Socialists do not propose to change human nature, they simply point out that conditions and environments have been and can be changed, and that self-interest will and has changed them in the past.

JACK POTTS' OBSERVATIONS

A Statement of Facts By a Socialist Workingman Which Appeals to His Class.

I insist that you men who work shall read these lines, and read them carefully. Some of the statistics have been printed before in The Herald, but maybe you didn't pay much attention to them.

Whom do you consider your friends—the men and women who give their lives and nearly all they have to the building up of a real brotherhood, or the rapacious, selfish horde who sacrifice you instead of themselves? Read Kropotkin's passionate "Appeal to the Young," and then tell me if you can be a hog or vote for the hogs: And in order to clear your mind read the following figures and see if they mean anything to you:

Suicides—In 1835, 978; in 1895, 5,750.

Murders—In 1885, 1,808; in 1895, 10,500.

Insanity increased 50 per cent faster than the population between 1860 and 1890.

Wealth per capita—In 1850, $345; in 1890, $974. This looks good if we go no further. But let us look at it from another view: In 1850 the wealth per capita among the workers was $239.50; in 1890 it was only $184—a decrease of $55.50! Who gained what you lost? Look: Wealth of non-workers per capita in 1850, $1,293; in 1890, $8,085! The non-workers gained $6,792 per capita. Figure out, if you can, where prosperity comes in for you.

Remember now, the college fellows admit that the people who work bear the burden of taxation. The workers are in the majority. The business of government should be to care for the interests of the majority. Does our government do this? No. Then what do you think of the college fellows—McKinley and Bryan and all their apologists and "promoters"—who ask you to vote their tickets and thereby "save the country"—for them? Some time ago I asked a first-class lawyer if the Socialist's argument could be refuted, and he promptly replied: "No." And he is a Bryan man! Then the college fellows, knowing these things, must be knaves. They certainly are not fools. Both the old party propositions are as full of holes as a sieve, because they pretend that they will make us all prosperous and yet retain the present throat-cutting, competitive industrial plan. The Socialist's plan is as sound as the much-chased and adored dollar, because he wants to supplant competition with co-operation. You are in the majority. Vote for what YOU want, not for what the capitalist confidence men want.

I was talking to my friend Bill, the molder, the other day. (You know I work for my living, too.) He said he was really a "Socialist at heart," but thought he would vote for Bryan. "Bill," said I to him, "you are going to make a monkey of yourself," and I showed him why. And now he swears he will vote for Debs this fall!

•And Mr. Workingman, there is another thing I want you to notice: Shortly after men turn Socialists they generally begin to be as big fools as I am about working for the cause. They induce their friends to subscribe for Socialist papers. They spend their own money for Socialist literature and for postage to mail it to their friends. They are as enthusiastic as camp-meeting exhorters, day and night, everywhere. Many of these enthusiasts are hard-working men, and they are not running for office, either. There is "nothing in it" for them. Isn't that peculiar? Why do they do it? They have seen a little of the light, that's why! Let me know if you see any disinterested workingman doing such work for either of the old parties this year.

Mr. Workingman, come in out of the wet! The old-party schemers are your friends for revenue only.

Oh, the Commercial Instinct is a fine thing! This rampant, rambunctious "incentive" of mankind is illustrated by the story of Oscar Bock, fourth officer of the Saale, one of the vessels destroyed at Hoboken a few days ago:

"I called to the tugs, 'Save me!' 'How much?' they asked. 'I have no money.' 'Then you might as well be dead,' they said, laughing, and turned away."

The Chicago Evening Post of July 3, in an article commenting on Bock's story and other similar ones, affected to be surprised and shocked—as though our unholy competitive scheme could breed aught but peace and purity and unselfishness!—and ended as follows: "If the stories were true our whole social system, with its religion and morality, would have to be pronounced a hollow mockery."

Dear editorial boy, right now our boasted civilization, with its alleged religion, is a mighty close imitation of a "hollow mockery"! A few more years of "economics without ethics" will put us up against the "real thing." Hurrah for the McHanna and Rockefeller era of rotten national conscience! Hurrah for an age when secular and religious educators smother their consciences and fawn, evade, equivocate and try to poison an industrial system covered with virulent ulcers! Hurrah for the hypocritical or pathetically ignorant who prate of "charity"! Hurrah, in short, for an international civilization generally insane from worship of the "Goddess of Getting-On"! May all the unseen forces that impel the cause of truth expand the minds, strengthen the hearts and steady the nerves of the few heroic souls who today, in the midst of this vast hypocrisy and greed, are raising their voices in protest against industrial slavery. I would rather my name were Kropotkin, Bakounin, Debs or Besant than McKinley!

Electors-at-Large,
HERMAN STUEMPFLE,
Terre Haute.
W. A. KLAZER, Evansville.

Indiana Social Democrats held their first state convention on July 4 at Reichwein's hall, Indianapolis. A full state ticket was chosen, mostly composed of workingmen. The usual display of pomp, glory and the not always characteristic other political conventions was conspicuous by its absence, and in its place was a cool, clear-headed body of men with determination stamped on their features, which was a source of inspiration to the delegates and unattached Socialists who attended the convention.

The convention was called to order by Sylvester Kelliher of Indianapolis, who gave a brief review of past and present progress in the party and a forecast of the future triumphs and victories which it hopes to achieve. The convention then got down to business by electing a committee on credentials and one on rules, after which a recess was taken until the committees were ready to report. The report of the committee on credentials showed that twenty delegates were present, representing Indianapolis, Evansville, Marion, Terre Haute and Columbus, and unattached Socialists were present from Elwood, Muncie and Alexandria and several other points. The reports of the committees were then adopted, after which Ed. H. Evinger of Terre Haute was elected permanent chairman and Charles Thornton of Indianapolis, secretary. The following committees were then elected:

Resolutions and Platform—James O'Neal of Terre Haute; Sylvester Kelliher and R. Grueling of Indianapolis.
Permanent Organization—John W. Kelly of Marion, Thomas Catton and Hugo Miller of Indianapolis.
Nominations—A. H. Rowley, Columbus; J. W. Rumer, Evansville, and John P. Thorndyke of Marion.

The convention then adjourned to meet at 2 p. m. Chairman Evinger called the convention to order at 2 o'clock. The committees on resolutions and platform reported the following resolution and platform:

We, the representatives of the Social Democratic party in state convention assembled, hereby indorse and ratify the nomination of Eugene V. Debs and Job Harriman for president and vice president of the United States and declare our allegiance to the Social Democratic party.

PLATFORM.

The Social Democratic party of the state of Indiana, in convention assembled, reaffirm the national platform adopted at Indianapolis convention in March, 1900, and declare our uncompromising adherence to the principles of international Socialism.

We demand the enactment of a law providing for the ownership and operation by the municipalities of all lighting, heating plants and the means of transportation and communication.

We demand the direct employment of labor by state and municipalities on all public work and the employment of the unemployed on state and municipal improvements, such as good roads, public baths, etc.

We demand that adequate school facilities shall be furnished, such as sufficient school room, trained teachers, free school books, and food, clothing and shelter whenever necessary.

We demand the enactment of a law providing for the eight-hour day on all state and municipal work.

The report of the committee on permanent organization was adopted after a slight amendment. Indianapolis was chosen as the seat of the executive board for two years.

The report of the committee on nominations was adopted, and the question of the party emblem was left to the executive board with instructions to try and secure for the national emblem the

The nominee for governor, John W. Kelly of Marion, has the distinction of being the first Socialist ever elected to office in the state of Indiana. The "next governor" was called upon for a speech, and in a few well-chosen words thanked the convention for honoring him with the nomination, and said that he would go into the state campaign with the same purpose in view that prompted his acceptance of the nomination for the council of Marion, that is with the determination to win. Speeches were then heard from the various delegates, all of whom spoke in an enthusiastic strain, which showed a determination to roll up a Socialist vote that would be a surprise to the capitalist parties in this state.

STATE ORGANIZATION.

1. The state convention shall be held every two years at such time and place as the state executive board shall determine.

2. Such state convention shall select the city where the state executive board shall be located.

3. The branches at the city elected shall elect an executive board of five members to compose the state executive board, three of whom shall constitute a quorum.

4. The executive board shall have supervision of the party organization, and shall have power to provide such rules, issue such orders and adopt such measures as may be required to carry out the objects of the organization.

5. To defray the expense of the party within the state, each branch shall contribute 5 cents from each member per month to the executive board.

6. Upon application of 5 per cent of the membership within the state, the executive board shall submit a referendum vote to the various branches upon any matter of interest to the members within said state.

PASSING OF CAPITALISM AND MISSION OF SOCIAL DEMOCRACY

By Isador Laskoff.

Why does capitalism, like a venomous fungoid, flourish in our midst? Why did the greatest achievements of the human genius in the conquests of dead matter result in the actual return to barbarity? Simply because our philosophy of life is way behind our progress in the domain of purely material or industrial activity. Simply because the modern methods of production and distribution of wealth are by far more advanced than our ideals and conceptions about right and wrong. Our methods of economic activity are incorporating (although incompletely) the progressive principle of socialization, while our philosophy of life, our moral ideals, remain still individualistic or anarchistic.

In this incongruity, in this contradiction between our conceptions of human inter-relations on one hand and actual material conditions on the other, is concealed the center of gravity of all social problems of the day. This incongruity and contradiction is felt instinctively by everybody. Very few, however, have the clear vision of the hidden causes of those phenomena. Deep is the general unrest, broad is the general nervousness of the people, obvious are the symptoms of our social abnormalities, absurdities and crimes, but very few penetrate through the mere surface of things.

Dissatisfaction permeates every class of the people, and many are the remedies proposed and advocated by all kinds of so-called reformers whose name is legion. The middle class "reformers" of the democratic-populistic stamp, those blind leaders of the blind, preach reaction, return to semi-medieval individualism, as a means to escape the perplexities of our modern industrial conditions. Their watchword is: "Backward, backward, Don Rodrigo!" Another variety of half-hearted, one-idea reformers try to concentrate all their attention on some single panacea, bound to save humanity in twenty-four hours after its inauguration. Such are the prohibitionists, single taxers, etc. All these would be saviors of humanity lack historic sense and philosophic training of mind. They are delightfully puerile in their utopian faith in the miraculous power of legislation on paper, and do not see the forest, because stubbornly insisting on looking on one tree only. They imagine themselves to be Joshuas commanding the sun of industrial evolution to stop at the Gideon of dwarfed capitalism.

The Social Democracy has another more sensible and cheering message for humanity. Its watchword is: "Forward, forward!" It recognizes the absurdity of all the attempts to turn the wheel of historical development backward, it considers as insane the advice to undo all the marvelous achievements of science applied to arts. Social Democracy is primarily an educational movement. Its task consists in teaching people to conform their philosophy of life, their social ideals and moral principles to the new industrial conditions. The economic structure of our modern society is clearly drifting towards the socialization of industry, and Social Democracy is preparing the people for this revolutionary change. The time is near when the tools of production and raw material will be turned over to the people engaged in production, when production will be carried on not for profit, but for consumption, when socialized production will be carried on by society in the interest of society; in short, when society at large will be the master of its own economic destiny. Such a revolution in economic life demands a radical revision and readjustment of our moral conceptions; it demands a clear vision of the drift of our time and a great deal of enthusiasm in the cause of human welfare. This clearness of vision, this enthusiasm and the gospel of a new system of ethics Social Democracy brings to the people.

The passing capitalistic era with its profit system, with its zoological system of competition, with its eternal fluctuations between supply and demand, with its reckless speculation with human sweat and blood, with its brutal degradation of manhood and womanhood, with its flagrant injustice and absurdities, did not fall from heaven (or, rather, hell) into a community of innocent and reasoning beings. Capitalism is the product of our own irrationality and perverted sense of right or wrong. Capitalism is passing in the measure as we are outgrowing it morally and mentally. The mission of Social Democracy is to help and hasten our mental and moral growth into a higher, better, nobler social system. Social Democracy stands on firm historical ground. It takes up the work just where it was left by the middle class French revolution. Times proved the futility of political without economic freedom and equality. Events proved that freedom and equality in the purely political sense of these terms are mere worthless abstractions, a snare and delusion for the proletariat. Social Democracy demands economic democracy, economic liberty and equality as the only real democracy, liberty and equality worth striving for.

"Well, all that is certainly very nice and sounds well; but is it possible to change human nature so as to make men live like loving brothers?" is the usual skeptic objection of wise practical men to all social democratic arguments. This objection is by no means new. The wise and practical man-eater certainly did object to the radical reformer, who first suggested that it would be preferable to enslave the prisoners of war to eating them up in the same way. "It would be indeed very nice, but our fathers and forefathers did eat their war prisoners. You cannot change human nature." And yet centuries passed and slavery formed the under structure of great civilizations, like the Hellenic and Roman empires. The wise slave-owner argued in the same strain with the abolitionist, and yet the shackles fell from the limbs of a race whose only crime consisted in the pigment of its skin. Is it necessary to meet the objection of our wise and practical anti-socialists? It would be too tedious.

The middle class, the most typical representatives of which is the capitalists, was not always as conservative, nay, sometimes reactionary as it appears at present. By far not. The absolute power of the kings and emperors of Europe, owing to which the so-called nobility and clergy occupied the most privileged position in the said hierarchy, was a thorn in the flesh of the middle class. The middle class was the carrier of the noble ideals of (political) freedom, equality and (do not laugh, dear reader!) brotherhood. It was at the time of the French revolution representing the advanced guard of humanity. It fought nobly and conquered (with the aid of proletarian blood, of course). This accomplished the middle class hastened to forget its revolutionary traditions and for obvious reasons. As long as their class interests coincided, or seemed to coincide, with the interests of the human race—the human cause was their cause and no farther. Indeed political freedom proved to be an excellent thing without its economic counterpart for the valiant possessor of the valuable, as Ruskin aptly defined rich people. Who enjoyed economic freedom because he is valiant can use political freedom as a means to get advantage over his less valiant fellow-citizens as we witness it in Switzerland, France and the United States. The government of so-called free countries is just as easily run in the interests of a plutocracy as a monarchy in the interests of an aristocracy. The proletarian is left to his fate. He is doomed to be dependent on his only possession—his labor power as a ware on the market. All the insecurity, the fluctuations of supply and demand, competition and other beauties connected with the mercantile system are burdening the broad shoulders of the dispossessed class of the people. The interests of this class are at present identical with the interests of the human race. This class is, therefore, naturally the carrier of the highest ideals of the age, is the advance guard of humanity struggling for its emancipation. Social Democracy is the mouthpiece of this struggle, its interpreter, its advocate and leader. Social Democracy has to train the army of the proletarian class and to lead it against the hosts of capitalism.

The elections for the senate have taken place in Belgium, and the clerical majority is now fourteen, instead of thirty-eight in the previous assembly. There are now four Socialists instead of one.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY,

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America. The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man. As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

DISINHERITED CHILDREN AND "EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES"

Conditions Under Which Thousands are Brought Into the World Due Solely to the Capitalist System

By E. H. T.

Come with me to the poorest quarter of a great city this sultry summer evening. You must walk in the middle of the street, for the sidewalks are blocked with crowds of people who have swarmed out of their stifling tenements where the heat is actually unendurable. They gather by families around their doors, and the problem is, how can so many swarms come out of one hive? In cold weather, when they cannot remain on the streets, where do all these people put themselves?

But look here. This is what I wanted to show you; this little child lying asleep on the bare pavement. This little child who has no home worthy of the name, and no easier resting place than the hard stone. And yet he is just as soft and tender a baby as the little one cozily nestled in his dainty white nest in the millionaire's home. And yet the little curly head on its stony pillow has just as strong a claim to life and its good things as any other innocent child brought into the world without its own consent. What has become of his birth-right? Or why has society disinherited this unoffending little one?

Now do not flatter yourself, Mr. Workingman, that your babies have a strong arm to protect them and will never sink to the level of these children of the slums. A dull season or a panic may find you next year tramping the streets and staring at the signs in the factory windows, "No men needed here." What can your strong arms do for your children if it does not hold the tool with which it can win their bread? That tool belongs to the capitalist, and he may answer your appeal for work to feed your little ones with the words of one of Chicago's millionaires, that "a workingman has no right to have a family."

The day may be near when your children will share this baby's pillow.

And you, my friend of the middle class, do not imagine for one moment that your home stands secure and cannot be undermined by the capitalistic system. Year by year and day by day the great trusts are thrusting your class aside, and pushing them down into the classes below. Your business may be the next to be ruined; or the mortgage on your farm may be foreclosed; your home may be broken up, and your own boy and girl forced into the ranks of the disinherited children.

Think what it means! Think of the thousands brought into the world every year who were foredoomed before their birth to a life of want and suffering. We shudder at the old-fashioned doctrine of predestination, according to which certain persons were doomed to perdition before they were born. We wonder how our grandfathers could have believed such a cruel doctrine, and yet we see it daily enacted before our very eyes. Think of the large per cent of children who die in infancy from exposure and lack of proper or sufficient food. Yes, I grant the little ones are wise to get away from such a miserable world betimes. But, what sort of a system have we, if the best we can offer them is a slow death by privation and suffering? Is society really so helpless that it cannot provide some way to prevent this slaughter of the innocents?

Look at it in another light. These children of the dispossessed classes, even if they succeed in struggling through their perilous infancy, or if they are born into homes of comparative comfort, where actual want is unknown, are yet handicapped in the race of life from the very start. Equal opportunities for all in America? How about the child in the factory or shop, dwarfed physically and intellectually, till he becomes fit for nothing but to be the slave of a machine? How about the boy on the mortgaged farm, whose education must be systematically interrupted so that he may help his father with the heavy burden of hopeless farm work? How many parents of the dispossessed classes can provide their children with any thing beyond a mere primary education, or even dream of giving them a professional or technical training that would fit them to take their places beside the sons of the rich?

"Equal opportunities," indeed! Now my friend, you who fear Socialism and defend the present system, what can you say to this? What argument can you produce to prove the justice of an order of society which not only permits, but perpetuates such a state of things? That continually replaces the prematurely worn-out workmen with a younger generation so trained that they are unfit for anything but the life of slavery which their fathers led before them and their sons and daughters must lead after them, when they in their turn are thrown away like a broken tool? If society must always go on in this vicious circle, is it not all a huge mistake, and would not "universal suicide be a wiser course?"

There is another alternative worth the trying. Give to those who labor the total product of their toil; give all an opportunity of employment; let there be no dispossessed parents, and there will be no disinherited children, nor one little innocent who shall miss the birth-right assigned to him by Justice and by Nature.

avail themselves with a clear conscience. It would be wrong to say that there are no good men or ideas in the old parties, but it does seem that they have about outlived their usefulness; and it is safe to assert that the Social Democracy has more to commend it to the conscientious voter than any other party before the people. Therefore, holding unalterably to the "universal brotherhood of humanity, without distinction of race, sex, creed, caste or color," I shall this year vote for Eugene Debs for President and feel thoroughly satisfied in doing it, too!

It seems that the nation which would lead in progress must take the initiative in making brotherhood visible and tangible. May ours be that nation!—A Chicago Theosophist.

A BALLAD OF CRIME AND DEATH

By Raley Husted Bell.

He does not wear the epaulettes
Nor the "corporal's" coat of gray,
Yet sickly gray is on the flesh
Of this monster man of prey,
Who, like some misshapen Martian toad,
Unfurled the flag of fray.

He sits upon the latest throne—
Imperially commands
Our fighting lads to maim and kill
The brave of other lands.
His fat heart knows one craven wish—
The greed of miser-hands.

His craven heart is fat and sleek—
Unholy bends his eye—
The devil bought his soul from him
And Hanna bought the sty.
No more the home of patriot chiefs,
But a nest that brigands buy.

He doubly damns a peaceful land,
This foul and murderous thing!
And murder stalks the tracks of him—
Aye! Yet shall bullets sing,
And yet shall solemn midnight bells
For a damned soul ring!

The shot that laid sweet Lincoln low
(Dear Christ! That he were spared!)
Is spent and paid and dead we know—
And yet that shot was dared!
And still another chief we loved
Fell low to crime unshared.

But we pray that this fair land of ours
Be spared more stains of red—
Our flag is full of crimson bars
Where stars should smile instead;
And we pray our brave lads' blood redeems
The heroes' blood they shed.

Yet if "man kills the thing he loves,
By each let this be heard:
Some do it with a bitter look,
Some with a flattering word;
The coward does it with a kiss
The brave man with a sword!"

Miners Keep Away

From authentic sources we are informed that the mine owners and the martial law authorities of the Coeur d'Alene district are advertising in Ohio, Michigan and other eastern states for miners claiming a scarcity of laborers in this district, and offering extra inducements to miners to come here. In every respect this is a misrepresentation. There is not a scarcity of laborers here, and in fact there are now two men here today seeking employment for each man who is at work. The conditions are the worst that ever confronted labor anywhere in the United States. The advertisements for men which are being scattered in the east, state that there is no strike or trouble of any kind. There is no strike, but miners everywhere should be informed as to the conditions existing here. The difficulty between the laborers and mine operators in this district are not settled and the presence of Federal troops and continuance of martial law in this county are proof of the fact. Organized labor is unlawfully discriminated against by the state authorities for political purposes, and a man who gets employment here under the conditions is a slave. He must propitiate a score of state deputies and the vendor of permits to seek employment.—Idaho State Tribune.

Another View of New Zealand

M. Albert Metin, in "Notes on a Tour Round the World," printed in the Clarion, has the following reference to Australia and New Zealand: "Socialism, as a matter of fact, does not exist in these countries. The trade unionists are afraid of the word; Socialists, they told me, are extremists. Another prominent leader of the Labor party, whom I questioned as to his platform, replied, laconically: 'My platform? ten bob a day.' There is no sign in these countries of the remarkable English minority which protests with so much conscience and energy against the prejudices of society and the privileges of wealth; and though the laws in Australia have greatly improved the material situation of the workers, the moral and intellectual gain has been much less.

COOK COUNTY CONVENTION

The county convention of the Social Democratic party of Cook county, Illinois, met at Bohemian Turner Hall, Ashland avenue, Sunday morning, July 15. Convention was called to order by Chairman Holsinger of the committee. Comrade Frank Roderus was elected chairman and Comrade A. S. Edwards secretary.

Committee of three appointed on credentials, F. Svoboda, W. C. Horgan, and A. F. Dennison, reported the branches represented as follows: Branch 2, 43; Branch 3, 11; Branch 4, 23; Branch 5, 11; Branch 6, 6; Branch 7, 11; Branch 8, 23; Branch 12, 5; Branch 18, 9. Total representation, 143.

The convention by acclamation reaffirmed the Indianapolis platform and the state platform of the Social Democratic party.

On motion the convention at once proceeded to the nomination of candidates for the county ticket, with the following result:

State's Attorney—Wm. A. Cunnea.
Recorder of Deeds—George Simonds.
Clerk of Circuit Court—James Mudra.

Clerk of Superior Court—Gus Anderson.

Coroner—Rudolph Pusch.

Board of Assessors—J. A. Ambroz, M. Holsinger.

Board of Review—John Starr.

County Surveyor—W. H. Redford.
County Commissioners—Ferdinand Wimmer (President); Uhlhorn, John Aird, Frank Mitchell, Gus Hanson, Edward Lakaj, Werner, Joseph Dunder, Kelleher, August Philgraff, Anton Tyrdy.

Drainage Commissioners—Charles Bigel, James Hauser, E. J. French, H. G. Conrad, A. J. Amant.

On motion nominations for judge of the Probate court and judges of the Superior court were temporarily passed over and instructions given the county committee to file said vacancies after consultation.

On motion the convention elected the following committee of eleven and requested the city committee to co-operate with them, the complete body to constitute the county campaign committee:

McSweeney, H. H. Fraelich, J. J. Florian, M. Holsinger, W. M. Kirwin, H. G. Conrad, Peter Knickrehm, F. J. Peter, James Wright, Kelleher, Frank Filas.

The following resolution was read and adopted:

Resolved, That the announcements made in the Workers' Call and the New York People to the effect that on July 4 a united convention of the Social Democratic and Social Labor parties was held in Chicago, thus conveying the impression that the two parties in this city and state have amalgamated, are misleading and untrue; the Social Democratic party has its own state and county tickets, and except as to the defection of less than half a dozen members, our organization is intact, and as a matter of fact has not amalgamated with, nor is it a part of the so-called "Socialist party."

On motion the convention adjourned.

FRANK RODERUS,

Chairman.

A. S. EDWARDS,

Secretary.

UTAH STATE CONVENTION

The C. D. P. of Utah met in convention for nominating a full state ticket for the coming election, on July 5 in Salt Lake City. Twenty-five delegates were present representing six branches. F. M. McQuivey of Eureka was chosen chairman and Chas. E. Strong of Nephi, secretary. The following platform was adopted:

We fully endorse the national platform of the S. D. P. of A. and further make these demands:

We demand that all appointive offices be made elective.

We hereby endorse the proposed amendment to the state constitution providing for the adoption of direct legislation and call the attention of the people of Utah to the fact that by voting for this amendment at the coming election they will have an opportunity to obtain a voice in the affairs of their state.

We especially advocate the state ownership and operation of all water rights, reservoirs, canals, ditches, etc., for irrigating purposes, and that all water be furnished to the people at cost.

We demand the abolition of the contract system in public works and the direct employment of labor by the state and municipalities.

We demand that adequate school facilities shall be furnished by the state to all children between the age of five and twenty-one years, school facilities to include sufficient school room, normal trained teachers, free school books and supplies, food and clothing.

A full state ticket was then nominated with the exception of justice of Supreme court, as follows:

Three Presidential Electors—Geo. B. Hobbs of Neplin, W. D. Clay of Bingham, and Jos. Ward of Salt Lake City.

For Governor—Martin Wright, of Mt. Pleasant.

Secretary of State—C. C. Goodwin, of Logan.

State Treasurer—John F. Osborn, of Bingham.

Attorney General—L. H. Gray, Salt Lake City.

State Auditor—Chas. E. Strong, of Neplin.

Land Commissioners—E. L. Powell, of Bingham; Byron Wheelock, of Eureka; J. L. Peterson, of Smithfield.

Representative in Congress—A. B. Edler, of Salt Lake City.

The whole ticket without exception was unanimously nominated.

A committee of five was appointed to carry on the campaign, fill vacancies, etc., as follows: Comrades Mahan, Smith, and Hansen of Salt Lake City; Richards of Bingham, and McQuivey of Eureka.

Before the convention adjourned the following resolution was passed without a dissenting vote: "We, the delegates of this convention, do sanction the action of our National Executive Board in regard to the committee on union and do hereby renew our allegiance to the S. D. P. of A., and especially condemn the attempt of certain members to disrupt our party by violating their pledges."

Charles A. Strong, Sec.

Convention endorsed the Indianapolis platform.

ECONOMIC BASIS OF BROTHERHOOD

"Self-sufficing, obstinate, filled with the pride and intoxication of wealth, they perform lip-sacrifices for ostentation, contrary to scriptural ordinance. Given over to egoism, lust and wrath, these malicious ones hate Me in the bodies of others and in their own. A man liberated from these three gates of darkness [lust, wrath and greed.] O son of Kunti, accomplisheth his own welfare and thus reacheth the highest goal."—Krishna.

The words of Krishna are taken from the Bhagavad Gita ("Lord's Song,") 10th chapter, and translated by Annie Besant (1896,) and were uttered 5,000 years ago. This book is said by high literary authorities to be the most sublime scriptural production known to man. The chapter from which this extract is made, together with the second chapter, which treats of reincarnation—rebirth on earth in human form—will serve to give the careful reader an idea of the terrible exactness of the law of sowing and reaping which none of the orthodox statements can equal. Moreover, it is a rational belief which is steadily sweeping onward, gaining headway as it goes.

But what I want especially to call the attention of my readers to is this: First—The identical teaching of Jesus and Krishna when each is shorn of outside husk of dogma and ceremony.

Second—We cannot make permanent, eternal progress by climbing up on the back of our weaker brother, who, according to the real divine teaching, IS OURSELVES! Now by the present competitive commercial system we seem forced to prosper in trade just in proportion as our weaker brother fares ill. If you examine this matter closely you will be forced to the conclusion which many others have reached; namely, that no Christian can be a very rich man. Then you will recall with startling distinctness what Jesus said of the difficulty of the rich man's entrance into the kingdom of heaven, for that kingdom is "within you!" Therefore, do you not think it is about time to change our industrial scheme to agree with the great truth? Can you deny that co-operation substituted for competition would afford mankind at least a better chance to be good and pure?

The Socialist has an unanswerable argument so far as the general plan of government is concerned. Later in man's evolution all who affect to disbelieve in the assertion of some of us that the universe has a moral basis—who say that we are "rainbow chasers"—will be forced to take higher ground than material Socialism, high as that may be, or their whole structure will crumble. Leaving this consideration aside, however, the Socialists present to you a party and a platform based on co-operation instead of competition, oneness rather than separateness. It is worth your while to at least vote for it if you are tired of the round of emptiness and sound of the old parties. And I dare to make the deliberate assertion that in Eugene Debs the Social Democracy presents to you a candidate for President who is a distinctly higher grade of character than any man who has ever held that position. In him to see the truth is to follow it; there is no variation or shadow of turning. Of course, being human, he might make a mistake; but of all who know him not one will believe he would lie! He is following that highest law—the law of service to mankind, and he has followed it further and higher than any other man I know of in the American public eye. All persons who are truly religious, both in and out of the church, whose worship is not lip service, who can truly say, "The world is my country; to do good is my religion," have a voting opportunity this year of which they may

Harriman's Propaganda In Behalf of "Socialism"

Infamous Tactics Resorted to by the Managers of the So-Called United Party

If it were possible for us to be guided solely by individual preference, to pass in silence the despicable and perfidious methods resorted to by Job Harriman and others to force what they call a "union of Socialists," and to keep the columns of The Herald clean of any further reference to that subject or its emissaries, we would gladly follow that course and stand as we have done since the promulgation of the "Manifesto," unmoved by calumny and undeterred in the discharge of our duty to the Socialist cause. The file of this paper is in evidence as proof that we have for weeks past sought to minimize the interest of our readers in this matter, by gradually subordinating it and using our space in the advocacy and propagation of Socialist principles. Columns and columns of matter calculated to provoke strife have been shut out; the printing of individual communications had almost wholly ceased and only such resolutions as expressed the collective ideas and purposes of branches appeared. In our desire to avoid controversy we have besides ignored numerous scandalously false and ferocious attacks upon our party, the authors of which shield themselves behind the mask of "fraternity" and "brotherhood" and babble of the "holy cause of union." We now ask that comrades open their eyes and use their own sober reason in the light of recent developments and the subjoined statement of facts. From the start the managers of that faction of the S. L. P. which seeks organic union with us, routed by De Leon, determined to capture our growing organization. Their smooth and well-chosen palaver was spread out to our delegates. They made a show of modesty. They were innocent as babes and all they wanted was "union." They pledged themselves to accept our name (having none of their own), broke their pledges and violently denounced the name, and then before the denunciation had died away, they adopted the name by acclamation—all for the sake of "union," and be it remembered, that they did not adopt our name UNTIL THE "MANIFESTO" WAS ISSUED AND THE WARNING WENT FORTH REVEALING THE DESIGN OF THE MANAGERS.

Some of our honest comrades could not see the drift in those bleak March days. They were easily led to believe that members of the executive board wanted to be "bosses"; they will soon all be convinced that we were contending against "bosses."

Present developments prove every point. The evidence is overwhelming and the despised "Manifesto" is completely vindicated. Every word of warning it contained was timely and every avowal as to the designs of the so-called "unionists" is now an established fact. All the foul batteries of abuse, misrepresentation and slander could not prevail against it. Defeated at every point and grown desperate in their defeat, these party-wreckers, masquerading as the guardians of the cause of human freedom, now have their Presidential candidate, Job Harriman, in the field, going from place to place as the guest of our comrades and our party by appointment made through a decoy, one of our own number.

And what is this guest by appointment doing? Stabbing the party, vilifying the organization and getting pay for doing it.

HARRIMAN'S WORK IN KENTUCKY

Where once was harmony and good will there is now bitter strife. The party can not suffer the insidious attack now being made by Job Harriman upon it without protest. Silence now is cowardice and inaction becomes treason. Our Kentucky comrades have been treated to a sample of the kind of "union" Harriman stands for. Report of it comes to headquarters in a letter, written by Comrade Jas. H. Arnold, of Louisville. In reading this letter, which is given in full below, our members will recollect that he (Arnold) had decided to quit us for, as he believed, the sake of union and harmony; he had, in fact, renounced the N. E. B. and was with the fusionists. The letter is, therefore, written by one who had concluded in the interest of harmony to sever his relations with the Social Democratic party, until Harriman went to Kentucky and opened his eyes to the fact that it was not unity and harmony he wanted, but to wipe out of existence the Social Democratic party so that S. L. Pism might have undisputed sway.

COMRADE ARNOLD'S LETTER

The following is a copy of our comrade's letter, dated July 7, 1900; the writer was a delegate to the Indianapolis convention and impressed all who met him as a sincere, honorable man and devoted Socialist:

"Comrades of the S. D. P.: Mr. Job Harriman, candidate of the united (?) party for vice-president, has visited Louisville, got in his work for unity and as a result we are now divided. His visit has resulted in some eight or ten comrades going over to the united (?) party.

"His plan of campaign is as follows: His manager in this instance, Wm. Butcher, previously notified some comrade in a branch in sympathy with his scheme that he will visit the city at a certain time; that arrangements should be made for an agitation meeting if possible, then, after the agitation meeting, there is to be a business meeting of the members. The purpose of the 'business meeting' is not made known to the members until the meeting has gathered. Then Mr. Harriman, taking advantage of the impression his speech has made on the members, and their own inexperience and their belief in his honesty, opens up with a long argument and plea for the comrades to 'unite.'

"He works on their supposed prejudice against the N. E. B. and then proceeds to demonstrate that the only way to overthrow the N. E. B. is to join his crowd and unite with the united (?) party, headquarters at Springfield, Mass.

"He is exceedingly smooth. He is a master of artifice, finesse and cunning. He has been engaged in this business for some time, and is doubtless doing his best to earn his salary and expenses.

"If through the continued exercise of his 'fine Italian hand,' he (Harriman) succeeds in persuading branches enough of the S. D. P. to desert their own and join his organization, to give the unity fellows a majority, doubtless, his employers will raise his wages.

"When he finished his speech in front of the court house in Louisville, a member in sympathy announced that a joint business meeting of our branches would be held in the hall. Upon arrival at the hall the chairman of the meeting announced there were several new members to enroll—three. Then Mr. Harriman was called upon for a talk, and for nearly an hour we heard his plea for unity—that we should leave our party and join his.

"The propositions from Butcher were laid before the branches and the chair asked for a motion to adopt them. The debate waxed warm, and a motion to adjourn was made and seconded. The chair announced the members could vote down the motion to adjourn. The motion to adjourn was lost—the three new members voting against adjournment.

"Then came the motion to adopt the Butcher matter, unity, constitution and all, and it carried—the three aforesaid new members voting in favor. But the unity committee in their report expressly declared that only those were eligible to vote on the unity propositions who were members in good standing on April 1st.

"Harriman knew this, but since he and the united party were getting the benefit of these illegal votes (even from their own standpoint), he was willing that they should be counted.

"Branch No. 1 is now reorganizing and will recover from the Harriman stampede in a few days. The united (?) party disruptionists will be dropped, and lost ground will soon be recovered. One more point I want to note. Harriman contends that he is the vice-presidential candidate of the united (?) party, and not the candidate of the S. D. P., and URGES THAT AS A REASON WHY WE SHOULD LEAVE THE S. D. P. AND JOIN THE UNITED PARTY.

"The loss of Mr. Harriman as our vice-presidential candidate would be a fearful price to pay for adhering to our own party but I think the party could pay the price and still survive the loss.

"Harriman says in effect: 'If you don't join the united party you may not have a chance to vote for ME as your vice-presidential candidate.' That is a clincher, especially so with those who imagine that the resignation of Harriman from the ticket with Debs would be fatal to the Socialist movement in this country.

"I consented at one time, in the interest of peace and harmony, to have the branch sever connection with the N. E. B. and stand independent, refusing to recognize either faction. This was agreed to as the wisest course. Our state convention, July 4, refused to entertain a proposition to sever this connection, but the next day, when the Covington delegates were gone, Harriman and Robinson secured the passing of resolutions endorsing the Butcher crowd. What do you think of that? Harriman stated over and over again that he was the candidate of the united (?) party, not of the S. D. P., with headquarters at Chicago. Harriman and the unity crowd have done nothing but sow dissension and strife since negotiations were opened.

"Comrades, we must get rid of Harriman, and the sooner the better. Let the united (?) S. L. P. party run him. He is not the kind of man the S. D. P. needs as a vice-presidential candidate. JAS. H. ARNOLD."

Comrade F. E. Seeds, one of the charter members of the branch at Covington, and an earnest, active worker in his state, also writes. He says:

"We held our state convention at Louisville on the 4th, nominated our ticket, state and national, and everything was harmonious and encouraging, as we thought. Last Saturday Harriman blew in here from Louisville, where he had succeeded in spoiling the harmony. He is here for the same purpose but we hope to foil him."

OPEN YOUR EYES TO THE TRUTH

Comrade Arnold's letter speaks for itself. The Social Democratic party at Indianapolis honored Harriman with the vice-presidential nomination. Now in his "business" meetings with our comrades he tells them he is not the nominee of the S. D. P. In a word, he repudiates our nomination to force our comrades into his so-called "united" camp managers, with headquarters at New York, alias Springfield, Mass. Then, according to Benham, they will proceed to "tear the entrails out of De Leon's party." What an edifying conclusion to the crusade for Socialist unity! Kentucky united, harmonious and enthusiastic one day—the next divided, disrupted and disappointed by the nefarious work of one claiming to work for Socialist unity!

DOES HARRIMAN ACCEPT OR NOT?

We have a right to know, and speaking for the largest organized body of united Socialists in the United States, we demand specific declaration from Job Harriman if he accepts or repudiates the nomination of the Indianapolis convention. We demand an answer, yes or no. We do not propose to be satisfied with several columns of "interpretation of a situation," or a splutter of oily phrases. We want an answer and we want it quick. Following are the reasons for this demand:

1. Butcher is acting as agent for Harriman in making his appointments with the S. D. P. branches, betraying his own party in the interest of the "Kangaroos."

2. The vote on the fusion committee's report is so insignificantly small that the time of voting has been twice extended and now Harriman and others are frantically rushing about to gather in more votes—including illegal votes.

3. Harriman is paid by the so-called "united" party of New York to go about and destroy the S. D. P.

4. The "united" party in New York was effected by four delegates in good standing out of 20 S. D. P. branches and these four delegates represented only a very small per cent of the members of New York, and this "union" was declared in effect before the vote on unity was taken.

5. According to the reports from Kentucky, Harriman repudiated the nomination of the Indianapolis convention.

7. The Kentucky state convention refused to sever connection with our N. E. B. and party. Harriman waited until the Covington comrades returned home and then with the help of illegal votes, had the infamous resolution passed declaring treason to our party.

Will the members of the Social Democratic party hesitate for a single instant in deciding what their duty is when confronted by such a condition? Comrades, you are called upon, not in the name of "unity," but in behalf of the Socialist cause in this country, which is being dragged in the mud and made a thing for the scorn of honest men, to come to the point of decision. 'It is more than a question of party; it is a question of whether we shall have a Socialist movement at all.

Your candidate for President, Eugene V. Debs, stands squarely by his decision given at Indianapolis. He is in the fight as your nominee and will stay to the end. The hope of our cause rests with the Social Democratic party today. Whatever changes the future may bring, it is clearly the present duty of Socialists in the United States to rally to the support of the party which stands for Socialism, which was harmonious before it became inoculated with the virus of S. L. Pism, which is credited with whatever of noteworthy achievement attaches to Socialism in the United States, which is growing as no party declaring for international Socialism has ever grown.

Again we demand of Job Harriman, do you accept or repudiate the nomination of the Indianapolis convention of the Social Democratic party for vice-president?

A DEMOCRATIC CANARD

The silence of the capitalist press relative to the Social Democratic party and candidacy of Eugene V. Debs has at last been broken. We have been given a full column, first page article in the Sunday edition of the Chicago Chronicle and the conclusion every discerning man will draw from this marked prominence is that the managers of the Democratic party are suffering from a genuine scare, because Debs is in the field. The purpose of the article will be clear to every man when he reads that "on the first of October, Debs is to withdraw in favor of W. J. Bryan," and that the "Republican managers are laying plans to use the Social Democratic party as a McKinley aid society." If there is any thing preposterously false and utterly contemptible that the managers of the Democratic party are not equal to in their game of trying to deceive the working class voters, we would like to hear of it. The Bryanites fear this man's candidacy, with very good reason, and they propose to resort to lying and deception for the sole purpose of hoodwinking the working people who have made up their minds to vote for him. Everywhere the fear is growing that Bryan's election is endangered by the Social Democratic party ticket, and so it is. If the working class will arouse themselves, all capitalist parties will be in danger and McKinleyism too swept into oblivion. Social Democrats everywhere should not be surprised if frequent lying reports made out of whole cloth, are sent out from Democratic or Republican headquarters.

Eugene V. Debs is the candidate, and will be the candidate of the Social Democratic party for president, until the polls close next November.

NO ORGANIC UNION HAS BEEN EFFECTED

By Eugene V. Debs

Silence seems to give acquiescence to misrepresentation regarding the "unity" question. It is important enough that we should have a clear understanding about it. There has been no organic union of the S. D. P. and S. L. P. The issue was placed squarely before our party by the manifesto of the N. E. B. and defeated by a decided majority. Nor is this all. The second vote taken upon the committee report by those who took exception to the manifesto, simply verified the first vote and emphasized the decision of the party. But a small minority of members in good standing voted on the report at all. Repeated extensions of time and the most vigilant drumming of votes could not alter the result.

The two parties are therefore separate and distinct organizations as they were before the question of union was raised. This is the fact and no amount of misrepresentation can change it. Yet there are those who insist that the two parties are now one. Defeated by the general vote of the party at large, they have appealed to the states to secede from the party, and we have heard that one state after another has effected organizations in defiance of, if not renouncing allegiance, to the National party. These reports are in nearly every case false and misleading. Take New York for example. Four bona fide S. D. P. delegates attended the "joint" convention. Sixteen branches refused to participate on the ground that they were opposed to organic union. Yet these four delegates, representing but about ten per cent of our membership in New York, acting with the delegates of the S. L. P., declared the two parties a "united" party. Such actions are not calculated to promote union sentiment. They simply inaugurate strife. And yet those who object to such methods are denounced for opposing union.

The National party decided against organic union and I maintain that no state convention has any authority to commit the party to such an alliance and that those who take such a step in defiance of the party's mandate secede from and sever their relations with the party. I have no fault to find with comrades for joining the Kangaroo S. L. P. but I object to the assumption that their action is that of the party of which they are but a very small minority. The National Executive Board has been and is unanimous upon this question. When they issued their manifesto it was charged that they, and they alone, were opposed to union, and it was freely predicted that the board and its action would be repudiated by an overwhelming majority. Instead of this the board has been twice sustained by the party, once by the vote on the manifesto and again by the negative action on the report of the "unity" committee.

We have been told over and over again that the rank and file demand "union" and that only the "leaders" stand in the way. Then why do not the "rank and file" remove the "leaders" and unite? Nothing is easier or simpler. Our constitution provides the power of recall and five per cent of the members can initiate the demand. The fact is that a large majority of our comrades are opposed to joining the S. L. P. They are satisfied with their party as it is; and in spite of all that has been said about their N. E. B. they know that not one of its members sought or desired official position, that not one of them has ever received a cent of salary, that every one of them has served the party to his own personal loss and inconvenience and that every cent of their official expenses from first to last, has been paid from their own private income. Can the same be said of their accusers and traducers?

There has been no opposition to "union" in any proper sense of that term. We have resisted an alliance which under the circumstances was fraught with dissension and strife, not union and harmony. We do not quarrel with those who differ from us. They have all the rights we claim for ourselves. Let them unite with the S. L. P. if they choose to and we will have nothing mean to say about them. Time will show which of us is right.

Since there has been some question about my status as a candidate, I wish it understood that I am the candidate of the Social Democratic party, whose convention nominated me at Indianapolis and whose national headquarters are located at Chicago.

I do not doubt the time will come when we shall have a united party. Until then we yield to the inexorable logic of facts.

We do not claim that we are better than others. We may not be as good. That is not the question. We differ from them and we are simply standing by our convictions.

But be these differences among socialists what they may, they can and should in every battle unite against capitalism and to such a policy of united action we stand pledged until we have a truly united party.

NO FUSION IN ILLINOIS

The Social Democrats of Illinois for weeks hoped to make such arrangements as would result in political cooperation with other Socialists in this state. Failing in this, owing to the unreasonable and confusing course followed by the S. L. P. managers in Chicago, our comrades filed their nominating papers with the State Secretary three weeks ago and on those papers appear the names of Debs and Harriman. Our state convention, followed the nomination of its ticket with a resolution which read as follows:

"Resolved, by the Social Democratic party assembled in state convention, that they believe in political union in the state of Illinois, and therefore, and to this end, appoint a committee of seven, who shall have power to retire candidates from the state ticket of the Social Democratic party and substitute candidates of the Socialist Labor party therefor."

We had assurances that this course made an approach to amicable relations for the campaign possible. But under the baleful domination of a few "bosses" like Simons, editor of the International Socialist Review, and T. J. Morgan, who was opposed to the union from the start for no other conceivable reason than that he saw the movement outgrowing his narrow limitations, this offer was rejected, and as a result some of the most sincere and rational men in the "Kangaroo" camp in Chicago are through with them. Long before the Indianapolis convention several of our comrades in Chicago, made offers for union which the Simon-Morganites rejected, and notwithstanding this, nearly all of us to a man voted for the candidates of the S. L. P. at the municipal elections last spring, and thereby swelled the Socialist vote in Chicago from 1,500 to over 5,000. More than that, we contributed to the expenses of the election, and have been rewarded for our fraternal interest in the cause of Socialism on that occasion with studied abuse and vilification. Every move made by these so-called unionists in Chicago has been in line with Harriman's infamous tactics, though more blunderingly conducted.

These Simon-Morgan Socialists of Chicago held what they called a "joint" convention July 4. They are incorporated as the "Socialist Labor Party," a few weeks ago they voted themselves the "Social Democratic Party," and in their "joint" convention, under the absurd leadership of the astute gentlemen before mentioned, they decided that they were the "Socialist Party." Their "joint" convention was an abortion, only four Social Democrats being present, and these from a branch with the majority of its members opposed to the things being done in these days in the name of Socialism and "unity." They nominated Comrade F. G. Strickland (who was not present) on their county ticket against his protest and he authorizes the Herald to say that he repudiates that nomination.

No union between the Social Democratic party in Illinois and the Simon-Morgan Socialists has been effected nor is any desirable, and all reports sent out to the contrary are purposely intended to deceive.

IOWA STATE CONVENTION

A convention of the Social Democratic party of Iowa is hereby called to meet at the city of Oskaloosa on Friday, Aug. 10, 1900.

Owing to the fact that there are thousands of unattached Socialists in Iowa as yet not affiliated with branches, we have deemed it proper to issue the call so as to admit a reasonable number of Socialists from each county in addition to and distinct from the representation of the branches. Therefore Socialists throughout the state are invited to attend and participate in the work of the convention.

Each county will be permitted to have five votes of this character.

Each branch of the Social Democratic party and each section of the Social Labor party will be permitted as many votes as there are members of the branch or section, and the members present from such branch or section will be permitted to cast the full vote of the membership of said organization. The convention will assemble at 10 o'clock a. m., and in addition to such other matters as may properly come before that body will transact the following business:

1. The nomination of a full state and electoral ticket.
2. The nomination in district causes, so far as possible, candidates for congress.
3. The formation of a permanent organization of Iowa Socialists.

A. W. Ricker, State Organizer.

CONVENTION CALL

A congressional and legislative convention of the Social Democratic party will be held at Nagles Hall, Blue Island avenue, Saturday, July 21, at 8 o'clock, to which branches 2, 3, 5, 6 and 19 should send delegates under same rules as the county convention. Southside Bohemians please take action.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Comrade F. A. Kulp, of Battle Creek, Mich., writes: "Last night the Social Democratic party for the County of Calhoun, held a mass convention in this city and nominated a County Committee. A full county ticket will be placed in the field this fall. Rev. J. Stitt Wilson, of Chicago, has just finished a week's campaign in the city in the interest of Socialism. It has made us votes. In fact the large S. D. P. vote in this city is due to Mr. Wilson's effort in the past."

The Cleveland Citizen makes the announcement that the two parties have "amalgamated." This statement is false. A resolution proposing "union" was defeated in the state convention by the Social Democratic delegates, the vote being 17 to 2.

Miss Mary E. Coleson, who has recently joined the staff of workers at Hull House, lectured before Branch 9 of the Social Democratic party. Miss Coleson will take up the work of the late Mrs. A. P. Stevens.

Comrade Michael Britzius is laying sick in Alexian Brothers hospital. He sent greetings to the convention and hopes soon to be restored to health.

NOMINATIONS CALLED FOR

The Executive Board requests the Branches to make nominations for a new board, to consist as provided for by the constitution, of nine members.

TO IOWA SOCIALISTS

The Western Passenger Association has granted a rate of one and one-third fare to our state convention providing 10 delegates attend. Let our immediate efforts be toward making this convention a great success. I feel sure that we can secure an attendance of that number. In addition to the convention speakers, Comrade Debs will be present and deliver his lecture in the evening.

A. W. RICKER.

NOON HOUR WISDOM

I have just been reading, with an intermingling of pity, amusement and sorrow, a circular letter issued by a number of men styling themselves the state executive board of the S. D. P. of the state of Washington. It is quite a lengthy document, and is signed by A. G. Siebert, Herman Culver, J. D. Curtis, H. F. Titus and George B. Boomer. It breathes so fully the spirit which the Social Democratic party was organized to oppose, that I will ask my listeners' indulgence while I give it a little attention. It sets out by charging that there were ulterior motives for the issuance of the manifesto concerning the unification project, and goes on to show that the ulterior purpose was nothing more or less than the turning of the Social Democratic movement over to Mid-Road Populism! I should not be surprised to see such a screed in a paper like De Leon's People or Benham's Class Struggle, for the S. L. P. has lived on such emanations for years, lived its gauged, fanatical life, to the disgust of all high-minded, sensible men. But when a state committee of a party organized on such self-respecting lines as ours gives out such a characteristically S. L. P.-ish "official" document, one doesn't know whether to feel sorrow, pity or amusement.

One of the great features of the S. L. P. for years has been its capacity for suspicion. Once let some wild and woolly suspicion get into a member's noddle, no matter how far-fetched and silly it might be, it was nursed for a while, till by psychological circumlocution, it was actually believed by the owner of the noddle, and then committed to paper and sent on for publication in the party press. It was all part of the gospel of suspicion and hate upon which the S. L. P. "thrived." When the abominable and despotic rule of the S. L. P. became wholly intolerable to decent-minded Socialists of the country, the Social Democratic party was organized, and under its broad-gauge plan of administration and propaganda, American Socialism went forward by leaps and bounds. It at once demonstrated how utterly wrong and pernicious had been the rule of the S. L. P., and as it pursued the even tenor of its way it gave new hope to true Socialists and showed them that it was possible for the movement to attain to as dignified proportions and as to great relative numerical strength as the movement in such countries as Germany, France and Belgium.

But immediately there went up a cry from the S. L. P. that the new party was merely an asylum for all sorts of characters, or, to put it in the words of a recent writer in an anti-DeLeon paper, "capitalist politicians out of a job, adventurers, workmen both honest and dishonest—an unclean membership." It was charged that we took in any one, whether Socialist or not, and that we were thus little more than a middle-class party. How nicely time has given the lie to this I need hardly point out. That we took in members without holding an inquisition over them is true. We barred no honest person who pledged his desire for the collective ownership and operation of the means of production and distribution. And often we took in men who had very unclear notions as to Socialism. But it is a noticeable fact that such men soon got clear ideas on the subject, and that it did not injure the sharpness of our battle line against capitalism to thus take in raw recruits. We did not brandish in the faces of possible recruits a lot of high-sounding, academic stuff about constant and variable capital, relative surplus value and the like (telling them to believe or be damned), things they should not trouble themselves about until they had become deep enough students of social science to understand. We repelled no one in such a way, but welcomed them as beginners or advanced learners, as their case might be, believing that in a natural way they would sooner or later get to the same plane of clear-headedness. In one of the recent Socialist congresses in Germany one of the leaders of the movement frankly confessed that he had not only not read Karl Marx to any extent, but that he found it almost impossible to clearly understand his writings. In this country such a declaration would have brought condemnation upon the man by the S. L. P.

Desirable as it is that the workers in the movement for the overthrow of the present system should be clear in economics and social science, it is absurd to suppose that all can be, or that all will have the capacity to go clear to the pinnacle of the study. Especially absurd is it to think of such a thing of a party made up principally of wage-earners—men who have little or no academic training. To poll-parrot a lot of academic phrases, as so many of the rank and file of the S. L. P., is simply to make the movement a mere sect and to render its propaganda largely waste effort. Socialism must be preached in the common language of the people, using the words and terms common to everyday conversation, and this the Social Democratic party has done, and it has been successful. And the late strife was not merely a question of a union of organizations, but an effort to keep the movement on these lines and to prevent it from getting back into the old habit.

When some of the Socialists of Washington talk of our turning to Mid-Road Populism they make themselves extremely ridiculous, and at the same time show that they are heavily permeated with S. L. P.-ism. The Social Democratic party has won many a good man to Socialism by the tactics which these Washington pseudo-S. D. P.'s condemn. They are incapable of taking a large view of affairs. They have my pity. The broad-minded comrades of Washington ought to repudiate that state committee, and do it soon.

ECONOMIC TERMS AND PHRASES

A. P. Hazell, in London Justice

Exchange

Exchange is the basis of the capitalist system; abolish exchange, and capitalism is no more. The origin of barter goes farther back than recorded history, but for practical purposes it may be assumed that it commenced on the borders of pastoral communities, with the superfluities of wealth. Exchange implies individual property, buyers and sellers, each recognizing that the other has a right to alienate his commodity as the individual owner and possessor of the product which he desires to barter.

Frequent exchanges give rise to the need of some handy mode of reckoning, and hence we get the money form of commodity. When a barter is made each owner compares his product with the other, and by that means reckons its exchange value. By frequent exchanges a stable commodity like corn becomes selected for the purpose of reckoning, and is always accepted in return for other commodities because it is recognized as being socially useful, and one which can at any time be exchanged for others. In a pastoral community, corn and live stock would be taken as equivalents in exchange; in a nomadic community, skins. In a more civilized community, metals in the order of iron, copper, brass, silver and gold. The equivalent commodity which we take in exchange is known as the money commodity, the one recognized by the state for the purpose of legal payment or legal discharge of debt. The money commodity affords peculiar facilities for accumulation of riches and a purchasing power over wealth. The special use of money applied to industry, inaugurated the capitalist system of production. The less restrictions there are on freedom of exchange, the more progress will the capitalist system make. Though this is now generally recognized, protective clauses are still made by nations to give them an advantage over others. "Freedom of contract," "the sacred rights of property," "the principle of laissez faire," are all phrases based on exchange arising out of individual property. With the growth of the capitalist system a class has obtained possession of the means and instruments of production, and a proletarian class has arisen which has had to sell its labor power at a subsistence price. Here we have an antagonism between classes, a system of production inimical to the welfare of the community considered as a whole, and yet conforming to the principles of free exchange, which, to the majority, appear to be based on equity and the welfare of the community.

The growth of capitalism superseded primitive individual production and gave way to a more extended form of co-operative production. What we call the handicraft period of production, while favorable to the cultivation of the artistic faculties of the producer, was not conducive to the full expansion of man's productive powers, as it limited co-operative effort by restricting the instruments of production at his command.

The capitalist by his greater command over the instruments of production is enabled to bring together large groups of workers, and to produce on a more extensive scale, and by division and sub-division of labor to enormously increase the productive power of his workers as a whole; compared with individual producers. The substance of exchange value being labor, the producer who can produce an equal article at the lower cost of production in labor than his competitor has the power to oust him from the market; consequently co-operation gives the victory to that capitalist who works most in conformity with that law. Our own experience teaches us that the individual producer gives way to the joint-stock company and the joint-stock company to the syndicate, and the syndicate to the trust, and the trust in its turn to the municipality and collectivization of industries by the community. Co-operation is a law of association, which steadily expands, overcoming all obstacles and restrictions.

Capitalism owes its strength and influence to increased facilities it has afforded man to co-operate. To it is due the wonderful increase of wealth. The workers by their power of co-operation are capable of producing wealth even beyond the dreams of avarice, and are only now prevented from doing so by the conflicting interests of capitalists, whose primary object is not the increase of wealth for society as a whole, but the increase of that portion of wealth which they may individually appropriate to themselves.

Conflict

The interests of capitalists as competitors are opposed to each other, and they use their capital with a view of ousting each other from the markets of the world. Each capital is arraigned against the other in competitive conflict, and, so likewise, are the co-operative group of workers set in motion by each particular capital. Each group does not conflict in person, but it is none the less real because that conflict is transferred to the commodities on the market and fights by the weapon of cheapness. In the capitalist system conflict stares us in the face everywhere. Each capitalist tries to overcome his competitor. And in this struggle he has the support of that group of workers which his capital employs. Their immediate subsistence depends upon his success, and though they may outwardly express a certain amount of sympathy for their unfortunate brethren, yet they feel an inward satisfaction at their misfortune as they recognize that their fellow-workers represent a fallen foe which might have been victorious over themselves.

It is these individualistic and anti-social feelings engendered by conflict which makes it so difficult to unite the workers on a common platform for their economic emancipation.

Both capitalists and workers live and die in an atmosphere of competition and conflict until they accept it as a natural order of things, over which they may lament but cannot alter. There is much to foster this conception. In animal life they see the drastic and unrelenting law of conflict operating all around them, and also that evolution has furnished them with weapons to carry on the struggle. Philosophers and scientists have become so impressed by the continuous and persistent phenomena of conflict that they have convinced themselves that progress is only possible by a specious law which they term "natural selection," or "survival of the fittest."

MARSEILLES HYMN

Ye sons of freedom, wake to glory,
 Hark! Hark! what myriads bid you rise;
 Your children, wives, and grandmothers hoary,
 Behold their tears, and hear their cries,
 Behold their tears and hear their cries;
 Shall lawless tyrants, mischief breeding
 With hireling host, a ruffian band,
 Affright and desolate the land,
 While liberty and truth lie bleeding?
 Arise, arise ye brave,
 Your dying country save,
 March on, march on, all hearts resolved,
 On liberty or death!

With luxury and pride surrounded,
 The bold, insatiate despots dare,
 Their thirst for gold and power unbounded,
 To mete and vend the light and air,
 To mete and vend the light and air;
 Like beasts of burden would they load us,
 Like gods would bid their slaves adore—
 But man is man, and who is more?
 Then shall they longer lash and goad us?

Arise, arise, ye brave,
 Your dying country save,
 March on, march on, all hearts resolved
 On liberty or death!

Oh, Liberty! can men resign thee,
 Once having felt thy glorious flame?
 Can tyrants' bars and bolts confine thee?
 And thus thy noble spirit tame?

And thus thy noble spirit tame?
 Too long our country wept, bemoaning
 The tyrant's grasp on town and field,
 But freedom is our sword and shield,
 And all their arts are unavailing.

Arise, arise, ye brave,
 Your dying country save,
 March on, march on, all hearts resolved
 On liberty or death!

Oh, Liberty! can men resign thee,
 Once having felt thy glorious flame?
 Can tyrants' bars and bolts confine thee?
 And thus thy noble spirit tame?

And thus thy noble spirit tame?
 Too long our country wept, bemoaning
 The tyrant's grasp on town and field,
 But freedom is our sword and shield,
 And all their arts are unavailing.

Arise, arise, ye brave,
 Your dying country save,
 March on, march on, all hearts resolved
 On liberty or death!

Oh, Liberty! can men resign thee,
 Once having felt thy glorious flame?
 Can tyrants' bars and bolts confine thee?
 And thus thy noble spirit tame?

And thus thy noble spirit tame?
 Too long our country wept, bemoaning
 The tyrant's grasp on town and field,
 But freedom is our sword and shield,
 And all their arts are unavailing.

RIP VAN WINKLE REDIVIVUS

By James Allman, New York.

About two years ago I received the following peremptory notice written upon a postal card:

"Comrade:—Go to Yonkers at once. Get there about noon or as early in the afternoon as possible and assist the comrades there to fix up certain differences which unfortunately exist among them. Then speak in the open air at Getty Square at 8 p. m.

"Yours fraternally,

The time of the day was 11:30 a. m. and I was occupied peacefully reading Edward Bellamy's "Equality," a book which I had just borrowed. I immediately flung the book down upon the table amid the manuscripts unfinished, finished and rejected—principally rejected—pipes, tobacco, books, matches, newspapers, pamphlets, letters, etc., which go to compose in their heterogeneous collectivity the literary litter on the table of my furnished apartment.

Rapidly making the necessary change of clothing, i. e., putting on my coat and vest and the only clean collar I had, I quickly picked a few notes and thinking I might need something to read I snatched up the book also and hurrying out soon found myself on the New York Central Railroad, rushing upward toward Yonkers. The train dashed shrieking and rattling through the smoky and hideous tunnel which extends from the Grand Central Depot many blocks and at length emerged into the open air near One Hundredth street. The tall rows of flats, wadry and monotonous, swept past on either side and I looked up at the windows from whence looked down the pale faces of sickly women and children and I shuddered with a sensation of disgust and weariness.

Presently patches of parched greensward appeared between the houses and I felt the approach of that repulsively genteel and respectable borderland between God's beautiful open country and man's filthy overcrowded city, called the suburbs. I hate the suburbs and the contemptible middle class denizens thereof; hence I reached for my book, but upon opening it I laughed heartily.

In my hurry I had picked up Washington Irving's "Sketch Book" instead of Edward Bellamy's "Equality." It is very refreshing to re-read the books of one's childhood and it was not without some relish mixed with pleasant memories that I began again to peruse the misadventures of that delightful schnapps-drinking, wife-hating, never-working, lovable vagabond, Rip Van Winkle.

The train dashed across the trestle bridge which spans the Spuyter Duyvil creek and looking up from the book I beheld the beautiful blue Hudson sweeping onward before me, its myriad moving waves flashing like glowing sapphires in the sunlight, while its broad majestic deeps extended in cool and kindly embrace around the feet of the tall green mountains on either side.

A resident of a large city who seldom sees fair Mother Nature attired in her glorious mantle, green and bedecked with those fairest and brightest of all jewels, the many-hued early summer flowers, gazes upon her with the rapture of a lover who meets but seldom a beautiful mistress.

I gazed upon the mighty mountains, their shoulders garbed in green woodland, their heads crowned with coronets of clouds and their forms reflected in the azure mirror of the waters. But suddenly I saw something that irritated me. The sides of the mountains had been in places denuded of all trees in order to make room for the palatial residences of the multi-millionaires who dwell along the Hudson. What appeared like small white spots in the far distance I knew to be the more than regal palaces of the Goulds, Rockefellers, Whitneys, etc., who have their residences at Tarrytown, Dobbs Ferry and other places along the Rhine of America. Disgusted with the proximity of these plutocrats I exclaimed: "Is it not possible to escape from them?" I turned in disgust from these reminders of modern commercial greed and looked across one dark blue river, but even as I did so a rush, roar and shrieking whistle accompanied by a cloud of smoke which enveloped the sweeping form of an express train, recalled to me the fact that the plutocrats not merely crowned the summits with their castles but also claimed the roadway on both sides of the river as their means of profit and plunder, owning the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad on the east and the West Shore Railroad on the west. Truly is this river called the Rhine of America, for do not the ruined remains of castellated towers and frowning fortresses along the banks of Germany's Rhine to the present day proclaim that in medieval times the robber knights and barons were wont to descend upon the unwary trader who traveled along the banks of that river?

Along the Hudson the modern robber barons have also their castles on the heights, they also levy tribute upon all travelers along the river banks, but they do not do so in the bold, reckless and romantic manner of their German prototypes. The difference between the ancient and the modern robber baron is that the former defied his feudal sovereign and the law of the land and often bravely faced risk of life and limb when the trader whom he attacked chanced to be armed and accompanied by a retinue, while the latter collects his plunder in a cowardly manner under the protection of the law and runs no risk whatever.

Regretfully looking upon the scenery of the valley my mind reverted to the legend of Sleepy Hollow and I murmured:

"How beautiful this valley must have been before it was marred by hideous modern capitalism. How lovely this river and landscape in the days of Rip Van Winkle!"

"Did I hear you mention my name?" asked a quiet voice at my elbow.

Startled, I looked around and found that Rip Van Winkle stood beside me. In some strange and unaccountable manner I had left the railroad car and stood upon an eminent part of the old Boston road from whence I could look down upon the Hudson river, flowing and winding some hundreds of feet below me in the valley.

There stood Rip Van Winkle attired in his old-fashioned, quaint eighteenth century garb, a battered hat which had once been three-cornered, but the flaps of which spread out around his long white flowing locks, a loose full-skirted hunting coat and a pair of much mended knee breeches which ended at the knees in leather leggings. Somehow I seemed to be quite at home with him and when he again remarked:

"You mentioned my name. How comes it that you know me?" I answered:

"I think I was introduced to you by a certain gentleman of New York city called Washington Irving. Pray tell me what you have been doing since your unpleasant awakening, about which that gentleman told me?"

"Well," replied Rip, "that's quite a long, sad story. Let us sit on the fence while I tell you my narrative."

"But you see," I remarked, "that there is nothing but those miserable new-fangled barbed wire fences on both sides of the road and is it not written somewhere that he who sitteth down upon a barbed wire fence shall rise again?"

We stretched ourselves upon the narrow strip of greensward which skirted the dusty high road and Rip Van Winkle began as follows:

"After my unpleasant experiences following upon my awakening about which you appear to know, I returned to Sleepy Hollow and went to sleep again. How long I slept I cannot tell you; I simply know that I was rudely awakened by an overseer of the estate, as he called himself, who informed me that he would have me arrested for vagrancy if I did not get up and move on right away. I did so and found that all the pleasant scenery was enclosed by these hideous barbed wire fences and perceived far off on the hillside an extensive but extremely showy modern palace which I was informed was the residence of a wealthy plutocrat who owned all the beautiful country thereabout. Instinctively I thought of those British aristocrats who in colonial times not only had their large enclosed estates in the mother country, but were in some places introducing their slavish semi-feudal institutions into the colonies. I really began to wonder whether what I had heard in my previous awakening about a certain George Washington and a free republic in this country had not been merely a dream and whether the descendants of King George and his aristocratic government still ruled this land and had developed their monarchical institutions here. I traveled down the Hudson and everywhere I went I found the same fenced in estates and large mansions and every time I tried to lay down and go to sleep I was awakened, threatened with arrest and called a tramp. Brutality, hurry, avarice and misery confronted me on every side and I found myself no longer regarded as in the kindly old days of yore as an interesting vagabond, but called a loafer and blamed for my idleness. Now, indolence is not always an evil."

"I quite agree with you, Rip," I remarked, as I yawned, stretched myself in the sunlight and contemplatively puffed a cloud of tobacco smoke upward. "Indolence is said to be the mother of all vice, but she is a kindly mother, even though her children do not turn out to be very respectable. It has also been said that indolence is an indication of a reflective temperament."

"Well," continued Rip Van Winkle, "I eventually reached New York city. That terrible desert of skyscrapers and tenements, peopled with the vitiated bodies of men, women and children whose souls have died, with its flaunting vice, its ostentatious opulence, its sordid degrading poverty and filth shocked my healthy old-fashioned colonial mind and nearly drove me to despair. I, Rip Van Winkle, really could not sleep for some time. At length tired out I stretched myself out in a doorway located upon a noisy thoroughfare misnamed by the 'very peaceful and pastoral sounding name of the Bowery, but I was soon awakened by a policeman banging me upon the soles of my shoes with a long stick."

I who know the Bowery could not refrain from laughter at Rip's quiet unsophisticated recital and turned aside to hide my merriment.

"I found myself," continued my companion, "eventually compelled to enter a common lodging house. What a repulsive den it was! The place was dark and reeking with offensive odors, the rows of beds one above the other, 'double-deckers' they call them, the sheets dirty and swarming with vermin and many of the lodgers were drunken and noisy. I tried to sleep in one of the beds but could not on account of the "Stop!" I cried; "don't say that word. It's coarse. You mean the pediculus vestimenti," giving the Latin entomological term for the active little insects to which Rip was about to refer openly and vulgarly. I acquired the habit of throwing learned Latin bluffs through associating with a certain sect of ultra-scientific Socialists in New York city.

"I call them by a shorter name," rejoined Rip; "but I think the mighty name you give them suits them better because they are so mightily pernicious. They, oh!" cried he, scratching ingloriously at the tattered remains of the seat of his knee-breeches.

I moved quickly and nervously away, for I have a wholesome dread of the ubiquitous and aggressive little pediculus vestimenti.

"Well, in brief," said Rip, "I can find no quiet spot to sleep in any longer. Driven from place to place, abused, vilified, misunderstood, starving, homeless and despised, I find myself where you see me, no longer the interesting vagabond I was when you last met me, but a modern, disreputable tramp. Can you tell me why this is so?"

"Your drowsiness," I answered, "has been disturbed by what we modern Socialists call the capitalist system and if it has at last succeeded in waking you up, Rip, there is some hope that it may awaken that other individual who alone beats your record for drowsiness—viz., the modern wage slave."

"Do you not remember, Rip Van Winkle, that before you fell into your first long slumber King George III. and his despotic government had conserved to themselves not only the political power of England, but also were extending by unjust and oppressive legislation their tyrannous sway over the colonies of America?"

"Yes," rejoined Rip, "and I also remember how the colonists arose, overthrew the government of King George and placed all political liberty in the hands of the people by establishing a free republic, and there were happy homes and a peaceful people along the valley of the beautiful Hudson. But whence this frightful change?"

"I will tell you," I replied. "During the course of time commerce and industry have developed, but all commercial and industrial resources are controlled by a modern monarch far more despotic than George III.—viz., Monarch Monopoly. All means of transportation and production, all railroads, canals, telegraphs, telephones, all factories, mines, workshops, etc., are monopolized by a limited number of capitalists, and most of these capitalists are formed together into a small group of avaricious plutocrats who have come to a common understanding among themselves as to how they can control all industries, and have thus formed what we term monopolies or trusts. The mass of people being dependent upon these trusts for work, wages and their very life, are reduced to a condition of abject servitude. Hence the want, misery and suffering which you perceive on every side. But a great and glorious evangel of labor emancipation is spreading rapidly through the land. That evangel is called Socialism. It demands that all land and all the means of transportation, communication, commerce and industry should be owned by a government of the people, and that the people through the medium of that government should become their own employers. The noble truths of this gospel are spreading rapidly, and soon King Capital will be de-throned and an industrial republic be established, even as King George was overthrown and a political republic established a century and a quarter ago."

"Then again will this fair valley of the Hudson, and all the valleys, hillsides and plains of this broad, rich land of America be peopled with free, happy and contented citizens. Then will the blithe and happy song of the emancipated and free laborer be borne upon the waves of this flowing river. Then will the breezes carry like the perfume of the flowers in the spring time the musical laughter of free, healthy children. Then will the smiling blue waters of the flowing Hudson reflect the large, laughing eyes and graceful forms of magnificent maidens, strong and athletic as the goddesses of ancient Greece. Then will—"

"Crotona! All out for Yonkers!! Don't you want to get out here? Hurry up! Do you think the New York Central is going to stop while you sit there sleeping?"

I started and awoke. My vision of Rip Van Winkle had been but a dream. I was seated in the railroad car, the open book upon my lap and a brakeman standing over me berating my laziness in vigorous tones. I arose in that sour mood peculiar to the recently awakened and used in my wrath a few unprintable expressions. I stepped from the car, but as the train was already pulling out, my foot slipped and I rolled over on the platform, and there sat blinking and looking ruefully after the notes of a lecture which I had prepared to inflict upon the patient denizens of Yonkers, but which were scattered by the suction of the train.

A comrade of Yonkers, who was on the platform to meet me, made no attempt to conceal his amusement at my discomfiture, and perceiving him, I again relapsed into the unprintable.

Gathering myself, my book, my notes and my temper, I accompanied him up the steep Main street, which climbs the hillside from the river to Getty square.

"Well," grumbled my comrade, "you look half asleep. Those New Yorker couldn't send anybody but you, eh? You're the sleepest of the whole bunch."

I yawned and was about to reply sarcastically, when suddenly I saw an old beggarman with long, white hair and tattered clothing, who reminded me forcibly of my recent dream. He seemed to look at me with such sad, pleading eyes that impulsively I stepped toward him.

"Well, where are you, rushing to now?" asked my companion.

"Look at that quaint, picturesque beggar!" I exclaimed.

He looked in the direction indicated and remarked, with an inimitable drawl: "Say, doesn't he look like Rip Van Winkle?"

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes' first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism; the brotherhood of man. As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

FIRST NATIONAL CAMPAIGN SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Plant High the Banner of Social Democracy and March Forward

CONDITIONS TO CONFRONT

A Change from One Capitalist Party to Another is Not a Change of Play,
But Only of Players

History repeats itself; again four years have rolled by and we, the citizens of the United States, are once more confronted with a presidential campaign. The professional politicians of both old parties organize their forces, manufacture issues, work out platforms, shape party pledges, give birth to campaign catchwords, flood the country with "educational" campaign literature and oral eloquence, denounce violently their opponents and profess their great love and admiration for the dear (Oh, how dear!) common people. The thoughtless crowd, the cattle of the ballot box, shout and whoop and sell their rights of primogeniture for a mess of nasty pottage, to either one or the other of the old parties. After the campaign is over there may be some change in the personal constituency of the actors on the political arena, some shifting and readjustment of the stage decorations. The play enacted, however, will remain ever the same—the exploitation of the unorganized many by the organized few, the merciless exploitation of the weak by the strong, the honest and simple-minded by the crafty and unscrupulous.

Did I say ever? No—not forever, but as long as any of the old parties, immaterial which, will be in power. And that cannot last very long. The middle class parties have no vital principles to incorporate and a political party without vital principles is like a body without a soul.

The dense ignorance and criminal good-nature of the people may for a short while allow the old parties to preserve the outward appearance of life. The mone-tel-upharsin of the old parties is, however, written with fiery letters on the walls of the modern Beshazzars of Commercialism and Capitalism.

The Social Democratic Party is starting its first national campaign under the brightest auspices. There is a demand, a pressing need for a great, honest third, national political party, a party which will unite all enlightened, public-spirited men who are opposed to our present commercial and capitalistic system and its corollaries: the management of national affairs by the hirelings of the capitalistic and commercial classes in the interests of these classes solely, and to the detriment of all the rest of the people, of toiling humanity without distinction of class.

The strength of the capitalistic parties in our days is not in that class itself, but in the ignorance and indolence of the people in general and especially in the utter demoralization of the capitalistic mobs.

By the term capitalistic mob we mean the thoughtless crowd of people who—far from being capitalists themselves and from having a ghost of a show to become capitalists—are always ready to back up the institution of commercialism and capitalism out of sheer stupidity and despicable success worship. The power of the pro-slavery party of the South, just before the abolition, consisted likewise in the slavish trend of mind of the thoughtless crowd of retainers who could never afford to own a slave themselves. This ignorance, this indolence and demoralization were the most formidable enemies of party for abolition of black slavery.

And the same ignorance, indolence and demoralization are most formidable enemies of the Social Democratic Party, the party that undertakes the task of abolishing the slavery of the white wage workers.

The surest way to victory for the Social Democratic party is by public enlightenment, and the best means are agitation and propaganda.

Let us shake up the torpor of the masses; let us mold and shape public opinion according to the national and moral principles of Social Democracy; let us direct public sentiment toward the right channel in favor of the disinherited and down-trodden, but most worthy part of humanity, the toiling classes; let us arouse public consciousness to the absurdities and wrongs of our present social and economic system; let us appeal to the highest and noblest instincts of human nature; let us point out the inherent solidarity of the interests of the human race and the futility of all class distinctions; let us rise to the level of the aspirations of the greatest leaders of humanity and the victory will be won.

The Social Democratic party enters into its first national campaign with no sordid aims and purposes of office-hunting or self-aggrandizement. The party leader (are there any? It seems to me that every member of the Social Democratic party is a leader) have no personal ambitions, except the ambition of a great inspiring cause.

The Social Democratic party is fully aware that the presidential election is the axis around which all the political corruption of the country moves. It considers the office of the president in its present shape a menace to the freedom of the people and is certainly opposed to the present system of election by proxy. It detests all the tactics of the old parties. It uses the presidential campaign as an excellent opportunity for missionary work. It has to fight the old parties with their own weapons on their own ground.

The Social Democratic party has to open the eyes of the people to the evils of our present public institutions; to unmask fools, who parade as sages; rogues, pretending to be models of honesty; charlatans, who pretend to be eminent specialists; show the hideous feature of salaried back-yard politicians posing as public servants, to show the difference between the purposeless bunning of superfluous officeholders and earnest work in the interest of the community, it has to lift the curtain of many a snug corner of our administration, honey-combed with corruption.

The Social Democratic party has a great deal to do in that line of work. At the same time, however, it has to keep before the eyes of the people the great principles and ideals it represents. The destructive and constructive work of the party must go on at the same time.

Let us plant our banner high and keep it pure from all the pollution of political compromises and trickery.

A clean work needs clean hands. Great principles and lofty ideas demand a great and lofty man as their representative. Such a man is the presidential candidate of the Social Democratic party—Eugene V. Debs.

A truer heart and purer mind, a more sincere friend of toiling humanity has not been born on earth in our country and century.

Let us, then, all do our very best in order to insure as many votes for him as we possibly can. Every vote cast for Debs means a vote for the improvement of the prospects of our own nation; means a vote for a better, nobler, more human life; a vote for a better future for the coming generation.

A FABLE

There was once a burglar who broke into the residence of a Doctor of Divinity, with the purpose of benevolently assimilating sundry valuable articles possessed by the reverend gentlemen. While the burglar was engaged in this task, he was surprised by the clergyman, whom he at once covered with a revolver to prevent him from making an outcry.

The pious man resolved to appeal to the burglar's conscience, and exhorted him to refrain from the intended robbery, telling him that if he persisted in his evil ways, he would lose his precious soul. "That would have been true," replied the burglar, "had you preached it to me before I pried open your window; but now that I have commenced the theft, these moral questions have nothing to do with the case."

The clergyman was greatly shocked at this reply, and the lack of morality which it indicated. "My dear brother," he said, "do you not know that it is always wrong to commit a crime? Repent while there is yet time. While the lamp holds out to burn the vilest sinner may return."

The burglar shook his head. "A year ago," he said, "your appeal might have moved me to repentance. But it is now too late."

"Oh, sinful man," cried the D. D., "what horrid crime have you committed that your conscience is so dulled?"

"This is my first offence," replied the burglar. "But last Sunday I heard you preach a sermon about 'Our Duty in the Transvaal.' I then learnt from your holy lips that when crime was once begun, it was the duty of every patriotic citizen to assist in completing it. As I am nothing if not patriotic, I will thank you to help me pack your silverware in my bag. Otherwise I will be compelled by manifest destiny to fill you full of lead."—Justice.

JACK POTTS' OBSERVATIONS ON THINGS AND PERSONS

Brother Passmore is Heard From

Who Get Rich

INTERESTING TO WORKINGMEN

Servile Tools of Mammon Flayed by a Man of Courage and Convictions—Workers
Arouse to Call of Duty

Mr. Workingman, here is what Matthew Arnold, one of England's greatest literary men, said a few years ago: "Ask yourself if you do not sometimes feel in yourselves a sense that, in spite of the strenuous efforts for good of so many excellent persons amongst us, we begin somehow to flounder and to beat the air; that we seem to be finding ourselves stopped on this line of advance and on that, and to be threatened with a sort of standstill. It is that we are trying to live on with a social organization of which the day is over." That is just what the Socialist has been telling you all these years!

Hear what General Booth of the Salvation Army has to say: "I am quite satisfied that these multitudes, these starving, hungry crowds, will not be saved in their present circumstances. All the clergymen, tract distributors, sick visitors and every one else who cares about the salvation of the poor must make up their minds to that. The poor must be helped out of their present social miseries." Certainly no one can accuse General Booth of being one of "those terrible Socialists!"

The great Standard Oil university, the University of Chicago, will have a Russian chair. Certain Polish citizens object, declaring that the Polish language is far superior to that of the Muscovite, while the literature of Poland is incomparably finer than that of Russia. The Chicago Daily News of July 11 says concerning this matter: "The Pole was a man of refinement, culture and advancement when the Russian was still a fierce semi-barbarian of half-Asiatic mold. It is only natural that the Polish language should be richer, that the Polish literature should far surpass that of the conquering Slav." But the News urges that there are other reasons not literary or intellectual for a preference for Russian; and what do you suppose those reasons are? Why, "the great and growing bond of commerce between Russia and America." No matter in what direction you go, you bump against the Commercial Instinct. In fact that same Commercial Instinct is the greatest obstruction today in the path of the world's progress, and it must be removed. The press of the United States—yes, and of the world—knows this, but it is handcuffed and don't dare tell the truth; truth-telling might curtail the advertising! You must depend on the reform portion of the press, and especially Socialist publications, for the truth. The latter are edited and supported by poor men and are not conducted for "what there is in it." Everything these days is subservient to the Commercial Instinct. Preachers and educators bow to it. That's why the workingman don't hustle out to church!

"Rev. Mr. Passmore Wields a Meat Ax on the Methodist Bishops," is the heading of a salty five-column article in the Denver Sunday Post of June 24 by Rev. F. F. Passmore, who was fired from the church because he is a Socialist. It shows that the dear Methodist Episcopal brethren are keenly alive to the Commercial Instinct! Mr. Passmore says that the keynote of the conference was sounded when General Rushing (appropriate name!) published in the Daily Christian Advocate that "One of the crying needs of the Methodist church today is more millionaires and multi-millionaires." Bishop Joyce prayed: "Lord bless our men of wealth," but he didn't pray for the widows, orphans and toiling millions. Probably the bishop had in mind that cynical saying, "God bless the rich; the poor can hustle." According to Mr. Passmore a bishop's job is a "snap" and bishops are thrifty: "In a world where there are so many people needy, in want, suffering, and starving no man can be a rich man and a Christian. The old prophets were not rich men; Christ was not a rich man; the apostles were not rich men. No, these men were not rich men, neither did they uphold the saloons, slavery, gambling and oppressors. But Bishop Ames died worth $400,000; Bishop Simpson died worth $100,000; Bishop Peck died worth a good fortune; Bishop Newman died worth $50,000. These men were rich, for they stood by the slaveholders and other rich oppressors."

Mr. Passmore thinks the church had the opportunity of the ages at this conference, but it chose the evil side, and "Ichabod is now written over the doors of her churches, colleges and universities," which translated means that the church's name is "Dennis." He says the rules of the church forbid its members to rent premises for liquor houses or to drink liquor; yet when McKinley, who is a member of the church, visited the conference in 1896 the assemblage rose to its feet in a huge demonstration of its joyous approval, notwithstanding the fact that at that very time he had property in Canton rented for saloon purposes.

Mr. Passmore goes on to say that "I once had great respect for the bishops, elders and ministers in general, for I thought that they were true and courageous men of lofty souls who had risen to the sublime heights of unselfishness, and were what they professed to be; but after I joined the conference I met them in many places, and under different conditions when I found that they were false men, living two lives; wolves in sheep's clothing, hypocrites; I found them as Christ said of the hypocrites of His day: 'This people draweth nigh unto Me with their mouth, and honor Me with their lips; but their heart is far from Me.' It is sad to think that our bishops and the leading preachers of the church are living for the fine linen, purple and broadcloth that they can wear, and the best cuts of beefsteak they can eat. They live and move and have their being on no higher plane than the common worldling, politician and saloon man."

Well, they chose to worship Mammon rather than God, and "Verily they have their reward," Jesus said.

I have no quarrel with true religion, and I revere the names of Jesus and Buddha. But the baseball bat is kept for "churchianity"—sectarianism.

A sergeant of the United States army just back from the Philippines says that the natives are "too lazy to work." Well, just wait until the white man gets his infamous industrial burden adjusted to their backs; then they will be mighty glad to hustle perennially for a bare existence!

"Corporations have no souls." Neither do most of their managers, apparently; but they do have intestines!

A man is "class-conscious" when he recognizes the great fact that there are just two classes of people—non-owners and owners. The latter already possess 83 per cent of the wealth, and they have both feet in the trough after the remaining 17 per cent!

Mr. Workingman, open the windows of your soul and let the fresh air of industrial freedom in!

JACK POTTS.

NO WORKINGMAN SHOULD MARRY

"No workingman should marry or aspire to be the head of a family of children."

This statement was made by a capitalist in Chicago, when, in the pending labor troubles there, a body of workingmen represented to him that their wives and children are suffering for the necessities of life.

The words of the capitalists have been heralded over the country as sensational. Yet the declaration they convey is as matter-of-fact as the wages paid labor.

The tendency is always to pay a man just enough to keep him working. And this does not include his family. Wages are fixed by the necessities of single men. The percentage of single men at work is always greater than the percentage of married men. Statistics show this. If one of the latter refuse to work on what the former can live—very well; let him go. There is a single man to take his place and glad to get it. So competition tends to keep down wages to the cost of the single man's living. Here is where women acquire a natural personal interest in the wage question. If a workingman marries, his poor girl, business takes no heed of the fact that it costs more for two to live than one. When the baby comes, business, absolutely indifferent to the fact, does not raise your husband's wages. What business does in effect is to say to man: "Here are your wages. We pay for what we get out of you. That's business. The rest is your own affair. Be reasonable and live alone. Take a wife, pinch, squirm, struggle, fall. It's all the same so long as your pick ax falls regularly, so long as you have breath enough and heart enough to work."

Thus wages embody the plain everyday doctrine of wealth concerning the wisdom of marriage among toilers. In the war of capital against labor a natural right of woman is assailed—her right to be a happy wife and mother.—American Musician.

REVIEW AND EXPOSURE OF CAPITALIST WAGE SYSTEM

A Subject of Deep Interest to Every Wage-Worker in the Land
Read and Consider

WAGES NOT PRICE OF LABOR

The Purpose of Capitalists is to Have Capital Return to Them as Money in Greater Magnitude

By Gabriel Deville.

Wages appear to be the price of the labor performed, but this is merely an appearance, as can easily be seen. Wages can in fact only be less than or equal to this price. If the labor performed was worth, let us say, $2, and if the workman received less than $2, we would reach the absurd conclusion that labor worth $2 is worth less than $2. If, the labor being worth $2, the laborer gets $2, what interest would the capitalist have in carrying on such operations? You see, that in any event wages can not be the price of the labor performed. What are they, then?

You ask yourselves how it can be that money, functioning as capital, breeds more money and yield to its proprietor a greater sum than that which he had advanced. Here we have the essential point, and therefore it is this which I am going to explain to you first of all.

The movement of capital in the process of bringing forth surplus value, that is to say, a value over and above its own value, is divided into three periods.

In the first period the capitalist appears as a purchaser on the commodity (or goods) market and on the labor market. His money is converted into goods, warships, raw material and machinery, in a word, into means of production, and into labor power; that is to say, he buys the things and the people which are the elements of production.

In the second period, the capitalist functions as a producer of commodities, and this production produces objects intended for sale.

In the third period, the capitalist becomes a seller of the commodities produced. The purpose that the capitalist keeps ever in view is that his capital, leaving his hands as a sum of money of a given magnitude, shall return to him as a sum of money greater in magnitude. The money is not in his mind expended, but advanced in order that it may grow larger.

When, in the first period, the capitalist buys the means of production and the labor power, there is an exchange. Can the exchange be the source of surplus value? Let us look into this.

If a man who has plenty of wheat, but who needs money and has it not, trades with another who has plenty of money, but is in want of wheat, a value of $100 in wheat for $100 in money, from the point of view of utility there is in this transaction an advantage for both of them. The exchange in this respect, is a transaction by which each party gains. But, from the joint point of view of wealth, the exchange of $100 in wheat for $100 in money is an increase of value for neither of the parties, since each of them was in possession, before the exchange, of a value equal to that which he had afterward. The same amount of value remains constantly in the hands of the same party; only he holds it successively under different forms. In the same way, when we exchange a $20 bank note for four $5 gold pieces, it may serve our convenience better, but there is no change in the quantity of value.

Of course certain capitalists may cheat those who trade with them; they may, in the first period buy for less than they are worth the things and the persons they require in order to produce, and they may, in the third, sell their products at a price above their value. Yet, if there is there, as you will shortly see, a displacement of values to the profit of individuals, there is no creation of value; there is no surplus value.

Suppose that Peter is very shrewd and has few scruples, and that he succeeds in cheating Paul and James. Peter buys from Paul coloring material which he needs for his dye-house, and pays $80 for materials which are worth $100; there is a profit of $20 for the first period. In the third, which is the period of the sale of the products, he sells to James for $120 dyed fabrics which are worth $100; here is a second profit of $20. That in this way Peter makes a profit of $40, there can be no doubt; but let us not look at the thing solely from the point of view of Peter, let us also look at it from a general point of view.

Before these transactions we had $80 in money in the hands of Peter, $10 in coloring materials in the hands of Paul and $120 in money in the hands of James, making a total of $300. After the operations of Peter, we have $120 in

DEBS STANDS TO THE END

A week ago reference was made in these columns to a press dispatch sent out from Chicago to the effect that about Oct. 1 Eugene V. Debs, candidate of the Social Democratic party for president, would withdraw in favor of the Democratic party and W. J. Bryan. It hardly seemed necessary to say that this report was a miserable falsehood, without a shadow of truth to sustain it. Because it is false, and on that account serves the dishonest purposes of capitalist politicians and pressmen of both the old parties, it has been given great prominence during the week and persistently written about as if it were true. We may, therefore, with propriety, again characterize this Democratic canard as it deserves. It reveals the design of the capitalist press and is an index of its program. Up to this time we have been blotted out of the press, the policy being to utterly ignore us. But the Social Democratic party is so persistently in evidence in every quarter that it cannot be ignored; hence, the party and its candidate must be lied about so as to mislead and demoralize its adherents, and herein is the animus of the Chicago story, which, upon the face of it, is too absurd to merit serious treatment.

As a Socialist and the candidate of the Social Democratic party, Eugene V. Debs stands opposed to all capitalist parties. Socialists and all in sympathy with them who will this year cast their first ballot for Socialism, may rest assured that Comrade Debs is in this contest until it closes, and if the working class is true to itself in the approaching election and those who toil for a mere wage dribble consider their best interests, every solitary one of them will cut loose from all the old parties and give their support to the party that stands for Socialism, that is to say, the abolition of the wage system and inauguration of economic freedom.

The Democratic party is not opposed to the capitalist competitive system. There is not a word in its platform against wage slavery. In no essential particular does it differ from the Republican party, and no wage worker ought to be deceived by its wordy and meaningless declarations. The vital, commanding issues of the hour, all growing out of capitalist production and never to be solved except by the adoption of Socialism, are studiously obscured and the platform adopted with so much noise at Kansas City is entirely satisfactory to Croker and his crew of trust-smashing patriots.

The Social Democratic party is equally opposed to all capitalist parties. Impartial in its opposition, it can have no choice. It has none.

Four years ago Eugene V. Debs supported Bryan and the Democratic party. After the election a number of the leaders met at Chicago and among other things it was agreed that "Debs and his ilk were largely responsible for Bryan's defeat and such Socialists, anarchists, etc., must be read out of the party and gotten rid of, or the respectable elements will be driven out of it."

These same gentlemen are today smilingly and whisperingly assuring Socialists that the Democratic party is "strongly Socialistic" and will surely "accomplish the Socialist's desire." They have forgotten that "Debs and his ilk" were largely "responsible for Bryan's defeat" four years ago, as they then declared, and would now have the voters believe that "about Oct. 1 Debs will withdraw in favor of Bryan." The fact is, and the working class of this country should know it by this time, the Democratic leaders will declare for anything, promise anything, and manufacture false reports to catch voters and capture the spoils of office. It is impossible for them to understand that a man can stand immovable for a principle and hold in lofty scorn and contempt the entire bribing power of plutocracy.

There will be no withdrawal and no retreat will be sounded by the party. From every section of the country come assurances of enthusiastic support, and we are within the bounds of modest statement when we say that November will bring a revelation to capitalism and its subservient parties.

AN IMPRESSIVE CEREMONY

In the beautiful cemetery for pet animals and birds at Dellwood-on-the-Hudson a big brown and white collie dog, for many years the pampered pet of Mrs. John T. Stephens of New York, was buried a few days ago. A marble headstone bearing the collie's name and age stands above his grave.

When the pet died the grief of his friends was very great. He was placed in a casket lined with white satin and friends placed flowers on his coffin.

Many of them shed tears over the body of the pet. The casket was hidden beneath flowers, and beside it his mate, another big brown and white collie, sat and mournfully howled.

In one of those cemeteries of the living, where the poor outcasts of humanity swarm in Chicago, the home of millionaires and churches, a poor and aged woman, too feeble to help herself and too proud to beg, was found by the police in a dying state. She had not tasted food for two days, her haggard face and emaciated form bore evidence to the terrible suffering she had endured. She died. No marble headstone marks the resting place of this American mother. She was laid in no coffin lined with delicate fabrics. No friends were there to place flowers upon her grave—only a stranger did that. This homeless woman, crushed and heart-broken by the relentless operations of an inhuman system, died unwept with none to do reverence to her womanly sacrifice and service in a world for two thousand years under the "benign influences of the Christian religion."

Lena Berker, eleven years old, left her home last week in Chicago to search for somebody to buy her services for a living wage. Her efforts were unsuccessful, nobody wanted her. Discouraged and sick, she slept in doorways and picked her meals from alleys until a policeman found her half starved last Sunday night, when prayers were being said in a thousand city churches. Next morning the system we live under did the best it could, sent her to one of its institutions with other outcasts.

And down in North Carolina thousands of children are being worked in the mills without education and worked from 6 o'clock in the evening until 6 o'clock in the morning for 10 cents a night! Human flesh is cheap, but pet collies come high.

None wept over the grave of our unknown mother.

The dead collie's mate sat by the casket and mournfully howled!

THE VACANT CHAIR

Observation discloses the fact that in the offices about town are many vacant chairs, until lately occupied by typewriters, clerks, etc., and that the employers themselves are doing what little work needs attention. This state of affairs is an index to the future; work is slackening up; jobs are hard to get and easy to lose. The vacant chairs will soon be dust covered.

But the clerk, stenographer and typewriter will have plenty of company, for there are vacant places at the bench and the lathe, and in shop, mill and factory the toiling masses begin to realize the emptiness of the prosperity babble and the uncertainty of their days under capitalist employment. The call of the hour upon Social Democrats is imperative. The duty is to push the propaganda for Socialism now and to save the wage working class from the folly of supporting with their votes either Bryanism or McKinleyism—both of which, when correctly interpreted, mean Capitalism.

NOTES AND COMMENT

Jerry Simpson will soon be left alone with his real friends, the Bryan Democrats. Every prominent populist with conscience and intelligence is coming into the Social Democratic party. Seattle, take notice: The latest arrival is Ex-Governor L. D. Lewellyn of Kansas.

Mr. Pitts, of the Commercial Travelers' Association, thinks the traveling men will this year vote the Bryan ticket from the standpoint of self-preservation. Some of them will, but we know a large number who will do the more sensible thing, from the standpoint of protecting themselves and their families, vote the Social Democratic ticket.

Let us see: If United States senators were elected by popular vote, how would that improve the condition of the fellows who work for a dollar a day? Perhaps Mr. Bryan will tell us on Labor day. Or, if the corporations are to be protected "in their legitimate interests," what effect will that have on the fellows who work for corporations at a dollar a day? What real issues does the Democratic party face, anyhow?

If the average wage increased from $248 in 1850 to $400 in 1890, the workingman is better off, isn't he? Wait a minute: The wealth per capita of the working class in 1850 was $239.50, but in 1890 it was only $184. But the wealth per capita of the parasite class went up from $1,293 to $8,085. So, you see, the workingman gets only enough to keep him alive today; what is called a "rise in wages" is really a decline, when measured by the increased production, because, you know, all wealth is produced by labor and the producing power of the nation increased fivefold from 1850 to 1880. Have you anywhere heard of workmen receiving a fivefold increase of wages?

Chauncey Depew has made the discovery that this great American nation produces $2,000,000,000 worth more than it can consume. But he has not yet learned what Socialists have, that this surplus represents a part of the values stolen from the wealth producing class by the Capitalist system, that the reason the surplus exists is that workmen are so poorly paid they can't buy back what they produce.

The Republican national committee sent out in 1896, for the purpose of deluding workmen into voting for McKinley, 130 carloads of literature. The National Campaign Committee of the Social Democratic party, now organized, would like to send out one full carload this year as an antidote to Republican (and Democratic) rubbish. One full carload would do the trick. Contributions may be sent to Campaign Committee, S. D. P., 126 Washington Street, Chicago.

An advertisement in the New York Herald for a young lady to do clerical work, at a salary of $3.50 per week, brought over 500 replies. Another advertisement in the same newspaper, for a woman able and willing to do housework, and who would like a home where she would be treated according to the Golden Rule, received only one reply, and that was from a wealthy old lady who evidently got into the wrong column, for she begged an interview, offered to give references, and promised the advertiser a good home and the most considerate treatment!

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS HAVE DISTINGUISHED ENDORSEMENT

John Brisben Walker has an article in the July Cosmopolitan, on "The Trusts and the End," which raises the question why he is not supporting the Social Democratic party and lending the influence of his magazine to the advocacy of its principles. If Mr. Walker believes in the socialization of the trusts and a democratic administration of industry for the benefit of all the people, he is a Social Democrat. He says:

"No well-informed man in the business world of today, but believes that with two or three hundred millions at his disposal, a brain as able as some of those now in active careers may in turn attack and crush one leading business interest after another until even the millionaires may be swept from the field and practically all the wealth of the country concentrated in one great corporation."

Mr. Walker further says:

"First—The trusts are in the direction of organization of the methods of production."

Second—Nearly all the benefits of these magnificent organizations now go to a few individuals.

"Third—It is contrary to the best interests of the public and dangerous to a republican form of government that these profits should continue to accumulate in such percentages."

"Fourth—How are we going to bring the benefits of scientific organization into the hands of the many instead of the few?"

He declares that there is only one remedy—and that is the remedy proposed by Social Democrats. His concluding words are as follows:

"Here we are, then. Eighty millions of people under a form of government, which may be denominated a republic tempered by the use of money at the polls, up against the question of the distribution of wealth. Let it go on upon present lines and in ten years more not all the intelligence of the nation can provide a remedy. And is there any remedy today? One only—government ownership. . . . I challenge any reasoning mind taking up this subject without regard to past prejudices to arrive at any other goal than public ownership. . . . Let us brace up and look the situation fully in the face. Either it must continue, and it is every moment growing more like an avalanche, or it must end in public ownership."

NOMINATIONS FOR EXECUTIVE BOARD

The following nominations have been received for the new National Executive Board:

By Branch 4, Illinois.—Seymour Stedman, Frank Roderus, Mrs. Corinne Brown, W. C. Horgan, J. H. Greer, Illinois; V. L. Berger, Wisconsin; Margaret Haile, Massachusetts; J. W. Kelley, Indiana; A. W. Ricker, Iowa.

By Branch 1, Illinois.—Mrs. Corinne Brown, Seymour Stedman, J. H. Greer, Frank Roderus, Jacob Winnen, Illinois; V. L. Berger, Wisconsin; Margaret Haile, Massachusetts; J. W. Kelley, Indiana; A. W. Ricker, Iowa.

THE FARMER AND HIS HORSE

A Fable by Madison Warder

A certain farmer had a horse, which was very unruly. The name of the horse was Trust. It was all the time breaking into the farmer's corn field, eating all it could, and destroying much. The farmer was sore, perplexed, and could not think of a plan to stop the ravages of the horse—he let the animal run free.

At last he took counsel with the wise men of the land to determine what should be done. These had many and varied suggestions to offer, and each thought his plan could control the beast.

Said a Governor: "The remedy lies in Publicity. The horse should be required to make regular statements of his capitalization—that is, of the capacity of his stomach; and of his profits—that is, of the corn he eats. Then if his capacity is overestimated, and he eats too much, other horses will come and compete with him. He, therefore, cannot monopolize the field."

But the farmer was slow to believe. Said a Presidential candidate:

"I have here a little bell, called License, which I will hang around his neck; and we will require him to promise before he goes into the field that he will not eat too much corn. If he breaks his promise, we will take off the bell, and encourage other horses to compete with him."

But the farmer had his doubts. Said the President of a College:

"What he needs is Social Ostracism. Drop his acquaintance. Give him the cold shoulder when you meet him. Don't invite him to your barn to partake of your hospitality. That will in time cure him of his greedy propensities."

The farmer was incredulous. Said a Supreme Court Judge:

"You cannot molest him. He is exercising his constitutional prerogatives. You cannot infringe upon his vested rights."

The farmer despaired. Said a New-idea Socialist:

"Let us catch him and put upon his back the harness of Public Ownership. Then we will set him to raising more corn."

But the others cried: "Visionary! Crank! Anarchist! You are crazy! You would overthrow society!" And they heaped much ridicule upon him. Yet the farmer began to think.

UTOPIA, OR THE IDEAL STATE

The stress of life as we know it in our selfish community, is so great for all of us that one has a longing for existence without worry and with means for the enjoyment of life. But the condition that would satisfy some would fail to meet the approval of others. Is there any way to change the present condition of life, from our present selfishness? Probably not. Can any one hundred persons agree upon an ideal that would be acceptable tomorrow, or any time afterwards?

Not long ago an able man said: "We are going charity mad and our sympathy for misfortunes is making more beggars." The intention of those who give charity is, in most cases, to do good, with the idea of moving the world on in the direction of Utopia, an ideal state, where there is no misery or want. This idea is a noble one, but will not accomplish the purpose under our selfish system. Agreeable employment with equitable distribution will sooner do it.

Are there not men today who tell us of the great, good and wise men of a hundred years ago? Who gave us examples of unselfishness, modesty, truth and integrity, in poor comparison with men now living? There are men living now who are equally as good in morals, as were our ancestors, but are now in the minority, therefore have not the influence to counteract the motives of selfishness as formerly, the great cause of undermining all the other virtues of civilization.

Suppose that a hundred years ago some prophet had predicted that in the beginning of the twentieth century we could travel with safety and comfort 500 miles in a day and night on land; and nearly the same on the ocean to other countries; receiving news of important happenings from most any part of the world in one day; that the heating, cooking and lighting in houses would be done without fire; houses built twenty stories high and no climbing of stairs required; machines built that could talk and sing perhaps better than some men or women; that the coming of storms and cold would be known in advance; that the human body could be made transparent to see broken bones, diseased tissue and other substances; that pain would be prevented in operating on an arm, leg, eye or any part of the body; in fact all varieties of inventions introduced in that time.

If any one had suspected then that such discoveries and conveniences could be brought to such perfection as they are, the people then would have wished to live and see it and enjoy the ideal state; yet we who live and have them all consider them as necessary to life as air and water, and appear sometimes to be no nearer the ideal state than our ancestors were. This selfishness on our part is the stumbling block toward the ideal state; if that were done away with, the ideal state would be close at hand. Mere knowledge is not the ideal condition. Utopia is the perfected character. This will make a perfected society with ideal environments.

History teaches us that for hundreds of years in Europe, and nearly a hundred years in this country has been a continual effort to improve the condition of the people by laws, regulation, freedom here, suppression there, to organize into an ideal state. Yet who dares to express an honest conviction in Europe on any important matter? The slightest disturbance is liable to bring on a continental war.

In each presidential election in this country the same state of affairs exists, and why? Each nation wants the whole world for a market for its surplus products. Where there is no demand for work there is not much to eat. Utopia is that condition where one can do most for others, where the pleasure comes from active and sympathetic interest for the comfort and well being of those not so fortunate as others. Any other ideal is scarcely worth striving for.

H. H. MEYER.

Comrade Ricker at Work

Mr. A. W. Ricker, of Lone Tree, Ia., state organizer for the Social Democratic party, has been in the city since Monday night arranging for the state convention of Iowa Socialists, which is to be held here on Friday, August 10. Exclusive of the old S. L. P., which has been organized in this state for four years, and is amalgamated with the movement, the Social Democracy has active organizations in nearly all counties east of Des Moines, all the work of less than two months. Among those who are known throughout the state and are connected with the movement, may be mentioned Prof. Geo. D. Herron, of Grinnell, now traveling in Europe, but who will return for the campaign; Hon. Chas. A. Lloyd, people party candidate for governor three years ago, Rev. Chas. E. Brecken, of Muscatine, prominently identified with the state federation of labor, John L. Rice of Monroe county, of the mine workers, J. B. Welzenbach, of Davenport, of the S. L. P., and a host of union leaders of more or less local renown in their own cities.—Oskaloosa (Ia.) Herald.

A Bricklayer for Governor

The Salt Lake Tribune says of Comrade Martin Wright, Social Democratic candidate for governor of Utah: "The nominee of the Social Democratic party for governor of Utah, was born in the city of Providence, R. I., July 1, 1849, of Yankee and English parentage. By trade he is a bricklayer of the trades union kind, of the international and local type. He came to Utah in the spring of 1876; has resided here in Utah since that time."

"He has resided in Mt. Pleasant seventeen years, and lost his first wife here nine years ago."

"Mr. Wright is a good citizen and a hard working man, and a man who, when once convinced he is on the right track, puts forth every effort to do what he considers his duty. While Mr. Wright fully realizes he stands no show of election, he says his interest in the cause is as sincere as any man's could be."

INTERNATIONAL OUTLOOK

The strike of London dockers still continues, but, Justice says, there appears little likelihood of any other unions coming out in support of them.

The only elective body at Gibraltar is the Chamber of Trade. The Republica Social at Valencia states that four Socialist workmen have been elected members.

The Austrian Socialist party has just issued a manifesto calling for the adoption of universal suffrage throughout the empire. A large number of this manifesto has been issued.

M. Mauss writes in Le Mouvement Socialiste on the Transvaal war, pointing out how it was caused by capitalists who wished for higher dividends; he also calls attention to the fact that protests have been made by the British Socialists and by the trade unions.

The International Congress of Miners has been holding its annual meeting in Paris. It is reckoned that about 1,200,000 miners were represented. About half of these were English and Scotch. There are about 130,000 in France, 120,000 in Belgium, 250,000 in Germany and 100,000 in Austria.

At the election at Waldenburg, Germany, the Socialist Sachse has been returned. The election is noteworthy, as the Socialist polled more votes than at the previous election and every effort was made to defeat him. It proves, as Vorwarts says, that the government policy is not as popular as people believe.

In La Revue Socialiste for June, E. Vandervelde, in an article on Socialism and agriculture, shows how in Belgium the small peasant proprietor is becoming extinct. Just as in industry, where the small man is disappearing, so in agriculture the large farm is becoming the rule, as it can be worked much cheaper and better.

Statistics are now published giving the corrected number of votes recorded at the last general election in Italy. The Socialists obtained 215,841 votes; this is a great increase, for in 1897 they only obtained 184,602, and in 1895 only 76,359 votes. The great strength of the party is in the north in Lombardy, Piedmont, Tuscany and Venetia, and their weakest spot is in the south.

On the 24th June a congress of representatives of all the Socialist associations of Holland was held at Amsterdam. The forty-two associations which were represented unanimously voted in favor of a resolution which expressed the determination to unite themselves in one organization. The Socialist Alliance and the Social Democratic Labor party have consequently ceased to exist as separate organizations. In the opinion of Van Kol this unification of the Socialist forces of Holland marks the end of anarchism in that country.

CAUSE OF SOCIALISM IS DISGRACED IN MASSACHUSETTS

"Loyalists" under Bossiam of Carey, Have a Machine and Conduct State Convention and Astonish Old-Party Managers

Do you remember the scene in "Pinafore" where the hero stands in the center of the stage and sings his own praises and his high appreciation of himself, while an admiring crowd of relatives fill up the balance of the stage, hang upon his words and cheerfully chorus at every opportunity, "and so do his sisters and his cousins and his aunts?" It is a number of years since I saw the opera, but the scenes of Sunday, July 8, brought it very vividly to my mind.

The third annual convention of the S. D. P. in Massachusetts met at Paine Memorial Hall, Boston, on July 8. State Secretary Margaret Haile called the convention to order and read the call. From that moment the division in the convention asserted itself. Charles E. Lowell of Whitman was nominated for temporary chairman by those who stood for loyalty to the national organization and for the principles of Democracy, and John C. Chase by the others. The vote resulted in a tie (107 on each side), which the secretary took great pleasure in deciding in favor of the loyal candidate, Comrade Lowell. We started out exactly even in numbers, but very unequal in equipment. This was an instance where God was not on the side of the heaviest battalions, but on the side of the latest improved labor-saving machines, which enabled one person to do the work of 107 and permitted of an admirable division of labor. One man made all the motions, and all that the others had to do was to holler for them and to remember their slates for the credentials and other committees, all of which they faithfully did.

A few days before the convention one of the machine men "peached on his pals"; told us all about the cut-and-dried plans, the slates and the final caucus that was to be held Saturday night at a hotel in Boston. He did not tell which hotel, but we have since learned that it was the Davis House. Most of their work, however, had been done, he informed us, by seeing individuals separately.

Knowing this, and knowing also that the loyal delegates were many of them widely scattered branches and had never seen each other, a few of them who had come into town Saturday evening, in order to be on time Sunday morning, put up at the same hotel in order that they might get acquainted and talk over the situation. In self-defense they had to at least know each other's names.

The moment the temporary organization was completed the labor-saving machine was started up and ran steadily until 8:10 p. m.

You will find it hard to believe, comrades in other states, that every motion, aside from nominations, that was made, with two exceptions, was made by one man; but that is the absolute fact.

Carey's first motion was for a committee of five on credentials, to be appointed from the floor. An amendment was made that to save time the common courtesy of permitting the chair to appoint should be granted. Then Carey got up and in a well-feigned righteous indignation charged that a caucus had been held at the Quincy House by the loyalists the night before, talked about slates and capitalistic politics (!) and cramming things down the throat of the convention (!); he thought it was perfectly awful, and "so did his sisters and his cousins and his aunts." McCarthy replied for the loyalists that they had done nothing but what was perfectly fair and honorable, and made counter charges of caucusing and packing the convention. There the matter dropped and the committee was elected from the floor.

Voted, on motion of Carey, that a committee be elected to receive, sort and count the ballots. Chase, Putney and Willett were elected and got to work.

Voted, on motion of Carey, that a committee of five on rules be elected. They were elected: S. L. Smith, Brockton; Dr. Gibbs, Worcester; J. Spero, Boston; Hoffman, Everett; Coulter and Chase.

Voted, on motion of Carey, that all persons nominated constitute the committee on rules.

Voted, on motion of Carey, that the convention adjourn until 1:30.

Promptly at 1:30 Chairman Lowell called the convention to order.

Some comrade forgot himself and made a motion. It was to the effect that the visitors be requested to retire to the gallery, leaving the floor to the delegates. Carey objected, and the motion was withdrawn.

Report of the tellers on credentials was received, the following committee being elected: Hayman of Haverhill; Wilkinson of Lawrence (which is three miles from Haverhill); Clifford of Jamaica Plain branch (which is also very near to Haverhill, through its leading man, D. M. Chase, a brother of John C.); A. W. Barr of Worcester, and Putney of Somerville.

Voted, on motion of Carey, that the committee on credentials take action immediately and collect the credentials.

Voted, on motion of Carey, that while the committee on credentials is preparing its report the committee on rules be allowed to report, the contesting delegations on both sides to be allowed voice and vote.

Smith of Brockton, for the committee on rules, recommended the following program for the remainder of the day: Report of committee on credentials. Election of permanent officers of the convention, to consist of chairman, vice-chairman, secretary and two assistants. Election of committee on resolutions. Report of same. Election of state committee.

Appointment of committee to invite S. L. P. delegates to this convention; and a rule limiting speeches to five minutes, no member to speak more than once until all have spoken who wish, the leader of the opposition to be allowed five minutes to close the debate. Report accepted.

A collection, amounting to $32.09, was then taken up to cover expenses of the convention.

On the committee on credentials work was done to make the angels weep, and the labor-saving machine rejoice in the depths of its metallic heart. They accepted four delegates from branches which had not been heard from at headquarters for a year; one from a branch which had only four members enrolled at headquarters in any kind of standing, and is, therefore, not a legal branch; three from a branch which had, before the call was issued, dropped the thirty members whom they represented for non-payment of dues; three others who had been elected at a special meeting called by a man, as chairman, who was not chairman of the branch at all, and so on through the whole list of contests. And they were all seated by the convention, debate having been shut off.

Voted, on motion of Carey, that the report of the committee be accepted as a whole and the delegates seated.

Voted, on motion of Carey, to proceed with the regular order of business as recommended by the committee on rules.

For permanent chairman, John C. Chase of Haverhill and Charles E. Lowell were nominated.

Chase was elected and Lowell was then made vice-chairman.

For permanent secretary the nominees were Margaret Haile, Clifford and Sherman.

Margaret Haile was elected, and it was voted, on motion of Carey, that the other two act as assistants.

Voted, on motion of Carey, to suspend the rules and proceed to the election of a state committee.

Timson of Lynn, Hoffman of Everett and Laird of Brockton were elected tellers.

Again a comrade forgot himself, and moved that the state committee be comprised of eight members elected from this body, and one additional member from each congressional district. Carey promptly amended that we elect a state committee of twelve, to be elected at large, by this convention. The amendment carried.

Twenty-four nominations were made. It was decided to vote by ballot, the twelve highest to be elected.

As soon as the balloting was over and the tellers had retired, it was voted, upon motion of Carey, that the rules be suspended and that a committee of three be appointed to inform the delegates of the S. L. P. that we are now ready to receive them for the purpose of nominating candidates for office, and such other business as may properly come before the body.

The chair appointed Carey, Coulter and Lowell.

In a few moments thirty-eight delegates from the S. L. P. (anti-DeLeon faction) entered the room, headed by a comrade carrying a large red flag, and were received and seated amid applause and cheers.

One of the S. L. P. delegates then moved that this convention indorse Eugene V. Debs for president and a S. D. P. man moved that Job Harriman be indorsed for vice-president. Both motions carried, and "all went merry as a marriage bell."

It was voted, on motion of Carey, that the name under which these candidates stand be the Social Democratic party.

The following state ticket was then nominated, Carey nominating the governor:

For governor—Charles H. Bradley, Haverhill (S. D.).

Lieutenant governor—Geo. H. Wrenn, Springfield (S. L.).

Secretary of state—A. W. Barr, Worcester (S. D.).

Treasurer—Stephen O'Shaughnessy, Boston (S. L.).

Auditor—Frank S. Walsh, Brockton (S. D.).

Attorney general—J. A. Billings, Rockland (S. D.).

Voted, on motion of Carey, that a committee of three be appointed to bring in a list of presidential electors.

While this committee was out, the following platform committee was elected: MacCartney, Putney, Oliver, Mailly, Coulter.

Voted, on motion of Carey, that the question of platform be settled by the platform committee, acting in conjunction with the state committees of the S. L. P. and S. D. P., and whatever they decide upon shall be adopted.

Again a rash comrade made a motion that a committee on resolutions be now elected. Carey amended that the committee on platform be a committee on resolutions, and that all resolutions be read before this convention without debate and referred to the committee, to be reported back to this meeting tonight. Amendment carried.

Several resolutions were offered, and the committee withdrew to consider them.

Carey then moved that the state committees of the S. D. P. and S. L. P. act jointly. After a brief debate, closed by vociferous calls for the previous question by the machine, the motion was carried, the S. L. P. delegates joining in the vote.

The committee on resolutions recommended the following: "Resolved, that all questions relating to the standing of the party toward national boards, whether the Chicago National Executive Board or the New York 'Unity' Conference Board, be left entirely to the independent action of each branch of the party voting at their several branch meetings; and that we, the S. D. P., without regard to our standing to any executive board, join with the S. L. P. in this convention according to the call of our state committee. That the state committees elected by the S. D. P. and S. L. P. be a joint state committee."

MacCartney brought in a minority report amending the last sentence to read that the two committees "act together as a campaign committee during the coming state and national campaign."

Carey moved the adoption of the majority report. Margaret Haile moved the substitution of the minority report.

And, can you credit it, comrades in other states, this most important resolution of the whole convention was put through without debate! So that you may not lose all respect for the Massachusetts comrades, I ought to explain that it was now about 8 p. m., the delegates had had no supper, and most of them anxious to get off to catch trains. The whole day had been frittered away over trifling routine matters, the convention not being permanently organized until about 6 p. m., and all the important business had to be crowded into an hour or two. The loyal comrades were Social Democrats, and came into the convention expecting it would be carried on with at least a semblance of fairness. It did not take them long to realize that they were up against a labor-saving machine, and they did not know how to deal with it. Seeing its uselessness, many of them gave up the fight, especially as the S. L. P. votes now swelled the majority by thirty-eight. So be lenient with loyalists, comrades.

The previous question was called for, the minority report was put and voted down, though it had generous support. The majority report was put and vociferously carried, the S. L. P. joining in the vote.

The following state committee was declared elected: W. P. Bosworth, W. P. Porter, J. C. Chase, James F. Carey, Addison W. Barr, E. W. Timson, S. E. Putney, M. J. Konikow, A. G. Clifford, A. McDonald, J. W. Sherman and C. E. Lowell.

To sum up the whole proceedings in a word: One man said so; and "so did his sisters and his cousins and his aunts."

MARGARET HAILE,
Secretary of the Convention.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Wisconsin comrades will hold their state convention the latter part of August.

Branch 23, Wisconsin, elected officers at its meeting July 25. The branch is in excellent working order.

We note with pleasure that a new publication is to be started at Blum, Texas, to be known as the Southern Socialist, and hope its projectors will meet with success.

The National Campaign Committee is printing leaflets for propaganda to be sold at a low price—cost of getting them to you. Read advertisement and order at once.

Prof. Geo. D. Herron is announced for a course of lectures on moral philosophy and applied Christianity next winter at Avalon College, Trenton, Mo., of which George McA. Miller is president.

Comrade Jos. Jason writes us from Cincinnati that a "Young Men's Socialist League" has been organized. The purpose is to work among young men below 25 years of age and it is believed has a great future.

On Sunday, July 15, Comrade F. J. Hlavacek, editor of Spravednost, organized a club of Bohemian women of the Social Democratic party in the Thirty-first ward of Chicago with nineteen members. He has also organized a new branch of the S. D. P. at Racine, Wis., with eleven members.

A HALF YEAR'S GROWTH.

The semi-annual report now being prepared by the National Secretary shows that from January 1 to June 30, 1900, the increase in membership of the Social Democratic party was over 3,000, an average of more than 500 per month. From present indications we have reason to believe that this splendid growth will be exceeded during the second half of the year.

A SUMMARY OF MARX'S NOTED CRITICISMS OF CAPITALIST PRODUCTION

By A. P. Hazzell

Marx's early training was very favorable to the study of economics. He had a very superior education, as well as the advantage of moving in an intellectual circle where every topic was brought to the bar of reason and severely tested. In early life he mixed with the Hegelians, who at that time represented the forward movement in social questions and intellectual thought. Political economy was always a favorite subject with Marx, and when the labor upheavals prior to and including 1848 in Germany and on the continent generally enlisted his sympathies he soon found that the bourgeois economists were drawn upon to head back the forward movement. He, therefore, determined at the first opportunity to give his serious attention to the subject of economics with the object of exposing the fallacies of the so-called great classic authorities.

Marx applied what is known as the historical method to the study of economics, and in this connection his name has become associated with the theory known as the "materialist conception of history," which shows that wealth production controls the action of men unknown to themselves. This presentation of the subject by Marx is well illustrated by a Russian critic and reviewer named N. Tschernyschewsky, who wrote at the time of publication of Marx's work:

"The one thing which is of moment to Marx is to find the law of the phenomena with whose investigation he is concerned."

Of still greater moment to him is the law of their variation from one form into another; from one series of connections into a different one. Consequently Marx only troubles himself about one thing, to show by a rigid scientific investigation, the necessity of successive determinate orders of social conditions, and to establish as far as possible the facts that serve him for fundamental starting points. For this it is quite enough if he proves, at the same time, both the necessity of the present order of things, and the necessity of another order into which the first must inevitably pass over; and this all the same whether men believe it or not, whether they are conscious or unconscious of it. Marx treats the social movement as a process of natural history, governed by laws not only independent of human will, consciousness and intelligence; but rather, on the contrary, determining that will, consciousness and intelligence. That is to say, not the 'idea' but the material phenomenon alone can serve as its starting point. Such an inquiry will confine itself to the confrontation and the comparison of a fact, not with ideas, but with another fact."

According to this author, Marx deals only with facts coupled with an anxious desire to explain them to his readers. It is now our task to try and give briefly a sketch of those facts as contained in his analysis of capitalist production.

Marx first of all inquires what is the form of wealth with which capitalism surrounds us today. He answers: The commodity form of wealth. A commodity can, therefore, be accepted as the unit of capitalist wealth. He then analyses that commodity; a commodity is an object of wealth, and an object of wealth is a thing of utility. That thing which administers to man's desires is an object of utility, and by that fact becomes wealth, and when labor has been further expended on that object for the purpose of exchange, then it becomes known as a "commodity."

When such labor products are brought into exchange their value becomes expressed by the act of exchange. Marx then examines value, use-value and exchange-value. Value is a relation, or comparison which we make between things. Like all other comparisons, it is necessarily one of quantity. To say what is the value of a thing is equal to saying, "What is the quantity of a particular substance contained in your article as compared with mine?" Value is thus an equation of two quantities. When we come to commodities brought into exchange we have to discover the substance of their exchange value. There are two substances favored by economists—utility and labor. Marx, while demonstrating that utility is the substance of wealth and of use-value, denies that it is the substance of exchange-value. Exchange-value presupposes an equation which precludes utility from acting as its substance. The substance of value is already contained in commodities; it is therefore objective, and has only to be measured to have its quantity expressed. Utility is of a subjective character depending on the desires of a person, and cannot be measured objectively by a person. The utility of a pair of boots cannot be expressed until you have experienced it by wearing them, but their exchange-value is expressed when you purchase them. Utility being thus unable to find relative expression at the point of exchange cannot be the exchange value-giving substance.

Marx then asserts that labor is contained in all commodities, and that without it social wealth would cease to be. Labor, being embodied in commodities, is objective, and can be quantitatively measured by time similarly as two bodies containing weight can be measured by the gravitative force.

The substance of exchange-value is, therefore, labor or human energy. Marx then shows that there are different forms or qualities of labor, such as carpentering labor, shoemaking labor and tailoring labor; these, though so different in character, all represent energy or labor, and it is in this character of simple energy alone that they impart value to a commodity. A commodity is valuable only in so far as it contains a given quantity of labor.

Marx then deals with exchange, showing that it presupposes private property, the mere fact of exchange proving that buyer and seller recognize that each has a right to part with his product as owner of his product.

Returning to commodities and their value, Marx shows that exchange necessitates a money form of value. In an act of barter or sale we measure the value of our commodity in that one we exchange with, recognizing it as our equivalent. For the purpose of reckoning, the commodity which is most frequently exchanged becomes generally recognized, and accepted as an equivalent at all times. Eventually, in agreement with public opinion, the state declares such an equivalent legal tender in discharge of debt, and thus we have money arising out of the equivalent form of value. Money creates a new social power, for he who has it has a purchasing power over all other commodities. It is of such social use that the loan of it secures interest. It also facilitates accumulation and enables its possessor to enter into production of other commodities. Money applied to production for the purpose of securing profit or interest, becomes capital. Money-capital in the hands of the capitalist begets more money, which increase of money Marx calls surplus-value. Money being nothing more than an equivalent commodity, cannot, like all other material objects of wealth, impart more than its own value, so Marx investigates the productive process of the capitalist to find how the latter gains his increase.

Marx goes on to show that a capitalist divides his capital into two portions—the part which purchases the instruments of production, raw material, etc.; and the other part which he pays as wages. The first he calls "constant" capital, because the value it imparts admits of no expansion beyond its own cost of production; the other part, which is expended in purchasing labor-power, he calls "variable," because the value labor-power imparts into a product varies from its own cost. If the cost of a machine is $100, and lasts a year, it will embody that amount of value and that amount alone in raw material, such value being its cost of production. A laborer, however, costing $100 a year, will not only pass over his own cost of production, as represented by his wages, but considerably more. When a worker produces more value than his wages represent he produces surplus-value. Surplus value is thus a term to express that portion of value for which no equivalent is given. Out of this surplus value the capitalist adds to his capital and obtains his private income, and thus the worker himself creates the chains which economically bind him to the capitalist.

APPEAL TO WAGE-WORKERS

The executive council of the American Federation of Labor has issued an appeal to all wage-workers to organize and federate. It says:

"Throughout our country a struggle is raging between the oppressor and the oppressed, the possessors of wealth and the laborers; the concentration of industry and wealth is the order of the day. Everywhere the workers must suffer disastrous results unless they organize and federate to protect and promote their mutual interests.

"In this combination and concentration of wealth the possessors permit no sectional or state lines to interfere with their power, and it therefore behooves the toilers, the wealth producers, to unite and federate regardless whether they are located east, west, north or south; irrespective of sex, politics, color or religion. The hope of the workers, the prayer of all our people, for justice and right, and the perpetuation of republican institutions lies in organized labor.

"Recognizing these essential truths, the executive council of the American Federation of Labor appeals to all wage-workers of whatever trade or calling to organize unions where such do not exist to join those already organized, to form unions and international unions of their respective trades and callings, and to affiliate in one common bond of labor upon the broad platform and under the proud banner of the American Federation of Labor.

"In calling upon the workers to unite and federate we aim to do no one wrong, but establish justice for all."

Workers should organize economically to alleviate their conditions and strike at the polls for freedom. There is no other way. Organize for Socialism and vote for it.

money in the hands of Peter, $100 in dyed fabrics in the hands of James and $80 in money in the hands of Paul, making a total of $300. The value in circulation has not grown a single penny; there is simply a change in its distribution among Peter, Paul and James; it is just as if Peter had stolen $40. A change in the distribution of the value in circulation, does not increase their quantity.

No matter what point of view one takes, by the process of exchange the articles exchanged, viewed as a whole, are not altered, there is no formation of surplus value if equivalent values are exchanged, and, if unequal values are exchanged, as in the former case, there is no surplus value formed. As the quantity of values thrown into circulation can not increase there, we must seek outside the realm of circulation or of the exchange of the commodities, for cause of the appearance of surplus value, of a new value.

Hence we reach this conclusion: All those trickeries must be disregarded which result merely in transferring wealth from pocket to pocket without increasing the sum total of the value in circulation. Yet the owner of the money, who begins by buying certain commodities for exactly what they are worth, and afterwards sell them again at their exact value, is able to realize more money for them than he risked in their purchase. As this increase can not take place either when the capitalist buys the elements of production, or when he sells the products, it is necessarily effected in the period of production.

In this period, the capitalist makes use of the things and the persons he has bought in order to produce. When he has made these purchases, he has in his possession the aggregate of the muscular and intellectual powers with which man is endowed and which he brings into action when he wishes to produce useful things. As labor power is a faculty of the living individual, the essential condition of its continuance is that the individual maintain and reproduce himself. The latter, for his support and reproduction, requires a certain quantity of the means of subsistence, and it is the quantity of the means of subsistence required, in a given country and period, to enable the laborer to permanently maintain a power equipped with the necessary technical skill and knowledge which determines the value of that power.

Suppose that the daily value of labor power is 80 cents, and that at the end of five hours' work the laborer had added to the value representing material worked up and the wear and tear of the implements employed a new value of 80 cents. If the labor stopped there, the capitalist would have a value equal to that which he had disbursed; he would in truth pay the value of the labor performed; he would lose nothing, but he would gain nothing. Now, gain is the goal at which he aims; he wishes his money to increase, to bring forth more money.

The capitalist has for the 80 cents, the daily value of the labor power, bought the use of that power for one day. The use of it belongs to him during one day, and he continues to keep it at work after it has at the end of five hours, as we have assumed, reproduced a value equivalent to its own. Labor power can then, in a day produce more than it costs, and it is the prolongation of labor beyond the fraction of a day that suffices to produce the equivalent of wages which alone can be the source of surplus value.

Labor continued after the equivalent of wages is produced is what begets the excess of value of the object over that of its constituent elements, means of production and labor power.

The production of surplus value is, consequently, nothing more than the action of labor prolonged beyond the point where the wages are replaced by equivalent value. The quantity of labor which the worker furnishes after having produced a value equal to his wages is surplus labor.

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this generation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

TWENTIETH CENTURY PAPER

Desperate Attempts Will be Made by the Democratic Press to Turn the Tide of Socialism—A Political Exorcism

By Ben. Atterbury

The leaders of the democratic party are in desperate hope of leading the people to understand them; the harder they apply themselves to their great task the more certain it becomes that they are doomed to failure. And the reason of it is to be found in the insincerity of the leaders; they are for the most part confused in their thinking, contradictory in speech, antagonistic in policy and hypocritical in profession.

Nothing is more pregnant with civic hypocrisy and damnation than the so-called "regenerated" democracy. For years it has coquetted with and seduced every third party movement that has come into existence, protesting its only desire to be the accomplishment of the reforms these parties have advocated, but really for the sole purpose of coralling votes sufficient in local, state and national elections to gain control of the public spoils by turning the republicans out.

Where this party of noisy profession and niggardly performance has been in control it has always proved itself equally capitalistic with the republican party, and it has done no more for the masses of the people, the working class.

Such poor conception of civic duty as the leaders of this party have is confined to a consideration of individual aggrandizement at the expense of the people. This they call "individual liberty."

It denounces trusts in the North, lustily proclaiming a profound interest in the working man, and shares in the benefits of trusts and white slavery in the South.

It declares the financial question to be as dead as Julius Caesar, and reaffirms the 16 to 1 rot of the Chicago and Omaha platforms.

Its press buys professional sophists to write fallacious arguments about "far-reaching vital policies," to deaden the conscience and intelligence of the people to issues that are really vital.

It is too cowardly to face these issues and too hypocritical to espouse them.

Having destroyed by chicanery and double-dealing every third party movement up to date, this boastful democracy now finds itself up against a harassing obstacle to its success in the Social Democratic Party. It is writhing and venting its spleen at third parties in general and the Socialist party in particular. The paper selected for the propaganda (can you believe it?) is Hearst's Chicago American. The scribbler to whom the assignment has been given is James Creelman, a person who probably never had an intellectual conviction on any subject under the sun that was not readily convertible into cash for use in a capitalistic newspaper.

Of the Chicago American it may be said that it is "the twentieth century newspaper," if we are to accept the say-so of its publisher. Some of us, however, will prefer not to accept that as final. Some of us have ideas of our own about a twentieth century newspaper. That they would not be approved by the Chicago American is clear from the fact that in its first edition this paper said: "It will demand the construction by Americans of the greatest navy of the world; this navy to protect us against foreign foes, WHICH ALONE WE HAVE TO FEAR."

I have been groping around under the delusion, as it now appears, that the real enemies of this republic, according to the democratic party, were the imperialists—Hanna, McKinley, Roosevelt, and that set. But here comes the chief (and newest) organ of Bryanism in these parts with the information that our "foreign foes" are the only ones "we have to fear." This insidious enemy of republican institutions, imperialism, is, after all, only a scarecrow of rags. So we will encourage and "demand" that costly appendage of imperialism on the seas, the "greatest navy of the world"! That is a noble ambition for the beginning of the twentieth century! Encircled by a belt of five-million-dollar battleships, what perfect repose and serenity will be ours in the thought that we, the working slaves of America, have no foes to fear at home! Hurrah for DEMOCRATIC PROTECTION!

Creelman has discovered that the Socialists "threaten and harass the democratic party." In this condition of affairs he sees an ominous sign of catastrophe to the country. Annoyed by the uncompromising attitude of Socialists and seeing no way by which the third party can be tricked and absorbed by the democratic tiger, he proceeds to earn his salary by heaping abuse and epithets upon its adherents. They are "cowards," "hypocrites," "poltroons," "degenerates" and "traitors." This is good democratic argument. Bankrupt in principle, with no policy of its own save that of opposition to the party in power, "threatened and harassed" by the growing spirit of Socialism, in which the working class is now coming to see its only hope of emancipation from capitalistic exploitation, this spurious political aggregation in which the spirit of democracy is also as dead as Julius Caesar, vents its wrath through its hired penmen and splutters about the "civic treason" of a voter who fails to support the absurd, out-of-date and reactionary policies advocated in a confused sort of way by Mr. Bryan, Governor Stone of Missouri and Jim Creelman the penman. The latter obviously has no conception of what the Socialist movement is, although he is afraid it will "overwhelm and engulf the moderate policy of the democratic party." I should say that nothing more truly beneficial to the world could happen than the complete defeat of a party that has been one of the principal instrumentalities in this country for the promotion of political jobbery and the debauchery of civic honor. A party whose agents and emissaries (and even its journalists, excluding Creelman) try to entice and seduce voters into its bailiwick with the assurance that Bryan himself is a "Socialist, too"; a party that only a few days ago claimed through some of its Chicago leaders (was Creelman one?) to have influence enough with the Social Democrats to arrange for the withdrawal of their presidential candidate about October 1; a party that systematically strives to turn voters away from the only movement that can help them by hypocritical profession and cowardly slander; a party that prates about a "great national peril," and in making its appeal to the conscience of the people has the brazen effrontery to say: "IT IS NOTORIOUS THAT MR. HANNA, THE CHAIRMAN OF THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE, IS ASSISTING MR. DEBS, THE SOCIALIST CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT," such a party deserves to be swept into oblivion instead of into the White House.

If there is any degeneracy in this country more pitiable than that of democratic politicians and writers, we shall have to look for it among the politicians and writers of the republican party. It has never yet been found in third party movements. The statement by Creelman appeared editorially in Hearst's Chicago American last Sunday. It is, of course, a premeditated and malicious lie; but what the degenerated democratic party lacks in argument it must make up for in lying, and Creelman, who must earn his salary, seems to be equal to the requirements.

If in the approaching election this party shall be defeated, and its defeat so thorough and complete as to forever extinguish it and its capitalistic lackeys, leaving the Socialists to confront the banded lords of plunder (with Creelman thrown in) some progress will have been achieved and a flagrant evil will be removed from the arena of politics. No wage earner should help to galvanize this dead body of democracy.

When Creelman prattles about "individual liberty" he simply repeats nonsense that was exploded long ago—but he doesn't know it.

When Creelman asks the people to study the political lessons of the republics of the past, he gives them dangerous advice for his paltry cause, but I hope they will do it. When he undertakes the role of fabricating lies to deceive the people he is a genuine democratic success. When he essays the part of a public educator he is a genuine democratic failure.

A statement made recently in The Herald to the effect that Comrade J. W. Kelley, who is a member of the city council at Marion and our candidate for governor of Indiana, was the first Socialist elected to office in that State, was not strictly correct. Comrade W. J. Croke was elected to the Marion council at the same time and is now candidate for State Auditor, and Sebastian Fezier, of Alexandria, the party's nominee for Court Reporter, was elected to the council in Alexandria on the same day.

Difference Noted Between "Cost of Production" and "Price of Production"—The Composition of Capital

THE SUBSTANCE OF VALUE

How the Law of Competition Continually Forces the Individual Producer to Give Way to the Syndicate and the Trust

By A. F. Hazell

Marx, in his examination of the growth of capital, deals with "price of production" and "cost of production" of commodities, which clears up many seeming difficulties to the lay student. By "cost of production" is meant the actual time spent on or incorporated in a commodity. By "price of production" is meant the amount of money asked for it.

Marx, to show the divergence arising between "cost of production" and "price of production," enters into an analysis of the relative quantity which constant capital bears to variable capital: the one representing the instruments of industry and the other labor-power. These two factors comprise what he calls the "composition of capital."

The composition of capital shows that price of production corresponds with the rate of profit which is common to any particular industry. In some industries there is a great amount of capital paid out in wages. And vice versa. The proportion that the one portion of capital bears to the other is always changing. For instance, a capitalist is always trying to sell cheaper than his neighbor. To do this he obtains labor-saving machinery. He employs more capital but less labor. Though there may be less value because less labor, he still wants the same rate of profit on the whole of his capital. It is nothing to him whether his capital employs one hundred more men or one hundred less, so long as full interest is secured on the employment of his larger capital. In one industry much labor is used and but little raw material, in another industry exactly opposite conditions obtain; but they both exact the same rate of profit on the capital employed. Each industry may be regarded as having an "evolution of its own" and varies with the relative composition of its capital accordingly. Thus we see a disturbing factor in the rate of profit and in the composition of capital which does not allow the true value of any individual commodity to express itself by labor time, though in the mass such commodities necessarily conform to their real cost of production.

Custom and convention is responsible for the interference with the cost of labor as represented by the standard of comfort. Social custom enables one class of workers to demand a price quite out of proportion to what they produce. They secure a purchasing power at the expense of their fellows. What they receive over their own efforts their more unfortunate brethren have to supply. And thus a further disturbing factor is introduced into the composition of capital. These arbitrary deviations from labor become crystallized, as it were, in a commodity. Given these crystallized forms of priced labor, and alter the quantity of labor in the commodity, and it falls and rises in accordance with the decrease or increase of the quantity of labor, showing that labor is the determining factor of value.

Sometimes objection is taken to Marx reducing labor to an abstract quantity to explain the seeming anomaly between "price of production" and "cost of production," but Marx in doing this conforms to the principle of the scientific truths. Herbert Spencer, in his "Data of Ethics," Sec. 104, writes: "Scientific truths, of whatever order, are reached by eliminating, perturbing or conflicting factors, when (by dealing with fundamental factors in the abstract, not as presented in actual phenomena, but as presented in ideal separation, general laws have been ascertained) it becomes possible to draw inferences in concrete cases by taking into account incidental factors. But it is only by first ignoring those and recognizing the essential elements alone that we can discover the essential truth sought."

And in illustration of the above principle he quotes the following: "The course of projectiles having being theoretically settled as though they moved through a vacuum, are afterwards settled in more exact correspondence with fact by taking in account atmospheric resistance." We are shown that no scientific establishment of relative truth is possible until the absolute truths have been formulated independently.

Before we can understand the price form of value, which is the concrete expression of value, we must first of all get a clear conception of what the underlying substance is which forms value so as to enable us to recognize any deviation on infringement of that law by arbitrary social influences.

Marx thus found it necessary first of all to give his attention to the actual substance of value. In resolving it into abstract human labor he conformed to the methods adopted by the most eminent scientists in their search for scientific truth. In adopting this method, Marx no doubt made his subject somewhat difficult for the ordinary reader to follow who has never perhaps troubled to make himself acquainted with any single scientific truth. The apparent conflicting phenomena in economics are not greater, however, than what present themselves in any other science, and the cry of "difficult to understand," "dry and abstruse" are poor excuses for neglecting to maintain the argument adduced by Marx.

Marx goes on to point out that the law of competition continually gives the victory to the larger capital, the individual capitalist having to give way to the joint-stock company, the latter giving way to the combine or syndicate, and the syndicate giving way to the trust—the trust in its turn giving way to the collective control of wealth by the municipality and community. This principle of competition destroys itself when it reaches the stage of monopoly, giving way to collectivization of wealth. The State has already taken over the manufacture of weapons and the manufacture of clothes for its soldiers; and controls the telegraphs, postage, carriage of parcels, and runs railways; while the municipalities supply their own water, gas, build their own schools, baths, and wash-houses, libraries, erect dwellings, and bid fair to become serious competitors to capitalists in many industries. Complete collectivism means universal co-operation, which in its turn involves social equality.

Commodities will disappear with the realization of collectivism, because exchange will no longer exist. Competition will also have exhausted itself and given way to universal co-operation. The economic value of an article will then be openly expressed by the number of hours taken to produce it.

Price will no longer conceal the labor time of individual commodities; cost of production measured by time will then be the recognized standard measure of economic value.

NINETEENTH CENTURY DECALOG

Thou shalt have one God only: who Would be at the expense of two?
No graven images may be Worshipped, except the currency;
Swear not at all: for, for thy curse
Thine enemy is none the worse;
At church on Sunday to attend
Will serve to keep the world thy friend:
Honor thy parents: that is, all
From whom advancement may befall;
Thou shalt not kill: but needs not strive Officially to keep alive;
Do not adultery commit:
Advantage rarely comes of it;
Thou shalt not steal: an empty feat
When it's so lucrative to cheat;
Bear not false witness: let the lie
Have the time on its own wings to fly;
Thou shalt not covet; but tradition
Approves all forms of competition.

COMING SOLIDARITY OF MAN

Philosophy of Socialism in Accord with that of Evolution—The Conscious Socialist
Movement a Rebellion of Free
Individualities

By W. C. Owen

In the long debate that mankind has held over its history it has hammered out one type as its ideal; a type uniting the virility of self-assertion with the femininity of self-abnegation; a type vehement in its insistence on the right of private initiative, and persistent in the subordination of its own conduct to the common weal. The womanly tenderness and the pronounced manhood of Christ bear each their equal charm, and Napoleon the egoist is tolerated for the sake of Napoleon the patriot. The judgment of the world at large is clear upon the subject, and the world has not passed its judgment in a hurry.

Every movement has, therefore, a double task before it; it must prove that the measures it proposes will elevate the type, and it must prove that it will not be careless of the single life. If it threatens to be a disintegrating force it will alarm the gregarious instinct, which is very strong; if it threatens to suppress individuality the instinct of self-preservation will immediately take fright. In proportion as one or other of these instincts is unduly developed there is also developed the tendency to exalt the claims of society at the expense of the individual, or vice versa. The understanding that the claims of each are in every way identical and inseparable comes only after long debate.

Such a debate the whole Socialist movement has been passing through from the time when Marx and Bakunin quarreled over the conduct of the International. Looking backward we can see that the split was unavoidable; looking forward we can also see that a reunion is as certain. Of the near approach of that reunion the presence in the movement of such men as William Morris and Oscar Wilde is a very obvious sign. Both have a world-wide reputation as interpreters of that art whose breath is individualism, and whose essence is harmonious combination.

The gregarious instinct will not be denied; and today, when the possibilities of solidarity are such as the past had never dreamed of, it proclaims itself more imperiously than ever. For all to whom opportunities of study have been afforded the intellectual horizon has expanded, within this century, beyond the power of computation, and largeness is inevitably the prevailing note. We no longer grope our way with timid steps we stride with seven-league boots to our conclusions. The toil of countless generations has put a mass of details at our disposition, and the task of this generation is to sum them up. This tendency shows itself everywhere. The closest investigator of the age, Charles Darwin, is also its boldest generalizer, and the researches of a Pasteur or a Koch rivet attention through our comprehension of the role of the infinitely little as infinitely great. Our commerce circles the globe, and the markets of both hemispheres, in spite of reactionary protective tariffs, rise and fall in unison. In politics we still play at patriotism to wheedle the mob, but the thoughtful are all internationalists at heart. We ransack the god-cupboards of every age and race, seeking materials for the construction of a religion of—Humanity, which, in the face of Philistine sneers, we practically, in our hearts, all spell with capitals. The intense individuality of a conspicuously restless epoch is everywhere alive, with the instinct of solidarity, and the veriest hermits of us all—the Thoreaus, the Ruskins and the Tolstoys—far from being mere disinterested spectators of the game, are feverishly anxious that it should be played in accordance with the only rules which, in their judgment, can lead to universal success.

All this splendid individuality, it is said, Socialism would crush; putting hu-

WHAT HISTORY TEACHES

THE SOCIAL DEMOCRAT

History shows man for centuries trying to adjust himself to a government or to associate himself with his fellows without giving up any rights he enjoyed in the wild forests as "monarch of all he surveyed." Out of the first associations grew despotism and military life, resulting in the slavery of one class to another of superior force. Slavery without industry would have been an expensive luxury for the victor, so industry followed—the slaves were put to work building tombs and monuments. Finally industry became specialized and the slave became a free man by purchase or as a reward. Increasing numbers of free men threatened and eventually overthrew despots and, by slow but steady progress, passed through the feudal system and the age of hand manufacture, or apprenticeship. The people then were of greater importance and the rulers less powerful, until the French and American revolutions opened a way for representative forms of government.

Hand craft is no longer possible, and the heirs of past great estates and kingdoms have taken the advantage offered by this modern machine age to organize industries into gigantic trusts. Government has changed accordingly the old despot formerly controlling ten thousand slaves is now an industrial organizer or machine owner, controlling ten thousand men by means of wages, which they must have, for running the machines he controls. Government is now a shield behind which the machine owner entrenches himself, and continues in his power.

Economy of production and distribution is the plan of the machine age, of trusts and industrial organizations. This is not yet perfected. Department stores of today far excel in their completeness the state fairs of a few years ago, but the delivery wagons of a dozen different department stores hourly pass along the same thoroughfares, perhaps to the same apartment house to deliver goods. This is a great waste of labor, as are also the duplicate stores, show goods, clerks, advertisements, managers—and profits. A few years only are required to centralize these into one management. Like the manufacturing trusts of sugar, ice, iron, coal, and even a money trust. The next step is for the people who make these things and depend upon them for a living to take control instead of allowing one man to rule as a despot the entire product or distribution of any article.

Education is teaching the people to rule themselves and that the only humane solution to the industrial organizing and centralizing system is to place the combined product of men's genius and labor for centuries at the command and within the reach of all by the people owning and operating the machines and doing away with the wage enslaving system.

Evolution along this line is now going on, yet so noiselessly that one who would advocate private letter carrying, private parks and life saving stations, private railroads, parcel posts, telegraphs, etc. (in Europe), or private gas, electric and car lines in various American cities would be considered a century behind the times, or crazy.

Conviction is growing among authors, poets, scientists, business men, students, and all classes of people, that the outcome of centralizing can only be public ownership, dividing among all the people the benefits of centralized production and systematic distribution, by shortening hours of toil and entirely doing away with wages.

Political parties are different; there is the Capitalist party standing for private ownership and the wage enslaving system and subdivided into the two parties known as Republican and Democratic. Opposed to this Capitalist party, but in line with the general evolution of society as above outlined is the Social Democratic party. The presidential candidate of this party is Eugene V. Debs. It declares that the present system inevitably separates society into two classes, the Capitalist class and the propertyless working class. Its object is:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

No other party stands for the interests of the working class, because all others are divisions of the Capitalist party.

LABOR AND WAR

The capitalist press announces that the Chinese difficulty has already affected American industry. The Pepperell cotton mills of Biddeford, Me., are already cut off. In recent years their shipments have been largely to the Orient, and what is true of these mills is also true of mills in the South, where there are 414; Maine has 23, Massachusetts 187, and Pennsylvania 158. China alone in 1899 purchased over 205 million yards of uncolored, and 15 million yards of colored cloth from us.

In many of these mills machinery has been especially constructed and adapted to the manufacture of goods which the Chinese desire, and if the demand is shut off, the mills being obliged to close, will throw out of employment about 300,000 operatives.

Capitalism can only live by new markets. The inability of labor to consume the wealth it creates leaves a surplus which must be disposed of. When labor receives in return for its labor power compensation equal in value to what it creates then it will be able to purchase and consume its products. Then foolish men and women of America will not suffer because Chinese refuse to be clothed by them.

NOTES AND COMMENT

A severe lesson in the power of trade unionism has just been taught the Lincoln Guardians, says the Westminster Budget. The local medical officer asked for an increase of salary from £45 to £80. This was refused and he resigned. The guardians, saying they objected to be dictated to, sought a new officer at the lower salary, but in vain, as the local doctors boycotted the board. The salary was raised to £60, with the same result, and then to £70, but still nobody offered. At length an Edinburgh doctor was imported, but immediately after being elected he resigned and went home again. Last week the guardians acknowledged themselves beaten, and decided to appoint a local doctor at £80—if any will accept.

When the blast furnaces in the steel industry are blown out and the mills shut down you get an indication that the bottom is going to drop out of industries generally. The Iron Age says: "Restriction of production is proceeding quite rapidly, more blast furnaces having recently blown out, while others are fast getting into shape for suspending operations. It is likely now that the Western bar mills will remain closed for considerably longer than had been expected. The closing of so many mills should have an effect on prices of bars, but steel bars have sold within the week at lower rates than the previous week."

With Eugene Debs' denial of the Democratic canard about his withdrawal before him, one Creelman, an editorial writer on Hearst's Chicago American, impudently declares that "It is notorious that Mr. Hanna, chairman of the Republican National Committee, is assisting and encouraging Mr. Debs, the Socialist candidate for president." This is the journalism of "the twentieth century," amended to meet the exigencies of a campaign of slander and hypocrisy by the Democratic party. Jim Creelman would be howled down and kicked out by any decent body of workingmen in the country.

"Lèse majesté" is as serious an offense in Japan as in Germany. For a Christian native paper having gently ridiculed certain queer ceremonies in connection with the recent wedding of the Crown Prince, notably the simultaneous drinking of bride and bridegroom from a double-spouted teapot, the editor has been sentenced to three and a half years' imprisonment with hard labor, while even the unfortunate compositor who set the article in type is to have a year in jail.

A few days ago there were assembled in a room in the Rookery building, Chicago, four men identified with the iron and steel industry, who represented $304,000,000 of capital. They met together to declare that the only way to control prices, which, by the way, is their principal business, is to lessen the output by stopping production for a month. No doubt it will lessen the output; it will also lessen the provisions in the pantry of the workingman.

A bit of information that will interest dollar-a-day workmen comes from New York. It is that the state has 14,000 guardsmen fully armed and equipped to man the sixteen army posts within its borders, if the regulars are sent abroad. Adjt.-Gen. Hoffman is ready to co-operate with the national government—to protect the property pilfered from the labor of wage-slaves under the capitalist system.

Charles B. Spahr, author of "The Present Distribution of Wealth in the United States," says that for the $4,650,000,000 of railway stock now in existence the original investors paid no more than $465,000,000, or only 10 per cent of their face value. A railway that pays 3 per cent is actually paying 30 per cent upon the real invested capital. Labor creates wealth; capital appropriates it.

The war in China is the outcome of commercialism, not of hatred of Christians, but of hatred of capitalism from which Christians as well as others profit. The "powers," forced by the greed and necessities of modern capitalism, are massing troops and arranging to murder Chinamen in the interest of the capitalist class under the cloak of religion and civilization.

The czarina of Russia has gained the gratitude of her subjects by organizing to aid women in reduced circumstances. They are almost constantly employed in making embroidery for court dresses and ecclesiastical garb. That is, they are used to uphold and perpetuate the old order of cant and rulership.

Swift & Co., meat packers of Chicago, Kansas City, East St. Louis and St. Joseph, also Cudahy Bros. of Cudahy, Wis., have been declared unfair by organized labor because of their refusal to employ anyone belonging to a labor union.

FABLE OF THE SILLY OLD DRAGON

There was once a Silly Old Dragon who lived all by himself, and enjoyed his own society immensely, and cultivated the fad of haying everything about him yellow.

There was no one to question his taste in colors, until one day he was visited by a Cinnamon Bear, a Tame Lion and a Trick Elephant, and some other animals who had traveled with a circus and called themselves "civilized."

They insisted that he ought to wear a red necktie and cock his hat on one side of his head, the way they did, and smoke cigarettes. To this last he offered strenuous objections, but they whipped out their revolvers and made him smoke their "dope," until he got under its influence and rather liked it.

They argued with him about God, and told him he must say some words and go through some performances that they would teach him, or he would be eternally damned.

They all had different words and forms to teach him, and quarreled among themselves, and as he took no interest in their controversies, they called him an ignorant old heathen.

They told him he had no enterprise, and they proposed to build a railroad through his garden, and to erect factories with greasy machinery and disagreeable noise and suffocating smoke, in place of his flower beds.

They told him it was a shame to live in such a lazy manner, and that he ought to borrow money and buy a lot of things he didn't want, and pay interest and rent, so that he would be obliged to cultivate habits of industry and thrift.

They offered him money—yellow money, too!—on first mortgage security, at 6 per cent interest.

They sat down on his front porch and talked about dividing up the place into town lots, and quarreled among themselves as to which should get the biggest slice.

As a result, the Silly Old Dragon lost his temper, and went to thrashing his tail right and left doing considerable damage to "foreign interests." Of course, he must be punished for his ill temper and discourteous manners, and made to pay an "indemnity"—which is just as good for the purpose of establishing a claim to his place, as getting him to borrow money.

Moral: The gospel of peace and good will must be promoted at all hazards.—Straight Edge.

REVOLUTION ON THE WAY

What a Very Small but Remarkable Invention Promises to Do in a Single Industry

A new and wonderful invention is going to cause a revolution in the spinning industry. One Victor Belanger has succeeded in perfecting a rotary spinning ring which with a new application of compressed air will double the capacity of all the cotton, silk and woolen mills of the world. This is said to be the greatest invention in spinning machinery in one hundred years.

The new spinning ring will do in eight hours what the old one does in sixteen. And it costs about a cent.

The Boston Times says: "When the frame is perfected to meet the great speed of the new ring, thread will be spun probably four times faster than at present, quadrupling the capacity of the mills, and, of course, cheapening the product."

Belanger's invention will force itself upon every one of the millions of spinning spindles all over the world. It will revolutionize the industry everywhere.

Belanger was a poor man. Now he is rich. A company was organized, capitalized at $5,000,000. Belanger was given for his invention $2,500,000 of the company's stock; he also received what must have been a very large sum of money besides. He is now living luxuriously in an elegant summer home upon a splendid estate.

The new ring will not be sold to mill operators. It will be leased, and the income is conservatively estimated at one million dollars a year. Manufacturers are said to be jumping at the chance of making one of their spindles do the work of two.

There are many other details in connection with this invention, but they are immaterial, though interesting. What we want to call attention to is the effect of this invention upon labor.

In all the reports we have read in the press about this wonderful spinning ring, a great deal is said about the invention, the prospective profits, the cost of the ring, the increase in production caused by the ring and the ring itself. All this and more about this invention, but little, very little about what to us is its most important feature—its effect upon labor.

Somehow in the excitement over this wonderful discovery, labor has been almost forgotten. This is because the capitalist press are not interested in labor, although labor supports the capitalist press. And the press is not anxious to have labor interested in labor; so the press concentrates labor's attention upon the increased omnipotence and power of those who own the ring and all the other factors in the production and distribution of the necessities of life.

One stray paragraph, however, tells us in two lines what the invention's effect will be upon labor. Here it is: "Half of the workers now toiling either may be thrown out of employment or new markets must be created."

There you have it in a nutshell.

The workers in the mills will not have shares of stock in the new company, nor have summer homes with beautiful estates, and onyx bath tubs annexed. Only in one particular will they resemble Monsieur Belanger and the owners of the stock in the new company—they won't have to work. At least, half of them won't. The other half will have to work twice as fast as before to keep pace with the increased speed of the spindles, and they will not receive any more pay for their increased exertion. Instead, they will receive less, because the number of unemployed being increased one-half, the price of labor will decrease and production will be cheapened that much more again, in addition to the lowering of the cost through labor being displaced in the first instance.—Exchange.

IS THIS PROSPERITY?

I admit that there is an apparent prosperity, but it is a prosperity caused by a foreign war, by the expenditure of $65,000,000 for warships, by the flooding of the country with millions of watered stocks, but I deny that our economic system is a reliable and safe one, and I deny that we have any abiding prosperity, and I assert that the working people are growing poorer and poorer each year. Taking the statistics of the government we find that:

In 1850 the wealth of the nation was $8,000,000,000. The producers' share was 62½ per cent; non-producers' share, 37½ per cent.

In 1860 the wealth increased to $16,000,000,000. The producers' share fell to 43¾ per cent; non-producers' increased to 56 1-3 per cent.

In 1870 the wealth was $30,000,000,000. Producers' share was 32 2-3 per cent; non-producers' share, 67¼ per cent.

In 1880 the wealth increased to $48,000,000,000. The producers' share went down to 24 per cent, while the non-producers' share increased to 76 per cent.

In 1890 the wealth was further increased to $61,000,000,000. The producers' share fell to 17 per cent, the non-producers' increased to 83 per cent.

And now in 1900 it is estimated that the wealth of the country is $100,000,000,000, while the producers' share has fallen to 10 per cent and the non-producers' has gone up to 90 per cent.

As the amount of wealth production increased, the producers' share in that wealth decreased.

According to the last census report, 52 per cent of our population are born in poverty and consigned to a life of servitude. Half of our nation own but 3 per cent of the national wealth, practically all of which the labor of their class has created. This class is increasing rapidly in numbers, and the middle class is being constantly crowded down into the already congested ranks of labor.—Dague's Plain Talk.

A joint meeting of Branches 4 and 7, Illinois, held Friday evening, August 27, nominated Comrade A. S. Edwards for congressional candidate in the Fifth district, and Comrade Wm. C. Horgan for the state legislature from the Nineteenth legislative district.

BATTLE SONG OF FREEDOM'S ARMY
Marching down to Armageddon, brothers bold and strong,
Cheer the cheerless way we tread on, with a soldier's song!
Let the armies of the old flags march in silent dread,
Death and life are one to us, who fight for quick and dead.

We are they who will not falter—many swords or few—
Till we make this earth the altar of a worship new;
We are those who will not take from palace, priest or code,
A meaner law than brotherhood—a lower lord than God.

We are those whose unpaid legions, in free ranks arrayed,
Massacred in many regions, never once were stayed;
We are those whose torn battalions, trained to bleed, not fly,
Make our agonies a triumph—conquer, while we die.

We are they whose bugles ring that all the wars may cease,
We are they who'll pay the kings their cruel price for peace;
We must slay in perfect pity those who must not live,
Conquer and forgive our foes, or die and still forgive.

Therefore, down to Armageddon, brothers bold and strong,
Cheer the glorious way we tread on, with a soldier's song!
Let the armies of the old flags march in silent dread,
Death and life are one to us, who fight for quick and dead.

—Edwin Arnold.

WHAT EDITORS ARE SAYING

Courier, Pueblo, Col.
The Chinese racket don't fool quite as many people as was hoped for by the imperialist party. The great majority of Americans don't care a tinker's swear word about the entire job lot of invading heroes be sent to the happy hunting grounds. The Chinese scare stories are a pack of lies.

Union Guide, Danville, Ill.
The rise in the price of sugar this year has netted $30,000,000 for the trust. It amounts to nearly $2 a family. If a tax of $2 a year had been laid by law on each family for the sugar trust, we would have a tax riot in this country. Yet we concede without grumbling any extortion they demand. We are an intelligent, free people!

The Exponent, Saginaw, Mich.
The workman might better have no vote at all than to use that vote to enslave himself. If deprived of the right to vote at all he would at once realize that his economic masters used all the machinery of government for selfish purposes, a condition he is slow to see because at intervals he goes through the form of voting for men and measures proposed by his masters.

Farmers' Review, Bonham, Tex.
When the universal reign of commercialism is complete the world will come to one universal economic level. Through modern machinery and improvement, the nations will be knit together with steamships and wire or wireless telegraph. A few capitalist masters will direct the supreme dictators of the commerce and industry of the world. Their wealth, and power to absorb the wealth will be unbounded, and the masses will become pariahs and surfs.

Herald, Warren, Mass.
All England is by no means indifferent to the famine in India. But it is doubtless true that the taxes which bear heavily on her poor people, added to the concentration of wealth in the hands of native princes, prevent the masses from having any resource in case of drouth. Besides, everybody is thinking of the awful waste of money, and worse, of the wicked Boer war. At the rate the cost of this war is piling up, the expense of conquering Boers, it has been estimated, will be raised from $5,000 to $15,000 apiece.

The Toller, Terre Haute.
Workingmen are the most generous and free-hearted people that ever lived. They build palaces and rent hovels. They build mills, factories and railroads; and then with that generosity so common with them, turn them over to capitalists for the latter's benefit. They dig gold and silver and hand it to the capitalists, who in turn give a small portion back to them. One good turn deserves another, you know. In fact, they produce the wealth of the world and then let the other fellow enjoy it. Truly this generosity is killing.

Appeal to Reason, Girard, Kan.
The Democratic party is as much capitalist as the Republican party. It is opposed to socialism. Its leaders believe in private property. Bryan denies that he believes in the common ownership of the means of production and distribution. Some of the Democrats foolishly think he is entitled to socialist votes. No more than Debs is entitled to Democratic or Republican votes. Men who want socialism should vote for Debs—those who do not want socialism should not vote for him. Bryan is a reactionist. He wants to hold the present system and keep it from becoming more oppressive so that the people will be willing to bear it; he is therefore more against the coming socialism than those who would push it to its logical end and thus force people to see that the private capital system is bad and should be abolished. Vote for a great socialist party.

Justice, London, England.
"The crime of the century" is how one paper describes the massacre of Europeans at Peking, and certainly it was a very terrible and very horrible manifestation of human savagery. But have we any reason to pride ourselves upon being so very superior to the heathen Chinese? If any members of the dread association of "Boxers" have been reading our reptile press, and have instructed their co-religionists in the ideas and philosophy they have gathered therefrom, it would be quite sufficient to account for a rising for the extermination of foreigners in China. For not only have our yellow journals called for the extermination of the Boers, who have certainly not inflicted the injury on us that the foreign invaders have inflicted on China, but they have hounded on our native "Boxers," the hooligans of our great cities, to the assault and murder of all and sundry who disapproved of this war of extermination being waged against the Boers.

COMMON WEAL AND PRIVATE INITIATIVE

manity in irons; squeezing us all through the self-same mould; sending us all wriggling through life, dressed, shaped and colored alike, as so many tadpoles in a ditch.

Since we do not expect to gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles, the best method of examining this charge is to consider what manner of men those whom we have known as Socialists have hitherto proved themselves to be. For, as it is only the most pronounced individualities who wed themselves to a movement in its first unpopularity, so it is always these early pioneers from whom the movement draws its character. In the first place, then, the Socialists have all, without exception, been rebels against authority. As such they have been persecuted, imprisoned, exiled, hanged. In the second place they have been all, without exception, evolutionists, and he who is an evolutionist is also a revolutionist, since the acceptance of the evolutionary philosophy is the profoundest mental revolution conceivable. It inverts the whole picture of life; or rather, to speak more accurately, it opens our eyes to the fact that the whole picture has been hitherto presented topsy-turvy. The fable of a fancied fall is replaced with the proof of a continuous ascent; for the pessimistic caricature of man as a degraded creature, conceived in sin, there is substituted a figure glowing with life and hope; an individuality with a matchless record of triumphs over hostile environments; a being pre-eminently capable of selecting from and absorbing all that is best in his environment; a being therefore essentially fitted for self-government. This is unquestionably the teaching of evolution; this is the ideal it holds up as that which alone is worthy of the dignity of man. This is the ideal which, instinctively, Democracy is struggling to realize in every country, and for that struggle, which has but just begun, the Social Democrats—the Socialists—are preparing all along the line.

This central note of self-government dominates the whole of their philosophy, and their actions are the best proof of the assertion. The world, which is wedded to custom and consequently hates the rebellion of free individualities, has accused the Socialists of revolt against every venerable respectability in existence, and the accusation is unquestionably just. They are pitiless critics of existing institutions, and the criticism is very far indeed from being confined to our existing economic system, though the Socialists are peculiar for their steady insistence that it is the economic system that gives the shape to all other institutions. To this system, under which the means of production and distribution are the property of a class, they trace directly the entire system of class rule, representative government being necessarily, in their eyes, the sorriest of farces so long as this endures.

It would be easy to show, did space permit, that the whole democratic movement, of which Socialism is the advance guard, has had its rise in an altered conception of the origin and destiny of man: a conception that has slowly dawned upon the world, that flamed conspicuously into life during the period of the Renaissance, and has received an enormous impetus of late through the scientific investigations of the evolutionists. As this proud conception is directly opposed to the humiliation doctrine that the Church still teaches, the question of the future attitude of the Church toward the democratic movement in general, and Socialism in particular, is full of interest.

In reality a far more important question is the attitude of Socialism toward the Church. The Church is on the defense; she will shift her ground perpetually according to the fierceness of the attack, and yield position after position as she has already yielded them. Indeed, as regards a large proportion of our Protestant clergy, the charge recently made by Father Ignatius that they are clergy only in name, and free-thinkers in reality, is strictly true. Hitherto, however, Socialism, having its hands full with the elucidation of the economic problem, has been content to accentuate the point on which it finds itself in harmony with all existing religions. That point is the solidarity of the race, the brotherhood of man; an individualistic as well as a collectivist truth that all religions, dependent as they are on the masses for support, have always found it necessary to advance as the fundamental basis of their teaching. Unfortunately, all existing religions have immediately proceeded to undermine this principle of solidarity by dividing mankind into the lost and the saved, the sinners and the saints; by the abominable calumny that we were conceived in sin; by the grossly immoral doctrine of vicarious atonement, the most flagrant inducement to the abuse of life ever imposed upon human credulity. As Socialism gathers strength and clearness, and takes its stand more firmly on the solidarity of the race—achievable only through the conception of the individual as a being of infinite capabilities—it will find it necessary to join in a general movement for the explosion of these dogmas, a movement in which it will have for allies all those who are saturated with the evolutionary philosophy of the age. It will preach to the masses the most inspiring sermon they have ever heard, and they will be greedy listeners; for it will stir to the depths the enormous body of discontent already engendered by the palpable injustices of society. It will follow a method the direct opposite of that so laboriously pursued for ages by the Church. It will say, with the historian Froude, that "the patience of the poor is the wonder of the world," and, "and," it will add, "its greatest crime." Disobedience will necessarily be its text; for, speaking from the standpoint of the natural as opposed to the supernatural, it will be forced to condemn tolerance of unnatural conditions as the most intolerable of vices. It will say with Oscar Wilde: "The virtues of the poor may be readily admitted, and are much to be regretted." It will tell them that class rule and liberty cannot possibly be co-existent; that in the existence of class rule is to be found the source of all their ills; that its abolition is therefore the sternly paramount duty of the hour. It will point out that all class rule depends exclusively on the power of the purse, which rests in its turn, on the monopoly of the instruments of production and exchange; and that, to abolish class rule, there is but one thing to be done, viz., to place such instruments in the joint possession and control of the united people. It will justify this startling change not only on grounds of expediency but on grounds of abstract justice, by showing that the earth, and the inventions by which we make the earth obedient to our will, have come down to us as a joint heritage, to be administered for the commonweal. It will go much further than this. Pointing to man's achievements in the past, it will give the masses the most positive assurance of their capacity to complete the conquest, and, by firing them with hope, it will supply the one thing needed to make a revolution successful and complete. For hope and self-confidence are the parents of all great changes, and the glory of evolution is the optimistic gospel it proclaims.

In all this it is clear that the clergy must either abandon completely their view of man as a degraded being, destined forever to a leading-string existence, or they must throw in their lot with the reactionists. That such of them as choose the latter course will have no lack of company among the so-called evolutionists themselves is, unhappily, certain, if Mr. Herbert Spencer's name is to have the weight in the future that it has carried in the past. Mr. Spencer has been steadily educating a school to the delusion that evolution is at all times a gradual and slow-paced process that moves with even foot. Against this will be set, proof overwhelming that the teachings of all history are: slow preparation followed by the quickest action; a lengthy incubation and a sudden birth.

Throughout this century a debate has been in progress such as the world has never seen, and history invariably repeats itself. The hour inevitably arrives when men decide that they have talked enough; the general understanding is complete, and action is in order. How soon that hour shall come, how deep the action decided on shall reach, must necessarily depend on the thoroughness of the discussion; for solidarity of thought is only possible where the leading propositions have been boldly submitted and candidly discussed. I believe that the major premise round which the fight must rage is the evolutionary doctrine of the dignity of man; his limitless capacity for self-government of every kind—industrial as well as religious and political. The two latter are, indeed, today in theory conceded, thanks to the Protestant Reformation and the French and American Revolutions. The first, which is the next and by far the most important link in the chain of evolution, has yet to be established.

While regarding the orthodox Church as a reactionary force, I am far from regarding her as a great one. In her organization, in the gifts she can bestow, in the prestige she can confer on those who openly attach themselves to her, and in the aesthetic attractions with which she surrounds herself, she has an apparent strength that makes a brave showing in fine weather, but it is ill fitted to stand the tempest that is coming. She will find herself, if she continues obstinately to oppose democracy, pitted against both the intellect and the interests of the age, and the combination will be irresistible. Every public upheaval we have had since the Reformation has proved the truth of this position. The French Revolution is a notable case in point, and the French Revolution took place a hundred years ago in a country where the densest ignorance prevailed, and slavish obedience to the priest had been the rule for centuries. Twenty years ago the same phenomenon presented itself, though far more conspicuously, in the Paris Commune, and the stand that Parnell was able to take single-handed, against the clergy in Ireland—the Church's modern Gibraltar—is pregnant with instruction. It will be observed that I have taken all my illustrations from the history of the Roman Catholic Church. The Protestants have too much rebel blood in their veins to be able to play the part of reactionaries with effect, and many of their sects have practically long since rejected the superstitions I have criticized.

FARMER AND WAGE EARNER

In a recent report the State Labor Commissioner of New Hampshire says of the shoe industry in that state that there are employed, in round numbers, 13,000 hands, whose annual wages per certified returns aggregate over $5,000,000, an average of $385 each. This includes salaries of superintendents, bookkeepers, and the higher salaried officials of the great companies. The factory or jobber's price of the product of this labor for the same year was $23,000,000, while the retail price or cost of the same to consumer was $35,000,000. The cost of raw material (virtually labor, $5,000,000; margins, $10,000, of other industries) was $15,000,000, which, with the wages paid as above, leaves a balance of $15,000,000 to $25,000,000 cost of product to the consumer (which includes the factory hands) over and above the labor cost of the same. In a word, labor receives one dollar's worth and capital at least three dollars' worth of the product of this great indispensable industry. Hence, labor is able to buy back, at best, only one dollar in four of that which it produces, and the other three dollars' worth of product must seek a market elsewhere than in the United States. Hence, the constantly increasing demand among our commercial men for foreign markets. Hence, too, the present inadequacy of the home market that once made the American farmer the most independent agriculturist in the world. This state of things is true in every avenue of productive industry. Invention and machinery have so taken the place of skilled hand labor in all these lines, as in the shoe industry, that, largely, cheap labor is more and more in demand, and the skilled artisan finds it more and more difficult to secure steady and remunerative employment in his chosen vocation. In the meantime, his wife or boys or girls are holding the machine down and receiving nominal wages therefor.

The direct influence of these changes upon agriculture is the restriction of home and local markets, and consequently reduction of prices. This is not so noticeable in the staple productions (as wheat, etc.), which are subject to world-wide conditions, as it is in the side lines of production, which heretofore have been the most profitable sources of the farmer's income. New conditions need new adjustments. As each succeeding adjustment opens the way for never and more advanced conditions, it is useless to look for a panacea good for all time to come for the ills to which agriculture is exposed. The progressive, the intelligent farmer is the one who is ever on the alert to adjust his methods and enterprises to the manifest progress of the age. What is true in these respects in the United States is equally true in other lands, and the "pauper labor of Europe" is already an open question here.—F. E. Miller in Topeka Farmers' Advocate.

Happenings in Washington

The terrible street railway accident in Tacoma on the Fourth of July, where forty-two human beings were ushered into eternity, and more than three score were injured, because the company in the lust for greed overloaded its defective car and its inexperienced motor-man, who was employed to make trips. Human life and safety being a secondary consideration, makes a strong argument for Socialism. Such a catastrophe couldn't have happened under proper supervision by the municipality. Now comes the Seattle strike among the poorly paid telephone girls; they are getting the sympathy of the whole community. Corporate greed is killing its votaries; things are coming our way with lightning rapidity. Then further east there is the St. Louis strike, which shows that the corporations are trying to do with wage-earners; the day is breaking over head; our masters are doing themselves to a finish.

It is to be regretted that our followers are so few, apparently, out here. Many say our theories are all right, but that the time is too soon. They forget that it is never too early to do right.

M. CUNNINGHAM.

The degeneracy and corruption of modern representative government are attributed in large measure by Prof. John R. Commons to the fact that our representatives today, instead of being specialists, claim to represent "the whole people." "When all classes of voters," says Prof. Commons (writing in the Independent)—"capitalists and laborers, Catholics and Protestants, educated and ignorant, natives and foreigners, whites and blacks—are thrown into one district or ward and are commanded to elect one man who shall represent all, plainly they can elect a colorless candidate who represents none." What is needed, according to Prof. Commons, is representation according to interests, and he claims that this basis of representation is sustained by historical, as well as by logical, reasons.

Social Democratic Party Leaflets

FOR CAMPAIGN PURPOSES

The National Campaign Committee of the Social Democratic party will issue for the campaign a series of well-written, effective four-page leaflets, two of which are now ready for delivery. These leaflets will be sent to branches and individual workers at cost of printing and postage.

LEAFLET NO. 1 is an address to unorganized Socialists; contains information concerning the Socialist movement, the party and its methods, object and program.

LEAFLET NO. 2—"An Open Letter to the Average American Workman," by Ben Atterbury. This is an admirable and convincing paper on the wage question, production, distribution of wealth and an appeal to the intelligence of the working class.

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i.e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this generation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man. As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

DAWN OF FREEDOM DOOM OF CAPITALISM

Miseries of the Masses are Rather Increasing than Diminishing, in Spite of the Parrot Cries of Prosperity

BLINDED BY FALSE PATRIOTISM

Labor Class Advancing to Knowledge that All Commodities are but Crystallized Forms of Labor

By Charles Trench

Clear proofs are not wanting that the working classes are, at length, serious and earnest in their determination to claim a better share in the moral and material inheritance of the human race. Large masses of wage earners distinctly perceive that, notwithstanding the enormous development of industry and of national wealth, the miseries of the masses are rather increasing than diminishing in spite of the parrot cries of prosperity which subsidized newspapers and knavish politicians are now dinning into the heads of the people.

Though we are incessantly reminded from pulpit, press, and platform that capital and labor are inseparable, and that Socialism must be a foolhardy leap in the dark, still incontrovertible evidence is abundant to prove that industry, on a large scale, and with all the appliances of modern science, can be carried on without the assistance of capitalist masters. There are, for example, 337 different kinds of industries and institutions in the civilized world which are managed and owned by the people; 54 governments in Europe own their own railways; 68 governments own their telegraphs, and 25 their own savings banks!

These are impressive, as well as instructive, figures, and serve to show how we are duped and besotted by shams and swindles which a large majority of the people are taught to believe are necessary for the well-being of our so-called "glorious institutions." The fact of the matter, my friends, is that many of you are so blinded by vain glory and false patriotism that you cannot mentally see the organized gangs of knaves that are taking the bread out of your mouths and the clothes off your backs. Though the fact is too obvious to require illustration, still I will repeat, for the hundredth time, that, with the development of the capitalistic system, machinery is more and more perfected, and that improved devices render human labor superfluous, throwing it out of employment and exposing the wage earners to enforced idleness and destitution. As the mechanism improves, the productive power of industry increases, and continuously tends to exceed the demands of the market. Hence come the periodical gluts and overstocked warehouses, brought about by overproduction. We all know the dreadful results that follow in the wake of cut-downs, shut-downs, and industrial stagnation.

The manufacturers, having accumulated enormous profits, can of course afford to cheerfully wait for better times, but their poor white slaves are often compelled to face famine and all its accompanying horrors.

It must be, therefore, obvious from these premises that a revolution and the introduction of an entirely new industrial system, based upon the principles of Socialism, are imperatively necessary to prevent the moral and physical ruin of our whole industrial population.

Just look, my friends, at the industrial muddle which threatens us with a tremendous crisis in the not far distant future! We behold at this very hour capitalist appropriators of the product of labor contending desperately for the possession of the markets, without systematic regard to market requirements. Each competitor strives to secure a market according to the dictates of his own interests. He accordingly endeavors to overreach his rival by adulteration, bribery, and other sharp practices now become recognized and inseparable adjuncts in the mad scramble for dividends which is debasing and impoverishing our entire population.

As an object lesson, which will better illustrate my meaning: Not long ago the manufacturers of Fall River were in a state of ecstasy over a machine which had been devised in that city for stretching cotton cloth. It was claimed, I believe with truth, that every yard of fabric could be elongated to the extent of from 15 to 20 per cent. I could relate quite a number of similar ingenious de-ceptions which are practiced upon our patient and submissive people by greedy and unscrupulous manufacturers, who regard a capacity for clever swindling as the highest of intellectual attainments.

Such, my friends, is capitalism. It not only depraves the rich but strangles wholesome existence and self-respect among the masses upon whom it preys. It, in fact, degrades, enervates, and stupefies a people till they become degraded to nothing better than a herd of docile and industrious cattle, of which the capitalists and their lackeys are the drivers.

No rational being who has examined this matter with any degree of acumen can doubt for a moment that the interests of humanity are cruelly sacrificed in favor of class privilege and selfish interests. Furthermore, the intelligent investigator must be forced to the conclusion that wage slavery is equivalent to murder, inasmuch as it destroys all that is valuable and desirable in human personality. It must be further apparent to him that capitalism is robbery, inasmuch as it appropriates the value produced by the labor of others without rendering an equivalent. Under the system of chattel slavery the appropriation of the product of human labor was undisguised and compulsory, but under the competitive system the capitalistic class enriches itself on the profits of white slavery skulking under the guise of "free contract."

But, thanks to the genius and to the astonishing courage and self-denial of the founders of the Socialistic philosophy, the dawn of industrial freedom is breaking, not only in this country, but in all the leading civilized countries of Europe. The laboring classes are now advancing with giant strides to the knowledge that all commodities are but capitalized forms of labor, and that it is labor applied to natural objects that gives them their entire value. When once the great majority of wage earners are imbued with these simple and important truths, capitalism and its hideous accompaniments—strikes, bloodshed, and anarchy—are doomed. It is for this reason that it is a primary object for capitalism and its army of satellites, pensioners, and luxurious loafers, to keep the producing masses in perpetual subjection and at the lowest possible level of contented ignorance. The drones that ride on the back of labor are too well aware that, when once the searchlight of reason and knowledge is let in upon capitalism, that mighty fabric of iniquity will be shattered to fragments. It cannot adhere together much longer on such infamous terms. In the words of a distinguished writer, "the situation is becoming terribly original." The masses are discovering that capitalism and its pliant tool, McKinleyism, constitute a cunningly devised system of iniquity in all its basest forms. Hence the danger that menaces the whole framework of society. Indeed, it must be obvious to whoever has studied the train of events during the last few years that unless a radical change be inaugurated there will be no remedy but revolutionary violence, to which sensible men can be only driven in the last extremity.

JACK POTTS' OBSERVATIONS

Be Sure to Vote for McKinley or Bryan
Mr. Workingman, so as to "Save
Your Vote" and the Country

The following are the head-lines over a special article in last Sunday's Times-Herald from Jeypore, India: "Animals Eat but Babies Die in the Roads—Pierre Loti Paints Fearful Pictures of Famine in Old India, Contrasting Luxury With Dire Need—No Hope and No Pity—Little Children, Mere Human Rags, Strew the Streets at Nightfall, Perishing—Crocodiles Palace Pets—King and Church Flaunt Waste in the Pinched Faces of Want's Ghastly Victims."

The dignitaries fed the crocodiles but offered nothing to the starving human beings. Yet if Great Britain had spent a very small part of the money in relieving this famine that she spent in her latest war, death from famine would be unknown in India. Hurrah for the Commercial Instinct and the competitive system of this glorious civilization of the nineteenth century! "Competition is the life of trade"—and the death of human beings.

Be sure to vote for one of the old party candidates and for the same old competitive system which recognizes no "incentive" for man's progress, but the accumulation of material wealth. You would "throw away" your vote if you should vote with the Social Democracy for something that you really want, you know!

We are all on the "same dead level" so far as the need of food, clothing and shelter are concerned. The competitive system puts thousands below that level and under the sod. Don't you think

THE FORWARD CRY OF SOCIAL EVOLUTION

To Eugene V. Debs, Social Democratic Candidate for President of the United States

Written by Daniel Peters

Advance! Advance! the voice of Agés cries;
Broad future lies before us unexplored.
Advance forever! thunders from the skies.
Though past misdeeds full deeply are deplored,
Ne'er swerve! Ne'er faint! Press ever onward, toward
The brighter vista just within our view;
Though mountains we must climb and rivers ford,
Yet look not backward. Aim—strike for the new!
And we shall win at length, because our hearts are true.

Assyria, Greece, Rome, Carthage, where are they?
Byzantium, Venice, and Phoenicia, where?
Egypt and Spain, the Ottoman, obey
The law of time, for they must pass, and there
Will be but relics that the world may stare
At what once was and never shall be more;
Napoleon, Charlemagne, Charles of Sweden—bare.
Remembrance speaks of wondrous feats of war—
They rose through blood and drowned themselves in seas of gore.

Time sealed the fate of empires and of kings:
He freed the vassal from the landed lord.
Time cut the chain—and it no longer clings
About the black man. Tho' the sharpened sword
Has often been Time's instrument, the broad
And sober mind of man's a better tool.
Time! teach mankind to think—first of their God,
Then of their fellowmen! and do thou school
The laborer to study much, nor be a fool.

We chase no rainbows over fields of thought,
Although our bow hangs over us all bright
With promise, great works have been wrought;
But greater far shall be the deeds of might,
When from the darkness mankind gains the light
Of health and pleasure, honor, love, and fame;
When jealousy, dishonesty, the blight
Of war, shall fade forever; and the name
Of God shall stand for goodness unto all the same.

that people would still have some "incentive" to make progress if possibility of the almshouse were removed? A

The greed, folly, hypocrisy, knavery, and misery begotten by the competitive system are almost beyond belief.

Motto of the competitive scheme: "Devil take the hindmost!" Motto of the co-operative plan: "Equal rights for all, special privileges to none." Take your choice!

Mr. Workingman, did you notice those figures again in last week's Social Democratic Herald? For fear you did not—look: In 1850 the wealth of the nation was $8,000,000,000; the producers' share was 62½ per cent and the non-producers' share was 37½. By 1890 our wealth had increased to $61,000,000,000, but your share had fallen to SEVENTEEN PER CENT, while the non-producers' share was EIGHTY-THREE per cent. Both of the old parties can "point with pride to these figures—which are government statistics—for since 1850 we have given both of them many trials. If you don't like it you can "throw your vote away" for a party which tells you that it wants what you want—co-operation instead of competition in our social system. It may be a good idea also for you to remember that this year it is estimated that our wealth is $100,000,000,000 and that the producers' share has gone down to TEN per cent, while the non-producers own NINETY per cent. Be sure to vote for McKinley or Bryan, so as to "save the country" again this year!

And Mr. Churchman, you might run your eye over these figures and see if you think the kingdom of heaven on earth will be hindered or helped by longer sticking to the old parties!

Bully for Mammon! Hurrah for the "sacred rights" of Property!

ENGLISH LIBERALIST ON SOCIALISM AND MILITARISM

I stood year after year with my back to the wall against the Socialists, not because I did not respect the fervor of the men, not because I did not sympathize to my heart's core with their pity for the toiler's lot, or with their resolution to make the toiler more intelligent and his home more secure, but because I thought their means were ill chosen. But, really, if I were unfortunately called upon to choose between the Socialist and the Militarist, with all his random aims, his disregard of the natural resources, his disregard for the rights and the feelings of other people, I declare to you that the Socialist's standards are higher and his aims are not more wild.

COMING SOLIDARITY OF MAN

Philosophy of Socialism in Accord with that of Evolution—The Conscious Socialist
Movement a Rebellion of Free
Individualities

By W. C. Owen

If, however, the future of the church does not excite one's apprehensions, the attitude taken by the reactionary wing of the scientific party, under the lead of Herbert Spencer, is greatly to be deplored, for the world is only too anxious to follow the lead of those whom it believes to be earnest seekers after truth, and to follow without being at the pains of making an investigation of its own. One needs but to recall the thoughtless enthusiasm with which this century has allowed itself to accept as infallible authorities Adam Smith, and the other prophets of laissez faire, the magnitude of whose fallacies we are only now beginning to realize. As Mr. Spencer, who brings to the support of their tottering theory the enormous weight of his reputation as an evolutionist, has again appealed to the public in "A Plea for Liberty," the subject is just at this moment specially apropos.

Mr. Spencer's position is exceedingly simple. He believes in individuality, and so do we. He believes that militarism crushes individuality, and so do we. He believes that the evolution from compulsory militarism to voluntary co-operation lies along the laissez faire lines marked out by Adam Smith. There we unquestionably differ, since we look on laissez faire—the each for himself alone theory—as being in itself militarism incarnate. After premising that "social life must be carried on by either voluntary co-operation or compulsory co-operation," he boldly states that "the system of voluntary co-operation is that by which, in civilized societies, industry is now everywhere carried on. Under a simple form we have it on every farm, where the laborers, paid by the farmer himself, and taking orders directly from him, are free to stay or go as they please." To us the liberty to throw off one and hunt another master, is the sorriest of satires upon freedom. He states further that "this voluntary co-operation, from its simplest to its most complex forms, has the common trait that those concerned work together by consent." In the same essay he speaks of "the existing system under which each of us takes care of himself, while all of us see that each has fair play," and he gives us his definition of the whole competitive system in the striking phrase "the regime of willing-hood." To all which I have only to reply that unfortunately the matter is beyond the sphere of argument; that it is an established certainty that, so far from living under a "regime of willing-hood," the masses are driven to work—for abnormally long hours, at dangerous and unwholesome occupations—by the whip of hunger, a whip in the hands of those who have succeeded, as the result of our grab-all policy of industry, in getting a corner on the means of life. On this all radical reformers are agreed, and the statement of Bedel, the German Socialist leader, that "the basis of slavery is economic dependence on the oppressor," is everywhere accepted as self-evident.

Having given this extraordinary rendering of the present, Mr. Spencer passes to the yet more dangerous ground of prophecy, and he treads with no uncertain foot. The management by the people of their own industrial affairs is to him an impossibility save under the administration of a colossal directorate wielding unprecedented power, and he supports his argument with illustrations drawn from our unhappy political experience, and the admitted tyrannies of trades unions. Herein he shows an ignorance of the whole philosophy of Socialism that is inexcusable in one who is making it a special object of attack. To make my meaning clear I quote from Frederick Engels' preface to the famous manifesto written by Karl Marx and himself in 1847, a document continuously, to this day, distributed wherever Socialist agitators are at work. He says: "The manifesto being our joint

PSYCHIC SIDE OF SOCIALISM

By H. S. Geneva Lake

Nothing is more important than our relations one to another.

Equity is the everlasting problem. Its solution is the task of the ages. Rectitude is the result of centuries of moral evolution.

Criminal and capricious conduct lie at the base of the race structure.

To be really aggrieved is to have planted cruelty somewhere.

What we call "destiny" is the deed we have done.

Get out of the transient into the eternal.

Republics have gone down when tyranny arose.

An epoch like this is the fruit of false thought.

The day will succeed; but now is the night.

In the darkness people huddle together and inquire.

He who speaks clearest, reasons best, and loves most will be heard.

Base men cannot stop the course of a thought.

Whoever will not listen learns by the force of events.

Suffering either arouses or stupefies. People do not always sleep. We are now awakening.

The sleep has been long—since the dawn of history.

We have begun to reflect—presently we will act. That action will be chronicled by the name of Socialism.

Men make things today in squads, in brigades, in battalions. They man a manufactory, or a mine, or a mill, or a farm, and execute the will of the firm—of the combine—of the partnership. This is a trust.

Men move on the social board like chess in the hand of a great player.

The mistake that is made is to suppose the game is played by mankind only. God is also a factor and must be reckoned with.

When the game is in progress there are always unexpected happenings; this has occurred several times in history.

When the colonies rebelled, for instance; when John Brown's raid resulted in the reading of a proclamation; when electrical currents rotted impacting vegetation.

Always there is an adjunct unprovided for. So when combines commence there is something else coming.

Men are not driftwood; they are thinking things.

In God's Providence we have sufficient life left to inquire.

That inquiry is the Social Democratic Party, and that question is the slowly accumulating indignation of the stomach without a meal, the back without a coat, the worker without a tool, the teacher without a calling, the man without a country.

That interrogatory is being heard.

By whom?

By those who can no longer stop their ears—the mob and the philosopher.

For the rest—they are stupefied, but these, too, will awaken when the crash of the coming commonwealth shivers the atmosphere.

THE KILLING OF KINGS

In these days of strenuous living and lying, when to be vicious is to be good, and brutality is gentleness; when patriotism means murder and murder means love and Christianity, nobody is surprised at what happens next, and the assassination of a king the other day would have fallen flat but for the ferocious and fantastical efforts of yellow journalism, smudged with red ink and illuminated with daggers and guns. The killing of a king is an incident in human affairs neither new nor surprising. And, if you will only pause to think, you will see that nobody really is surprised. The whole world knows that the rule of kings has always been mainly force and fraud; that there is not a king living today whose succession to power was not the culminating act in a long series of brutal acts against the common people. The reign of kings has been the reign of dungeon, gallows, torture, banishment, and murder. Whenever a king has made any approach to a relinquishment of his kingly prerogative of consigning decent and innocent people to the dungeon and the torturing chamber, he has been either an imbecile or a good man, and always a surprise.

But if the world is used to king killing, and sees in such acts as Humbert's assassination only a resort by desperate human beings to that brutal force by which it has been too long governed, no rational man who understands the fundamental causes of human misery and social degradation will for a moment approve the murder of individuals, whether kings or not, as a wise or effectual means toward remedying social conditions and establishing justice in the earth. The king is dead; but the king lives again! Kingcraft in general has had notice served on it that there is a deep-seated aversion among the people to its particular business. But through all the centuries of the past, with the growing spirit of democracy always in evidence, kingcraft has never been unaware of the forces that contended against it, neither has it failed to increase its body guards and multiply its soldiery to protect its person and retain its special privileges. Its guards and its soldiery are the visible manifestations of its class-consciousness. There is not a single branch of this class-conscious gang of kings in the world that is not inextricably involved in the grossest antagonisms with its own code of morals, yet an unctuous though atheistic class of spiritual hangers-on, always mindful of its class interest, is ever ready to condone the acts of its royal masters in the name of religion and lends its sinister influence to the subjection of the people in this world, "in the hope of a blessed relief hereafter."

However great the provocation may be to kill a king, the fact which should be pressed home upon the minds of the people is that the mere death of all the kings that curse the world would not improve the economic condition of the people who do the world's work. Humbert is said to have been a good king; perhaps he was; but as a man he belonged to the same class as our American millionaires. His death brought to light the fact that he was a millionaire twelve times over. That is, besides being a king and possibly a "good" one as kings go, he was a human sponge, an exploiter of labor, an appropriator of unearned wealth created by slaves in Italy. In this respect he was no worse and no better than a thousand kings of industry in the United States, and his taking off has bettered the world or the condition of the Italian people not a particle.

While Humbert was engaged in accumulating a vast private fortune, how were his "subjects" faring? What were they subject to? To a fearful burden of taxation that Humbert saw continually increased; in some of the provinces the increase was six-fold during his reign; the government laid its rapacious hand upon every necessary of life; there was and is a government monopoly of salt and matches—a kind of "Socialism" that some people in the United States with the commercial instinct favor; there was and is an octroi levying taxes on imports from the country at the gate of every city; there was corruption, jobbery, and oppression, resulting in bread riots not long ago, when thousands of poor people were shot down by the king's soldiers for no other crime than being hungry. And in addition there was militarism and imperialism with their monstrous armaments and insane enterprises of conquest.

With these and similar conditions prevailing elsewhere as in Italy, not the killing of a king is a matter to surprise us, but the wonderful patience of the people and their supine indifference to the real cause of their sufferings and misery. That cause is rooted in the class ownership of the means of life, the exploitation of labor by the wages system, the appropriation by capitalists of the fruits of human toil. As long as this system remains political assassinations there will be and no good done. What Italy and the world most need is an arousing of the people to the hopelessness of adjusting the wrongs to which they are subjected by supporting institutions and parties that in turn support capitalism. Get away from capitalist parties of whatever name, in Italy and America.

The hope of the world is in the triumph of Social Democracy.

NOTES AND COMMENT

The editor of the Indianapolis Press labors through a column of space to show that the Metal Workers' International Union organized last week in that city is "taking the wrong road to Socialism." But he fails entirely to sustain the contention. Among other things this presumptuous man says: "We have no fixed limitations for classes here." Does he think that the workingman whose economic dependency compels him to accept the terms and pay which a capitalist employer chooses to impose, merely to live, is not in a class entirely separate from the capitalist? Does he not know that the class limitations for a vast majority of wage earners the world over are as absolutely fixed as any natural law? Well, probably not; capitalist editors are the supporters of more exploded political economy than all the trades unions in the universe.

The Democratic party favors self-government for the negroes in the Philippines, so it does; but the other day it denied self-government to the negroes in North Carolina. And this is the party that boasts of being the party of freedom! It asks for the votes of workingmen because it believes in freedom! Will it get yours?

The competitive system "beggars description" and beggars the people. A vote for the Social Democracy is a vote to remove that possibility. Don't forget that!

The competitive system and our old friend the "Commercial Instinct" are making a grand international aggregation of moral cowards and skulkers.

THE FAMINE IN INDIA

The appeals for aid in behalf of the sufferers of India are becoming so numerous that almost every grown person in this country is aware of the conditions prevailing over there.

The latest circular of this character that has fallen into my hands is one issued by the "Committee of One Hundred on India Famine Relief," containing views of starving groups of people and of the places where help is so greatly needed. At the head of this circular is a list of the hundred men who constitute this self-appointed committee. It is to the personnel of this committee and to the wording of their appeal that I wish to call your attention.

Such well known men as Geo. Gould, W. F. Havemeyer, Seth Low, Whitelaw Reid, Jno. D. Rockefeller, Russel Sage, and many more of New York's Wall street representatives fill out the list of those who volunteer to handle our money contributions for us and to distribute to India's famishing people the grain they so much need. In their call for aid they acknowledge that grain enough for everyone is already in that country and only waits to be paid for by someone, so the people may eat. Their appeal is therefore for money not food or clothing.

The American people most given to charitable acts are those whose wealth is in the products of the land and which they freely contribute when asked to do so, but to give money they must first obtain it, which takes time and forced sale of their products at greatly reduced prices.

These millionaire committeemen are so used to manipulating the people's gold for them in business, that they ask their charity to also be in the same precious commodity.

Bankers keep your deposits for you free of charge, and it is no act of charity for them to do so, as they do not lose thereby, neither do these men serve on this committee free of charge, indirect though their compensation may be.

The asking of money from the producing class of this land under the guise of famine relief, to enrich moneyed men who have grain to sell at famine prices is only a cloak under which to hide a like extortion at home.

Monopolies are robbing the people every day, and the New York Ice Trust and Standard Oil Co. (whose representatives are prominent on the list), are just brother concerns with those who are holding India's grain and starving her people and never a word is said against the actions of such men.

Who owns the present wheat crop of this country today? Who will own it in December?

Ye farmers who sell your grain at present prices to send the money to India will see your own fellow-citizens paying a greatly advanced price for flour, when the wheat barons get the supply in their hands; and that, too, after another crop is harvested.

Men do not deny that India now has as much grain locked up in her barns as her people require; even the committeemen ask you not to send more grain, but cash to pay for what they already have.

How can these heartless, gilt-edged, wholesale extortionists face this people and under the mask of charity ask them to pay for grain once stolen from a helpless people by a capitalistic combine of which they themselves are a part.

You are asked to buy back stolen food stuffs to feed India. Are you going to recognize the plunderer's right to the property by paying them an exorbitant price for it? Ransom it for the people without a word about its theft?

No indeed! Far better carry our food to them direct, even though it cost more to do it, than to buy of the supply that has been refused its producers.

Let it be distributed by careful missionaries direct to the sufferers, who will surely fare better at their hands than if fed by the hard rule of business men's methods. Such a committee as this should turn its attention and strength toward the breaking up of that monopolistic power that holds in a grip of steel the very lives of millions of people.

If the American millionaires are powerless against British monopoly in such a cause let us keep away from their stronghold, and when going to feed a hungry brother take food with us so that it cannot be diverted from the desired course.

Many more "Hundreds" are giving their attention to this subject, but not a word do we hear in disapproval of the methods used, nor do we see any one who is striving for the removal of the cause of the trouble.

Was there ever a civilized government which allowed her subjects to starve while there was abundance of food in her possession? The government of India is today making mighty efforts to relieve the people, but hampered by monopolistic powers her efforts are almost in vain; therefore helplessly she succumbs to the enemy and asks us to contribute to them also.

Governments must control such matters, and the only safe means of control is absolute ownership—Socialism.

A people who will sit quietly and starve while his neighbor holds his food from him needs education in the first principle of citizenship. India is only an index to the future of what private ownership will accomplish if we allow it to rule. Socialism is her only means of life except by charity's bounteous hand.

V. Homer Cragin.

HISTORY REPEATING ITSELF

Mr. Workingman, I presume you have often heard that old phrase, repeated by so many, that "history repeats itself." This statement is made in order to convey the idea that certain facts, conditions, or institutions, having existed in some past age, have a tendency to recur in the same, or possibly in a slightly modified, form again. Whether this is true or not, I do not presume to say. However, I want to give you an example which, to a certain extent, seems to prove the truth of the assertion. The following is from a history of Egypt and refers to a period over 2,000 years ago:

"The Egyptians, like many of the present inhabitants of the Nile valley, were expert thieves, and so fond of using the skill necessary to successful robbery that no manner of banishment was found sufficient to prevent these persons who possessed this peculiar talent from the exercise of it. Therefore, as robbery could not be entirely checked, laws were made for regulating it. Those who decided to follow thieving as a profession gave in their names to the chief of the robbers. He was considered as not other than a respectable citizen and a man of the greatest integrity and honor. Those who joined his force agreed that he should be informed of all that they had stolen whenever they had committed a successful burglary. The owner of such goods or articles as were stolen went about the recovery of his property by sending a letter to the chief of the robbers, giving a minute description of the articles. If the goods were identified they were returned to their owner upon his paying to the chief of the robbers a sum of money equal to one-fourth of their value."

Now, my fellow workers, read that extract over carefully again and tell me if you cannot think of an institution existing at this very moment which is in almost every respect identical with these ancient Egyptian robbers. That institution is nothing more or less than the modern trust, about which so much is being said at present. Let us trace the analogy. You will agree with me that those who possess the "peculiar talent" necessary for "successful robbery" in modern times are those in control of the trusts. They, like the Egyptian robber of old, are "experts," as the historian would say. You will also agree with me that "no manner of banishment" (Prof. Hadly would say ostracism) has succeeded in destroying these trusts. Therefore, the democratic and republican parties have decided to treat these modern robbers with the "peculiar talent" in the same manner that the ancient brigand was—that is, by regulating it. In other words, they would legalize it after for years trying to outlaw them. You will also note a further resemblance between the ancient and modern robbers from the fact that the owner of trust stock and his ancient brother are considered to be "respectable citizens" of the "greatest integrity and honor." They belong to the cultured class and go to make up the elect of "society."

Again, you will also note that those from whom goods were stolen could by identifying their property obtain it again by paying to the robbers one-fourth of their value. But today, on the contrary, it is the robbers who get three-fourths and more, as statistics will show. It is evident that the modern brigand is more of an "expert" than the old Egyptian type. This is one instance of "progress" at least. Now, I want to ask the working class who are victims of this "peculiar talent" what difference does it make to them whether they are robbed by bold Egyptians or "timid capital"? The robbery exists the same as ever. The only difference is a change in the methods under which the "peculiar talent" operates. But this is not all. The Republican and Democratic parties do not say that this robbery shall stop. Oh, no. On the contrary, as both have a "finger in the pie," they boldly tell you that they will do as was done 2,000 years ago. They are going to regulate it, which means they will make it more systematic and scientific. They will have the trusts report to the government (the chief robber) and then you will have the satisfaction of knowing how much you have been robbed of.

What sweet dreams will come to you at night, after leaving mine, forge, and factory, when you are made aware of this fact! Think of the beaming face of your wife next morning as she turns away from a hot stove on which she has been striving to fry a hand-leather, by courtesy called a beefsteak, when you inform her that you are able to tell where the wealth which you produce, but did not get, has gone!

What joy will spring up in your breast when you have the figures before you which tell of your ignorance and your master's "peculiar talent"!

What a pleasure it will be to know that you, by voting for Bryan or McKinley, thus take a hand in regulating the conditions under which you are to be robbed! On the other hand, should you determine to be a man for once, you will join with the Socialists and with a class-conscious ballot, seek to bury this "peculiar talent" that has cursed the world so long, and keep for yourself the product of your labor that you have up to the present handed to those who "toil not, neither do they spin."

Should you decide to do this, then you will vote the Social Democratic ticket, with Eugene V. Debs as candidate for president of the United States.

MACHINERY SAVES WORK AND STARVES THE WORKER

Forty years ago, when one man was engaged in perforating bank checks, he took 750 hours to do 150,000, at a labor cost of $150; while now, with machinery, six men are employed, but do the work in nine hours and fifteen minutes, and although they get about double the wages per hour, the labor cost is only $1, instead of $150, says the Scientific American.

In ruling paper, the worker, using quill and ruler, seventy years ago took 4,800 hours to do work now done by chine in two and three-quarters hours. The old-time workers got $1 a day, now the two men employed earn $7 a day between them, and yet the labor cost of producing a given quantity is 85 cents, against $400. It is easy to understand from this how it is possible to use so much more material and to keep a great army of workers going instead of an individual.

Machinery is now extensively used in bootmaking, making 100 pairs of men's cheap-grade boots in 1543 hours, against 1,4363 by hand, while the labor cost is reduced from $400 to $35. In women's boots the case is equally marked, for instead of one man being employed to do everything, there are 140 engaged, each on a different machine operation; but not only is the time taken to 100 boots reduced to less than a tenth what it was, but the cost is also reduced. Thus what was accomplished in ten hours to thirteen hours forty years ago is now done in an hour.

Again, in breadmaking, less than a third of the time is now taken. One thousand pounds of dough for biscuits is rolled, cut and prepared for baking in three hours and fifty-four minutes, as against fifty-four hours by hand.

Subscribers will find their expiration number on wrapper. Prompt renewal is requested.

"UNIONISTS" ENDORSE THE SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC TICKET

Springfield, Mass., July 18, 1900.
Eugene V. Debs, Esq.,
Terre Haute, Ind.

My Dear Comrade: It is with profound pleasure I advise you that, by the treaty of union formulated by the unity committees elected at the Rochester and Indianapolis conventions, and which was approved by the majority of the membership of both parties on the referendum vote, of the ratification of your nomination as candidate of the Social Democratic party for the office of president of the United States. With best wishes very fraternally,

Wm. Butscher,
National Secretary.

Terre Haute, Ind., July 31, 1900.
Win. Butscher, Esq.,
National Secretary Social Democratic Party,
Springfield, Mass.

My Dear Comrade: Your communication of the 18th inst. has been received and I note that by the action of the unity committee elected at the Rochester and Indianapolis conventions, approved by referendum vote, my nomination has been ratified as candidate of the Social Democratic party for the office of president of the United States.

Permit me to return my thanks to the committee and to the comrades they represent for the ratification of my nomination, which I esteem a signal honor.

Having responded to the call of my comrades in accepting the nomination their confidence and partiality bestowed upon me, I am deeply sensible of the responsibilities which rest upon me as a Socialist candidate for the office of president of the United States.

Fully imbued with the philosophy of Socialism, I seek no personal preferment and I claim consideration only as a representative of the principles of international, class-conscious Socialism. In that capacity, and that alone, I appeal to the working class and to my countrymen at large for support.

The confidence implied by the unanimous action of my comrades moves me to regret my limitations and to wish myself a worthier representative of the principles so sacred to them because fraught with such grave import to the countless victims struggling in the grasp of economic bondage.

But all the strength and ability I have are at their service. Long since I consecrated myself to the cause, and all I have is laid with joy on the altar of Socialism.

As we look abroad we behold the steady march of transformation. Capitalism, which has written its record in the tears and blood of the human race, is staggering to its doom, while Socialism, herald of light and freedom, quickened by the spirit of the new revolution, is sweeping over all the world.

Here in the United States of America we are on the eve of our first great battle. Let us gird on our armor and press forward to meet the enemies of freedom, the oppressors of the people, the exploiters of the working class and the foes of all humanity.

Let us dismiss all minor considerations and unite in every state and territory, from end to end of the land in one mighty effort to hasten the end of capitalism and the inauguration of the co-operative commonwealth.

Thanking you again, and through you the members of your committee and all your comrades, for the honor conferred upon me, I remain, Yours fraternally,
Eugene V. Debs.

TAKE NOTICE

We desire to call the attention of Socialists and friends of the movement to the following facts:

The headquarters of the Social Democratic Party are located at 126 Washington street, Chicago.

The national secretary of the party is Theodore Debs, same address.

The national official paper of the party is the Social Democratic Herald.

The National Executive Board consists of Frederic Heath, chairman; Seymour Steadman, secretary; Eugene V. Debs, Victor L. Beiger and Mrs. Corinne S. Brown.

The National Campaign Committee of the party was organized July 22 at Chicago, Comrade Robert Meister of Milwaukee being elected chairman, and Comrade Seymour Steadman, of Chicago, secretary.

At the meeting of July 22 a finance committee for the campaign was elected as follows: Edward Zeigler, chairman; Joseph R. Finn, treasurer; James Wright, secretary.

Acknowledgment of all contributions received will appear in this paper.

The National Finance Committee of the Social Democratic party desires the name of an energetic Comrade, with the recommendation of his branch, to solicit contributions to the Campaign Fund. Send to James Wright, 336 N. Avers Avenue, Chicago.

NOMINATION CALLED FOR

The Executive Board requests the Branches to make nominations for a new board, to consist as provided for by the constitution, of nine members.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Comrade Eugene V. Debs is engaged to speak at Canton, Ohio, on Labor Day.

An Iowa comrade writes: "I am well pleased with The Herald and couldn't do without it at all."

Comrade Seymour Stedman has been taking a course of training in the country for a week preparatory for the work of the national campaign upon which he is about to enter.

All comrades at Rockville, Conn., are requested to attend a joint meeting on Friday evening, August 31, to consider business of importance in regard to the campaign.

All branches of the Social Democratic party in New York are requested to send delegates to a State Convention to be held at Seminole hall, 414 Grand St., New York City, on August 26.

Following is the Indiana State Executive Board of the Social Democratic party: R. Greuling, chairman; Hugo Miller, treasurer; Thomas Catton, secretary; A. Babcock and Chas. A. Thornton.

The state committee of the Social Democratic party of New Jersey places in nomination for the national executive board the following: Eugene V. Debs, Seymour Stedman, Victor L. Berger, Mrs. Corinne Brown, W. E. Farmer, G. R. Gordon.

The Socialists of Chicago have had the pleasure of getting acquainted and exchanging views with Comrade Irene Ashby of London, England. Miss Ashby has spoken here several times and is enthusiastic in declaring that the field of work for Socialists in Chicago is most inviting.

The Second Congressional District Convention was held on Sunday, Aug. 5, at Uhlhorn's hall, corner 63rd and Center Ave., Chicago. The following were nominated as candidates for office: For Congressman—Gus Bartlett.

For Board of Equalization—Chas. Wistrand.

For State Representative (Fourth Senatorial District)—J. J. Florian.

NEW JERSEY CONVENTION

The Socialists of New Jersey will co-operate politically under the name of the Social Democratic party in the support of Debs and Harriman for president and vice-president in the coming campaign. The state convention was held at Newark. About ninety delegates were present.

State Secretary Weigel opened the convention, and organization was perfected with J. W. James of Trenton and J. H. Strobel as presiding officers and E. C. Wind and John P. Weigel as secretaries.

A full electoral ticket was nominated and a campaign committee elected consisting of Comrades James, Neben, Bucksath, Posern, Weigel, Gilliar, Jones, Godel, Lavin, Strobel, Doubleaar, and Gilman. The committee will have its seat at Newark.

W. H. Wyatt of Rutherford was nominated for Congress in the Fifth district. John W. James of Trenton was the choice of the Sixth.

Thomas Jones of Newark was the choice of the Ninth.

THE PLATFORM.

We, the representatives of the Social Democratic party, in state convention assembled, hereby indorse and ratify the nomination of Eugene V. Debs and Job Harriman for president and vice-president of the United States.

The Social Democratic party of the state of New Jersey hereby reaffirms the national platform adopted at the Indianapolis convention and declares its uncompromising adherence to the principles of international Socialism.

We demand the enactment of a law providing for the ownership and operation by the state and municipalities of all utilities requiring public franchises.

We demand the direct employment of labor by the state and municipalities on all public work and the employment of the unemployed on state and municipal improvements.

We demand that adequate school accommodations shall be furnished, such as sufficient school room, trained teachers, free school books, and food, clothing, shelter, and medical attendance.

We demand the enactment of a law providing for the eight-hour work day, the entire abolition of the contract system, and the employment of organized labor on all public work.

We hereby call upon the voters of New Jersey, irrespective of past political affiliations, to work and vote for these principles and to elect the candidates of the Social Democratic party.

RESOLUTIONS.

We recognize that all wars are initiated by capitalists in their own interests, and that the workers are not interested in them, but are the main sufferers thereby. We are, always were, and always will be opposed to imperialism.

We also emphatically denounce the use of military power to suppress organized labor both by Democratic and Republican administrations; and we denounce the decisions of our judiciary against labor organizations in their inalienable right to protect themselves by the aid of numbers and financial contributions.

The New York People's report says a "strong union resolution was also adopted." This is untrue. No such resolution was adopted. There was one offered which almost turned the convention into a long and bitter fight. All the members of the Social Democratic party were on their feet at once and protested.

The campaign committee of the state of New Jersey issues the following call and urges that the members should at once abide by the resolution adopted by the state convention offered by the committee on ways and means:

Each comrade should be requested to pay 5 cents a month during August, September, October, and November as a source of income for the campaign committee. All locals should attend to the above at once and forward the same to Comrade Edw. M. Dobbelaar, Port Lee, N. J.

It is hoped that every Branch will contribute $10 to the Campaign Fund; some can do better; some have done so and will make a canvass for individual subscriptions as well. What is your Branch doing? Send all money to the treasurer of the National Committee, Joseph R. Finn, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

GIVE US PROOF, OR REST

If Comrade F. G. R. Gordon was chosen by the Eastern "unionists" to write nonsense on the "union" proposition, the choice was a very poor one; if he is a self-appointed censor of the acts of those with whom he agreed until he returned East, then his impudence is equal to his consistency. That any comrade should be able to find things to criticize is not to be wondered at; but one of the most regrettable and surprising features of the "union" controversy is the persistence with which those Eastern folk have resorted to misrepresentation and appeal to the prejudices of members. In this matter Gordon has distinguished himself. He has given repeated illustrations of a total disregard for truth and reckless perversion of facts. For instance, in the last issue of the Saginaw Exponent, without offering a particle of evidence to sustain it, he makes the charge that the national executive board costs from $6,000 to $8,000 a year. This is in line with another statement made some time ago to the effect that the members of the present board are "in the movement for revenue." Such wild and absolutely untruthful declarations (known to be false by the persons making them) are not made to enlighten anyone, but rather to deceive, and, incidentally of course, to promote a bad cause; a cause which had its beginning not in a sentiment for peace but in a determination for war, and which has depended upon duplicity and double-dealing—to come to an inglorious end. We challenge Comrade Gordon to show up the figures to sustain his foolish charge. It will be a decided relief from the monotony of his twinkle twaddle if he will produce a bit of proof. In the meantime, we are glad to be in accord with him when he says: "There is little sense in claiming a union when we have two N. E. B.'s. one in Chicago and one"—somewhere else, only it is necessary to remind him that such a claim is not made by us. There is no union.

NOMINATIONS FOR NEW NATIONAL EXECUTIVE BOARD

The constitution adopted at the Indianapolis convention, and since approved by a referendum vote of the branches, provides for a national executive board of nine members, "five of whom shall be chosen from territory convenient to the national headquarters and shall be called 'resident members,' and the remaining four shall be chosen, as far as possible, from other parts of the country." The present executive board on July 21 requested the members to make nominations for the new board. In response the following have been named up to this time:

Allman, James, New York
Brown, Corinne S., Illinois
Burger, Victor L., Wisconsin
Clemens, G. C., Kansas
Cox, J. J., Illinois
Debs, Eugene V., Indiana
Farmer, W. E., Texas
Gordon, F. G. R., Massachusetts
Greer, J. H., Illinois
Hale, Margaret, Massachusetts
Heath, Fredrick, Wisconsin
Horgan, W. C., Illinois
Kelley, J. W., Indiana
Ludlow, Isadore, Wisconsin
McCartney, F. O., Massachusetts
Miller, L. E., New York
Miller, Hugo, Indiana
Ricker, A. W., Iowa
Riley, Geo. W., Illinois
Roney, Eugene H., Wisconsin
Stedman, Seymour, Illinois
Stedman, G. O., New Jersey
Stedman, Seymour, Illinois
Sweetland, G. A., Connecticut
Uhlhorn, Henry, Illinois
Winneba, Jacob, Illinois

METAL WORKERS START RIGHT

An international union of the metal workers of the United States was effected last week at Indianapolis, of which C. O. Sherman of Chicago is general secretary. That the new organization starts right appears from the declaration of principles adopted, which read in part as follows:

"Society at present is composed of classes whose interests are highly antagonistic to each other. On the one side we have the proprietary class, possessing almost all the soil, the houses, factories, means of transportation, machines, raw material and all necessities of life. In comparison to the entire people this class represents a small minority.

"On the other side we have the workmen, possessing nothing but their intellectual and physical power with which to labor, and which they must sell to the possessors of the means of production in order to live. The workers represent the millions.

"The interest of the possessing class consists in buying the productive power of the laborer as cheaply as possible, in order to produce as much as possible and to amass wealth. The few hundred thousand proprietors arrogate to themselves the larger part of the wealth produced by the workers. The laboring millions receive from the product of their labor only as much as is necessary to live a life of misery and starvation.

"Every improvement in machinery, every new discovery of hitherto unknown forces of nature, the proprietary class arrogates to itself for the exclusive purpose of increasing its possessions. Through this process, human labor is more and more displaced by machinery.

"The workers, having become superfluous, are compelled to sell their labor at any price in order to save themselves from starvation. The value of labor gradually decreases; the laboring people are being impoverished more and more; their consuming power is more and more lessened, and the consequence is that the commodities produced remain upon the market without being bought by any one. Commercial stagnation sets in; production is decreased, and even partially suspended. The crisis has arrived.

"The proprietary class presses into its service the power of the state—the police, militia, and press, to protect the possessions produced by others, and to declare for the 'sacredness' of property. While the millions of the working people are left without the means of existence, without rights, and unprotected, betrayed, and sold out to their enemies by the state and by the press, the arms of the police and of the militia are directed against them."

ANNALS OF THE POOR

Speaking of child labor in the south, Mr. Travis says: "A larger part of the work is done by children. There is no restriction on child labor in the south, and attendance upon school is not compulsory. I saw children 8 and 9 years of age working from 6 o'clock in the evening until 6 o'clock in the morning for 10 cents a night. One of the mills in Concord, N. C., has increased its capacity threefold in thirteen years and has paid regularly 10 per cent dividends. In Charlotte there are fifteen mills doing as well."

In some of the southern mills the windows are frosted so that the facetious outsider shall not behold the hell within, and operatives are docked and even fined when they are absent for a few minutes in response to sanitary requirements.

Let us look into one of these hells: dusty floors, flying wheels and swaying frames, and in this din, for twelve long hours, babes toil.

You pick one up; its little hand lays on your arm, and it meets your gaze with listless and wondering eyes. It has a heart, and you can feel it throb, and then you stand it down on the floor and it moves to feed the machine—with its fingers, eyes, arms, its life and its soul, for what? For profits—to per cent dividends and national honor!

When most of you go home your darlings greet you, throw their arms around your neck, place their lips upon your cheek, their eyes are bright, and they thank you so good, so big, so great.

If some one should pick up your babe, "you well-to-do," and drive it for twelve long hours at night, what then? Oh, it's not your child that moans? A brutal subterfuge!

Wm. McKinley and Wm. Bryan, the coming generation asks a question; the child appeals; it has no silver to coin, no foreign markets to exploit. What is your reply?

The Socialist will answer: All children belong to society and by it must be fed, clothed and educated. The sunlight shall fall upon its smiles and its laughter fill the bowers, the world shall be its playground, humanity sharing the radiance of its joy.

FORGING AHEAD IN IOWA

It is a great gratification to all Socialists to read in the columns of The Herald the names of new branches organized, and thus to know that the movement is having rapid and substantial growth. We, of Iowa, are also proud of the additional fact that in no place has the cause shown greater growth than in our own state. At the beginning of the year Social Democracy was practically unknown in Iowa. The writer at that time was a member of another party organization, as were the host of able supporters who are now enrolled under the banner of Socialism.

Today we number thirteen branches, located in six congressional districts. There are as many more in process of formation and the writer is in communication with active Socialists in every congressional district in the state and in sixty per cent of the counties. The membership of the party here is as varied as our population. Two of the branches are in coal camps. Two of them are composed of farmers and the balance are in the big cities of eastern Iowa. The circulation of Socialist papers has increased from something over 500 last fall to 5,000 now. In one railroad division of a line traversing the

NATURE AND SOCIALISM

It is the Co-operation of the Forces of Nature that Enables All Things to Exist

When you argue Socialism with a man who knows nothing of social economics, his last resort for a reply is, "Your theories look all right, but they won't work." This reply is the last resort of the ignorant. Any system is practical that the ruling power can conceive, and Socialism to the man who understands its principles is the most practical and reasonable social system that has yet been offered for the consideration of intelligent people. The theory is based upon the laws of nature and life, and being based upon the primary law of life it is the most natural and practical.

The masses have been so long taught by their ignorant leaders that the law of individualism is right, that it is hard for them to conceive the unity of the law of life. If there was no sun there would be no moon, and if the sun was not fed from other planets it would cease to exist. Were it not for the heat forces that operate this planet it would probably become an iceberg—a barren waste, and animal and vegetable life would cease to exist. So it is the co-operation of the forces of nature that enables all things to exist. Without this natural co-operation, what we call existence would cease, and chaos would reign supreme. This is the beautiful lesson taught by nature of which humanity has learned so little. Under civilization no man lives alone. There could be no civilization without the social organism. But no civilization has perfected the organism. What has been accomplished in this direction is only superficial. Society has only learned to produce and concentrate. It has not learned to adopt a perfect system of distribution. The result is the wealth is congested; the many become surfeited with the things they don't need, while the many who produce the wealth are impoverished. All this occurs on account of the lack of a system in accordance with the laws of nature.

If the sun were to continue to be fed without throwing off any of the force absorbed, the other planets would become dead and be consumed by the terrible force concentrated by the sun. But this is not the order of nature. But through the distribution of forces each planet is held in equilibrium and serves its purpose in the planetary universe.

The evils of which society complains, such as labor troubles, prostitution, murder, theft and all other social evils, only result from the violation of the laws of nature. The inordinate desires of many is only the evidence of an abnormal condition of society produced by an incorrect economic system. This condition is no less to be found among the extremely rich than among the extremely poor. All are affected by the same common cause, and all suffer as a common result of the violation of the law of life. We are only paying the penalty of violated law, and we find the same destructive principle operating in human society as would occur in nature should the law of co-operation be impeded in nature.

The magnitude of this great question is incomprehensible to many, and when they oppose Socialism they never think that the movement is based upon scientific principles and is in accord with the law of life—existence.

Now let me lay the question before the readers of this paper that "he who runs may read."

First: I will assume that under our present system of machinery in this country which represents the labor power of 800,000,000 men, enough can be produced to feed and clothe and house every human being, not only in comfort, but in opulence. This, I assume, will not be denied by any one of ordinary intelligence. Then the assumption must necessarily be reached that we have found the solution of the question of production. But notwithstanding we have found through machinery progress the solution of production there are millions of people no better off than the serfs and slaves of medieval ages. And it is a question as to whether the condition of the masses have been bettered by this material progress. Many advanced thinkers and writers assert that barbarism presents to us a more favorable condition for the masses than the present intensified civilization, ruled by capitalism. If we have found the solution of production, there can be no reason why poverty and want can't be made to disappear by adopting a natural system of distribution. A system in which the forces of production and distribution will be based upon natural law.

If the sun being fed by other planets gives back to the planets light, warmth and vitality, why should the organism called society, not adopt the plan of nature and erect the co-operative commonwealth based upon the same principle. This seems to me, would be the enlightened system that appeals to the intelligence of the race.

Through the co-operation of the cosmic forces hydrogen, nitrogen, oxygen and so on, are produced which sustain animal and vegetable life. So, through a perfected system of industrial and commercial co-operation, a social system would obtain in which there would be perfect order.

Each planet in the cosmogony is purely unselfish, and renders such assistance as is necessary to produce and hold in place, the universe, and when each individual shall be forced in the co-operative commonwealth to fulfill the function necessary to the existence of others then social order will obtain and not before. This will be the order which will succeed the present capitalistic and competitive systems.—W. E. Farmer, in Farmers' Review.

production, I consider myself bound to state that the fundamental proposition which forms its nucleus belongs to Mark. That proposition is that, in every historical epoch, the prevailing mode of economic production and exchange, and the social organization necessarily following from it, form the basis upon which is built up, and from which alone can be explained, the political and intellectual history of that epoch." To miss this—and how often it is missed!—is to misapprehend the whole position of the Socialist movement, for it is his clear comprehension of the truth that all social forms take their shape from the prevailing mode of economic production and exchange, which makes the Socialist a revolutionist instead of a reformer, which makes him the uncompromising advocate of a total change of system, and the uncompromising foe of those who seek, by tinkering makeshifts, to prolong the life of the existing chaos of selfish competition and selfish combination. He therefore refuses to act with the Democrat or Mugwump, who professes enthusiasm for economy, because he recognizes that, so long as every man has to play for his own hand, every politician will make hay while the sun shines, just as every storekeeper, when trade is brisk, uses the opportunity as though it were his last. He refuses to believe in the protestations of the free-trade bourgeoisie, because he knows that at heart all traders, working on a selfish basis as they must, yearn for monopoly so far as their own markets are concerned; and he points to the record of the English manufacturers, whose pseudo-enthusiasm for freedom of exchange expired the instant they secured the free importation of the materials which their particular factories required. When he looks at trades union, composed of individuals each of whom has his own bread and butter fight to make, and sees that union in desperate war with employers whose very existence it threatens, the Socialist does not expect to see in it a model of voluntary co-operation. He expects to find it a military organization, following the tactics usually observed in the industrial warfare that everywhere prevails. In short, the Socialist sees sordid, selfish warfare everywhere the accepted method of production and exchange, and sordid, warlike tactics therefore the accepted rule in every walk of life, be it the workman's in his shop, the tradesman's in his store, the preacher's in his pulpit, or the so-called statesman's in office or on the stump. It is the soil of which this channel is composed that gives the color to every stream.

What warranty does history give for Mr. Spencer's dictum that the people cannot administer their own affairs, save under the autocratic imperialism of a bureaucratic ring? It gives us none whatever. His is the cry invariably raised by every monopolist the instant it is proposed to transfer his power to the people's hands. It was the cry of the pope that the people were incapable of looking to their own salvation in the great beyond, and the Bible was therefore locked between covers, the priest alone being the holder of the key. It was the cry of Louis XIV.—and all the crew of rulers by the grace of God that took their cue from him—not merely that "I am the state," but that without me the state would fall to pieces." It was the cry of the slave-owners of the South that they fed and sheltered their slaves, just as today pathetic letters appear in the London Times from Irish landlords reciting the charities extended in the past to tenants who now bite the hand that fed them. It is today the cry of the capitalists that the regularity with which the wants of our cities are supplied is proof positive of their fitness for administration. But the people are not asking to be fed. They are tired of their position as wards under a trusteeship that is perpetually abused. They wish for liberty to feed themselves, as they wished, four hundred years ago, for liberty, to select their own spiritual food; as they sought a hundred years ago for the right to manage their own political affairs. This is the great historic evolution that Herbert Spencer, himself the victim of a class environment and an early training acquired when the principles of laissez faire were thought to be impregnable, finds it now convenient to ignore.

That the evolution is directly along these lines is palpable to all who have even the most superficial acquaintance with the platforms of the various reform parties of the day; and, although it is true that there is such a thing as retrogressive evolution, it has never yet occurred that retrogression has occurred during an era of invention. Far more than all its predecessors has this been a century of discoveries, and we are still unquestionably on the advance. The line of the advance is very clearly marked. Number off the various movements, one by one, and note their universal trend. Everywhere there is a struggle for home rule, for the right of the municipality, the state, or the nation, to manage, as an integral whole, its own affairs, unhampered by dictation. It is along these very lines that Nationalism in this country is making its most effective propaganda—a propaganda that is probably insinuating itself more extensively into general thought by the very quietness with which it works. The women have an intensely active agitation. They are tired of "taxation without representation"; they wish at least for a voice wherewith to protest against being misgoverned, and all their leaders are active in the ranks of other movements, having distinctly for their aim self-government. Trades-unionism is a movement that, as yet, has lacked the courage to declare itself, but the employers construe it correctly. "These people," they say, "object to our running our business as we choose," and, indeed, that is precisely the objection. They do object to being "run," they object to being run while they are at work, to being run out of employment when they would gladly be employed. That they do not clearly comprehend that their employers, like themselves, are the victims of a vicious system that makes this industrial dictatorship a necessary evil is the gravest of misfortunes, but one that Socialist agitation is doing its best to rectify. Upon certain definite planks all sections are practically today agreed, as, for instance, that the great distributing arteries of the country—the railroads and the telegraphs—should be brought under the general control.

The inter-state commerce act was a confession of the thought of the times upon this subject, and its notorious failure has merely added fuel to the fire. To multiply instances would be tedious. The general drift is easily discernible, and the movement toward a self-governing solidarity; that the tyrannies engendered by a misapplication of individualism has started, shows no sign of balking at the spectre of a colossal dictatorship that Mr. Spencer has raised. With equal show of reason might it be urged that to invest women with the suffrage would be to multiply offices and to add further complications to our already over-tangled politics. The suffrage is claimed as a right, and so is the joint possession of our joint inheritance.

The curse of this generation is that we are afraid. Anxiety and the fear of want are necessarily the constant companions of the poor, but no class is today exempt. Everywhere there is an easiness, everywhere there is a growing sense of insecurity, everywhere men dread they know not what. Granted that a storm is coming, how will it result? Will it tear society up by the roots to land us again at the point from which we started centuries ago? Are we in for a period of lawlessness to be followed by the iron rule of a dictator? Men do not know; the future is more than ever misty, and therefore they are afraid. But we have the means of knowing. We are able today to take stock of our resources as we never were before, and the most cursory examination shows that the resources are practically infinite. The history of the world is at last an open book, and the task of summing up is trifling. We see that the old myths of the impotence of man are laughable monstrosities, interesting only as mementoes of his early helplessness. A thousand arts have picked him up out of the isolation of the past, and brought him into the closest contact with his fellows. Thus he has learned his strength and theirs; he has mastered the virtue of self-reliance and discovered the power that combination gives. That character, forged in the furnace of a long and sturdy struggle, will never desert him; that knowledge, so laboriously acquired, he will never forget. It may be that a sharp shock or two will be required to wake the sleeper; that the chrysalis may be burst with painful effort. But that it will be burst is as certain as tomorrow's dawn. The momentum already acquired by the human race is irresistible; ni pre tre ni maitre, neither priest nor master, can hope to bar the way. An immense solidarity of thought, and consequently an immense solidarity of action; a universal acceptance of the common-sense teachings of evolution, and the consequent harmony of a universal life conducted upon principles in which all the actors are agreed; such is the forecast of a future which is probably far nearer than even the most sanguine of us suppose. That the masses are today completely skeptical of its attainment is nothing, for it has been the fate of all great changes to be mocked at beforehand, and to be regarded as inevitable when once accomplished. "Before 1789 we were but a handful of Republicans in the whole of France," said Camille Desmoulins.

Social Democratic Party Leaflets

FOR CAMPAIGN PURPOSES

The National Campaign Committee of the Social Democratic party will issue for the campaign a series of well-written, effective four-page leaflets, two of which are now ready for delivery. These leaflets will be sent to branches and individual workers at cost of printing and postage.

LEAFLET NO. 1 is an address to unorganized Socialists; contains information concerning the Socialist movement, the party and its methods, object and program.

LEAFLET NO. 2—"An Open Letter to the Average American Workman," by Ben Aterbury. This is an admirable and convincing paper on the wage question, production, distribution of wealth and an appeal to the intelligence of the working class.

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed; the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

IMPERIALISM FROM A SOCIALIST STANDPOINT

Capitalism Has Reached that Point of Development in the United States Where it Must Ex-

THE REACTIONARY DEMOCRACY

Interests of the Class Represented by the Social Democracy Can Not be Served by Either of the Old Parties

By Charles H. Vall

We are again in the midst of a national campaign and every man is asking himself, or should be asking himself, to what party he should give his allegiance. Unfortunately, however, the majority accept without question the policy of the party to which they happen to belong, and instead of endeavoring to ascertain if the party represents their interests, are rather endeavoring to find arguments to bolster up their partisanship. It is to those that are willing to think that I would speak.

THREE CLASSES, THREE PARTIES

The political situation is exceptionally clear in this campaign. The three parties are distinct and stand equally for the interests of the classes into which modern society is economically divided. The Republican party represents the interests of the large capitalist class, the plutocracy; the Democratic party represents the interests of the middle class, the small capitalists, small producers, and traders; and the Socialist party represents the interests of the proletarian class, the class of wage and salary workers. A careful examination of the platforms of these parties will show the class interests they are intended to subserve. The populist and Silver Republican parties are virtually in accord with the Democratic party and so do not need special consideration, while the Prohibition party has only a moral base, and so need not be considered in an examination of the political situation from the economic standpoint.

The rapid economic development of the last few years has resulted in the concentration of capital, together with the outcome of the Spanish-American war, has given rise to new issues. The Democratic platform declares imperialism or expansion to be the paramount issue of the campaign. Conditions have been forming for years which were bound sooner or later to bring this question to the front. To understand the underlying causes for this, we need to comprehend the nature of capitalist industry.

FLEECING AND OVERPRODUCTION

Under the wage system the product created by labor is divided into two nearly equal parts; one goes to labor in the form of wages, the other to capitalists, landlords, and other gentlemen at large in the form of rent, interest, and profits. To be exact, the laborers receive in this field but 47 per cent of the values they create.

The workers can, then, buy back but 47 per cent of the product. Nor even that, for the value here given is the factory price. But workmen do not buy at factory prices but at retail. To the factory price is added the profits of a long series of middlemen and retailers which results in doubling the factory price. The laborer, then, when he goes to the markets to purchase the things he has produced, finds that instead of purchasing 47 per cent, he can only purchase about 23 or 24 per cent of the things he has made, and even this estimate is perhaps excessive. When we take into consideration money spent for rent, doctors' bills, insurance, pleasure, etc., it is evident that he cannot purchase over 15 or 16 per cent of the goods he has produced.

The capitalists on the other hand, being comparatively few in number, are unable, by their best efforts, to consume "their" portion of the product; and thus a large surplus is left on their hands for which there is no commercial demand.

How to procure an outlet for this surplus product which they have compelled laborers to give up is the great question of the capitalist class. The use of machinery has so increased the productivity of labor, that unless some outlet can be found, production must cease at intervals until the excess is consumed. The question, then, is for the capitalist to turn this surplus value into cash. How can they secure purchasers?

The laborers would gladly consume more, but their wages will not permit them to do so, and all the while the tools are becoming more gigantic and are turning out an ever increasing product, while wages, if not remaining stationary or declining, at least do not increase in proportion to the increased product. Laborers are less and less able to buy back the product of their toil.

FOREIGN MARKETS

The only outlet, then, is in foreign markets. Capitalism has reached that point of development in this country—a point long since reached in Europe—where it must expand or burst. We must teach heathen peoples the blessings of civilization and compel them to wear "pants" so they will buy them—and "pants" with pockets, too, else how can we pick them?

To show that this is not merely the theory of a Socialist, but a cold and solid fact, let me quote from a few capitalists and their representatives. Chauncey M. Depew said at the Philadelphia Republican convention:

"What is the tendency of the future; why this war in South Africa? Why this hammering at the gates of Peking? Why this marching of troops from Asia to Africa? Why these parades of people from other empires and other lands? It is because the surplus production of the civilized country of modern times is greater than civilization can consume. It is because this over-production goes back to stagnation and poverty."

"The American people now produce $2,000,000,000 more than we can consume. By the providence of God, by the statesmanship of William McKinley, and by the valor of Roosevelt and his associates we have our market in Cuba, we have our market in Porto Rico, we have our market in the Philippines; and we stand in the presence of 800,000,000 people with the Pacific as an American lake, and American artisans producing better and cheaper goods than any other country in the world."

It could be shown, if space permitted, that the shrewdest of the capitalist class have realized for some years the necessity for expansion. At the banquet of the American Manufacturers' Association, Jan. 27, 1898, Hon. C. E. Smith, McKinley's postmaster-general, said:

"The past century has been the age of internal upbuilding; we approach now the age of external activity. From 1840 to 1890 the population of the United States more than tripled, but the mighty tide of its manufactures expanded eighteen fold. A greatly increased capacity of consumption has followed this magical advance, but it has not kept pace with the magnified power of production, and the economic problem of the world today is the distribution of this surplus. Under this stress the great nations of Europe are struggling for empire and trade. They are scanning the whole horizon for new fields to conquest, colony and commerce. In this strenuous rivalry are we to stand with folded hands and let the prizes slip? High national policy and broad commercial expansion go hand in hand. Trade follows the flag the world around. We have come to a point in our national development where we must decide. The end we aim at is clear; the means within our reach. We must have among other things, a navy that shall command respect for the voice of our authority. China and Japan are the surpassing and magnificent revelations of these latter days. There around the Yellow sea and the adjacent waters is a population of 500,000,000 and a potential trade of thousands of millions. Why should we not play for our legitimate share of the great stake?"

Representative Bromwell of Ohio, recently spoke to the same effect. He said:

"If the (Chinese) empire has to be divided, I am certainly in favor of getting the proportion of territory that

BELONGS TO THIS COUNTRY

The fact that we have the Philippines will not insure us full economic advantages if China goes into the hands of Europe. We may be sure that those countries are not risking everything to get some Chinese territory for the fun of the thing. It is commerce and trade they are after, and we cannot afford to be a minute behind in the same course, except that ours can be done under restrictions, and in keeping with our policy of going alone and independent of other nations."

Preparations have been making for this "expansion" for some time, and the Spanish-American war merely gave the capitalists an opportunity for which they had been looking. It gave them an excuse for seizing the Philippines which they were not loathe to accept. It is often suggested that Dewey should have sailed out of Manila bay after destroying the Spanish fleet. But the administration knew the interests it was there to serve—the Philippines were needed as a base of operations in China, and they were retained. Anyone who knows of the doings of the American China Development Company knows why the islands are kept and also the hypocrisy

By Paola Lombroso

In the last two years I have frequented the sessions of what we call in Italy a "family school," where the poorer children from the elementary schools were gathered, and have had the opportunity to constantly observe a great number of children, to hear them talk and see them act.

One of the things which struck me most forcibly in comparing them with the children of the wealthy classes—whose instinctive egotistical tendencies are marked by a certain charm, piquancy and subdued good breeding—was to see their struggle for their own self-preservation reduced to a simple eagerness and free from any artificiality and varnish. Unconsciously they are dominated only by one instinct—to drink, to eat and to lay hold of existence; their desires, affections, tendencies and faculties are sharpened, turned and directed to protect, preserve and fill their empty little stomachs.

For example, I asked about fifty of the smallest children: "Whom do you love the most?" "My mamma and papa." And why? "Because they earn the pennies to support me." "Because they work and buy me something to eat." "I love my mamma because she makes pottage for me." "Because she gives me something to eat." "Because she makes polenta," etc.

And to the question, "What do you like to eat best of all?" one child gave me this answer, which contains the whole of a philosophical principle: "Pottage, because I always have it to eat."

One infant talked about the hospital where he had undergone an operation for the rickets as if it were a most delightful place, because he got good things to eat there. Two little brothers, eight and nine years old, told me that what they liked to do best of all was to look in the windows when going for a walk. "But what windows?" I asked. "The bakers' windows," they answered, "where there are so many beautiful loaves of bread."

The little proletarians group all their desires around bread, pottage and clothing. They love whoever gives them something to wear; their most ambitious dreams are to eat pottage and sweet omelettes, and their most brilliant recollections are of full stomachs. The most noble and shining faculties, desires and affections are thus reduced, under the pressure of misery, to an almost brute-like instinct of the survival of the fittest.

But something truly admirable in these children is their ingenuity, their quickness and comprehensive knowledge of practical life. There is not one of them who does not know the price of food, salt, farinaceous foods, rice and kidney beans; who could not do the marketing with discretion, bake a cake, light the fire, prepare the soup, make the beds and mend the clothes. It is especially pleasing to note their desire to be useful and not depend entirely on their parents, as if they considered the cost of every mouthful of bread which they ate and tried to make themselves useful in a thousand different ways.

In the winter the larger children sweep the snow; in spring, during vacation and sometimes during the school term, they go out into the fields around the city to look for greens and eatable roots. One little fellow of eleven, who came to school, got up in the middle of the night three times a week in order to drive a cartful of herbs to market, earning a few cents each time; he was not forced to go by his parents, but did it of his own accord and for his own satisfaction.

But a more common industry, and a rather comical one, is that of going to church with a great show of piety. In each parish there are a great number of chapels, mission-houses and schools where the catechism and doctrine are taught. Each attendant receives a ticket, and according to the number of tickets which a child may present at the end of the season he receives either a coat, a pair of shoes or a small amount of money. One little fellow told me that in a single Sunday he went to two masses, one at 5 in the morning and another at 9, to the school catechism, and to a benediction and to hear two sermons; each one of these functions represented a tiny emolument in money or its equivalent. For instance, the parish of St. Anna gives each tiny devotee a pair of shoes at the first communion; the chapel of Don Bosco gives a coat or a hat, according to the regularity of the attendance.

Another day I went to inquire for a child who had been absent from school for some time, and found him in bed with the measles, together with two younger brothers. They had all taken it from nursing a little sister nine years of age. Their father was in prison, their mother worked from morning till night in the factory, and could not come home to nurse the little baby girl, only four months old, except at noon. Thus the little creature was completely abandoned during the whole day to the care of a nine-year-old sister, who took charge of her, fed her, etc. But what made me really tremble was to see her with a sort of terra-cotta warming-pan full of coals, which she handled with the greatest possible nonchalance, shoving it between the mattress of straw and the sheets, causing constant danger of fire. This child could neither read nor write, for she had been able to go to school only five or six months.

Is it not an indication characteristic of our age to find a little school of children (who, it seems, should be protected by their very youth from the contrasts of fortune) the phantom of the social question in one of its most miserable forms? When one studies this little world, doomed to an infancy of misery, to which a life of suffering, passive labor and submission must necessarily succeed, and find so many germs of enterprise, courage and human dignity, one feels in truth not only pity for the injustice of blind fate, but also regret that the accumulation of this precious energy must remain useless and be wasted on account of a vicious social condition.

INTERNATIONAL NOTES

Simon Dereure, who was a member of the Commune and an old member of the International, is dead.

The Belgian chamber of deputies has been electing its officers, and Defnet—a Socialist deputy—has been elected one of the secretaries of the chamber.

The bakers at Madrid have gone on strike for higher wages and better inspection of bake houses. The government is very unfairly throwing impediments in the way of the strikers and is also facilitating the employment of blacklegs.

The Chinese troubles are already seriously affecting the state of industry in Germany. Many factories have closed, and more are expected to follow, and the emperor apparently thinks that he will improve matters by instructing his soldiers not to give quarter to the Chinese.

A meeting was held at Brussels to open the campaign in favor of universal suffrage in Belgium. Vandervelde proposed and carried a resolution in favor of granting the vote to women. This is quite a new departure in Belgium. It would, however, given the power of the clergy, be a very hazardous experiment.

The Swedish government has voted a large sum of money for the purpose of enabling intelligent workmen to proceed to the French capital, and there glean new ideas from an inspection of the manufactures and goods exhibited. As a result, some scores of mechanics, draughtsmen and engineers have been granted traveling allowance varying in amount from fifteen to thirty guineas, and have been dispatched to the exhibition.

According to the annual report on the railways of the United States, there is much less risk for a man in a twelve months' campaign in South Africa than in riding about on American trains. In 1899 7,123 persons were killed and 44,620 injured. The casualties in South Africa are: 3,463 killed, and 11,905 wounded. This does not include those who have died of disease or by accident.

At a certain cloth factory in Scotland it was the custom to fine the workpeople for turning out bad work. One day a workman brought a piece of cloth to be examined, and the manager found two little holes about an inch apart. He then showed these to the man and demanded two shillings fine, a shilling for each hole. "Is it a shilling for each hole?" asked the man. "Yes," said the manager. "And is it the same for every hole, big or little?" "Yes," exactly the same," said the manager. "Well, then, I'll save a shilling," and putting his fingers in the holes, he quickly made the two holes into one.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY

The Solution of the Trust Problem is Found

By James Onal

It is a sad mission to cut through and destroy with the scissors of analysis the delicate and iridescent veils with which our proud mediocrity clothes itself. Very terrible is the religion of truth.—Prof. Lombroso.

Thus speaks the great Italian criminologist in an instructive volume entitled "The Man of Genius," in which he has compiled a mass of facts to prove that the giants of the past were to a certain extent mentally unbalanced. However, whether we agree with Prof. Lombroso's conclusions or not, it is certain that many of the "giants" in the political arena today come under his classification, judging from the methods which they advocate in dealing with the modern trust problem.

The Socialist realizes with Prof. Lombroso that "it is a sad mission to cut through and destroy with the scissors of analysis" opinions and doctrines held by the orthodox world, especially concerning the trust problem. Nevertheless he is equal to the task, even though it runs counter to "public opinion," for he is well aware that this same public opinion is in itself vitally connected with the problem.

Now what is the problem before us? I shall try and state it in as few words as possible. A trust is a combination of a number of capitalists or corporations who combine their wealth in a common fund for the joint purpose of securing larger returns and destroying competition in order to exploit the market to their hearts' content. It is evident to everybody that this vast centralization of economic power in the hands of a small class is disastrous to those outside of it. Hence a cry comes from the middle class to destroy these combinations, for they are the ones who first feel their crushing force. This class does not question whether they can be destroyed or not; they take that for granted. On the contrary, the Socialist not only questions the possibility of destroying the trusts, but also denies that it is desirable to do so. The difference of opinion lies in the divergent class interests which each party to the controversy represents. This will be brought out later. The first requirement in the solution of any problem is the examination of the fundamental factors involved. Let us examine some of the fundamental factors in modern capitalist society, and see if we can find a solution of the trust problem from the facts themselves. We have:

1. Private ownership by the capitalist class of the resources and instruments of wealth production, that is of lands, mills, factories, railroads, etc.
2. Competition between these owners of land and capital, resulting from a desire to sell their products or services in order to secure profits.
3. A great class—the working class—who own but one commodity, their labor power, which they are forced to sell daily to the capitalistic class in order to secure a living.
4. Competition between these workers for jobs.
5. A class struggle between the capitalist class and the working class over the division of the product into wages and profits.

These are fundamental propositions that stare us in the face every day and cannot be denied. Let us take up the propositions in their order:

PRIVATE OWNERSHIP

1. Private property implies the right of the individual to acquire or accumulate as much as he can or wants. It implies sole dominion over the wealth in his possession and also the right to keep or dispose of it in any manner he sees fit. No one can interfere with his accumulations, for to allow such interference it would cease to be private property. If an individual desires to go in partnership with another individual, that is his business; he is exercising his right as a private owner of property to do with it as he pleases. Bearing this in mind, let me give an illustration. Jones

WILHELM LIEBKNECHT

With Socialists the world over we learn with deep regret and sorrow of the death of Wilhelm Liebknecht, the "soldier of the revolution" and great leader of the Social Democrats of Germany.

Liebknecht was born in Giessen on March 29, 1826. He studied philology, theology and philosophy at the Giessen University, with a view to becoming an advocate, but became interested in Socialism through the writings of St. Simon, and in 1848 dropped his studies and went to Paris to take part in the revolution. He had already, in 1846, been charged with having a hand in the Polish revolutionary movements and had been expelled from Austria.

He took part in the attempt to establish a republic in Germany and was confined in jail for nine months. On his release he went to Switzerland and was escorted to the French frontier by the Swiss authorities for preaching Socialism. France sent him to England, where he remained until 1862, when the German amnesty proclamation allowed him to return to Germany. Three years later he was again banished from Germany for a period of several years.

While a candidate for parliament in 1867 he was arrested and imprisoned for three months, but was nevertheless elected.

In 1870 he, together with Bebel and others, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment for attacking the government's policy in the Franco-German war.

The passage of Bismarck's anti-Socialist law in 1878 deprived Herr Liebknecht of a sight of his family until 1890, when the law went out of operation with Bismarck's retirement. In 1896 he spent four months in prison for lese majesty in not rising when the emperor entered the hall of parliament. He cared little about a term in prison, and on this occasion returned from England, where he had been lecturing, to serve his sentence.

According to a German writer, Emperor William feared Herr Liebknecht more than all England. He represented Berlin in the reichstag, his honesty was considered incorruptible, and he was a power with the people. He was a profound student of social and political questions and an eloquent speaker. On a lecturing tour in the United States a few years ago he was greeted by large audiences everywhere.

He had been a journalist since 1862, and for a number of years, and up to his death was editor of Vorwarts, the leading Socialist paper of Germany.

The funeral occurred Sunday last, and 80,000 men marched through the streets of Berlin to the burial place. All traffic was stopped and the streets were packed with thousands of sympathizing onlookers. Nearly all the mourners wore the red carnation. American Socialist organizations were represented. No disturbance occurred.

Comrade E. V. Debs sent the following telegram to the German comrades: "Terre Haute, Ind., Aug. 8, 1900. 'Vorwarts, Berlin.

"American Socialists mingle their tears with the Socialists of all lands at the bier of Liebknecht, the apostle of Social Democracy.

"EUGENE V. DEBS."

DEBS IS ENDORSED

Comrade Eugene V. Debs, it will be recalled, accepted the nomination of the Social Democratic party at Indianapolis, March 9, 1900. His speech of acceptance on that occasion appeared in the Herald of March 24. In that speech he said:

"A few moments ago your committee advised me of the great honor conferred upon me by this convention in making me one of the standard-bearers of the party in the great campaign upon which we are now entering. Never in all of my life I so profoundly impressed with the conviction that there is a divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we will. Yesterday I left this hall under the solemn belief that I could not, under any possible circumstances, accept the nomination tendered me with such enthusiastic unanimity. But with your united voices ringing in my ear, and your impassioned appeals burning and glowing in my breast, and your eyes searching the very depths of my soul, I was soon brought to realize that in your voice in behalf of Socialism there was the supreme command of Duty—that I could not disregard it and decline the nomination without proving myself wholly unworthy of the confidence which inspired it. I felt that I could not decline this nomination, tendered me under such circumstances, without being guilty of treason to the cause we all love so well; and so I come to you this afternoon, obedient to the call voiced by your committee, to say that I accept your nomination, and with it all of the responsibilities that the great trust imposes; and with my heart trembling upon my lips, I thank the comrades, one and all, for the great honor you have conferred upon me."

From that time to the present there has never been a shadow of doubt among Social Democrats that he was a provisional or temporary candidate of the party; from that day to this there has never been a single moment of confusion in his mind as to what organization tendered him the nomination, and his course since then has been one of dignity and loyalty, entirely becoming to the position in which he was placed. His acceptance of the nomination of the Social Democratic party of America was given in March last and at no time has there been any question that, so far as the party was concerned, that act was final and determined his relation to the party until the polls close next November.

A high sense of duty to the cause of Socialism would admit of no other course at this time than the acceptance of the endorsement which came to him last week from Springfield, Mass. He was already the candidate for president of the strongest Socialist party in the country; for the sake of the cause in which we are all concerned, his acceptance of an endorsement from any other body of Socialists was incumbent upon him as a duty; his course is justified by the political situation and if other endorsements come from Socialist organizations we shall be glad to hear of them.

ALLEGED BARBARITIES IN CHINA

The part which has so far been played in the Chinese tragedy by the capitalist press of America has been one of the most ferocious and disgraceful which the present generation of men have been called upon to witness.

That press stands convicted of manufacturing and publishing absolutely false and misleading reports of the situation in China, reports conceived in a spirit of brutal disregard for truth or decency, and spread out before the American people with a frenzied abandonment quite characteristic of a social factor which has no sense of shame and has become morally impotent under the hypnotism of capitalism which controls it.

Ministers of the gospel employed, or alleged to be employed, as "special staff correspondents," men whose influence for good in the world long since ended, have sent reports couched in the most "solemn" terms of the awful acts of brutality committed by the Chinese and a few days later from other sources has come an express and authentic denial.

At one time reports from the missionaries and others had all the foreign ministers and their families butchered in cold blood.

We were told how the diplomats (who, with the missionaries, are responsible for the Chinese trouble) stood against the murderous Chinamen in a "hollow square," their wives and children within; how they fought hand to hand, and finding escape impossible, how they turned and with their own hands slew their own offspring. All this was given out in minutest detail, and all of it proved to be absolutely false.

We were told how the Russian minister and his wife were butchered, chopped up into convenient chunks for boiling and the pieces consigned to a huge kettle and cooked.

This was put in a "box" front-page display and heralded as the most fiendish crime of the age.

At the same time the talk at home was of more soldiers and guns and transports—for "revenge."

But the Russian minister was never murdered at all, and some days after a message from him declaring himself alive and well was given an inch of out-of-the-way space on an inside page.

Conger was "dead" a dozen times, and horrible reports, written usually by diplomats of the cross, were printed narrating the awful barbarities practiced upon him and his family.

All of it was untrue like the rest, and the American people have thus been imposed upon to a degree that one may well question the sanity of the impostors of the press, the "missionaries," and the people, too.

The latter have before had abundant proof that the press of these times is little more than an instrument to promote capitalist schemes of aggression and plunder, and excite the people themselves to hatred and revenge of wrongs that were never committed, as in this Chinese incident.

STUDY IN SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC HISTORY AND THEORY

The outline for Socialistic study, prepared by Prof. Ladoff, which is introduced in this paper, seems to be worthy of more than mere passing notice. One great result of the present presidential campaign will be that Social Democracy will show itself so formidable that from this time forward capitalism, through its press and other means for the molding of opinions, will drop its old tactics toward us (that of either ignoring our existence, or of treating us with ridicule) and treat with the subject of Socialism seriously. When it once gets down to business on this line, the mere mumbling of set phrases on our part, much as one would use some witch's charm or "potent sentence," will only render us ridiculous. The mere assertion that the fathers of Socialism said this or that will not avail us at all. It will only make us appear superficial and sectarian.

Ask a republican or a democrat what are the principles of his respective party, and he will either show his ignorance or confess it, and we will expect nothing better. But it is different with the Social Democrat. The burden of proof is on him. If he shows himself an actual student of social science, he will be respected, even if not agreed with. He will command respect secretly if not openly. And it is his duty to command respect. Phrases were perhaps all right when we were working in obscurity, but we are now out in the open. The foe sees us and is coming at us with true capitalist ferocity. He will try hard to make mince meat of our contentions and postulates. We must be prepared to defend them.

We long ago disproved the claim that our party was a mere rival of the older Socialist party in this country. We showed that theirs was dogmatic Socialism—narrow, bigoted and hide-bound. Ours we showed to be progressive, broad-minded, dynamic. They wanted only such facts as agreed with their iron-clad formulas. We want all the facts. Their faith required a catechism; ours an unflinching investigation of present-day society, as well as that of the past.

The outline of study presented by Prof. Ladoff will be of great service to our branches. From it they can draw endless suggestions for discussions at their meetings. Better yet, they can actually, by its guidance, carry on a course of self-education, which cannot but make the members wiser men and more formidable antagonists of the great enemy, the capitalist system of exploitation. Certainly, there is greater danger ahead for our party than there is for a dogmatic party. We cannot tie up to certain phrases, and as we grow to nation-sweeping proportions we can only save ourselves from scattering our fire by impelling our more active members to be actual students of society. Knowledge is indeed power, and we will find it so when we have to look into capitalism's battery of guns. Chief among those guns will be the great and influential newspapers. All their craftiness, all their powers of subtle persuasion and artifice will be employed with ceaseless energy in the great effort to confound us. Educate is the watchword.

Don't be deceived when you read that branches of the Social Democratic party are "falling in line" with the repudiators of the East. They are "falling in" only for political co-operation and nothing more. In scores of places where organic union has been announced, no such condition exists.

"Open a school, you close a prison," says the Chicago American, quoting Victor Hugo. And, says the paper, education is the issue paramount to all others. This is all well enough, provided the education closes the mill, the factory and the mine to capitalist exploitation and socializes all the means of life. Teach children the right-usefulness of land and productive capital, upon which all life depends, or education will be a continuous failure.

The Chicago Union Stock Yards have a scheme for plucking the employees by the use of scrip paid to the men instead of "money," in exchange for which goods are obtained at the company's store and board at the company's hostelry. Prices of everything are, of course, regulated to yield a profit, and the men who "value their jobs take the scrip"! Meanwhile, the small merchants in the neighborhood realize the hopelessness of competition with such a scheme and are being driven out of business.

What will Bryan and his following do with the new device in the iron and steel industry that dispenses with the services of 260 men who have heretofore been able to earn a small wage and support a family in a niggardly fashion? Will he "smash" the device? And if not, how does he propose to deal with this constantly recurring problem of discovery and new invention upon which the trust rests and by which it is strengthened? Don't you see that the trust is the modern method of dealing with labor-saving devices, and that Bryanism is thoroughly reactionary?

WILHELM LIEBKNECHT THE PEOPLE'S TRIBUNE

Eugene Debs' Great Tribute to the Great Commoner and Social Democrat

HE BELONGED TO ALL MANKIND

When Emperors and Iron Chancellors Have Passed to Dust, this Man's Name Will Shine with Lustre in the Firmament of the Ages

A Titan has fallen. Liebknecht, the scarred warrior of the social revolution, lies pulseless on the field of battle. He fell in full charge, his face to the retreating enemy. For forty years he fought with dauntless valor, and where the fight was thickest the plume of Liebknecht like a banner, waved defiant. Great captain of the revolutionary hosts; his only title was the divine right of genius to lead, and the only arms he bore were truth and justice.

This immortal man was not Germany's alone. He fought for and belonged to all mankind. His name was known and honored in all the zones that belt the globe, and seven million socialists uncover and unite as one in reverent tribute to his memory.

With Marx, Lassalle and Engels, he plucked from fate the fadeless laurels of immortality.

"Thou art Freedom's now, and Fame's; One of the few, the immortal names That were not born to die."

At the bier of Liebknecht, Socialism bows and weeps. For her he was bruised by the contumelious stone; for her he languished long in prison cell; for her he bore the sacrificial cross.

Bismarck in the zenith of his autocratic power could not daunt him. With resolute mien and flashing eye he stood erect; he dared to challenge the king himself though death had been the penalty.

Intrepid soul, thou couldst proudly say:

"Out of the night that shelters me,
Black as the pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods there be
For my unconquerable soul."

When the Williams, Bismarcks and all the titled tyrants of all times have passed to dust, or are remembered only for their crimes, our Liebknecht's name will shine with lustre in the firmament of the ages.

Of Wilhelm Liebknecht, too, some Hugo of the future may say: "He disappeared, but left us his soul, the Revolution." * * * * * and when socialism is triumphant, "I affirm it, up there, in the stars, Liebknecht will smile."

The worn and weary children of toil scarce know their benefactor. But their children, and their children's children, emancipated by the genius of Socialism he so truly typified, will weave garlands for his grave and sing sweet anthems to his memory.

And we who follow him will seize the standard he held aloft unsullied through all the years, until death relaxed his hold, and bear it on and on until it symbolizes humanity, disenthralled, the Universal Commonwealth.

TRUSTS AND SOCIALISM

is a capitalist and an owner of several large mills—iron mills, let us say. Smith is also an owner of iron mills and desires to quit the business. Jones makes a proposition to Smith which is satisfactory to him and the mills pass into the hands of Jones. Neither does anyone deny that Jones has a right to form a partnership with another capitalist who also controls some iron mills. No one denies Jones the right to buy the property of Smith, and nobody denies the latter's right to sell his property to Jones. Neither does anyone deny that Jones has a right to form a partnership with another capitalist. Presently it is found that the partnership has bought out many other firms and combined with other capitalists. And so it goes. Buying out some and combining with others—not only iron mills, but cotton, silk, lumber, sugar, etc., until we have the trust, or possibly a complete monopoly. It is evident that the rights of private property have not been infringed upon by the gradual development from the small mills first owned by Jones to the trust of which Jones is now only a part. They have simply taken advantage of the right to buy what they pleased, and in combining with others they have simply exercised the right that two peanut-vendors on the street corner have in joining together for mutual advantage. The same principle is involved in both cases. The law has no power to step in and say Jones shall not buy or Smith shall not sell, for should it do so private property ceases to exist. But someone objects and says that when a trust is formed the "sacred" principle of competition tends to be obliterated. Just why competition is sacred any more than any other economic factor I cannot understand, but as this question brings us to the second proposition which deals with this very principle of competition, I will now consider it.

COMPETITION

2. Competition is, to give the definition of Prof. Ely, "the struggle of conflicting economic interests on the basis of the existing legal and social order." Let us give an illustration of the working of this factor in modern capitalistic society and see where it leads us. Jones and Smith are each capitalists seeking to dispose of commodities on the market. Each desires to increase his wealth as much as possible, and to do this each one strives to secure the market for himself. Here we have "conflicting economic interests." Jones tries to drive out Smith and Smith tries to drive out Jones. Now the best method of driving out a competitor is to cut prices and hold them at a level so low that your rival must either meet those prices or go out of business. This is the "sacred" principle of competition. Let us carry the illustration a little further. Let us say Jones drives his rival out of business. He then turns his attention to other competitors and the same struggle begins over again. Some survive the struggle while others go to the wall. But this same struggle soon teaches these capitalists a lesson that they are not very slow to grasp. They reason somewhat in this fashion: "This competition is foolish in the long run. We capitalists, as a class, have a common interest to further. Each of us desires to gain wealth, but in fighting each other a whole lot of energy and wealth is wasted which, if properly utilized, could be used for the realization of our common purpose, the control of the markets and the enrichment of ourselves. If we can secure an agreement of some kind by which we can exploit the markets in harmony instead of fighting one another we can in time do away with a lot of advertising, traveling, salesmen, etc., thus doing away with this useless expense and by so doing increase our wealth at the same time." In a short time a meeting is called and after many failures the combination is effected. This combination is a powerful weapon for those who happen to be members of it, as the smaller capitalistic interests which are still competing soon come to know. The combination is able in time to drive the smaller competitors to the wall, owing to its more economical management and the elimination of useless waste of energy. The combine has demonstrated its "fitness to survive." These combines do not stop at this stage of development. Having once learned the lesson that co-operation pays more than competition they are sensible enough to carry the development to its logical conclusion which is seen in the modern trust and monopoly. Thus we see that in private ownership of the instruments of wealth production and competition there is a monopoly force that cannot be prevented, and those who believe in both these factors can make no objection to trusts or monopoly. Let us proceed.

THE WORKING CLASS

3. We now leave the capitalists; their private property, competition and monopoly of the tools of wealth production, and take up the third fundamental factor in modern society, the working class. This class is entirely divorced from the ownership of the tools of wealth production and have but one commodity for sale and that is their labor power. It is a commodity because the vendors of it have to take it to the labor market and sell in order to live, much the same as a merchant sells his wares in order to secure a profit on their sale. But it has this difference: The laborer cannot send samples of his commodity to the prospective buyer because it is inseparable from himself. When he sells his commodity, whether by the day, week or month, he sells himself with it. But this is not all. The laborer cannot hold his commodity for a raise in price, for on its sale depends the life of himself and family. As Prof. Davidson says: "The laborer must sell today; the employer need not buy till tomorrow." To the master it is only a question of profits; to the laborer it is a question of life." Thus we see that the sale of labor power is not a voluntary act on the part of the laborer, but a forced sale due to his position in modern society. His wants act as a lash just as effective as that formerly wielded in the hands of the southern slave owner a few years ago. If the laborer cannot find a market for his commodity there are only three alternatives left for him. He must either beg, starve or steal. He cannot become a capitalist because the wealth necessary to successfully compete with the large combines of capital is so large that it excludes the possibility of him becoming a capitalist. He is bound by circumstances and environment which are just as effective as though he were riveted by chains of steel to capital. Once a wage slave always a wage slave.

A GIANT BANK TRUST FORMING IN NEW YORK

It Will be a Muster of the City Banks and Crack the Whip of Domination of Two Billions of Dollars

THE STANDARD OIL ITS CORE

It Will Stand at the Spigot of Loans and All Other Businesses Will Set Like Beggars at Its Gates

From the New York Verdict

Here be true news. This is a grave story. It is one of even near concern to small and great. Let it come unshod of simile, unbusked of imagery or rhetoric, unclouded of any mists of metaphor. In Wall street as this is read the giant trust of all is forming. It is to collect within itself the banks of New York city. Its core is to be Standard Oil. Its moving spirits are John Rockefeller and Pierpont Morgan. With them in full and close association are the Rothschilds and their American agents. It was to link the Rothschilds to the scheme that of late took Morgan Europeanward and brought him back again. This trust, at its consummation, which is close, will pull the reins of guidance and crack the whip of domination over two billions of dollars. It will, as stated, be a muster of the New York city banks. They are to be made into one, force—unified and brought under one word and one command. Thereafter they are to say "No" together or "Yes" together, or together stand motionless and mute. This trust of the banks is to be the dictator trust; to overlord all other trusts. The greatest among these latter will be dwarfed as they stand beside it. We, the people, are to become the subjects of bank conquest and suffer the feudalism of money. This bank trust is to be our William of Normandy. New York city is to be its Hastings without a blow. It will have, as it were, a Doomsday book, and the country is to be parceled among its followers.

This is a true tale. There is neither guess nor fancy in its telling. Naught but the bald facts are set forth. This trust expects to hold the nation in the hollow of its hand. Their plan is to be the grand bank of the United States; issue at the last its money and have custody of its credit. In a cruder day Jackson defeated a parallel conspiracy; crushed beneath his stern heel the head of a similar serpent. With this difference: That was a python of seven and one-half millions, a baby and a plaything to the one in hand. Now are we to confront a serpent of two billions, or one two hundred and fifty times as large. At a time, too, when the Jacksons seem gone from our midst. For a century and a quarter Europe, pointing to America, whether in hate or love, was driven to say with Job: "There the wicked cease from troubling, there the weary be at rest! There the prisoners rest together; they hear not the voice of the oppressor! The small and the great are there; and the servant is free from his master!" Once, this trust of the banks, and Europe will say this no more. There will be none to give tongue to it. The fact of freedom will have departed, the song would be a lie. In that day of gilded narrow fetters the spirit of true Americanism will be crippled, bent and broken. A sightless Samson, it will grind in the mills of the Philistines. It will long for destruction and dig for death as for treasures that lie hid.

Standard Oil is to be the heart of this bank trust. There is one known thing of Standard Oil. Its minimum profits are at least forty millions yearly. How much more they be is the jealous secret of Standard Oil, and none may pierce it. As stated, as captain-constructors of this bank trust are Rockefeller, Morgan and the Rothschilds. They will go to New Jersey for organization. That state has grown the Morocco of America. Its statutes are the merest shipyards to build and launch and outfit these trust pirates of commerce. New Jersey, to be consistent, should adopt the black flag as its banner. It should float the Jolly Roger with skull and cross bones from the dome staff of its capitol. Once this trust of the banks is afloat, it will have beneath its pennant every bank in New York. They must join or be destroyed. The old killing Standard Oil method will suffice for this. Then it will extend itself. Every bank in the country will become its gillie. There will be no limit to its sway. Its powers will find their last extension in the frontiers of the possible. It will fix the price of money and censor the markets to the last item of value. It will pick up the national debt and hold the country between its thumb and finger. It will demand bonds and get them, or it will force payment for them. It will stand at the spigot of loans. It will flow money on or off at its selfish interest or caprice. All other businesses will set like beggars at its gates.

SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST

In northern zones the raging bear Protects himself with fat and hair. Where snow is deep and ice is stark, And half the year is cold and dark, He still survives a clime like that. By growing fur, by growing fat. These traits, O bear, which thou transmittest, Prove the survival of the fittest.

To polar regions waste and wan, Comes the encroaching race of man; A puny, feeble little lubber, He had no fur, he had no blubber, The scornful bear sat down at ease To see the stranger starve and freeze; But, lo! the stranger slew the bear, And ate his fat and wore his hair! These deeds, O man, which thou transmittest, Prove the survival of the fittest.

In modern times the millionaire Protects himself as did the bear. Where poverty and hunger are He counts his bullion by the car. Where thousands suffer still he thrives. The wealth, O Croesus, thou transmittest, Proves the survival of the fittest.

But, lo! some people, odd and funny, Some men without a cent of money, The simple, common human race, Chose to improve their dwelling place. They had no use for millionaires; They calmly said the world was theirs; They were so strong, so wise, so many— The millionaire?—There wasn't any! These deeds, O man, which thou transmittest, Prove the survival of the fittest.

LIGHT, MORE LIGHT

A Suggestion to Socialist Societies and Branches of the Social Democratic Party.

By Isador Ladoff

"Human progress were a weak thing, could not its speed be accelerated somewhat, and the moral and material happiness of the majority be multiplied at a rate beyond that of the past."

N. P. GILMAN.

"A time arrives in the progress of social development when societies of men become conscious of corporate existence, and when the improvement of the conditions of its existence becomes for them an object of conscious and deliberate effort."

PROF. J. E. CAIRNES.

There was a time when the mental equipment of a Socialist in the rank and file consisted in a few ill (if at all) digested and parrot-like repeated shibboleths and maxims, borrowed on credit from some of the fathers and prominent leaders of the movement. These shibboleths and maxims were regarded somewhat in the same light as texts of the Bible by church people. For doubt, criticism and original thought there did not seem to be any demand among Socialists. Orthodoxy and dogmatism of the most rigid pattern were considered as essential qualities of a Socialist. Anybody who dared to think for himself and have his own ideas was considered either a fool or a knave, or more frequently as a fool and knave at once. Intolerance and heresy hunting were connected with great narrowness of mind. Some of these old-time Socialists were, to use the picturesque slang of David Harum, "so narrer in their views that fourteen of 'em c'n sit, side an' side, in a buggy." It was the golden age of self-appointed Socialistic popes, a la De Leon, and in uncrackable arrogant small bosses who "run the whole thing," while the rank and file said "yes and amen" to any antique capers of their scientific leaders. The Socialistic movement, instead of progressing, spreading and deepening, was retreating, petrifying and arousing more prejudices against the cause it pretended to represent than sympathy for it among outsiders. It was a time of petty quarrels and mutual abuse in choicest billingsgate among the "leaders," so-called, of useless hairsplitting and sectarianism.

Fortunately this time is rapidly passing away never to return again, and Socialism, rational and pure Socialism, is broadening and deepening with every day, sending its roots deep into the national soil, and spreading its vigorous branches far beyond the limits of one small class.

The marvelous growth of the S. D. P. is the most convincing proof of this change for the better. The time is approaching fast when the S. D. P. will be a great national power in the United States, a power to be felt and respected, a power before which all the old and new-fashioned tricks and crafty designs of the enemies of the toiling classes will prove of no avail.

This triumph of the cause of Socialism, however, has to be brought about by the persistent endeavors of the members of the S. D. P. And in order to be able to accomplish it the members of the S. D. P. have to prepare themselves for the battle royal against all the sinister powers of selfishness and ignorance. In connection with this grave problem, the writer of these lines takes the liberty to repeat here what he said long ago in his article, "Socialism and Sociology."

"As the knowledge of all the parts of the human body is the condition sine qua non of a good physician, the knowledge of all the qualities, properties and laws of human beings is necessary for every Socialist, who deserves to be called so. Socialism is not an idle dream any more, it is not a panacea, a specific cure against a certain disease; it is not a science by and for itself—it is the application of all the results of human thought and noblest feelings to the problems of social life. Great is the dignity of a healer of the afflictions of the human body, and preserver of the health, but great are also their responsibilities. To be called a Socialist is the highest compliment that can be paid by one man to another. To be a true Socialist is the highest distinction a man can attain to on earth. But how many deserve to be called so, and how many pretend to be Socialists, without any shadow of right to be counted such? It is not enough to repeat thoughtlessly certain ready-made maxims and sentences in order to be a Socialist. It is necessary to study society in all its aspects and phases, to read, think and investigate much and long in order to have the right to call oneself a Socialist: One independent thinking man is worth thousands of thoughtless repeaters of other people's ideas. It is a great and noble thing to "make Socialists," but the proper way to do it is to make them study, think and judge for themselves, to put them on their own feet. Feeling alone, sincere and deep as it may be, is not a secure foundation for a soldier of Socialism. Knowledge and conviction coming from knowledge and independent thought, are the most precious qualities of a healer of social evils and a true reformer. The so-called leaders who are opposed to academic study, because they want "fighters," are false prophets. Socialism, in order to succeed, has to start an educational crusade. German Socialists owe their success to the systematic education of the masses, started by the genial F. Lassalle and kept up to our day. The Socialists of England try to do the same. The American Socialists have to adopt the same policy. An ignorant soldier is a poor fighter."

With this purpose in view we have worked out a three years' course of study of topics touching upon all social and economic problems which confront us today. This we will proceed to outline in the next issue of The Herald.

WHERE DO PROFITS GO?

Inquire of statisticians who are the beneficiaries of this alleged prosperity? Listen to the report by Hon. Carroll D. Wright, United States commissioner of labor, in his Thirteenth Annual Report, Vols. 1 and 2:

"A 3 1/2-inch farm wagon is made in 48 hours and 17 minutes, i. e., it equals the work of one man for 48 hours and 17 minutes. This man receives for making this wagon $7.19. The same wagon costs the farmer $75. Let some wise politician tell us how the farmer can afford to swap $75 on the farm for $7.19 earned in the factory."

A nice buggy made at a labor cost in time of 39 hours and 8 minutes; the laborer receives $8.09 for his service. This buggy is sold in our market for $100 to $125.

A good substantial hack is made at a labor cost of 53 hours and 28 minutes, at a money cost of $8.48. This hack is marketed at $100.

A clock, mahogany, veneered, 26 inches high, 8-day movement, labor made it in 1 hour and 23 minutes, and received 25 1/2 cents for making it. This clock costs the user $12.50.

A common straw carpet costs the housewife forty cents per yard, while it costs only nine cents per yard to make the best grade of Brussels carpet. The laborer in the factory gets eight cents a yard for making velvet carpet, and six cents a yard for making ingrain carpet. The one costs us $2 per yard and the other $5.

Where is the profit and who gets it? Let some laborer who voted for McKinley's prosperity or Bryan's 16 to 1 answer it.

It costs 11 cents to tan a side of leather, and labor gets 18 to 75 cents for making a pair of shoes.

A farmer sells his bale of cotton for $25. The same bale of cotton turns out two thousand yards of calico gingham, for which the same farmer is forced to pay $100, or more to get his own bale of cotton back, while the labor in the factory gets only $22 for converting the raw cotton into manufactured cloth.

Labor gets 3 1/2 cents for making hose; gets 21 1/2 cents for the use of the machine to make them with.

Labor gets $10.33 per dozen for making ash bedsteads 6 feet 4 inches high and nicely finished, while you have to pay more for one bedstead than labor gets for making the dozen.

The labor cost of making a 4 1/2 pound axe is 4 1/2 cents; selling price is $1. Labor cost of making pitchforks is 5 cents each; selling price 50 cents.

Cassimere pants costs in labor and material 78 cents, while a Prince Albert coat costs less than $3.

Labor gets 75 cents for making a bureau with four drawers; this bureau sells for $8."

IMPERIALISM AND SOCIALISM

of the administration in its professions. The whole foreign policy is the result of greedy commercialism. It evidences the criminality of capitalism which does not hesitate to sacrifice the life and liberty of a people in the interest of private profit. The capitalist class must have markets and opportunity to invest their surplus capital, no matter at what cost to others. All that is needed to enlist the blind support of the people in carrying out their nefarious schemes is to cover them with the cry of "patriotism." Such great wrongs have always been perpetrated in the name of "humanity," "civilization," and "patriotism." It is only thus that the ruling class can gain the moral support of the people.

REACTIONARY DEMOCRACY

The republican party, in declaring for expansion, is but voicing the interests of the class it represents. The democratic party is opposed to the republican expansion policy, not because it is more virtuous, but because the material interests of the class it represents would not thus be subserved. The industrial activities of the middle class are very limited and its surplus capital still more so; consequently they are not interested in the policy of the trust magnates, but rather opposed to it, for they know that the growth of the trusts means ruin for them. With but little or no manufactured products to export and no capital to invest abroad, it is not strange that they should oppose this policy, and it is less strange when we take into consideration the result of this investment on the stability of the middle class. I will refer to this again presently.

The democratic party, in representing the interests of the perishing middle class, has become thoroughly reactionary. It faces backward on every great question of the day. Its middle class anti-trust program is absurd. Its position on the money question is also in accord only with middle class aims.

THE SOCIALIST POSITION

Now let us compare what the Socialist has to say on the question of expansion. Socialism is not anybody's ready-made scheme or device; it is a scientific philosophy, and rests upon a historical, economic, and scientific basis. The mission of the Socialist is to point out the truth regarding the working of economic laws, and show that the present system is destined to work its own downfall and usher in the co-operative commonwealth. The Socialist points out the necessity of modern capitalism to expand—it must have foreign markets. The Socialist is not an expansionist like the republican nor an anti-expansionist like the democrat—he merely points out the facts. The interests of the class he represents cannot be served by either policy. Socialism, as I have said, represents the interests of the working class. It also represents the true interests of every member of the middle class (and I might also say the true ultimate interests of the capitalists, not, of course, as capitalists, but as men); but, like the slaveholders of old, they are blind to their higher interests.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF AMERICA

CAMPAIGN OF 1900

THE PARTY.

The Social Democratic Party was organized at Chicago, June 11, 1898. It is the party that elected the first Socialist Mayor of American cities, at Haverhill and Brockton, Mass., and in different sections of the country not less than thirty members of the party have been elected to public positions.

ITS METHOD.

Five or more members can organize a branch of the Social Democratic Party. Any reputable person subscribing to the principles of the organization is eligible to membership.

Desiring to organize a branch, application should be made to the national secretary for copies of the constitution, which should be placed in the hands of prospective members. In these will be found the declaration of principles, as also the laws of the organization.

ITS OBJECT.

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

TRADES UNIONISM.

The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for emancipation.

ITS PLATFORM.

Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

National insurance of working people against accident, lack of employment and want in old age.

Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by voters.

Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

NATIONAL PAPER OF THE PARTY:

The Social Democratic Herald
50 CENTS A YEAR.
126 Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

HEADQUARTERS: 126 WASHINGTON STREET, CHICAGO

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Send in your order now for Ben Atterbury's letter to workingmen. Leaflet No. 2; $1 a thousand.

Comrade Debs is announced to speak at Van Horne, Iowa, Sept. 5, the occasion being the firemen's celebration.

Comrade E. Val Putnam is announced for a series of meetings at Webb City, Mo., beginning about September 1.

Albion E. Geisler has been substituted for Chas. Haase as the Social Democratic candidate for the State legislature in the Ninth District.

The small 4-page leaflet used by the Chicago comrades is good for any part of the country; 1,000 to any address, postage paid, for 75 cents.

Get your barber to allow you to hang the Debs portrait on his wall. And, by the way, how many small stickers, say two inches square, could you use?

The Social Democrats of Los Angeles, Cal., by a large majority reconsidered their former action and declared allegiance to the National Executive Board.

A Michigan comrade orders 250 of leaflet No. 2, and says: "I have never seen a much better leaflet than this." Keep "No. 2" going and it will do its work.

Comrade Debs speaks at Canton, Illinois, on Labor Day, and not Canton, Ohio, as announced last week. The meeting is under the auspices of the Central Labor Union.

The encouraging report comes from Florida that our comrades will succeed in getting a place on the official ballot in that State; the work of filling up petitions is well under way.

All loyal members of the Social Democratic branches in Washington are hereby requested to communicate with Comrade L. W. Kidd, 1115 Sixth avenue, North, Seattle, Wash.

Look out for an announcement in next week's Herald of our Postal Propaganda, designed so that every Socialist in the United States can engage in quiet and thoroughly effective campaign work. It will meet with your approval on sight.

A memorial meeting will be held Saturday evening, August 18, at Garfield Turner Hall, Larrabee street and Garfield avenue, in honor of Wilhelm Liebknecht. There will be speaking and the Socialist Sangerbund will render appropriate songs.

It is of the highest importance that every possible means be adopted by the comrades to correct the lie now being industriously circulated that Debs will "withdraw" in favor of Bryan. The leaflets at one dollar a thousand afford a cheap way of doing this. Send in your orders.

There will be a Social Democratic lawn party at the Socialist Club Rooms, 1541 Central Boulevard, next Sunday evening, Aug. 19, to which members of all branches in Chicago and their friends are invited. Tickets, 10 cents each. Ice cream and cake served.

The Appeal to Reason fund for the purpose of sending the paper to 10,000 offices of labor unions for six months has passed the $600 mark. The amount required is $1,250. The specific object of the Appeal's enterprise is to keep it before the people that Debs is a candidate "to the finish."

Social Democrats of Iowa in convention August 10, made the following nominations: Secretary of State, C. Worth; Auditor, W. T. Beals; Treasurer, Madison Warder; Attorney General, B. W. Wilson; Supreme Judge, J. M. Winn; Railroad Commissioner, M. D. Earnest. A full electoral ticket was also nominated.

The portrait of the presidential candidate gives great satisfaction. Thousands have been mailed to branches and comrades in all sections of the country. It should be seen in every community; it informs the observer, directs attention to the party and makes votes. Ten copies, 35 cents; 33 for a dollar; single copy, 10 cents; postage prepaid.

Any branch not having received collection blanks for the Campaign Fund by the time this copy of the Herald reaches them, should immediately notify the National Campaign Committee, 126 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. This is the most important work for the month of August; to see that every branch and individual member learns the necessity of a Campaign Fund and what it is to be done with it. We won't have as much as the capitalist parties, but, in proportion to the amount, we will make a greater showing.

Comrade James Oneal writes us: "I want to say that I received the leaflet by Ben Atterbury, 'An Open Letter to the Average American Workman,' and I think it is splendid thing to spread all over the country. We will send for a big lot shortly." A day or two later the order came for 5,000 copies. This order cost the comrades of Terre Haute $5 delivered. The leaflet (it is No. 2) is highly spoken of by comrades from Maine to California. "Spread it all over the country" and it will make converts—and votes.

Leaflet No. 2, issued by the National Campaign Committee of the Social Democratic party, is a genuine "hit," the first of the campaign. The first run of 20,000 copies was exhausted in 20 days after the first announcement; the second run was 100,000 copies, of which 30,000 have already been shipped to comrades and branches in different parts of the country. The price of the leaflet is One Dollar per thousand, carriage prepaid. For prices on smaller lots see advertisement. It is four pages, 4 1/2 x 7 inches, just what you want to give to a friend on the street or insert in a letter. Other leaflets are being prepared, but No. 2 should have a circulation of One Million. Send orders to Campaign Committee, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

Contributions for the National Campaign Fund of the Social Democratic Party should be sent to the treasurer, Joseph R. Finn, 126 Washington Street, Chicago. Acknowledgment will be made in the Herald.

DEBS DECLINES

To the Social Democratic party—Comrades: I respectfully decline the nomination as a member of the National Executive Board. I have served my time in that capacity and now step aside to make room for another. My decision is unalterable, and the secretary will please strike my name from the list of nominees.

In severing my relations with the board it is due my colleagues to say that during the two years of our incumbency I found them always loyal to the party, steadfast in their devotion to Socialism and true to every obligation, official and personal. Each of them has my thanks and all of them I hold in affectionate esteem.

The new board will have my unqualified allegiance and support. After the campaign, to which I owe, and shall contribute, my best energies, I shall have time and opportunity to organize and otherwise work in the interest of the party, and this I shall do, although in an unofficial capacity, with all the zeal and ability I can command.

Thanking my comrades for the honor notified, which is appreciated quite as much as if it had been accepted, I remain, Yours fraternally,

Eugene V. Debs.

TO COMRADES OF NEW YORK

All branches of the Social Democratic party in New York are urgently requested to send delegates to a state convention which will take place at Seminole Hall, 414 Grand street, New York city, on Tuesday, Aug. 26. The basis of representation will be that each delegate may represent as many comrades as may care to select him, but no delegate shall represent less than five. The convention will be called to order at 10 a. m. All interested in the well-being of the S. D. P. are urgently requested to see that they are represented, and thus demonstrate once for all that, despite false statements to the contrary, the S. D. P. remains intact in this state. All locals, even those which are openly in favor of unity, are frankly and fairly invited to attend and an opportunity thus be provided to all genuine Social Democrats to settle all differences within the ranks of our own party.

JAMES ALLMAN, Secretary.

TAKE NOTICE

We desire to call the attention of Socialists and friends of the movement to the following facts:

The headquarters of the Social Democratic Party are located at 126 Washington street, Chicago.

The national secretary of the party is Theodore Debs, same address.

The national official paper of the party is the Social Democratic Herald.

The National Executive Board consists of Frederic Heath, chairman; Seymour Stedman, secretary; Eugene V. Debs, Victor L. Berger and Mrs. Corinne S. Brown.

The National Campaign Committee of the party was organized July 22 at Chicago, Comrade Robert Meister of Milwaukee being elected chairman, and Comrade Seymour Stedman, of Chicago, secretary.

At the meeting of July 22 a finance committee for the campaign was elected as follows: Edward Zeigler, chairman; Joseph R. Finn, treasurer; James Wright, secretary.

Acknowledgment of all contributions received will appear in this paper.

The National Committee will meet Sunday morning at 10 o'clock at 55 No. Clark Street.

NOMINATIONS FOR NEW

NATIONAL EXECUTIVE BOARD

The constitution adopted at the Indianapolis convention, and since approved by a referendum vote of the branches, provides for a national executive board of nine members, "five of whom shall be chosen from territory convenient to the national headquarters and shall be called 'resident members,' and the remaining four shall be chosen, as far as possible, from other parts of the country." The present executive board on July 21 requested the members to make nominations for the new board. In response the following have been named up to this time:

Allman, James, New York
Brown, Corinne S., Illinois
Berger, Victor L., Wisconsin
Clemens, G. C., Kansas
Cox, Jesse, Illinois
Foreman, A. B., Wisconsin
Farmer, W. E., Texas
Gordon, F. G. E., Massachusetts
Greer, J. H., Illinois
Haile, Margaret, Massachusetts
Heath, Frederic, Wisconsin
Horgan, W. C., Illinois
Kelber, S., Indiana
Kelley, J. W., Indiana
Ladoff, Isadore, Wisconsin
McCartney, F. O., Massachusetts
Miller, L. E., New York
Miller, Hugo, Indiana
Roderus, Frank, Illinois
Ricker, A. W., Iowa
Riley, Geo. W., Illinois
Rooney, Eugene H., Wisconsin
Strobel, Geo. H., New Jersey
Sweetland, G. A., Connecticut
Uhlhorn, Henry, Illinois
Winnen, Jacob, Illinois
Vaclav, Mudra, Illinois

It is hoped that every Branch will contribute $10 to the Campaign Fund; some can do better; some have done so and will make a canvass for individual subscriptions as well. What is your Branch doing? Send all money to the treasurer of the National Committee, Joseph R. Finn, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

The Baltimore & Ohio railway, through some blunder committed by an enterprising but unwise official, has made itself quite ridiculous by issuing a circular to its employes in which it says: "The triumph of Socialism in this nation would mean the downfall of all the institutions upon which its strength and permanence depend." We say this is a blunder because it is really good Socialist propaganda for which Socialists do not have to pay. It is just such mistakes as we may look for from the bull-necked managers of railroads in this country. It will do good. More power to 'em! They are assisting the movement which "harasses and endangers" the brutal but tottering cause of capitalism. Incidentally they might tell us what interest the employes of the B. & O. or other workmen have in the "institutions" whose "downfall" is threatened. Socialism threatens only the interests of the private cormorants of capitalism, the plunderers of labor and debauchers of politics. They know. Hence their great concern for "this nation" and its "institutooshuns."

A number of Chicago lumber dealers, who think their stocks have been assessed at large figures, have come out with a representation to the board of review that the Pullman company's personal property tax, shown by the books to be only $961,700, should be nearly $10,000,000. The lumber dealers should study closely the Pullman company's methods, and then instead of kicking because they are successful, adopt them.

THE WORKING CLASS THEIR OPPORTUNITY

Change a Political Organization Controlled by Capitalists to an Industrial Organization Controlled by The People

VOTE FOR ECONOMIC FREEDOM

All the Benefits of Perfected Systems and Improved Machinery Would Under Socialism Go to the Worker

By Geo. B. Kline, M. D.

Richard T. Ely, professor of political economy in the University of Wisconsin, says on Socialism:

"Those who desire industrial democracy—not prematurely, but in its own time—are many, and they include most of the best economists. There are however, different ways by which it is proposed to attain the desired goal. One of these ways is voluntary co-operation for all competitive pursuits, and governmental activity for monopolistic undertakings. Another one of these is called Socialism. Socialism means co-operation not merely for undertakings of a monopolistic nature, but for all productive enterprises. Socialists seek the establishment of industrial democracy through the instrumentality of the state, which they hold to be the only way whereby it can be attained. Socialism contemplates an expansion of the business functions of government until all business is absorbed. All business is then to be regulated by the people in their organic capacity, each man and each woman having the same rights which any other man or any other woman has. Our political organization is to become an economic industrial organization, controlled by universal suffrage. Socialism will make civil service employees of all citizens, and will remunerate them in such manner as shall in view of all circumstances appear to the public authorities to be just. Private property in profit-producing capital and rent-producing land is to be abolished, and private property in income is to be retained; but with this restriction, that it shall not be employed in productive enterprises. What is desired then, is not, as is supposed by the uninformed, a division of property, but a concentration of property. The Socialists do not complain because productive property is too much concentrated, but because it is not sufficiently concentrated. Socialists consequently rejoice in the formation of trusts and combinations, holding that they are a development in the right direction.

"There are four elements in Socialism; namely, first, the common ownership of the means of production; second, the common management of these means of production; third, the distribution of annual products of industry by common authority; fourth, private property in income. Socialists make no war on capital, strictly speaking. No one but a fool could do such a thing. What Socialists object to is not capital but the private capitalist. They desire to nationalize capital and to abolish capitalists as a distinct class by making everybody, as a member of a community, a capitalist; that is, a partial owner of all the capital in the country.

"Socialists say that labor creates all wealth. No rational Socialist means thereby to deny that land and capital are factors in production, but as they are passive factors, they hold that their owners ought not to receive a share of the product unless they personally are a useful member of a community. Labor is the active factor, and all production is carried on for the sake of man. Socialists admit that the owners of these tools must receive a return for them when industry is organized as it is now; hence they desire that these tools should become common property. They wish to make of universal application the command of the apostle Paul: 'If a man will not work, neither let him eat.'

To a Socialist this covers the field and needs no explanation. In fact, a Socialist needs nothing more than the opportunity to vote the ticket and he does so. He is also ready at all times to sink self in the principles he represents, for Socialism is so great and grand when thoroughly understood that it is recognized almost as a Utopia. Those not acquainted with its possibilities would ask to read and re-read what Prof. Ely says until every sentence is understood and its relation to every other sentence is comprehended. Then and not until then can they refute its meaning, should they desire so to do. None but a fool would attempt such a thing.

"Not prematurely," says Prof. Ely. Socialists have nothing to conceal. They desire the masses to understand the beauties of Socialism. One writer says: "It satisfies every faculty of the mind." Therefore once a Socialist always a Socialist.

"Our political organization is to become an economic, industrial organization controlled by universal suffrage." No one can know the full meaning of Socialism until an economical industrial organization is fully understood, as it is the ground work of the whole superstructure.

To abolish private property in profit-producing capital, and rent-producing land, and yet retain private property in income, and have it that it shall not interfere in public enterprises, might at first reading seem complex.

All are to become public employees and the income restricted to this alone, covers and makes this plain.

The elements' common ownership, common management, common distribution of products will save a world of useless work in duplications—both in management and office work of separate plants—and there are thousands of them, duplications of things beyond the demands of the wants of the people. Solicitors for thousands of separate businesses, long hauls on railroads with a corresponding decrease of time and expense.

Private income can be used as now but restricted to what a person wishes for self, family and presents. It is not to be used to buy things to be sold again for gain. A person may own his own house, mansion and furnishings, yard, garden, stable, horses, buggies, cows, etc., as now.

Capital will remain, but as the post-office, public roads, schools, water, gas works, etc., publicly owned and controlled through an industrial organization instead of a political organization as now. Thus it is necessary to know fully the meaning of an industrial organization in order to be clear on this point. The principles involved in control will be those of "the initiative, referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by voters." This makes lobbying ineffectual; it makes statesmen out of representatives instead of politicians, because "those who make the most noise cannot impose on the people as they are doing, they are taken for what they are, worth." After twenty-four years of a trial of the referendum in Switzerland, an ex-president of that republic says: "It is unquestionably one of the best forms of government ever attempted." And yet but few in this country of voting sovereigns understand the bare meaning of the words. Some contend that Socialists, as the two old parties, wish only to get the offices; verily such do but reveal their ignorance. The principles of Socialism once established and the officers are elevated through the industries, over which they shall superintend, by the votes of those interested. The right to recall by the voters at any time the same as the right of directors of a corporation to recall a man they have given the superintendency, should be sufficient to dispose of this question.

At present fully one-half of our people would run for office if they thought they had a show to be elected, while the other half desire to become civil service employees.

Under Socialism the circle of workers would be constantly enlarged to admit all, and the fact that a man or woman is a member of society in general, is a sufficient guarantee that they should have an opportunity to live. Thus each child, be there one or a score, would have the same opportunity as former members, as soon as its school days are over.

Mulhall says the productive capacity today in the United States of each worker is $7 a day. This of course is with present systems and machinery. Under Socialism this is what each worker would get whether he be farmer, artisan or laborer. Anyone not willing to give a person what he earns can scarcely be considered honest. We have nothing to say against the old parties, their record is sufficient to show where they stand. If there has been more prosperity as some contend during the McKinley Republican administration than during others, it has been, in spite of, and not from any actions of the party. The last issue of the American Federationist has a long and exhaustive report of the legislative committee of the Federation of Labor, an interesting and instructive document concerning labor measures before congress at its last session. It concludes as follows: "In conclusion, we desire to say that of the sundry measure above referred to, it is worthy of note that when they passed the house they were buried in the senate, and when they passed the

INEQUALITY AND SOCIALIST SOLUTION

The Workers Who Have Created the So-Called National Wealth Are Shut Out from It by the Capitalist System

POVERTY THE SHARE OF LABOR

The Continuance of the Present Manner of Production is Not Consistent With the Continuance of Civilization

By William Liebknecht

Let us look at present conditions. Who will deny that the majority of mankind live in the greatest wretchedness and that only a minority have the means of attaining an existence worthy of human beings? We would refer the doubter to the statistics whose figures admit of no reply and can be ignored only by the ignorant or the evil disposed.

The economic inequality is not, however, the worst thing. Labor creates all wealth, and were those who do not work poor this inequality would have a certain justification; in reality the situation is turned about. As the bourgeois political economist, John Stuart Mill, who is honored as an authority by our opponents, has explained with keen insight, in our present society goods are proportioned in inverse ratio to the heaviness of the labor performed. He who works the hardest generally has the least; he who does not work at all and can have others working either directly or indirectly for him has much. Poverty is the share of labor, riches the portion of the idle. The workers who have created the so-called national wealth are shut out from it. It is the monopoly of the non-workers. In this way the inequality becomes the most revolting injustice. And this injustice is a scar on our famed civilization, that everyone who has a spark of the sense of justice must strive to clear away. Palliative measures that merely touch the surface merely reduce the symptoms, make the evil worse; this must be seized and torn out by the root. All wealth is the fruit of labor, teaches political economy—labor shall reap the fruit of labor, demands justice, demands Socialism. The present inequality springs from this: That labor does not work for itself; that it must sell itself to the idle for wages and by them be exploited. In a word, it springs out of the system of wage labor. The present injustice is only to be abolished in this way, that labor cease to work for the idle and that instead it work for itself.

Individual labor is unproductive. Work, as we have seen, must according to its nature be communistic. Therefore we must have united labor for the advantage of every individual, united labor and united enjoyment of the fruits of labor. This it is which we would establish in place of the present system of exploitation. Socialistic co-operation in place of wage labor!

But what becomes of capital?

It remains where it belongs, with labor. There is no capital but through labor. There shall be no capital except for labor. It has been asserted by charlatans that capital creates value as well as labor—the test can be easily made. The worshiper of capital may sweep together in a heap his capital, he may gather all the capital of the earth, and after the space of a year there would not have grown a penny more of value from it, but indeed the worth of the idle mass would be considerably decreased. Capital is not merely the child of labor; it cannot grow or continue without it. Capital has in relation to labor no rights, while labor in relation to capital has the right of ownership.

The tyrannous manner of production has overturned the natural relation between capital and labor and made labor the slave of capital. Is our wage-labor not slavery? Is the modern wage-laborer, because he can change his master, in any regard more free than the ancient slave? Does not hunger fasten him more firmly and more mercilessly to labor than the strongest iron chain? Yet our opponents often rejoin: "The worker is in a better condition today than in the last century." Whether the assertion is true or false we leave undebated. Even if true, it would prove nothing. It is not better position the Socialist worker demands, but equal position. He will work no longer for another; he insists that each shall enjoy in equal measure the fruits of labor and the blessings of culture. He has enough logic and sense of justice to lay no claim to a favored place; he will also, however, accept no inferior one.

The continuance of the present manner of production is not consistent with the continuance of society. The great capitalist production was an advance. It has, however, become an obstruction. It no longer satisfies the economic needs of society; and by society we mean not the small minority of privileged persons who are pleased to call themselves "society," but the whole people.

Wholly aside from the unjust distribution of the products of labor, capitalist production is incapable of providing all members of society with the things requisite to an existence worthy of mankind and must be displaced by a higher form of production which fulfills these conditions. And this is possible only through communistic, social production, and the Socialist organization of labor which turns the concentrated capital of the community to the advantage of society.

It is an error which arises from the confusing of society with the privileged minority, that is with the ruling classes; that we are charged with the intention of overthrowing all existing things and proceeding tabula rasa to erect a fantastic structure upon the ruins. We only wish to remove whatever hinders the sound, intelligent development of society and to bring about a condition in which the interests of the great majority shall no longer be sacrificed to those of the minority. And instead of privileged individuals, instead of political social monopolies, we would establish the rights and interests of all and justice as the highest law of state and society. Whatever has outlived itself and no longer satisfies the growing cultured needs of society shall cease to withhold air and sun from the struggling new life. We will make possible the organic evolution of our culture that is prevented by the present class rule.

Whoever would propose today to abolish machinery in order to re-establish the small industry of mediaeval times would be considered insane, for everyone knows that the small industry has been succeeded by a higher, more productive method, the great industry. Whoever in the middle ages, however, or even the first half of the present century, had said that the system of small industries was too costly, too unproductive, and must be wiped from the earth through an industrial revolution that should bring another system of production to the ruling position; would have been considered as—well, much as the fanatics of the present social order, or, more properly, disorder, consider us.

Whoever in fifty years from now should recommend the introduction of our present conditions would be in danger of making the acquaintance of the insane asylum. And we who demand the reform of these present conditions are slandered and persecuted. Yet it is just as certain and just as necessary as the present manner of production should be supplanted by a higher, as that the mediaeval manner of production should be supplanted by the present one. It is not we who are Utopians, impracticable dreamers, as they so gladly call us. Those are rather to be so called who hold outgrown forms to be eternal and believe that they can prevent them from destruction through forcible measures.

"George Wyndham, M. P., who achieved reputation in parliament by his great speech on the Transvaal war, made the statement the other day in the English house of commons that since 1895 English firms had sold the Chinese government seventy-one guns of position, 123 field guns and 297 machine guns, with ammunition for each class, and also that last year a German firm sold China 400,000 Mauser rifles. These serious statements are probably true and suggest that the commercialism, which is often the boast of Europe and America, needs governmental supervision badly. The manufacture of guns and firearms ought to be a government monopoly. Then the spectacle would not be seen of unpatriotic gun and armor makers growing enormously wealthy by supplying arms to be used against their own country."

The above from a capitalist newspaper is good as far as it goes. But since commercialism, which it appears to think needs governmental supervision, together with that hateful thing called patriotism, are essential to the capitalist system, and that Socialism would abolish both, why not "save your vote" by voting at once for Socialism?

The censor at Cracow confiscated the Naprzod the other day for publishing an article on the Austrian army, but it now appears that the article was only the reproduction of an article in the well-known "Encyclopedia" of Meyer, which is published under royal patronage, so the censor, with a bad grace, has apologized.

TIMELY DISCUSSION OF TRUSTS AND SOCIALISM

An Examination of Some of the Fundamental Factors in Modern Capitalism—Private Ownership of the Means of Life

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY

The Solution of the Trust Problem is Found in the Facts Themselves—Socialism the Only Solvent

By James O'neal

4. Competition between the worker for jobs is a fundamental factor that must be reckoned with in the solution of the problem, and plays an important role in shaping the development of society. Each worker, seeking to dispose of his commodity—labor power, competes with the other workers in a given trade. Each seeks naturally, to sell his commodity on terms that are advantageous to himself, that is, at as high a price as possible everything else being equal. Those who buy the commodity—the capitalists—seek to secure it at as low a price as possible. Hence a struggle between the workers and the capitalists over wages, which we will take up under the fifth heading. The competition between the workers for jobs give rise to the trade unions and the same motive prompted the organization of trade unions that impelled the capitalists to organize. That is, they wished to destroy competition and substitute combined effort in its place, both realizing that "in union their strength." But the workers are unable to organize all the laborers in trades unions because the introduction of labor saving machinery increases the army of the unemployed, while the crushing out of the middle class and professional men, such as small shop-keepers, traders, drummers, etc., by the trusts further increases the "industrial reserve army," as Marx calls it. It is evident that this reserve army cannot be organized, for there is nothing to be gained by the unemployed in organizing. Hence competition still exists among the workers and grows fiercer and fiercer as trusts develop and machinery is invented. This brings us to the law of wages. As we have seen that labor power is a commodity, so it follows that the law that determines and regulates the value of commodities also regulates the value of labor power. What is this law? It is a significant fact that nearly all the political economists of the world agree that human labor is the source of and determines the values of commodities. The value of a commodity is in direct proportion to the amount of labor, measured by time, that the commodity absorbs in its production. For instance, if a laborer can make a chair in three hours and a hatter can make a hat in three hours with the tools commonly used for that purpose then the two commodities are of equal value. However, we must not make the mistake of thinking that the labor of any certain individual determines the value of commodities for such is not the case. Let us take an example: Suppose a workman is able to construct a table in one day of twelve hours' work with the tools commonly used. The value of the tables then is embodied in one day's work of twelve hours. Suppose now, some one invents a new machine by which two tables can be made in the same time. If the labor of an individual determined the value of commodities, in this case we would have two standards of values, which would be absurd.

The first workman has embodied twelve hours' labor in one table, while the second laborer has embodied twelve hours' labor in two tables—or six hours in each. Thus we see then that the labor of any certain individual cannot determine the value of commodities. The labor that determines the value of commodities is that which on the average is socially necessary. In time the new invention by which two tables can be made in twelve hours supplants the old method of making one table in twelve hours and it is found that it is no longer necessary to produce with the old methods, so the value of the tables fall one-half, six hours being required to make one table now, where it required twelve before.

LABOR POWER AND ITS VALUE

Thus it is seen that labor which is absolutely necessary on the average to produce commodities determine their value. The cost of producing commodities and their value, therefore is deter-

SOCIALISM ASSERTS ITSELF IN TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION

By vote of 87 to 73 last Friday the delegates to the International Typographical Union convention at Milwaukee voted to practically endorse the Social Democratic Party and to avoid in future any entanglements as individuals with the capitalist Republican and capitalist Democratic parties. This action came as the surprise of the convention and it stirred up such a panic among adherents of capitalism and wage slavery within and without the convention that at the next morning's session a reconsideration was accomplished and the action of the day before reversed by a majority.

The matter was brought up by Delegate Bandlow of Cleveland, who introduced this resolution:

"Resolved, That the International Typographical union emphasizes that it is distinctly a class organization, embracing in its membership all workers following the kindred crafts in the printing industry, who upon the industrial field are antagonized by their employers on every occasion, which fact should impress the members of this organization that to subvert their interests as wage workers it is essential that they act as a unit upon the political field from whence capitalism derives its power to oppress, and we declare it consistent with the ethics of unionism and the sacred duty of every honorable member of this union to sever his or her affiliation with all political parties of the exploiting class which are constantly encroaching upon the liberties of the working people."

Delegate George Koop, of the Social Democratic party, took the floor and made a masterly plea for the passage of the resolution. He thundered the truths of the socialistic contention as the delegates amidst recurring and long continued applause, and the efforts of a few to declare him out of order were blocked by President Donnelly, who declared it an economic question. Among other things Comrade Koop said: "The trusts are here to stay; capitalism is here to stay; and it will be a matter of only a few years before there are but one or two newspapers in each of the large cities and the editors and reporters and printers are walking the streets in search of other work. Trades unionism can prevent this catastrophe. And what has labor been doing? One-half votes for McKinley and the other half votes for Bryan and each half bets and boasts that its candidate will win, while the capitalist comes out ahead if either wins. Why are we not an organized political party? Why do we not vote unitedly for Eugene V. Debs, who represents our mutual interests? We compete with each other for the price of our wages and the result is we all get poor pay. Eugene V. Debs represents the true labor principles—all others are fallacies. No 16 to 1, no gold standard, no imperialism, no protection, no free trade. They are only schemes to fool you. Chattel slavery has been abolished but the form of wage slavery under which we are now working is far fiercer. The black slave was put on the block and sold at the highest price. Put yourselves on the block and what would you bring today? The whole lot of you would bring $10; there are too many men looking for your jobs. I stand for my class interests. You must not divide your vote. If you do you will seal your doom. Stand together and you will win out."

The applause was redoubled when Miss Becher of Utah, the only woman delegate, voted aye on the roll call. The passing of the resolution caused no little talk round town and, although they were gingerly about it, the daily papers gave enough of the matter to give the readers quite an insight into the merits of the debate. But the politicians set to work at once. Next morning a reconsideration was moved and the debate reopened. One delegate brandished an alleged Social Democratic paper before the convention and read a paragraph from it denouncing labor unions and indiscriminately abusing labor leaders. This had its effect also, although the truth was that it was a Socialist Labor Party paper, not a paper of our party. Then a vote was taken and though sixty-one stood firm the opposition managed to roll up a vote of ninety-one and carry the day. But here's the crumb of comfort for us. Who would have dreamed that there were nearly half of the delegates so firm for Socialism that they could not be stampeded? All honor to them. "May their tribe increase!"

NOTES AND COMMENT

Labor's "cross of gold" is a mere reminiscence and the big corporation and trust managers are getting ready to give Bryan a cordial support. Hurrah for the new democracy, the support of capitalism for the next four years and the hope of the world!

Democratic politicians welcome with loud hurrahs the accession to their ranks of trust managers, as in the case of the president of one of the great express companies the other day. Imagine Rockefeller and Morgan joining the party of Jim Hill, Dick Croker, Bill Whitney and other Democratic plutocrats! Why, the Bryan press would actually go nutty! Watch the trend.

Sixty-one delegates to the International Typographical Convention stand firm as a rock for Socialism. The capitalist press may search their lexicons in attempts to belittle this fact, but it's going to worry them to keep Socialism out of the trades unions much longer.

A vote for Bryan is a vote for a modified form of imperialism, a modified trust, a modified system of electing senators, a modified plan of taxing the people—in short, a vote for capitalism modified. How Democratic modifications are going to help the working class not a man among them can tell.

W. R. Hearst, who is a "Socialist, too," continues to print Ingalls' contradictions and misrepresentations about Socialism. Ingalls, by the way, appears to have been one of the exceptional three per cent of every hundred American citizens who do not "die penniless." He died well off. That fact may have something to do with his idiotic opposition to Socialism while he lived.

In a hundred and twenty-four years thirty-one men have had a "chance" to become president; yet the innocent boys in school are taught that every boy can get there if he will only "improve his opportunities." What should be taught them is that most of their number will not even have a chance to earn a living when they leave school.

Each of our seven thousand comrades must be an active worker from now till the campaign closes. Get out and do something. You can add a new member to your branch, you can send us a subscriber to the Herald, you can send us an order for some literature, you can promptly pay your dues and see that others do likewise, you can vote for the ticket, you can attend a meeting, you can agitate, you can do one or all of a hundred things. The battle is on. Comrades to the front and sluggards to the rear!

NATIONAL COMMITTEE MEETING

A meeting of the National Campaign Committee of the Social Democratic party was held last Sunday, Aug. 19, at 55 N. Clark street, Chicago. There was a large attendance and much business of importance was transacted. Comrade James Wright presided. The committee commissioned Comrades W. C. McSweeney and Herman C. Perry as organizers, and they will at once enter upon the important work assigned them. It was also decided to put other organizers in the field as soon as men well qualified could be found. The committee on literature was authorized to inaugurate what will be known as the "Postal Card Propaganda," also to have prepared for use in the campaign a small sticker with portrait of the presidential candidate. Secretary Stedman reported on bills incurred and the same approved and ordered paid. Comrades Dennison, Brown and McSweeney were chosen as an auditing committee on accounts. The secretary was instructed to render a complete account of all receipts and expenditures at each meeting.

Secretary Stedman reported that Comrade E. H. Thomas would arrive in Chicago this week to participate in the work of the campaign.

Among the expenditures sanctioned by the committee were the following: $25 for Bohemian literature; $50 for stickers; organizers salaries; salary of office clerk; office rent.

The committee adjourned to meet at the same place, Saturday, September 1, at 2 o'clock.

JOSEPH R. FINN

The comrade of this name who has been chosen treasurer of our National Campaign Committee is one of the staunchest characters in the revolutionary movement. A locomotive engineer by profession, with a record second to none in the country, he was the first man to step from his engine when the order inaugurating the great Pullman strike in 1894 was issued. He was running as good a passenger engine as the Illinois Central had and was among the most trusted employees of the company, but his $150 a month job nor any inducement the officials could offer would tempt him to betray his class. His railroad career ended then and there. Joe Finn nobly represents the working class. He is one of them and they love and trust him.

mined by the expenditure of human labor force which is on the average absolutely necessary. Now, what is the value of labor? What does it cost to produce and re-produce labor power? The answer is, that quantity of the means of subsistence which is absolutely necessary for him to live and produce more labor power. In other words, the value of labor power is determined by the amount of food, clothing and shelter which is absolutely necessary for him to live and reproduce more laborers. Below this it cannot go without physically injuring the laborer. It is true that this level has not been reached in all trades, but in most of them it has and it is fast bringing the others down to this point. This is the law of wages under capitalist society that the working class has to face. This standard of life theory is borne out and admitted by many great writers on this subject. I will quote from two of them. David Ricardo says, "The natural price of labor is that price which is necessary to enable the laborers one with another to subsist and to perpetuate their race without either increase or diminution."

Prof. Ely says: "There is very much in economic history in every civilized land which tends to confirm the standard of life or subsistence theory of wages. Turgot said that for centuries as a matter of fact wages had never been more than enough to maintain the existence of the wage earning classes." Much more could be said on this subject, but space will not allow of it for the present. We will now take up the fifth proposition.

CLASS STRUGGLE

5. That there is a class struggle between the capitalist class and the working class no one can successfully deny. The charge has been made that Socialists endeavor to stir up class strife between capitalists and laborers, and that all the unrest manifested among the ranks of the working class today are due to the Socialist agitators. If this were true what a power Socialists must have today! But it is not true and no one takes it seriously even those who speak in this manner, for as a rule they are paid for speaking or writing in this manner. These sentiments have their source in the pocketbook and not in the brains. The contention of the Socialist is that the interests of the capitalist class and the working class are opposed and cannot be reconciled so long as modern capitalism is maintained. Furthermore, we contend that all history is a bloody record of class struggles between the ruling and oppressed classes of all ages down to the present time, and will continue to be so until the working class obtain mastery of the political power and inaugurate the co-operative commonwealth—thus by their action writing finis on the last page of this bloody volume and closing the records forever. But to proceed.

The class struggle is not a question of stirring up strife, but the recognition of a fact; not whether there should be a class struggle or not, but whether there is one now and whether we should recognize it.

We claim that there is a class struggle between capitalists and laborers due to their conflicting interests. Of course, it would not do for those who stand for capitalism to admit that there is a class struggle, for what then would become of that old fable about the "Brotherhood of Capital and Labor"? The capitalists desire to keep as much of the product as possible and the workers desire to get as much as possible, hence a struggle exists in order to secure their separate ends.

The more the workers send wages up the smaller the returns to the capitalists, while the more capitalists send wages down the larger the returns of capitalists. So we have a class struggle over the division of the product. Furthermore, what do the strikes occurring every year teach us, if not that a class struggle is on? What, for instance, does Homestead, Pana, Hazelton, and the Bull Pen at Warner, Idaho, teach us? Is it a struggle between a few individuals, or is it a war between two classes for an economic advantage? He who knows a fact when he sees it, will reply in the affirmative, as he must from the very nature of the case.

SUMMARY

Let us now sum up the argument and then draw our conclusions. We have seen that private class ownership of the sources and tools of wealth production and competition between individuals composing this privileged class, results in combinations and trusts which tends to concentrate the wealth in the hands of this class. We have seen that private property and competition are the cause of trusts and contain within them a monopoly force which can not be resisted. We have seen that the working class occupies a subservient position in society; that in selling their commodity—labor power—they also sell themselves, that competition between them tends to send their wages down to the subsistence point, and that the development of trusts and labor saving machinery increases their numbers in the first place, and in the second, increases the "industrial reserve army" as a consequence of which the competition grows more fierce and the jobs scarcer every year as capitalism develops. And last, but not least, we have seen that the interests of capitalists and laborers are opposed and that this opposition of class interests lead to a class struggle which is borne out by every strike that occurs throughout the country. Now with all this evidence before us what is the solution of the trust problem, and I wish to say that I believe that in the proper solution of the trust problem is found the solution of the labor problem and many other problems that now confront us. Let us first take up some of the remedies proposed. There are some who still claim that we should abolish them by law because, they argue, they are creatures of law and if they can be created by law they can also be abolished by law. Now I believe I have shown that they are not the creatures of legislation but due to a monopoly force inherent in private property and competition. If anything at all, law is the creature of trusts and not trusts the creature of law. This monopoly force is more enduring than any laws that can be passed against them. Furthermore if law could abolish trusts and distribute the industries back into the hands of thousands of small proprietors (which is difficult to conceive) we would leave that monopoly force that is inherent in private property and competition, still at work and we would have to go over the same development that I described in the case of Jones, the capitalist, in the beginning of this essay. What would one think of a doctor who would claim to cure a certain disease by introducing into the human system, the germs that had caused the disease? It is certain that we would call him a quack, speaking mildly. It is claimed that Socialists dub certain politicians as quacks when dealing with the trust problem; whether true or not the suspicion is well founded. But granting that trusts could be abolished would it benefit the working class any? Would not the workers still be subject to the law of wages that I described and pointed out on another page? They certainly would. It is evident then that the middle class in crying for the destruction of trusts and appealing to the workers to help them achieve their object, have only their own interests in view and not the interests of the working class. If we were to ask the middle class to help the workers to destroy machinery that is displacing them, they would reply: "What! Destroy machinery! What that would be absurd. It saves labor, and anything that saves labor is a blessing." The reply is, "We don't want to destroy trusts for the same reason you don't want to destroy machinery; it saves labor." You see it makes a great deal of difference whose ox is gored. The middle class desires the destruction of the trusts because it is crushing them and rendering their class superfluous, but as machinery does not displace them they have no objections to its introduction. They have no objection to exploitation providing they are the exploiters. What far-sighted class-instinct is displayed here! No, trusts can no more be destroyed by law than machinery can.

senate they were with one exception (the abolition of slavery in Hawaii) buried in the house."

A vote for Debs, nominee of the Social Democratic party of America, is a vote for principles that will outlive selfishness and greed of our present time which elevates the dollar above the man and their adoption will usher in the brotherhood of man.

Socialism is still young, and as such is incomplete—in fact, never can be for its constant aim is to utilize all machinery and inventions for the uplifting of man, and as inventions and improvements are to be taken advantage of, its progress will be ever upward and onward.

Even now the yield in wealth is equal to a guaranteed income of 5 per cent on $40,000. The benefit of perfected systems and improved machinery would under Socialism go to the workers. Thus the income would be limited only by possibilities and desires, and no doubt could be made to rapidly increase from the present figures of $2,000 a year, the average, to each, reaching possibly $4,000, $6,000, $8,000 or even $10,000 a year if the people wish.

Those who sneer at Socialism as a "mere theory" do but reveal their ignorance.

Let's vote for what we want.

APPEAL TO REASON, GIRARD, KAN.

Men who believe in socialist principles should support their own ticket and they will exercise a far greater influence than by voting for half a loaf. There are surely between two and three million men in this country who believe in the Socialist program. Can you not see how soon the Social fabric would bend to their influence if they were to withdraw from the old parties and vote a Socialist ticket, even if they do not elect a single officer? Do not be deceived.

EXPONENT, SAGINAW, MICH.

When the capitalist class go to war for foreign markets for the product of labor, it means that labor produces too much; that the prodigality of the plutocrat, coupled with his qualms of conscience, misnamed charity, are insufficient to use up the surplus product of labor, and in order to keep the system in continual operation it is necessary to ship abroad the very things the working classes need at home.

WILHELM LIEBKNECHT

By James Alliman.

A spirit from this earth has passed away
Into the shadow of Death's dark unknown,
Leaving its fleshly thrall, its chains of clay
For that calm peace which Death can give alone.

Great was this fighter in the cause of man;
Glorious the battle he for freedom fought;
Sternly and true since manhood's fire began,
Unselfishly for others' woe he wrought;
But even as low in grief I bow my head
I hear a mystic voice which says "He is not dead."

He is not dead, but sleepeth, and his soul
Shall rise upon that awful judgment day
When Revolution's clarion call shall roll,
And Demos Labor wake to Freedom's fray.

Then, as in battle chant by Homer sung,
The gods came down from Mount Olympus' height,
And fought the Greek and Trojan men among.

Aiding and guiding in the heroic fight,
So shall his soul to earth again repair
And guide to victory the uprisen proletariat.

William Liebknecht, the Nestor of the Social Democratic movement, passed away at Charlottenburg, Aug. 7. With the death of this mighty patriarch of the proletarian party a link connecting the political present with the wild, romantic, revolutionary past has been severed.

Born March 23 in the Duchy of Hesse, he while attending the university of his native city, became acquainted, through perusing the writings of Count Henry De St. Simon, with that noble cause of Socialism, to which he remained unwaveringly loyal despite persecution, banishment and imprisonment, until the day of his death. Early in his manhood he found himself banished from Germany, France and Switzerland, and compelled to sojourn for many years in England. While there he became acquainted with Karl Marx, Frederick Engels and other founders of the International, and from them he learned the deeper and more logical economic basis of a theory which St. Simon had taught him from a Utopian and ethical standpoint. In 1867, in conjunction with August Bebel, founded the Social Democratic party, and from thence until 1872 he became editor of the party organ and an active agitator and organizer.

Upon the breaking out of the Franco-Prussian war Liebknecht, in common with many other Social Democrats in both belligerent nations, protested openly, fearlessly and vigorously against the inhuman and brutal slaughter of tens of thousands of proletarians and for doing so, he, in company with August Bebel, was tried for high treason, and in 1872 sentenced to two years' imprisonment. While in prison the acquaintance between Liebknecht and Bebel ripened into a strong fraternal attachment, and the pupil of Marx and Engels became the preceptor and teacher of August Bebel. The latter had been until his imprisonment a rude workman agitator, his occupation being that of a turner, but under the tuition of his fellow prisoner and aided by his own wonderfully receptive mind he developed into a fitting lieutenant in labor and the logical successor in leadership of his great and self-sacrificing teacher.

It is not necessary to give later details of the life of our great departed hero. All his actions are too well known to those among whom he lived, worked and suffered. Agitator, journalist, organizer and fighter, he died as he lived, with his weapons in his hands and his loins girded. But two years ago, in 1898, Liebknecht, then a venerable old man of 72, was ignominiously condemned to four months' imprisonment for "lese majesty." The only peace the militant Socialist knows is the peace that lies beyond the gates of death. William Liebknecht is not dead. They bury the body of a great Socialist leader and millions of followers mourn. But the souls of those truly great men who strive to make this dark earth brighter, live forever. The body may be dead but the spirit will continue to live in his teachings and his grand unselfish example. When that awful judgment day arrives, when the moribund Demos of Labor shall be awakened to the resurrection of revolt by the clarion call of the great stern-eyed Goddess of Freedom, then like the Valkyrie, who in the old Teutonic mythology descended from Valhalla to fight on earth, shall the souls of the great Leonine featured Marx, the fearless Lassalle, the pure and noble Morris and the rugged, unflinching Liebknecht rise again and guide the struggle of the awakened proletariat onward towards a purer, nobler, freer and happier life in the form of the co-operative commonwealth, the industrial republic of co-workers.

'Tis true as other have somewhat churlishly remarked in writing of this death that our movement does not entirely depend upon men; nevertheless this movement should but deem it right and meet to honor the memory of those who fought and died for a freedom which they themselves could not enjoy.

Comrades, let us here in America amid the storm and stress of a presidential election, pause in sadness and sorrow for a brief moment to weep in silence for our great departed, to whom one could fittingly apply the following words of William Morris:

Our glorious dead, he honored, they,
Who did their deeds, and passed away
Before the bright sun brought the day.

WHAT EDITORS ARE SAYING

The Edinburgh Evening News, commenting on John Morley's speech at Oxford, where he chose Socialism rather than militarism, although antagonistic, admits that "Socialism will get a trial," and asks, "With militarism discredited, with the liberal party a traitor to its creed, what can the working classes do but accept Socialism, with its short cut to social happiness?"

FARMERS' REVIEW, BONHAM, TEX.
When the working class learn that when they own the means of production and distribution, the wealth will be owned by the producers instead of by the capitalist class, and that the industrial master will disappear and labor will be free, they will learn to be Socialists and work and vote for a system that will free them from industrial slavery.

JUSTICE, LONDON, ENG.

The true meaning of that refrain of our poet of plunder's begging verses is only just beginning to be understood by the English people. They have had their fun and now they must pay for it. And they will have to pay dearly enough before all is done. The "unfucking" was all very jolly, no doubt, although somewhat disgusting, and the killing of "Kroojer" with our mouths was distinctly entertaining. But now the bill is coming in and those who shouted the loudest are beginning to pull long faces. For the bill is a heavy one and will make the lives of the toilers of this land more bitter, hard, and wretched for many a long day to come.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF AMERICA

CAMPAIGN OF 1900

THE PARTY.

The Social Democratic Party was organized at Chicago, June 11, 1898. It is the party that elected the first Socialist mayors of American cities, at Haverhill and Brockton, Mass., and in different sections of the country not less than thirty members of the party have been elected to public positions.

ITS METHOD.

Five or more members can organize a branch of the Social Democratic Party. Any reputable person subscribing to the principles of the organization is eligible to membership. Desiring to organize a branch, application should be made to the national secretary for copies of the constitution, which should be placed in the hands of prospective members. In these will be found the declaration of principles, as also the laws of the organization.

ITS OBJECT.

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists. Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism. TRADES UNIONISM. The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for emancipation.

ITS PLATFORM.

Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex. Public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines. Public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities. Public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells. Reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production. Inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose. Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public. Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible. National insurance of working people against accident, lack of employment and want in old age. Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women. The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by voters. Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Comrade W. C. Bohannon reports good work at organizing in Indiana.

Comrade A. Schroeder ordered ninety Debs lithographs to bill the city of Cleveland.

The next two leaflets, Nos. 3 and 4, are being prepared. One on machinery you will want.

Send in your order now for Ben Atterbury's letter to workingmen. Leaflet No. 2; $1 a thousand.

A change of date has been made for Comrade Debs' meeting at Van Horn, Iowa, to Tuesday, September 11.

No. 2 leaflet to "The Average American Workingman," is still selling in large orders of one to five thousand.

Comrade William Truman of Iowa writes: "The comrades are well pleased with the leaflets; they are just the thing."

The postal card propaganda will be a great vote maker during the next two months. Twenty-four cards sent to you for 10 cents.

Comrade W. C. Bohannon spoke at Fort Wayne, Ind., Tuesday of last week and had several other meetings at different points in the state.

The small 4-page leaflet used by the Chicago comrades is good for any part of the country; 1,000 to any address, postage paid, for 75 cents.

All loyal members of the Social Democratic branches in Washington are hereby requested to communicate with Comrade L. W. Kidd, 1115 Sixth avenue, North, Seattle, Wash.

Socialists willing to assist in forming new branches of the Social Democratic party are requested to communicate with the secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

All particulars relating to the "Stickers" will appear in next week's Herald. We are figuring on it so as to put out a round million of 'em during the campaign and will have the price down low.

One wall of the campaign committee's room is stacked up with mailing tubes. These are for the Debs lithographs that you can deck out your town with at 3 cents each in large orders—20 for 60 cents.

At a convention of Social Democrats held last week at Fort Wayne, Ind., Comrade H. H. Haines was nominated for congress. The greatest enthusiasm prevailed and Comrade Bohannon reports a lively interest in the movement in that section of the state.

For the information of comrades wishing to secure Debs campaign buttons, we may state that the Social Democratic Button Co., of Sheboygan, Wis., are making buttons and pins with a good miniature photo of Comrade Debs. Price for buttons or pins $3 for 100.

The national campaign committee met Sunday, August 19, in an all-day session and transacted a lot of business. Two organizers for Illinois were appointed to immediately go in the field. Comrades Perry of Spring Valley and McSweeney of Chicago, under pay of the N. C. C. Postal cards for propaganda and S. D. P. stickers, with portrait, were ordered printed by the hundred thousands.

Our platform, object, methods of organization and "The Man Under the Dray," by Prof. George D. Herron, are printed in the Debs leaflet with a fine picture of our candidate. This leaflet the campaign committee sends out, charges paid for 75 cents per thousand—little above cost.

The portrait of the presidential candidate gives great satisfaction. Thousands have been mailed to branches and comrades in all sections of the country. It should be seen in every community; it informs the observer, directs attention to the party and makes votes. Ten copies, 35 cents; 33 for a dollar; single copy, 10 cents; postage prepaid.

It is hoped every branch secretary will bring the contribution blanks before the next meeting of their branch and also see that all friends of socialism (unattached) are given an opportunity to help increase the national campaign fund. Send all amounts collected to the National Campaign Headquarters of the S. D. P., 126 Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

Any branch not having received collection blanks for the Campaign Fund by the time this copy of the Herald reaches them, should immediately notify the National Campaign Committee, 126 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. This is the most important work for the month of August; to see that every branch and individual member learns the necessity of a Campaign Fund and what it is to be done with it. We won't have as much as the capitalist parties, but, in proportion to the amount, we will make a greater showing.

Leaflet No. 2, issued by the National Campaign Committee of the Social Democratic party, is a genuine "hit," the first of the campaign. The first run of 20,000 copies was exhausted in 20 days after the first announcement; the second run was 100,000 copies, of which 30,000 have already been shipped to comrades and branches in different parts of the country. The price of the leaflet is One Dollar per thousand, carriage prepaid. For prices on smaller lots see advertisement. It is four pages, 4 1/2 x 7 inches, just what you want to give to a friend on the street or insert in a letter. Other leaflets are being prepared, but No. 2 should have a circulation of One Million. Send orders to Campaign Committee, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

HAD A GOOD TIME

Social Democrats and sympathizers to the number of nearly one hundred passed a most enjoyable evening last Sunday, August 19, at the Socialist Club Rooms, 1541 Central Boulevard. Members of the National Committee, who attended a meeting during the day, were present from Wisconsin. The lawn surrounding the house was illuminated with Chinese lanterns and the young people present engaged in games and had a thoroughly good time. Ice cream and cake were served and everyone indulged. A number of strangers dropped in to talk on the all-absorbing topic of Socialism; short addresses were made by Comrades Stedman and Edwards and converts were made to the cause. All in attendance agreed that the occasion was a success in every respect.

WISCONSIN CONVENTION

To the Voters and Members of the Social Democratic Party of Wisconsin: Greeting: The state convention of the Social Democratic party will be held in Milwaukee Sunday, September 2, at 2 o'clock, at the hall of the Freie Gemeinde on Fourth street (between State and Cedar.)

This being a presidential election year the state convention of our party is of more than usual importance. Both of the old parties have shown their utter inability to grasp the economic situation of the present time, or even to elect honest men into office. No matter which of the old parties is put into power, we always find the same result: Corruption among office holders, ignorance and misery and poverty among the masses. These facts cannot be obscured by raising false issues, like "honest money" on one side and opposition to imperialism on the other.

The reason for this is obvious. The two old parties do not differ materially from each other. Both are dominated by the non-producing class that depend upon exploitation and plunder for subsistence. Both parties by necessity create more corruption and misery. And the leaders of the defunct third party, the so-called People's party, not having any principles to stand upon, have naturally drifted into the same camps, for the purpose of their own pecuniary benefit and political aggrandizement. All "reform parties" have failed because they have trusted to the goodness to this or the other leader, instead of trying to change the conditions that surround us all.

These conditions must be changed before man in general will change.

We, therefore, call upon all honest men who do not as yet despair of the future of humanity, to unite under the banner of the Social Democratic party of America. The Social Democratic party is not aiming at a mere change of office holders, we realize, that without a change of the present economic system the best men can do nothing against corruption. The Social Democratic party wants to abolish the source of avarice and corruption by the socialization of the means of production, distribution and exchange, thereby extending the advantages of civilization and our rich country to the whole people.

And while we recognize that it is not in the power of a single state of this Union to restore to the people all their rights, we are also fully conscious that the state of Wisconsin can do a great deal to limit within its borders the exploitation of the masses and thereby raise the standard of life.

But besides this it is our duty to strike at the ballot box for Socialism and the national candidate of the Social Democratic party EUGENE V. DEBS. Therefore do not fail to send delegates to the convention.

The basis of representation is as follows: Branches of the Social Democratic party and all other recognized Socialistic bodies are entitled to three delegates. Each ward or township is entitled to one delegate for each fifty votes or major fraction thereof cast for our party at the last state election. Each Trade Union is entitled to one delegate, if the membership is fifty or less, and to two delegates if the membership is over fifty.

All reports of delegates elected and other matters pertaining to the convention should be sent to 614 State St., Milwaukee, Wis.

It is hoped that every Branch will contribute $10 to the Campaign Fund; some can do better; some have done so and will make a canvass for individual subscriptions as well. What is your Branch doing? Send all money to the treasurer of the National Committee, Joseph R. Finn, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

TO ORGANIZE THE MINISTERS

About two years ago an organization of Christian ministers was formed for the purpose of advancing socialism. The organization died soon after its birth because of the milk-and-water statement of principles. More recently Rev. Charles H. Vail suggested that I issue a call for the names of ministers who believe in socialism without any prefixes or suffixes. As secretary of the old organization, I hereby call for such names and request that with your name you send the name of your choice for president, secretary and treasurer. The persons sending me their names who receive the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. They also shall constitute a committee to draft a declaration of principles and purposes, which declaration shall be submitted to the members for ratification.

All in favor of this outline, please send names to Theodore A. Johnson, Wadsworth, O.

JACK POTTS PENCILS POINTED PARAGRAPHS

How Long Will the Wage-Worker of America Refuse to Vote for What He Wants by Voting for What He Doesn't Want?

THIS YEARS' OPPORTUNITY

How the European Socialists by "Throwing Their Votes Away" Are Accomplishing Something for the Working Class

By Jack Potts

Mr. Workingman, the 7,000,000 Socialist votes of Europe are SOCIALIST votes, cast by men who believe in and VOTE for what they want, which is Socialism. These voters did not say: "Socialism is good and true, but it is too far in the future, and we can't have it now." I have read several times that twenty-five years ago the Socialist vote in Germany was sixty-seven. Now it is over 3,000,000. The Socialist vote of 142,000 in Paris this year—28,000 greater than four years ago, and the largest of any party there—was cast by men who want Socialism and who therefore voted for it. They did not follow the advice of those who say, "Half a loaf is better than none; better vote for the lesser of two evils." If you don't want either the "lesser" or the "greater" evil, don't vote for it. How long will it take you to get what you do want by voting for what you don't want?

The less reliance you put in the capitalist newspapers, the better you are off. You can't even get the notice of your child's death in them without paying for it. They will print a column about the death of a millionaire or his dog. Watch 'em; they stick a sly knife in the cause of labor whenever possible!

A Chicago real-estate man told me recently that the names of workingmen are no longer inserted in the New York city directory. Very likely our capitalist friends in Chicago will "follow the fashion." This is part of your "half loaf," dear boy! Keep right on voting for the "lesser of two evils" and maybe your capitalist friends—who simply buy what legislation they want—will pass a proper qualification for voters. They own 90 per cent of the wealth. Thus by voting for what you don't want, you see, you may approach the desired goal by a most infernally deliberate route, which will prevent your being shocked by a too sudden acquisition of what you do want!

One vote in the Socialist hand is worth two in the old-party bush.

That grand old street-car company daily "newspaper," the Chicago Inter Ocean, printed the following editorial paragraph Aug. 21: "Eugene V. Debs, candidate for the presidency on the Social Democratic ticket, is about to make a thorough canvass of Illinois. Mr. Debs should receive a fair hearing in this state. The principles that he stands for do not differ in kind but only in degree from those espoused by William Jennings Bryan." If the last sentence in the quotation were true it would certainly put the Republican party in a bad light, for Debs stands for "equal rights for all; special privileges for none." Bryan would then be less inclined to see justice done, while the Republican party is professedly opposed to everything Democratic—except the offices—and therefore worst of all! That Grand Old Bladder, the Inter Ocean, is a great mental feeding ground.

In Italy ten years ago the Socialists had only three delegates; now they have thirty-two, and the vote is over 170,000. They have a daily paper (Avanti!), a bi-monthly review (Critica Sociale) and fifty-two weekly newspapers. Men and brethren, this has been accomplished by men voting for Socialism and not for anything else! Don't forget that. In the European monarchical states, by thus "throwing their votes away," these headstrong Socialists are really accomplishing something.

I saw a pathetic little scene recently. Three dirty faced, but bright-looking, little newgirls, with evening papers tied up by them, were seated in the doorway of a vacant store building in a busy part of Fifth avenue, playing some childish game. Temporarily the children's natural instinct, play, had overcome the "incentive" to work that our miserable commercial scheme begets. The smallest of the group was a mere toddler, one might say, yet they are forced out in the noisome streets by necessity. Mr. Workingman, your little ones may be the next to enter this brutal existence. A vote for Eugene Debs and Socialism is a vote to wash the children's faces and put them in their proper place.

Last week I visited the little country town of my boyhood days. It has been a Republican stronghold for many years—a place where all horse thieves were suspected of being Democrats. But the sentiment is changing. Some of the old "war horses" are tired of the way things are going—are dissatisfied and ready to change pretty soon. To be sure, their mutterings of discontent are somewhat vague and their ideas unformed, but they furnish good soil for Socialist propaganda. I distributed several copies of Socialist pamphlets, which will serve to actuate their discontent. This week I followed it up by sending them copies of this paper. That's the way to do it. Whenever you find a man who is "sore" on the present conditions, don't lose a minute; give him a simple but comprehensive Socialist pamphlet that will fetch him to the acute stage; then get him to subscribe to The Herald for six months or a year. The paper will talk to him every week much better than you can, and you can look for new students. Each one can certainly turn at least one vote in this way. A man of foreign birth who has been reading Socialist literature that I gave him asked me to furnish him a list of our candidates, so he can have a lot of his friends vote for them—men who can hardly talk English! "Keeping everlastingly at it" is what brings success.

The "great dailies" are now engaged in "taking back" much of what they said about the "atrocities" in China. The greatest "atrocities" in China is our old friend the Commercial Instinct, which is German, French, English, Russian and American "imported goods"! Stick to the advice of the "great dailies" and you will wear—rags.

The British Goddess of Getting On is traveling a rocky road in South Africa!

STAND BY THE GUARD

Stand by the guard on the ramparts of Freedom!
Press to the front in the perilous line!
Strengthen the hands that may fail when you need them,
Crossed in white stillness and giving no sign.
Oft have the watchmen grown weary with calling
Stars that were rising and stars that were falling.
Until the future's page
Glow with the golden age,
Work for God's heritage—
Stand by the guard!
Cheering the front falls the sunshine elysian,
Haunting the rear creep the shadows of night.
Out of the dark grows the fear of derision—
Open your windows and let in the light.
Fear not the shadows of souls marching onward;
These fall behind, but the march is still onward.
Stand firm, with spirits brave,
Whether by wind or wave,
Thorn-wreath or martyr's grave—
Stand by the guard!
Stand by the guard, for their triumph is waking
Swift as the morning for God and the right,
Lights that have haunted the ages are breaking
Over the waters and out of the night.
Bow in the twilight of story no longer;
Press to the front where the dawn-lights grow stronger.
Stern though the watch may be,
Stand till the truth is free,
Work for humanity—
Stand by the guard!
—Annie Herbert.

HUMAN LIFE VALUELESS

The big engines being put into service by the Central Railroad of New Jersey are causing all kinds of trouble. When the engines were first put on each fireman was given a helper, but it was decided that this was an unnecessary expenditure and the helpers were taken off. The result is that since that time one fireman after another has been overcome by the heat. Recently the fireman on one of the engines fell unconscious when the train reached Bloomsbury, and the engineer was obliged to stop, as none of the crew of the train would fire. As usual, the capitalists find it cheaper to work their men to death than to divide the work and make it easier. Human life has little value under capitalism.—Midland Mechanic.

STORY OF MAN'S RISE AND PROGRESS

The Entire Race Now Confronted by the Question "What is the Next Step to Take in the Direction of His Historical Goal?"

OLD SYSTEMS ARE OUTGROWN

The Historic Mission of the Ages to be Realized in a Reign of Equity and Justice for All

By James Oneal

The Story of Man—his rise, progress and development—is a weird, fascinating narrative, fraught with awe and wonderment to the superstitious and instruction to the student. It is a story of brutality and exploitation between man and man from the time we first catch a glimpse of him emerging from behind the mists of mythology and fable; and each and every age has bequeathed its legacy of misery and degradation, in a more or less degree, to its successor. It is due to this fact that the despairing pessimistic cry of the superficial observer is evoked, and the cry is re-echoed from age to age, "as it always has been so will it always be." These pessimists cannot grasp the fact that the very process by which humanity has reached its present stage of development gives a negative answer to their despairing cry. For what does the story of man's development teach us if not the great fact revealed to us by modern science—that "all things flow"? In other words, that nature, including society, government, industry and politics, are undergoing a process of change, growth and development, and for the pessimist to give vent to his wail of despair is only evidence of his ignorance not only of history, but of social forces at work right under his very eyes. Modern science, I say, has long ago exploded the fallacy contained in the assertion that "as it always has been, so will it always be," and it no longer carries any weight in intelligent discussion. The man who realizes this great fact, that change and growth is the law of life, is naturally confronted with the question, not what is man's ultimate destiny, but what is the next step to take in the direction of his historical goal? Will the next stage in human history destroy the exploitation of man by man, or will it reproduce it in another form? Does the present system, commonly designated as capitalism, bear within it evidence of its decay and dissolution, and as a consequence contain within it the germ of a higher stage of civilization? And finally, if evidence exists pointing to the birth of a new social order, is it to be realized in the near future or in ages yet to come? These are questions that can only be answered not from some abstract principle of justice, but by examining the present society in which we "live, move and have our being." We must find an answer to these questions by examining economic laws and social forces in order to determine the tendency and direction in which society is moving.

First, a few brief remarks on social systems that have passed away. Ages ago man was of a roving or nomadic disposition, and roamed through the forests clothed in the skins of wild beasts and living on wild animals, berries, fish, etc. He fought and killed those belonging to foreign tribes, and the same was meted out to him. He ate his enemies and was eaten by them. At a later stage he began to tame wild animals and live on milk and the produce of flocks and

THE REAL CAUSES OF MODERN WARS

I cannot agree with those who attribute the cause of the war in South Africa to the behavior of this or that political leader. The real causes are perfectly evident in regard to this war, as well as to all the wars that have lately taken place. These causes are threefold: Firstly, the unequal distribution of property—that is, the robbing of one part of humanity by the other; secondly, the existence of the military class—that is, men educated and appointed to murder; and, thirdly, the fallacious and, for the most part, fraudulent religious teachings in which our young generations are forcibly herds. This is known as the pastoral stage. Later on he begins to till the soil, and agriculture for the first time becomes a prominent feature in the advancement of civilization. He no longer eats his prisoners taken in time of war, for he finds that it is more profitable to enslave them than to eat them. "This may be a poor reason for becoming humane, but it is well to become humane even for apoor reason."—Professor Ely.

As agriculture progressed the simple tools began to be improved upon and small workshops arose here and there. Slavery gave way to feudalism, in which the former slave became a serf attached to the soil, and when the land was sold the serf was sold with it. The towns began to grow and expand as manufacturing developed. Simple machines were invented, which replaced the crude hand tools formerly used, and later on as industry developed through the use of water power and steam, the feudal system fell and the modern system of capitalism was ushered in. In England the change occurred without much violence. In France, on the contrary, it produced a bloody revolution. This is a very hasty sketch, but it serves the purpose I have in view, and that is to prove that man in his blind groping up the steep hills of the past has reached the present era of civilization through no conscious efforts of his own, nor with a definite aim in view. He lives in one age under a given social system, and as industry advances it gives rise to new classes and new social factors hitherto unknown, and as the latter develop and expand they finally push their way to the front and gain the ascendancy over the old.

A higher stage of civilization has been reached, even though misery and exploitation still prevail. What, then, is the answer to the questions asked above? As a Socialist, I believe that abundant evidence exists pointing to a world transformation, in which exploitation will cease to be a factor in human advancement, and that the next stage in history is not far off wherein peace and plenty will abound for all. I believe that the germ of the new society is contained within the capitalistic husk, and all that is necessary is to remove the husk in order to realize the "glorious new time." What is the evidence? I point you to the marvelous development of machinery and the factory system, wherein thousands of workers cooperate in producing wealth in abundance undreamed of in any past age. I point you to the rise of those great social organizations, known as monopolies and trusts, that bring industry under a unified and scientific control and eliminate such waste of human energy as is the result of wild competition.

But you say these things are injurious to the great masses today. True but why? Because they are owned by a class of capitalists, hence they get all the benefits accruing from such ownership. This is the husk (ownership by capitalists) which I spoke of as being necessary to remove in order to realize the blessings that these things ought to bestow. Ownership is the key to the situation. If owned by capitalists, capitalists will receive all the benefits; if owned by society at large, then each and every individual will be joint owners and will share in the benefits in proportion as they contribute their share of useful labor.

Furthermore, it is illogical to allow a few to own and control those great industrial institutions, for capitalists have demonstrated their incapacity to operate them any longer. Industrial panics, strikes and lockouts are becoming more frequent every day, often resulting in violence and bloodshed. Hence they have proven themselves unfit any longer to manage them, and social welfare demands that they be taken possession of and operated by organized society in the interests of all. It is folly to talk of destroying them by law. Hundreds of laws have been passed against them to no effect, for they cannot be destroyed. They are the inevitable outgrowth of private property, which implies the right of an individual to accumulate as much as he can. If a law should happen to be passed that might worry them to some extent, they would simply rely on "gentlemen's agreements," as some railroads do now.

Again, machinery, trusts, etc., are not the result of the invention or labor of any single individual, and should not be owned by a class of individuals. No one can point to these things and say, "I made this" or "I made that." They are the result of the combined labor and genius of thousands who have "crossed the great divide," and it is an absurdity to allow capitalists to own them. They are the co-operative product of society and should be owned, controlled and their benefits distributed by society co-operatively organized.

Machinery, co-operative labor and trusts are the germs of a new civilization.

DELUSIONS OF THE EARLY SOCIALISTS

The Rise of the Militant Proletariat Not Understood by Philanthropists who Felt Compassion for the Unhappy Poor

HOSTILE TO POLITICAL ACTION

The Practical Help Which the Utopians Looked for from Princes and the Upper Classes Never Came

By Karl Kautsky

Socialists did not from the start understand the role which the militant proletariat is called upon to fill in the Socialist movement. As a matter of course it was impossible for them to understand it so long as there was no militant proletariat in existence. Socialism is older than the class struggle of the proletariat. It is a contemporaneous appearance with the proletariat itself. The proletariat, however, had existed a long time before giving any indications of its independent existence.

The first and at that time the only spring from which Socialism flowed was the compassion which philanthropists of the upper classes felt for the poor and wretched. Among these philanthropists the Socialists were the boldest and those who saw furthest ahead; they perceived clearly that the sources of the proletariat lay in the private ownership of the means of production, and they did not stick at drawing the fullest conclusions from these premises. Socialism at that time was the most earnest, far-seeing and magnificent expression of capitalist philanthropy.

At that time there was no class interest which the Socialists could call upon in the battle for the realization of their aims; they could only appeal to the enthusiasm and pity of the idealists of their own and of the still higher classes; they sought to gain these over by captivating pictures of a socialist community and by forcible presentations of the existing misery among the masses.

Not through struggle, but by peaceful methods of suasion were the rich and the mighty to be moved to furnish the means for the radical cure of misery and the establishment of the ideal society. It is well known that the socialists of that time waited in vain upon the millionaires and princes from whose magnanimity the redemption of mankind was expected to come.

During the first decades of our century the proletariat began to give signs of life. Before the thirties the first incipient of a labor movement were noticed in the United States; in the thirties strong movements started in France and especially in England.

These manifestations were meaningless to the Socialists of those days. They did not think it possible that the poor ignorant, rude proletarians could ever attain the moral elevation and social power requisite to put through Socialist aspirations.

But it was not only lack of confidence that labor movement inspired them with; it furthermore disturbed their calculations; it threatened to rob them of what they considered a most effective weapon in their arguments in favor of Socialism.

These capitalist Socialists could hope to convince the sensitive members of their own class of the necessity of Socialism only if it was shown to them that it was the only means whereby to alleviate misery; that every attempt to do so to improve the condition of the propertyless classes under the existing social system was vain; and that it was impossible for the proletarians to raise themselves by their own efforts.

The labor movement, however, proceeded from premises that stood in contradiction to this mode of reasoning. Nor was this all. The class struggle between proletarians and capitalists embittered, as a matter of course, the latter against the former.

In the eyes of the capitalist class the proletariat had been transformed from unhappy people, worthy of pity, who should be helped, into a pack of miscreants that should be beaten and kept down. Forthwith the principal source of Socialism—compassion for the poor and wretched—began to dry up.

The tenets themselves of Socialism no longer looked to the frightened capitalist class as a harmless toy, but as a most dangerous weapon that might possibly fall into the hands of the people, and do no end of mischief.

AT THE BIER OF LIEBKNECHT

Social Democrats will rejoice to learn that Comrade Eugene Dietzgen now considers himself cured of consumption. This most welcome news was received at headquarters last Monday in a letter written by our comrade from Feydey-Leyzin, Switzerland.

"Immediately upon hearing the sad news of the death of our great leader, William Liebknecht," Comrade Dietzgen says, "I ordered in the name of the Social Democratic party of America a wreath of palms and red carnations, bearing on a red ribbon the words: 'We stand by thee always and thou wilt fight with us to the finish. Social Democratic party of America.'"

The wreath was placed upon the bier of our dead comrade.

THE ILLINOIS SITUATION

When, three weeks ago, a committee was appointed by the Cook County Committee of the Social Democratic party to invite the co-operation of trades union organizations in the campaign, the plan miscarried because of the insistence of the trades unionists present that political co-operation should be first accomplished between the Socialist parties. This was entirely agreeable to Social Democrats, and a joint meeting of the County Committees of the S. L. P. and S. D. P., held a week later, was followed by the convention of Sunday, August 26. At that convention political co-operation in the State campaign, with one ticket supported by the two parties and the independent organizations, was unanimously agreed to, not a single dissenting vote being heard. The arrangement is so fair and so well understood that the Socialists of Illinois will now enter upon the campaign with great enthusiasm. The Herald congratulates all comrades and friends, irrespective of individual affiliations, upon this most happy outcome of the situation in Illinois. We are now comrades and workers in the same cause for the campaign of 1900.

LABOR DAY POLITICIANS

Did it ever occur to you how nicely the capitalist politicians have timed the date of Labor Day? By placing it in September instead of on the 1st of May, when our European brethren celebrate their great labor holiday, the capitalists have gained two important points.

First they have done their best to hinder class feeling. It might make their friend the workingman altogether too proud and too independent if he knew that while he was marching here, his brethren were keeping step with him in every civilized country of the globe. He might almost hear the thunder of their feet which so shakes the nerves of all the capitalistic governments of Europe. It might even inspire him with unorthodox thoughts to catch the echo of the tread of seven millions of Socialist voters in Germany. No. The thrill of class brotherhood is too dangerous, and nobody knows that better than the plutocrats.

But they have another still more important reason for postponing Labor Day until the autumn. The elections are drawing near, and the politicians have a lot of old worn-out clap-trap which they want to work off on that day, just as the merchants get rid of their shop-worn goods on days of special sale. Perhaps you have sometimes grumbled at your good wife for buying such poor stuff, and have tried to convince her what a foolish bargain she has made. Just let me suggest that she drives a much better bargain than you.

She at least gets old worthless goods at a reduced rate. You pay just as high for the politicians' shop-worn humbug as if it were brand new. You gave your vote in return for it last year, and the year before, and the year before that. And this year they ask you just as much as before for the same old stuff, and you may perhaps be foolish enough to give just what is asked in return for this threadbare trash.

Now suppose next Labor Day, before you take these wares, that you should just examine them a little more closely. Are they worth what is asked for them? In fact, are they worth anything? Do they present any definite program for the betterment of the workingman's condition?

Just carefully analyze the oratory of these politicians who claim to be such disinterested friends of yours, from William J. Bryan down to your own ward politician. You will see that they contain no definite suggestion whatever for the settlement of the labor question, and that the nearer they approach it, the more vague and rhetorical they become. In fact, they forcibly remind one of the tale of the bear-dog that used to amuse our childhood. In the great North woods of New York, where bears were once abundant, so the story teller told us, the farmers used to organize great bear hunts for the protection of their cattle. One hunter owned a famous dog of which he was very proud, and which was supposed to be invaluable in bear hunting. When the hunt started this dog used to move forward with such magnificent bounds that the others could hardly keep up with him; but as they drew near the bear, the dog's leaps became shorter and higher, and as soon as they actually came in sight of old Bruin, this wonderful bear dog would jump straight up into the air, and land on exactly the same spot from which he leaped. Precisely so with your would-be friend, the old party politician. He may at first seem to be going forward grandly on the path of progress. But as soon as he comes in sight of any definite solution of our economic problems, he goes up in flights of wordy oratory, and keeps at a good safe distance from the dangerous point.

Of all the political parties which have nominated tickets this year, only one has a presidential candidate who stands for a complete and satisfactory settlement of this labor question. The ownership by the working people of the tools they work with, the buildings they work in, the mines that produce coal to keep the machines running, the farms that produce the raw material worked up by their labor and the railways that carry away the goods when finished, in short all the means of production and distribution; that is a definite proposition, isn't it? Well, that is what Eugene V. Debs and a Socialist congress will give you when they are elected, as they surely will be—whenever the workingmen get their eyes open.

Spend Labor Day in turning this over in your mind, and if you think it out clearly, you will look back on the 3d of September, 1900, as the most satisfactory holiday you ever passed. E. H. T.

NOTES AND COMMENT

Much has been said about "hoboes" and men who will not work, and they have been held up as what medical men would call "perverts." But if you examine the subject closely you must conclude that a tramp who has self-respect to remain ordinarily moral and who will work only when he feels like it, certainly has the advantage of the average workman, who toils perennially but has nothing to show for it. Daily newspapers have many times mentioned the fact that a certain Chicago millionaire of advanced age comes to his downtown office at 7 a. m. and works until 6 p. m. He does this merely to make more money. To increase his already enormous wealth he resorts to practices that are not short of criminal. He has deliberately ruined thousands of small and defenseless competitors. He does all this merely to increase his wealth, which he uses to no particularly good purpose excepting occasions of "charitable" donations. If this man is not a "pervert," who is? In reality he has quit all this for awhile, for he is suffering from a disease resulting from deliberate violation of morality, and he is ransacking the ends of the earth for a cure. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap!"

A big poster on the bill boards of Chicago announces that the Chicago News is independent and prints "both sides." This is a mistake. There is only one side, so far as the old parties are concerned, and that is the capitalist side. The News does not print the Socialist side, which is the other side. The News is for capitalism, whether of the Republican or Democratic brand. It prints one side only.

Dr. Ernst Schmidt, for more than forty years a well-known physician of Chicago, and in 1879 candidate for mayor of the city on a Socialist ticket, died last Sunday morning, August 26, at his residence, 424 North Clark street. He was a man noted for kindness of heart and radical views on social and political questions.

In his address at the public meeting in Chicago last Sunday night, Comrade Job Harriman dealt mainly with an editorial in the Chicago American on "The Socialism of the Trusts," showing in clear and forcible terms the cunningly devised but contradictory argument of the capitalist paper. He proved that the editor, not being a Socialist, was on his own showing and by the conclusions of his own article, a pirate.

Ernest H. Crosby, recognizing the fact that the Socialist press is unanimous against war, says the most Christian articles which he has seen of late on the subject of war were from the pens of the editor of an atheist paper in London, the daughter of Charles Bradlaugh, and of Max Nordau, the Socialist. So far as Jesus' work is being done, it really seems to rest upon agnostics and Socialists to do it.

Some workingmen there be who think that by casting a ballot for Debs and Harriman they would be "throwing their votes away." What have such men been doing with their votes for years past? What have they gained by voting as they have voted? Do they not see that all their voting up to date has in no way improved their own condition?

The National Committee desires to learn as soon as possible from the comrades and branches having in hand the solicitation of funds for the campaign. Immediate action is urged upon the branches which have not yet taken up the matter.

There is a vast amount of work to be done in the campaign. It calls for YOUR co-operation and YOUR contribution in order that it may be done effectively. Have YOU started yet? Let the National Committee hear from YOU.

War in the Philippines has already cost the people of the United States $150,000,000, and not a single one in a population of 76,000,000 can point out a single beneficial result.

Dead fish can float with the stream, but only live ones are found swimming against it.

THE STORY OF MAN

tion that is just before us. What will usher it in? The socially useful classes—that is, the workers, both of hand and brain, in the factory and on the farm—must come to a realization as to why they who produce the wealth and comforts of civilization are constantly robbed of them. These socially useful classes are in the majority so far as numbers are concerned, and it is only a question of time until they realize the source of the wrong to which they are subjected, and they will gradually assume control (through a class-conscious political party voicing their interests and aspirations) of the powers of government now controlled by capitalists and their followers. When they have control of political power they can then return to the people the tools of production and distribution. This is the Socialist program. It is not an ideal plan evolved in the brain of some dreamer, but a necessary result of economic forces at work in modern society.

The task before us at the present time is to organize, educate and agitate. Socialism will give us a co-operative fraternal society, and give to every one the full social value of their labor. It will remove the present capitalistic class paternalism that exists today with all its brutal and degrading exploitation of women and little children. It will give room for such an intellectual expansion as no age yet has provided. Common ownership of the means of wealth production should be the battle-cry (a peaceful one, by the way) of the disinherited and all those interested in obtaining a higher civilization.

When this is accomplished the "Story of Man" will no longer be a record of injustice and brutality between human beings, but each succeeding page added to this black and blood-stained volume will be evidence of the fact that man has at last become conscious of his existence, and enable him to more and more modify the conditions that surround him in order that all his faculties may have ample room for further development. This is the program that the twentieth century presents to us. Shall we take advantage of it? Shall we mount this juggernaut-car of capitalism that crushes its millions, both physically and mentally, and assume the reins of social control, or shall we allow it to proceed unrestrained in its destructive course? This is the question that the twentieth century presents for an answer to the men of brawn and brain who have for ages been exploited by the idle few. Let us hope that when the transition comes—as come it must—it will be with as little friction as possible, and let us work with that end in view. It will require a hard struggle on the part of the disinherited, but whether it will bring with it "airs from heaven" or "blasts from hell" rests with those who exploit, and not those who are exploited. If they submit to the transformation, all well and good. If not, then history points with an unerring finger to what such action will provoke. He who stands in the way of progress must either step aside or be crushed. If he is crushed, it is evidence of suicide on the part of the offender. "Merely this and nothing more."

A mighty army that girdles the globe is now forming for this glorious task. A great Socialist vote will be cast this fall, and each succeeding election will record a larger increase, until finally the historic mission of the ages will be realized in a reign of equity and justice for all. Speed that glorious day!
Terre Haute, August 25.

LABOR A SOCIAL ACT

Individual labor is a misnomer, for every individual considered from the historic point of view is but a product evolved from society. Even the creation of the proverbial old woman's cup of tea is a social act—a social product—the evolved result of a chain of ancestral experiences. A cup of tea, far from being an individual product, may represent a modicum of the sum of the accumulative intelligence and skill, art and science, of all the continents. The tea will probably be a mixture representing the combined skill of the Chinaman and the Hindu, the outcome of the evolution of art and science which those two nations have bestowed upon the tea plant.

The vessel chartered to bring the tea to England has concentrated within its hulks the embodiment of all the ingenuity and inventive faculties of European civilization; in the component parts of that vessel, comprised of wood, iron, copper or amalgam, lies labor representative of the highest skill and intelligence of men in all parts of the world. Thus a common cup of tea and its accessories may represent the highest pinnacle of art in both China and Europe—aye, of the whole world. The most insignificant thing which we may consume in the ordinary way has embodied in its substance, a portion of the accumulated wisdom and experience of collective man.

Labor is essentially social, and if we only strike a nail in a wall with a hammer we can hardly realize what untold ages of evolution in industry had to pass before it was possible to produce that nail and hammer. The individuality of a person is entirely lost in the production of any given article. The individual is an evolved unit of the present society, and when a "clever" and "talented" individual struts his exalted virtues peacock fashion before us, what a miserable caricature of a man he would be if the inheritance of all the ages were abstracted from his personality!—A. P. Hazel.

MIGHT APPLY ALSO TO CHINA

The following is from the New York World, which applies the moral to the British-Boer situation:

A Disinterested Citizen, passing a certain house, heard sounds of tumult within and entered. He saw the householder barricaded behind a pile of furniture and defending himself against five burly braves.

"How now!" said the Disinterested Citizen, "What have we here?"

"These five men," replied the householder, "have come in off the street and propose to eject me from my house and take all my property."

"Can this be true?" inquired the Disinterested Citizen of the leader of the braves, and who was decorated with a single eye-glass.

"Mere sophistry!" answered he of the monocle. "We are Civilization. This Householder is barbarism. He has not managed his household to suit us, and we are going to take all his goods and gold."

"All I ask," said the Householder, "is that these robbers go with me to a court and allow a peaceable judgment."

Whereupon the five braves set up a shout of derision and resumed the attack.

A MATTER OF IF

Says William J. Bryan: "If we hold what we had in 1896, and if we bring back the gold democrats and if we gain large accessions from the republicans, the chances of victory for the Democratic party ought to be good."

Reminds us of a story: "Johnny," exclaimed the father to his stirring boy, "what are you running and jumping around the attic for?"

"Catching mice, father," replied young hopeful.

"How many have you caught?"

"Well, when I catch the one I'm after and another one, I'll have two."—Exchange.

Two weeks ago elections took place in Italy at three places, owing to duplicate returns, and in all cases the Socialists were returned, receiving more votes than at the last elections. This is startling, because the government used every effort to defeat the Socialists, and it was lyngly said that they were responsible for the murder of the King.

THE SMITH AND THE KING

A Smith upon a summer's day
Did call upon a King.
The King exclaimed: "The Queen's away;
Can I do anything?"
"I pray you can," the Smith replied.
"I want a bit of bread."
"Why?" cried the King. The fellow sighed.
"I'm hungry, sire," he said.
"Dear me! I'll call my Chancellor.
He understands such things.
Your claims I cannot cancel, or Deem them fit themes for Kings.
Sir Chancellor, why, here's a wretch
Starving like rats or mice!"
The Chancellor replied: "I'll fetch
The First Lord in a trice."

The First Lord came, and by his look
You might have guessed he'd shirk.
Said he, "Your Majesty's mistook;
This is the Chief Clerk's work."
The Chief Clerk said the case was bad,
But quite beyond his power,
Seeing it was the Steward had
The keys of cake and flour.

The Steward sobbed, "The keys I've lost.

Alas! but in a span

I'll call the Smith. Why, Holy Ghost!

Here is the very man!"

"Hurrah! Hurrah!" they loudly cried,
"How cleverly we've done it!"

We've solved this question deep and wide.

Well nigh ere we'd begun it."

"Thanks," said the Smith. "O fools and vile.

Go rot upon the shelf!

The next time I am starving, I'll Take care to help myself."

SOCIALISM AND ANARCHISM

Socialists hold that anarchy is a reaction from the oppression and abuses of the competitive system and will die with that system. That the best way to combat it, meantime, is to meet its arguments fairly and squarely with better reasoning and a more hopeful plan. It is urged that they will not listen to reason. Doubtless this is true of some, but repression only renders that kind more fanatical and determined. We have the law for such and it should be enforced to the letter when they commit any overt act, but they can not be condemned in advance. The anarchist is nearly always a pessimist. If unchallenged his talk makes an impression on a certain class and may lead to mischief, but put a Socialist up against him and the crowd—nine times out of ten—will leave the anarchist to himself. Why? Because the Socialist has a plan, a definite and intelligent program, bringing new life and hope to the working people, while the anarchist has nothing to offer in place of what he seeks to destroy.

It will not do to say that every anarchist is a blood-thirsty assassin; there are many who oppose violence in any form, and some who would not even go to war, unless forced. All are agreed, however, on the one point of opposition to government, and herein lies the danger: People who are out of work and in want, get desperate, and failing relief from the government they are living under, seeing its powers misused to favor the wealthy and oppress the poor, they become embittered and are ready to condemn all government and authority. Who can blame them?—R. S. Price in Houston (Tex.) Post.

THE LOCKWOODS

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 20, 1900.
Of the many influences at work for Socialism but few surpass the quiet, unassuming but far-reaching effect of Comrade Lockwood and his noble wife who are sowing the seeds of emancipation among the people. They are the pioneers in many communities and are opening up the pathway for a few beginners to follow up the work and soon a sentiment is created, then a ticket is nominated and with one or two active campaigns the day is won. As soon as this becomes general the cause will win. All hail to the Lockwoods, in their noble self-sacrificing work.

WHAT EDITORS ARE SAYING

THE CLARION, LONDON.

We don't hear a word of the root causes which produce these anarchist outrages. No one mentions the oppressive taxation which robs the Italian workman of the very means of existence, and makes his life a horrible nightmare.

Have we forgotten the rioting of two years ago, when a thousand people were killed in Milan? Have we forgotten the stories we heard then of the thousands who were compelled to live on boiled grass? Have we forgotten the tyrannous conditions of life, the irritating espionage, and the terrible punishments meted out to those who dare to stand up for the people against their oppressors?

THE COURIER, PUEBLO, COL.

We notice a statement in one of the leading newspapers to the effect that "the economic savings already effected by the trusts in the United States equal $6,000,000 daily." In that form the statement seems to imply that the people are growing rich at a most rapid rate, since $6,000,000 saved usually means $6,000,000 earned. But in this case, unfortunately, that is exactly what the statement does not mean. The words "economic saving" signify that labor has been dispensed with.

POLITICAL UNION IS EFFECTED IN ILLINOIS

As a Result of the Convention of August 26 Socialists Unite on One Ticket in this State

In response to a call published in the Herald and the Workers' Call, 132 delegates, representing the Social Democratic party, the Socialist party, and various independent organizations, met in convention at 70 N. Clark street, Chicago, Sunday, August 26, for the purpose of effecting a political union of all the Socialist forces of the State of Illinois in the approaching campaign.

J. B. Smiley, of the Federation for Social Justice, was elected chairman, and W. H. Wise, of the Social Crusade, secretary. The Committee on Credentials reported 132 delegates present and entitled to seats in the convention, the following organizations being represented:

The organizations represented were as follows: Socialist Sangerbund, Branch 3 S. D. P., 10th Ward S. L. P., 10th Ward S. L. P., Tanners and Curriers' Union, Branch 9 S. D. P., 34th Ward (No. 1) S. L. P., 12th Ward S. L. P., the Social Crusade, 27th Ward S. L. P., 14th Ward S. L. P., Branch 1 S. D. P., 33d Ward S. L. P., 13th Ward S. L. P., Branch 10 S. D. P., 15th Ward S. L. P., 25th Ward S. L. P., Central Federation Social Justice, 4th Ward S. L. P., Branch 4 S. D. P., Garfield Hall Federation, 33d Ward (No. 1) S. L. P., Lassalle Club, 6th Ward S. L. P., 5th Ward S. L. P., 26th Ward S. L. P., Branch 1 S. D. P., Branch 18 S. D. P., 27th Ward S. L. P., 21st Ward S. L. P., Branch 6 S. D. P., Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Association, Sangerbund Freiheit, 30th Ward (No. 1) S. L. P., Branch 5 S. D. P., Swiss Turner Society, Branch 8 S. D. P., 30th Ward (No. 2) S. L. P., 22d Ward S. L. P., Branch 7 S. D. P., 26th Ward S. L. P., Cigarmakers' Union (15), 34th Ward (No. 2) S. L. P., Central Board S. L. P., Turners' Society Eichor, 14th Ward S. L. P., 14th Ward Danish Branch, Branch 12 S. D. P.

A long discussion followed the seating of delegates, resulting in the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this convention hereby endorses the nomination of Eugene V. Debs and Job Harriman as presidential candidates of the Socialists of the United States.

That this convention does hereby endorse the Socialist state ticket nominated May 13, 1900, at Arena Hall, E. 63d st., Chicago, and now on file in the office of the Secretary of State.

That this convention hereby endorses the Socialist county ticket nominated on the 4th of July, 1900, at 70 N. Clark st., Chicago, and orders the said ticket to be placed on the official ballot under the name of the Social Democratic party.

That this convention hereby elects a Socialist State Campaign committee of 16 members, five from the Social Democratic party, five from the Socialist Labor party, and six from the other organizations here represented, and

That this state committee be and is hereby vested with the full power to act in the name of each and all the organizations represented in this convention in all matters connected with and pertaining to the filing of Socialist tickets on the official ballots, in filling vacancies on said tickets and in everything else pertaining to the Socialist campaign in this state in the year 1900.

That this convention hereby elects a County Campaign committee of twenty-one members, seven from the Social Democratic party, seven from the Social Labor party and seven from the other organizations represented in this convention.

That said County Campaign committee be and is hereby vested with full power to act in the name of each and all the organizations represented in this convention in all matters connected with and pertaining to the filing of the Socialist ticket on the official ballot, in filling vacancies on said ticket and in all other matters pertaining to the Socialist campaign in Cook county for the year 1900.

That the state and county campaign committees elected by this convention be and are hereby instructed to call and arrange for a mass meeting of the general membership of the Socialist organizations of this state to be held in Chicago at a date prior to the time for placing the Socialist ticket on the state and county official ballots, the purpose of said meeting to be for the ratification of the action and declarations of this convention and to demonstrate the unity of the Socialist forces of this state. That the aforesaid committees be and are hereby further instructed to arrange for the attendance of Eugene V. Debs and Job Harriman as speakers on that occasion. In the original report another name had been used and so the following resolution was adopted making the change as given above and adding some additional ideas.

Resolved, That the name of the party in the majority report be stricken out and the name Social Democratic party be substituted, and further that the political union here effected is independent politically of the National Committees of Springfield, Mass., and 126 Washington St., Chicago, and constitutes a union of all the Socialist forces in this state.

Resolutions were then passed providing that the state committee provided for above should constitute a press committee having charge of the matters published in the Social Democratic Herald and the Workers' Call, appertaining to the state campaign and that the existing state committees be instructed to turn over all books and papers to the joint committee.

"Whereas, National organic union of Socialists is imperative and desirable, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the delegates of the S. L. P. and S. D. P. in joint convention assembled, recommend to the executive committees at Springfield, Mass., and Chicago, Ill., that at the close of the national campaign the said national executive committees proceed to arrange for and call a national convention to perfect national organic union."

At the close of the public meeting a procession was formed three blocks long, which marched down Clark street to Washington, then to Fifth Avenue and up Madison street to State, loudly hurrahing for Socialism, the Social Democratic party and Debs and Harriman. There were fully three hundred in the column, preceded by a banner inscribed "Socialist Unity—One Ticket." All the capitalist newspaper offices were visited and the comrades at each of them rent the air with loud hurrahs for the Social revolution. The campaign cry was given with a heartiness that served to convince the people in the streets of the earnestness of Social Democrats. This is the cry:

Debs and Harriman, rah, rah, rah!
Debs and Harriman, rah, rah, rah!
Hoo-rah! Hoo-rah!
Socialist candidates.
Rah, Rah, Rah!

Thousands of people lined the sidewalks on State street and responses to the enthusiasm of the comrades were frequent. Men raised their hats and joined in the cheers. "What's the matter with Eugene Debs?" shouted an onlooker and quick as a flash from 300 throats came the response, "He's all right!" "Hurrah for Socialism!" yelled another and these incidents were so frequent that everybody was convinced there were more Socialists among the people than in the procession. This came as a surprise, because the procession was decided upon at a late hour in the hall and could not have been known. The column passed down one side of State street and up the other, often amidst the cheers of the people who lined both sides in thousands. Speeches were called for but everyone was thoroughly tired, and at 11 o'clock the procession, with three cheers for Debs and Harriman and a repetition of the campaign yell, disbanded at State and Quincy.

It was a demonstration that will not be forgotten by those who took part in it. The column kept growing all along the line and the public demonstration was clearly indicative of a pronounced sentiment favorable to Socialism, which will be recorded at the polls next November.

The State Campaign Committee met August 27, at 65 N. Clark street, and organized permanently, with Frederick G. Strickland, secretary, and J. S. Smith, treasurer. The secretary was instructed to communicate as quickly as possible with all branches of the S. D. P. and S. L. P., and all independent Socialist organizations, soliciting funds for the united State campaign. The secretary was authorized to procure properly printed stationery. It was decided that the meetings of the committee be held every Monday night at 65 N. Clark street. The matter of the congressional tickets was deemed the business of the County Committee. The secretary was made financial secretary, and $20.95, the proceeds of the collections at the convention, were placed in his hands, and by him turned over to the treasurer.

Comrade L. Hanock announces his retirement as a candidate for the state legislature in the Thirtieth Senatorial District and urges all comrades to give their support to Comrade Peter Knickrehm. Comrade Hanock was nominated by the S. L. P.

Comrade A. M. Simons has resigned as a candidate for Congress in the Fourth Illinois District in favor of Comrade Svoboda.

The Jewish comrades of Chicago have made arrangements for the publication of a weekly paper beginning September 22. It will be called the Varheit. The best socialist writers will contribute.

At Sommerein, in Lower Austria, an agricultural town, the Socialists have succeeded in returning their candidates to the municipality.

COMRADE KELLEY ACCEPTS

To the Indiana Executive Board of the Social Democratic Party:

Dear Sirs and Comrades: Yours of July 27, informing me of the action of your convention which resulted in my nomination for Governor is received. That I should have deserved the honor of being appointed as leader of our forces in the great State of Indiana in the first battle for real Democracy seems to me scarcely possible, but since your convention has deemed proper to confer this high responsibility upon me, I shall accept it as a duty, and though deeply conscious of my weakness and the magnitude of the task before us, I have abiding faith that right makes might and that ultimate success is ours, for from the history of the past there comes the assurance, that no fight for the right once begun has ever yet been lost; the blunder of a leader may retard it, and the shirking of a soldier may delay, but despite all compromises with wrong, the right will finally prevail.

The principles of Socialism are absolutely unassailable; our enemies are yet strong in numbers, but they have no fighting ground upon which to stand; they are yet rich in material weapons, but it is principles that finally triumph, and of those they have not one that will bear the test of ethics for a single moment. The cross of Calvary is the banner of Socialism. Capitalism has its cross of Gold. Our motto is: "Bear ye one another's burdens." Theirs is: "Every fellow for himself." Socialism proposes that we shall treat the good things of this world as a well ordered family would treat a meal to which they were invited guests. Capitalism says we must continue to emulate the pigs at the trough.

Socialism says let us establish order and justice, while the task of Capitalism is that of maintaining confusion and injustice. Socialism says let us co-operate, let us all pull one and the same way on the rope, while Capitalism says let us continue to compete—pull any way you please.

I believe the cross of Gold and the hosts working under it are doomed to defeat, that obedience to the Golden Rule is better than every fellow for himself. I believe in the brotherhood of man and am opposed to the emulation of the swine. I believe that order is better than confusion, that peace is better than war and that the load will be lighter for all, if we all pull the same way.

Thanking you very much for the honor which you have conferred upon me, I wish in closing to remind you and all Socialists throughout the state that the horse in the lead has no better chance at the post than does the one at the wheel. Let every one who is with us show it by their works; let every one get hold on the rope, for the strong pull and the hard pull and the pull all together. Yours for Socialism, John W. Kelley.

Marion, Ind., Aug. 14, 1900.

At Hamburg the Socialist deputy, Molkenbuhr, has been fined 450 marks for writing a poem speaking disrespectfully of German officers.

At the municipal elections which have just taken place at Lipnik, in Galicia, the Socialist candidates were elected by a large majority. And yet the "respectable" people did all they could, for Jews and anti-Semites ran together.

The nine-hour day has been adopted in the workshops of the Bavarian state railways. Up till now the normal working day was one of ten hours. This is due to the persistent action of the Socialist group in the Bavarian Landtag (the local parliament).

A Leipzig professor has discovered a new method of suppressing Socialism. It is to be done by having in opposition to May Day a working-class evangelical festival, to be held just before Whitsun. The method should be patented in all countries.

ITS PLATFORM

Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

National insurance of working people against accident, lack of employment and want in old age.

Equal civil and political rights; for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by voters.

Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

HEADQUARTERS: 126 WASHINGTON STREET, CHICAGO

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Fifteen cents will purchase Merrie England in the German language, adapted to American needs. If you don't read German, buy one for your friends.

A full ticket has been nominated by the comrades in Marion county, Indiana.

Send in your order now for Ben Atterbury's letter to workmen. Leaflet No. 2; $1 a thousand.

The postal card propaganda will be a great vote maker during the next two months. Twenty-four cards sent to you for 10 cents.

Comrade S. L. Smith, whose name is this week added to the list of nominees for the executive board, is a member of Branch 9, Brockton, Mass.

The small 4-page leaflet used by the Chicago comrades is good for any part of the country; 1,000 to any address, postage paid, for 75 cents.

All loyal members of the Social Democratic branches in Washington are hereby requested to communicate with Comrade L. W. Kidd, 1115 Sixth avenue, North, Seattle, Wash.

Socialists willing to assist in forming new branches of the Social Democratic party are requested to communicate with the secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

The Debs leaflet, at 75 cents per thousand, charges paid, is much the best leaflet for propaganda in some localities. We should receive more orders for them. They are small, but to the point, and will make S. D. P. votes.

Every branch should order a five-dollar bunch of literature, which would include 33 Debs lithographs and 4,000 leaflets. Every Socialist can place a few lithographs where they will make votes for the party and increase the local branch membership.

The Socialist Educational Society of Rockford, Ill., at its last meeting, endorsed the platform of the Social Democratic party and pledged its members to do everything within their power to extend the propaganda and elect the national ticket next November.

It is advisable to stamp all leaflets, etc., with the local branch address and time of meeting, in order to get more direct returns for the work of distributing them. Let the voters of your locality know of your meeting, and then provide a good speaker to explain the principles of Socialism.

Branch 12 and the Twentieth Ward, Milwaukee, have arranged for a Harvest dance September 15, at Volkmann's Hall, 21st and Center streets. Carl Weisel, Robert Manske, Carl Malewsky were elected from the Branch as delegates to State convention, and Emil Seidel, Philip Siegel, E. Beckman, Fred Hess and Robert Meder from the ward.

Comrade Hugo Miller of Indianapolis writes: "Kindly leave my name from the list of nominees for National Executive Board, as it will be impossible for me to accept in my present situation. I do not know who nominated me, but thank the comrades for their good intention. I can assure them I will, as usual, work for the success of our noble cause."

Our platform, object, methods of organization and "The Man Under the Dray," by Prof. George D. Herron, are printed in the Debs leaflet with a fine picture of our candidate. This leaflet the campaign committee sends out, charges paid for 75 cents per thousand—little above cost.

The portrait of the presidential candidate gives great satisfaction. Thousands have been mailed to branches and comrades in all sections of the country. It should be seen in every community; it informs the observer, directs attention to the party and makes votes. Ten copies, 35 cents; 33 for a dollar; single copy, 10 cents; postage prepaid.

It is hoped every branch secretary will bring the contribution blanks before the next meeting of their branch and also see that all friends of socialism (unattached) are given an opportunity to help increase the national campaign fund. Send all amounts collected to the National Campaign Headquarters of the S. D. P., 126 Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

Comrade Grogg has been appointed organizer in the Indiana gas belt. Comrade Kelley, our candidate for governor, will make a trip through the State at his own expense. Comrades throughout the State are requested to send their five cents per month per capita assessment to Hugo Miller, treasurer, as soon as possible. His address is De Soto Block, Indianapolis.

The Social Democrats in the Sixteenth Congressional District of Illinois, in convention at Jacksonville, have nominated Comrade Geo. W. Riley for congress; J. I. Housewart, of Pike county, for the Board of Equalization; H. Hering and E. S. Altmiller for the State legislature. In Morgan county George Smith was nominated for Circuit Clerk, John A. Reed for Coroner and George Watson for County Commissioner.

Monday's business at the National Campaign Committee's headquarters, 126 Washington street, Chicago, amounted to $21 for literature, not counting the contributions. In return the committee mailed 8,000 No. 2 leaflets, 300 Debs lithographs and several hundred Debs leaflets, buttons, etc. The Tuesday morning mail brought in orders for 4,000 more leaflets and a number of lithographs.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PICNIC
 The Social Democratic branches of Chicago will hold another picnic on Sunday, September 2, at Laznovsky's Grove, Irving Park, near the Bohemian cemetery. Tickets will be 10 cents and it is hoped the comrades and their friends will turn out strong. To reach the grounds take Elston avenue cars on Lake street to Fortieth avenue.

MCCARTNEY DECLINES
 Comrades of the S. D. P.: Seeing in a recent number of the Herald that my name is in the list of nominees for the National Executive Board, I hasten to decline in favor of a Massachusetts comrade, to whom more than any other worker Massachusetts owes her progress in organized Socialism. This valiant and tireless worker, with versatile ability—a writer and an executive—is Margaret Haile. Let us make her election unanimous.
 Yours for the Social Democratic Party,
 Frederic O. McCartney.

NEW JERSEY CAMPAIGN

In the absence of Com. Jones, Com James was elected chairman. The minutes were approved as read. Communications were received from State Com S. D. P., returning subscription lists. Appeal to Reason, Comrades Dobbler, Goebel, Kraft, Vail, Strobel, Vogel Camden, and Martinsville. Bills were read and ordered paid for stationery printing, delegates and organizer.

The electoral list showed vacancies which were filled, and the secretary instructed to finish the petitions and file them.

On motion the secretary was instructed to cancel the incorporation papers filed. Comrade Jones then made his appearance and took the chair.

The literature committee reported and such was received and the committee instructed to get out one pamphlet at once for use of the organizer.

On motion 250 copies of the Appeal to Reason were ordered for three months, for use of the organizer.

The report of the organizer was received and he will submit his report as copied in the day book hereafter.

The secretary was instructed to write to some firm for estimates on banners, pictures, etc. He is to report the doings of the committee to the Social Democratic Herald and People.

Next meeting to be called on request of the delegates or the secretary.

The organizer will send out all subscription lists on hand and especially cover the rural districts.

Income, $37.95.
 John P. Wiegel, Sec'y.

WISCONSIN CONVENTION

To the Voters and Members of the Social Democratic Party of Wisconsin: Greeting: The state convention of the Social Democratic party will be held at Milwaukee Sunday, September 2, at 2 o'clock, at the hall of the Freie Gemeinde on Fourth street (between State and Cedar.)

This being a presidential election year the state convention of our party is of more than usual importance. Both of the old parties have shown their utter inability to grasp the economic situation of the present time, or even to elect honest men into office. No matter which of the old parties is put into power, we always find the same result: Corruption among office holders, ignorance and misery and poverty among the masses. These facts cannot be obscured by raising false issues, like "honest money" on one side and opposition to imperialism on the other.

The reason for this is obvious. The two old parties do not differ materially from each other. Both are dominated by the non-producing class that depend upon exploitation and plunder for subsistence. Both parties by necessity create more corruption and misery. And the leaders of the defunct third party, the so-called People's party, not having any principles to stand upon, have naturally drifted into the same camps, for the purpose of their own pecuniary benefit and political aggrandizement. All "reform parties" have failed because they have trusted to the goodness to this or the other leader, instead of trying to change the conditions that surround us all.

These conditions must be changed before man in general will change.

We, therefore, call upon all honest men who do not as yet despair of the future of humanity, to unite under the banner of the Social Democratic party of America. The Social Democratic party is not aiming at a mere change of office holders, we realize, that without a change of the present economic system the best men can do nothing against corruption. The Social Democratic party wants to abolish the source of avarice and corruption by the socialization of the means of production, distribution and exchange, thereby extending the advantages of civilization and our rich country to the whole people.

And while we recognize that it is not in the power of a single state of this Union to restore to the people all their rights, we are also fully conscious that the state of Wisconsin can do a great deal to limit within its borders the exploitation of the masses and thereby raise the standard of life.

But besides this it is our duty to strike at the ballot box for Socialism and the national candidate of the Social Democratic party EUGENE V. DEBS. Therefore do not fail to send delegates to the convention.

The basis of representation is as follows: Branches of the Social Democratic party and all other recognized Socialistic bodies are entitled to three delegates. Each ward or township is entitled to one delegate for each fifty votes or major fraction thereof cast for our party at the last state election. Each Trade Union is entitled to one delegate, if the membership is fifty or less, and to two delegates if the membership is over fifty.

All reports of delegates elected and other matters pertaining to the convention should be sent to 614 State St., Milwaukee, Wis.

COMPETITIVE WAR CO-OPERATIVE PEACE

The Only Real Question in this Year's Campaign is Socialism vs. Capitalism—A Vote for Either of the Old Parties is a Vote for Capitalism

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Will Do More to Lift the Moral Status of the Individual than All the Preaching of Two Thousand Years

By Rev. Chas. H. Vall

The only real question at issue in this campaign is Socialism vs. Capitalism. We are called upon to choose which system we prefer—the co-operative or competitive. A vote for McKinley or Bryan is a vote for the continuance of present conditions. A man who casts his vote for either of the old parties has no right to complain of the economic or moral conditions which inhere in the system he has voted to maintain.

What are some of the conditions and results of the competitive system of industry? It brutalizes men. It turns them into moral monsters. It makes them human sharks and wolves by compelling them to prey upon each other. It debasifies and crushes out the higher impulses and aspirations, leaving only the animal instinct of selfishness intact. It is only such moral monstrosities that are fitted for the competitive combat. The possession of a sense of justice and right unqualifies men for the competitive warfare—such qualities seriously handicap a man in the struggle for wealth. In a competitive environment it is the unscrupulous and crafty that are best fitted to succeed. A man must not be too sympathetic and considerate with others' misfortunes, business is business, we are told, and fitness to survive means a willingness to utilize the misfortunes of others to your own emolument. The man who is the most brutal and who rides roughshod over the rights of others, is the man who usually succeeds, and is consequently the man who is honored and respected in the community. What a deplorable condition! The old saying is "Nothing succeeds like success." It makes but little difference to present society how you get it, if you only have it. Such a condition is truly deplorable, but it is a condition that cannot be helped under the present system. It is the system that compels men to take advantage of their fellows. So long as the interests of men are antagonistic we can hope for no improvement. Unless we will arise to the removal of the cause, we may as well be complacent over the result. Sermons will not extirpate the evil, it is too deep seated, it inheres in the system itself. The Socialists, however, have arisen to the removal of the cause and they will remain standing until this accursed system is abolished. Every vote cast for Socialism is a protest against this vicious order and a pledge and prophecy of its overthrow.

Socialists believe that man is not inherently bad; he is only a creature of environment. The old theological doctrine, born in the ignorance of the dark ages, that man is essentially evil and can neither think or act rightly, has long since been relegated, in the minds of thinking people, to the limbo of imbecile creeds. The old doctrine of the fall of man, has been supplanted by the new doctrine of the rise of man. Evolution has given us a new conception of life. The progress which man makes in perceiving and attaining the higher ideal depends upon his surroundings. Philanthropists have demonstrated the power of environment in molding human character. They have shown that 90 per cent of the children taken from the slums of our great cities and placed in comfortable homes grow up into respectable men and women. If left to grow up in the wretched surroundings of vice and crime, they would contribute to the criminal and outcasts of society. Eighty per cent of the criminal class comes from the slums!

All recognize the power of environment. None want their boys brought up in vile surroundings, or their girls raised in brothels. They realize that children surrounded by such conditions will turn out bad. The only remedy is to destroy the evil conditions. This Socialism will do. Socialism will not only destroy the slums, but also poverty, which is the chief cause of crime, and it will surround men with an environment which is conducive to honesty and well-doing. It would do no good to destroy the slums, close the saloons and brothels, and leave the present system intact. The cause remaining the conditions would soon be reproduced, or manifest themselves in some other way which would be just as bad. Neither does it suffice to remove the young from this condition, even if all children could be removed, and leave the system in operation, for the slums are constantly filled by those whom the system has forced into bankruptcy. To remove children from evil conditions and then force them as adults to earn a living in a system where 95 per cent of business men fail, and where to succeed they are tempted to resort to trickery and dishonesty, is surely no solution of the problem. Herbert Spencer in his essay, "The Morals of Trade," asserts that all competitive business is by its very nature corrupt, that it is impossible for an honorable man to conduct his occupation in an upright manner for the reason that the scoundrel sets the standard and the pace. It is the rascal who commences to adulterate goods and the honest man must follow suit or go bankrupt, and suppose he should do the latter, then he actually injures society more than if he had joined in the adulteration. Can men be expected to be sound morally under such conditions? Is not our whole social structure a temptation to do wrong? It is a wonder, under present conditions, that men and women are as good as they are. It speaks volumes for the moral soundness of human nature, that the higher triumphs as often as it does in the face of such odds. It is but natural that men should frequently give way to temptation, that the lower self should triumph when temptation is strong, but it is just as natural for men to stand firm, for the higher self to triumph when tempted to do right. Human nature responds as quickly, and, in fact, more so when tempted in the right direction. We find men continually rising to a high plane of unselfishness when their interests are not at stake. Men will do good for its own sake, but not evil except for the sake of gain.

Our objection to the present system, then, is that it makes it to the interest of men to do evil and to take advantage of their fellows. Men rise by pushing others down. In such conditions it is not strange that men become inhuman, that the tender sympathies and higher ideals are crushed out. What else could one expect from a system of commercial cannibalism? You cannot gather grapes from thorns or figs from thistles. Neither can we expect the qualities of love, tenderness, helpfulness and sympathy to result from a system of competitive struggle for the necessities of life. Competition is warfare and warfare, whether physical or commercial, national or individual, begets enmity, strife, and hatred.

Socialism is the only remedy for these evil conditions. Socialism would realize the solidarity of mankind. It would make the interests of all identical. One could not then gain at the expense of his fellows. When success does not depend upon taking advantage of some one else, then the motive for injuring others will be gone. Such a system would turn this old earth of ours into a heaven. It would remove both the motive and opportunity for selfishness. It would do more to lift the moral status of the individual, than all the preaching and mere teaching of the last two thousand years. To expect people to live a true life under the present cannibalistic system, is to expect greater wonders than are reported in the legends of the past. Indeed, the way of righteousness is narrow, in the present order, and few there be that find it.

Socialism furnishes the only condition wherein the higher life of service and brotherhood can be realized. We ask all who believe in the better way to join us in its realization. The first step is political organization, and mastery, through political action, of the public powers. Political organization has now been effected, and you are asked to cast your vote in the coming election for the realization of a better civilization. If you believe in the need of a better order, vote for it. If you want a continuance of the present deplorable conditions, then vote the old party tickets and I will guarantee you will not be disappointed. But if you have a desire to uplift society, vote a Socialist ballot. Every ballot cast for Socialism brings nearer the day of human emancipation.

If labor in America produces every year $2,000,000,000 worth of goods more than the producers can buy, what's the reason for it? Ever think of that, John? Did you know that that fact was the key to Chauncey Depew's explanation of the "hammering at the gates of Pekin"? How can a dollar-a-day man buy back products valued at $5 or $10? Don't you see, John, how you are being fooled?

PRODUCT AND PROFIT UNDER WAGE SLAVERY

The "Fair Wage" Nonsense and the "Well Paid" Apologists for the Wrongs and Injustice of Capitalism

RIGHTS OF LABOR AND CAPITAL

The Socialist Ticket is the Only One Which Should be Supported by the Victims of Capitalism

By Ben Atterbury

I would rather be able to lead the working class of my country to understand clearly their position and prospects under capitalist production than to lead the armies of the world as a conquering host against the Chinese empire. What I am most anxious to have my class see is this, that whatever individual workers may now be receiving as wages, whether the wage is one, or three, or five dollars a day, considered as a class they are the slaves of capitalism. They are receiving a small portion only of what their labor produces and others are enjoying the benefits of the possession of a large surplus, which possession is the direct cause of hard times and social misery.

If workingmen can be brought to understand this, that the rights of which they are deprived—chief among which is the right to enjoy the fruits of their own toil—are the cause of poverty crime and war, they will then understand that no other term so fitly applies to them as this, to which so many of their number who receive what they call a "fair" wage object, SLAVES!

There is no such thing as a "fair" wage. No man ought to be called upon to toil for an idler, or for another man who appropriates any portion of the results of his labor. And wherever this process of appropriation, which is common and necessary to the very existence of capitalist production, is going on, no such thing as a "fair" wage is possible. It is robbery sanctioned by custom and law, even though some wage-slaves do receive higher average pay than others. The "well-paid" mechanics' condition may be tolerable; they may be reasonably contented with the treatment meted out to them by the class to which their labor is PROFITABLE, but their contentment has its tap-root in ignorance of the rights of their fellow-men who are less fortunate. Your "well-paid" slave is usually ignorant, not only of his own rights, but of the labor movement and the social question. Too often he is a pitiable apologist for all that is cruel and unjust in the existing order and indifferent to the economic condition of those a little lower down in the wage scale. And so what I have to say is not addressed particularly to him, although it concerns him and I would be glad if he would stop and think about it, but to the same average working class man I have addressed before.

Let us suppose that one hundred men in our class, working in a factory, receive each $10 a week. The entire product of the labor of these men in a week is worth $5,000 to the owner of the factory. The owner pays out $1,000 for the labor which was necessary to produce the things. He sells the product for $5,000 and has a profit of $4,000 on the transaction. Doing business the year round on the same basis, he pays out $52,000 for labor and, if he disposes of the product, receives $260,000 a profit of $208,000 for the year. The profit on each man's labor per week is $40.

Now, can you tell me why each of the one hundred workmen should get only $10 a week and the employer make a profit of $40 off his labor? Can you tell me why the income of the workmen should be $520 a year, while that of the employer is $208,000?

"But the employer has other expenses!" Very well, what are they? We want to be fair. Will all the running expenses for a week exceed an amount more than twice the cost of labor? Probably not. It is almost certain they will not, isn't it? Yes. Then their employer who sells the product of one hundred men's labor each week for $5,000 pays out $1,000 for labor and $2,000 for all other expenses (a big allowance surely!) is actually making a profit of $2,000 a week, that is to say, if he sells the goods, his yearly income is $104,000. This income for a single year is equal to all the wages of one hundred men for two years. The employer's individual income per week is nearly four times that of each of the workers.

"But the employer has invested his capital in the business and is entitled to a fair return!" Is that it? Well, we want to be fair. Remember that the employer about whose interests you are solicitous has already drawn four times as much as any one of our hundred workmen. Now, we will say that his money capital invested in the business is $20,000. The income on such an investment at 10 per cent would be only $2,000. Let him have that and you think the equities have been dealt out all round, don't you? But, hold on! What about the rights of our hundred men to a return on their capital? You overlook that. If the employer is entitled to a return on his capital, why are not the workmen entitled to a return on theirs? All they have, all they get anywhere, is a wage dribble—$10 a week—to live on!

Can you not see the flagrant injustice of the wage system? I say to you, there is no villainy in the world equal to the capitalist device known as wage labor. There is no escape for the average workingman from the murderous system of monopoly and capitalism by electing the candidate of one division of the capitalist party to sit in the place now occupied by the representative of the other division. There is hope only in overthrowing the power of capitalism at the ballot box and voting for the abolition of the wage system and production for private profit.

This you can do by voting for the Socialist Democratic party.

WHEN WILL UNIONISM DIE?

When the lion eats grass like an ox
And the fish-worm swallows the whale,
When the terapins knit woolen socks,
And the hare is outrun by the snail,
When the serpents walk upright like men
And the doodle bugs travel like frogs,
When grasshoppers feed on the hen
And feathers are found on the hogs,
When tom-cats swim in the air
And elephants roost upon trees,
When insects in summer are rare
And snuff never makes people sneeze,
When fish creep over dry land
And mules on bicycles ride,
When foxes lay eggs in the sand
And women in dress take no pride,
When Dutchmen no longer drink beer
And girls get to preaching in time,
When billy goats butt from the rear
And treason's no longer a crime,
When the humming bird brays like an ass
And limburger smells like cologne,
When ploughshares are made of cut glass
And the hearts of workmen are stone,
When ideas grow in jackasses' heads
And wool on the hydraulic ram—
Then unionism will be dead
And the country won't be worth a —

AMONG THE RIGHTEOUS

"Let us talk about why we that produce nothing are rich, while those that produce everything are poor," said the Gentleman.
"It isn't true," said the Statistician.

RISE OF SOCIALISM IN UNITED STATES

Its Seven Million Supporters Spread Over All the Belts and Zones of the Globe—Controlling Majorities Rapidly Organizing

SOCIALISM THE ONLY REMEDY

Equality of Rights and Opportunities for Every Human Being is the Party's Vital Fundamental Principle

Eugene V. Debs, in Independent

In the presidential election of 1892, the Socialist candidate received 21,512 votes; in the election in 1896 the vote was increased to 36,275 votes. The following two years witnessed an unprecedented spread of Socialist sentiment and in congressional and state elections of 1898 the Socialist candidates received 91,749 votes, an increase of almost 200 per cent in two years. But it must not be assumed that this vote represented the entire political strength of Socialists in the United States. In a number of states the election laws were such that the Socialist ticket could not be placed upon the official ballot, while in many districts the number of Socialists was so small and they were so widely scattered that no nominations were made and the Socialist vote was not polled.

The figures given are sufficient to indicate that in the United States, as in other countries, International Socialism is making tremendous strides and that its seven million supporters, spread over all the belts and zones of the globe, and the most active propagandists ever known, will in the next few years be multiplied into controlling majorities in all lands which have modern industry as the basis of their civilization, Socialism being wholly a question of economic development. This will mean the end of the present capitalist competitive system and the introduction of its economic successor, the Co-operative Commonwealth.

The movement is international because it is born of and follows the development of the capitalist system, which, in its operation, is confined to no country, but by the stimulus of modern agencies of production, exchange, communication and transportation, has overleaped all boundary lines and made the world the theater of its activities. By this process all the nations of the earth must finally be drawn into relations of industrial and commercial co-operation, as the economic basis of human brotherhood.

This is the goal of modern Socialism and it is that that inspires its disciples with the zeal and ardor of crusaders.

So much has been said and written of Socialism by persons who have no proper conception of its origin, its philosophy and its mission, or who, for reasons of their own, have resorted to wilful misrepresentation, that it is not strange that a great many people instinctively shrink from the merest mention of it, and look upon those who advocate this perfectly sane and scientific doctrine as the enemies of society, maliciously plotting to overthrow its cherished institutions.

What is Socialism? To answer in a single sentence, it means the collective ownership by all the people of all the means of wealth production and distribution. It is purely an economic question; the evolution of industry has developed Socialism. Man can only work, produce wealth, with tools. The mere hand tools of former times have become ponderous and very costly machines. These machines, Socialists contend, represent progressive social conceptions. These and the factories, mills, and shops in which they are housed, as well as the lands and mines from which the raw materials are drawn, are used in common by the workers, and in their very nature are marked for common ownership and control. Socialism does not propose the collective ownership of property, but of capital; that it to say, the instruments of wealth production, which, in the form of private property, enable a few capitalists to exploit vast numbers of workers, thus creating millionaires and mendicants and inaugurating class rule and all its odious and undemocratic distinctions.

The Social Democratic party is pledged to equal rights for all without reference to sex, color or other conditions. Equality of rights and opportunities for all human beings is the vital

Freedom Defined According To Social Democracy

A man is free if he has the means of livelihood and is assured in their possession; if he is independent of others.

But if he is dependent upon some other man for the means of earning a livelihood, he is not free.

Freedom is only occasionally a political affair, a civic affair; it is constantly a social affair, a pecuniary affair, an economic affair.

In a democracy no man is free without the means of livelihood.

ECONOMIC FREEDOM THE ISSUE

"If the Venetians had agreed with Garibaldi or with Italy, when they were united to it, that thenceforward all should be guaranteed the means of livelihood, they would really have all freed themselves. If the French revolution had established these conditions the first republic would still be one and indivisible. But the Venetians fancied it was enough to drive out the Austrians; the French thought to end all injustice by beheading the aristocrats."

In the above extract from an article by William Dean Howells the writer suggests the solution of the great labor question, the end for which Social Democrats work. All can be guaranteed the means of livelihood only as Socialism proposes, by the supplanting of the present mode of capitalist production with co-operative or socialized production, which involves the democratic administration of all industry for use instead of profit.

While the profit system lasts and one man is dependent upon another for an opportunity to gain a livelihood there cannot be freedom, no matter what the measure of political liberty enjoyed. The security and happiness of a people never has depended upon mere political rights. No true democracy is possible where mere political rights alone are taken into account. Just as the French "thought to end all injustice by beheading the aristocrats," so the Republican party in the United States hopes to quiet the rising discontent by finding foreign markets for the surplus products of the country, and the Democratic party proposes to behead the trusts. Both proposals are inadequate and must fail, even if both were put into operation.

The great question is one not of more political rights, but of larger economic freedom; every political reform proposed in the Republican and Democratic platforms might be carried out in good faith and to the limit of their possible benefits to the people, and then the question would be untouched, the problem unsolved, the people still groping in economic servitude.

There is a load upon the useful class in society—the working class, burdened imposed upon it by custom, law, and the inhumanities of the capitalist system, which can never be removed by any legislation enacted by a capitalist party. Not until the working class is organized into a party powerful enough to wrest the machinery of government from the control of the employing property class, is there any prospect whatever for the removal of the load. With fine phrases and false promises the class in possession of the modern facilities of production and exchange for profit will attempt, as has always been the case, to deceive and render docile the producers of wealth. But until the latter throw off their lethargy and see the gross injustice of the present mode of producing and distributing things necessary for man's well-being, they may depend upon it that no changes equal to human needs and the demands of a progressive civilization will be sanctioned by the class in control of the productive powers of society.

These changes must be inaugurated by the working class; and in this country a method is at hand to accomplish the first step. That method is to act together as citizens, using the one political right which is more important than all the rest—the right to vote—to hurl all capitalist parties from power, seize the government and transform it from a political bargain shop into an agency for the administration of all industry to nourish, enlighten, liberate and elevate all the people. This is the program and this is the object of the Social Democratic party. It is the only party that squarely confronts the issue of our times and offers the logical and true solution. It is deserving of the support of the tricked and plundered laboring class of this country, and a vote for Debs and Harriman will count, not to maintain the privileges of the rich, but to affirm, and finally win, the rights of the poor.

COULTER'S CHANCE FOR RE-ELECTION

The views of the Brockton (Mass.) Daily Enterprise on the prospects for a re-election of the Socialist mayor of that city, Comrade Coulter, will interest Social Democrats. That paper says:

"In the latter days of August the politician's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of politics, especially locally considered. Within the last few days there has been a lot of talk along the streets on the political questions, and especially on the question of who shall be the next mayor. And it is a tribute to Mayor Coulter to say it is generally admitted that it will take a good man to beat him, and that a man who splits the republican strength to any perceptible degree is going to be beaten. This is the time for the republicans, if they want to win, to get together and unite on somebody who is strong and able and has the confidence of the voters."

AFRAID OF SOCIAL DEMOCRATS

The Essex County (Mass.) Republican has a bad case of fright, all on account of the Socialists. In its issue for August 25, it says:

"There are a crowd of cart tail orators preaching Socialism and anti-imperialism night and day, in the noon hours of the manufacturing establishments, and in the night time around gathering places of the workmen. They are gaining converts more rapidly than is for our good and a check should be put on them by beginning our rallies and awakening a feeling of interest in the issues before us."

"We do not pose as calamity howlers, but it is a shame to permit good men to become tied up in the 'isms' we have so many of, when a small effort in the right direction would turn them to the G. O. P."

"It is not so much for the presidential election that this sentiment will be noticed against us, as in the future state and county contests, when by a sudden move Essex county districts will send socialists to Beacon Hill."

"The socialists are the only live party at present and, without any newspaper talk, they are doing a powerful lot of missionary work. If continued, they will poll the largest vote in the history of their organization this fall."

HOW WORKINGMEN SHOULD VOTE

There is no doubt in the mind of the editor of the Miners' Magazine as to where workingmen should be found in the coming election, as witness the following from the August number:

"The untutored democracy met in Kansas City and nominated candidates for president and vice president, after ignoring the Populists and Silver Republicans."

"We have read the platform and we fail to find one word in reference to the action of President McKinley and Governor Steunenberg in maintaining martial law in the Coeur d'Alenes and compelling workmen to obtain a permit from an employee of the Standard Oil Company and a representative of the state of Idaho before they are permitted to work in the district."

"There is no question of so much importance to the people of the United States as the right to seek employment, and especially working men. Notwithstanding this fact, we see the democrats assemble in convention and ignore it, which is practically an acknowledgment of their indorsement."

"We fail to distinguish any difference between the Republican and Democratic parties."

"Both have failed to do anything for the working people, and in view of this fact we see no reason why working men have any cause for rejoicing over the democratic platform."

"Eugene V. Debs and Job Harriman have done more for the laboring people than all the politicians in the two old parties, and deserve the vote of every workingman of the United States."

The Los Angeles Record tells an interesting story, which just at this time may be of interest to people in this city. When the democrats of Los Angeles were preparing for their recent grand ratification meeting the "finance committee" called on H. Gaylord Wilshire, at present the Socialist nominee for Congress, for a contribution.

"Well," said Mr. Wilshire, "I am a Socialist; why do you come to me for funds for a democratic ratification meeting?"

"Oh," said the speaker of the committee, "the democrats sympathize very strongly with the Socialist movement. We expect many Socialists to vote for our candidate because of our stand regarding trusts."

"All right," said our Socialist friend; "if the democrats are in sympathy with our movement, allow me to speak for ten minutes at the ratification meeting and I will donate $100."

The offer was refused, and soon the story found its way into the papers.—People's Paper, Santa Barbara, Cal.

NOTES AND COMMENT

Does McKinley carry a union card? Or Bryan? Nary! The only union card carried by a candidate for president is in the pocket of Eugene Debs. Make the union card count this year by preparing your ballot for the candidate of the Social Democratic party. This YOU can do in the seclusion of the voting booth. Take the "gaff" of the politician, but vote right.

"Stand by the union label!" Good enough. How about standing by the union card too, boys? Wouldn't that be a good thing to do? There is only one candidate for president who carries a union card. His name is Eugene Debs. The Social Democratic party stands by the label every time. Will trades unionists stand by the union card?

A letter received at headquarters from Comrade H. Bennett of Melbourne, Australia, says there has from the beginning been vigorous opposition to the South African war, a fact that has been systematically suppressed by the capitalist press. The Socialists of the country are unanimously against the course pursued by Great Britain.

Who said something about the freedom of "niggers" in the Philippines? Democrats, of course. And who disfranchised the "nigger" in North Carolina? The Democrats. Are you going to be fooled by Democrats who throttle liberty in North Carolina and babble about it in Asia?

James R. Keene, the Czar of Wall Street and the unchallenged King of speculation, was for McKinley in 1896, he gave $40,000 toward the Republican campaign. Today he is for Bryan. Are YOU going to be fooled again?

There is only one way to bring peace on earth and good will among men. It is by rooting out and casting on the rubbish pile the system that makes war and ill-will by robbing the producers of four-fifths of their product.

"Socialism is not practical." Certainly not; the only practical system is one that robs the working class of all it produces except a dribble of wages to live on. But you'll learn a few things by and by.

If the "ardent Socialists" in the fusion ranks of Kansas (and elsewhere) vote the Social Democratic ticket there will be no division. If there is division the responsibility will be on the "ardent."

A prominent state official of North Dakota declares his belief that Social Democrats will poll over 5,000 votes in that state in November.

IN THE SOCIALIST MOVEMENT

There is a Field for Every Earnest
Thoughtful Man—Come Over and Help Us

Socialists have been hammering away at you to get you to vote for Socialism. Time and again you have been shown clearly that you have nothing to gain and much to lose by voting the old party tickets. Yet despite the simplicity of the Socialist proposition, thousands are yet groping in the dark and despairingly voting first one old ticket and then the other in the vague hope of relieving the terrible condition of things which is plain to them, but whose cause seems to elude them. Thus all around us democrats are turning republican and republicans are voting with the democrats this year—vaguely, pathetically hopeful. What a portentous omen is this surrendering of old political affiliations!

The Rev. G. H. Hepworth of Long Beach, Long Island, is one of the great throng of perplexed, and recently he wrote to Grover Cleveland for an expression of his opinion on the political situation. But Mr. Cleveland declined to do so because, he said, it would not have much weight, and besides, he also said he is by no means free from the perplexities that afflicted thousands of others!

O men! can you not see that it is capitalism which you must smite a mighty blow? Can you not see that it is the real cause of the trouble in the Orient, and, in fact, all over the earth? In the language of the Rev. William T. Brown, "Plutocracy stands squarely across the pathway of the world's progress and must be supplanted with a new and better method. If we could only reach these bewildered ones with simple Socialist literature, so that they could understand that Socialism is not robbery nor yet philanthropy, but simple justice! And we must do this reaching out and educating, for the average daily paper hates Socialism as the devil does holy water, and reading it only strengthens their prejudice. Only lately a Chicago daily called Socialism 'dividing up!' In spite of this tremendous handicap, however, our movement is gaining strength. People are turning with disgust from old-party promises, evasions, subterfuge and clap-trap and welcoming Socialism with open arms and sighs of relief. They have come to the parting of the ways. They now begin to see that Socialism is not a terrible monster, but rather clear-eyed, robust, actually charming on closer view, courageous, and not to be bullied or roughly hustled out of the way—the friend and refuge of those who really desire "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

Reader, did you ever watch the faces of the people on our streets? How few really fine and attractive ones there are! The majority are marred by lines of worry, avarice, greed, despair, discontent, traceable directly or indirectly to our awful competitive system which forces men and women to do things that are not only distasteful but positively immoral. Think of the thousands of adults and children who are seldom able to fully gratify other's hunger and who actually die hungry! Now, suppose these hampering influences were removed and more of co-operation injected into our national life; suppose these harried, wearied wretches could be relieved of the fear of want—assured of work and peaceful plenty as long as they lived. Don't you think the national life would be stronger and higher? Of course it would, for the whole are elevated when ever one person is improved. Then come and help us, for truly the harvest is great and the laborers are few. The people are beset by thieves and robbers, and the priests and Levites are "passing by on the other side," as of old! The Lord's work is being done now, as then, not so much in the great stained-glass temples as outside, by persons who are not of the "elect" and who are actually "unfashionable."

Help us, then, to work for Brotherhood, which is "Religion by her deeper name."

VIVEKA.

THE RISE OF SOCIALISM

fundamental principle of Socialism. It aims to establish economic equality by making all equal proprietors of the means upon which all depend for employment, and without which there can be no "life, liberty and pursuit of happiness." This insures economic freedom for every human being. As no one would have private property in that upon which another depended for employment, industrial mastery and slavery would disappear together and competition for profit would give way to co-operation for use.

The rapidly changing economic conditions are paving the way for the transition from competitive capitalism to co-operative Socialism. Socialists are simply indicating the trend of the evolution, and seeking to prepare the way for its orderly reception. The coming of Socialism is with them not a debatable question. That is not a matter of doubt or conjecture, but a scientific calculation.

The evolution of the social organism is a fact in nature. In the ceaseless process one state of society follows another in the sequence of succession. Capitalism, the present system, was warmed into life in the womb of feudalism and sprang from that medieval system. Within the span of two centuries this system, has practically reached the climax of its development and the marvelous material progress of that period exceeds the achievements of all the centuries since the slaves of Pharaoh built the pyramids.

The rapid centralization of capital and the extensive co-operation of labor mark the high state of our economic development. Individual initiative and competitive effort are becoming less and less possible. The day of small production has passed never to return. Notwithstanding the outcry, trusts and department stores, these great modern agencies, increase in number and power. They are the inevitable outgrowth of the competitive system. The efforts of small capitalists to destroy trusts will prove as fruitless as the efforts of workingmen to destroy labor saving machines when first introduced in the last century.

Socialists take the ground that the trust in itself is not an evil, that the evils lie wholly in the private ownership, and its operation for private profit. The remedy is collective ownership and they propose to transfer all such agencies from private hands to the collectivity, to be managed and operated for the good of all.

Ignoring all such alleged issues as "expansion," "imperialism," "free silver," "gold standard," "protection," "free trade," etc., the Social Democratic party declares that economic freedom is the supreme question that confronts the people. A century and a quarter ago the revolution settled the question of political equality in the United States. But since then an industrial revolution has taken place and political equality exists in name only, while the great mass struggle in economic servitude. The working class are dependent upon the capitalist class, who own the machines and other means of production; and the latter class, by virtue of their economic mastery, are the ruling class of the nation, and it is idle under such conditions to claim that men are equal and that all are sovereign citizens. No man is free in any just sense who has to rely upon the arbitrary will of another for the opportunity to work. Such a man works, and therefore lives, by permission, and this is the economic relation of the working class to the capitalist class in the present system.

In the last century millions of workers were exploited of the fruit of their labor under the institution of chattel slavery. Work being done by hand, ownership of the slave was a condition necessary to his exploitation. But chattel slavery disappeared before the march of industrial evolution, and today would be an economic impossibility. It is no longer necessary to own the body of the workman in order to appropriate the fruit of his labor; it is only necessary to own the tool with which he works, and without which he is helpless. This tool in its modern form is a vast machine which the worker cannot afford to buy, and against which he cannot compete with his bare hands, and in the very nature of the situation he is at the mercy of the owner of the machine, his employment is precarious, and his very life is suspended by a slender thread.

Then, again, the factory and mine are operated for profit only and the owner can, and often does, close it down at will, throwing hundreds, perhaps thousands, out of employment who, with their families, are as helpless as if in the desert wastes of Sahara. The recent shut-down of the American Wire and Steel trust in the interest of stock jobbery presented a startling object lesson of economic dependence of the working class.

The few who own the machines do not use them. The many who use them do not own them. The few who own them are able to exploit the many who use them; hence a few millionaires and many mendicants, extreme opulence and abject poverty, princely palaces and hideous huts, riotous extravagance and haggard want, constituting social scenes sickening to contemplate, and in the presence of which the master hand of Hugo or Dickens is palsied and has no mission.

The Social Democratic party is organizing in every village and hamlet, every town and city of every state and territory of the union. It has held its national convention, its candidates are in the field, and it is appealing to the American people. It will neither fuse nor compromise. It proposes to press forward, step by step, until it conquers the political power and secures control of government.

This will mark the end of the capitalist system. The factories and mills and mines, the railroads and telegraph and telephone, and all other means of production and distribution will be transferred to the people in their collective capacity, industry will be operated co-operatively, and every human being will have the "inalienable right" to work and to enjoy the fruit of his labor. The hours of labor will be reduced according to the progress of invention. Rent, interest and profit will be no more. The sordid spirit of commercial conquest will be dead. War and its ravages will pass into history. Economic equality will have triumphed, labor will stand forth emancipated, and the sons and daughters of men will glorify the triumphs of Social Democracy.

Terre Haute, Ind.

IN THE CITY STREETS

All Mary Paulson asks is a chance to earn her bread. This she has done the greater part of her threescore years and ten. Now the almshouse stares her in the face.

Only a few nights ago this poor old creature slept under the open sky. Now she occupies a dingy cell at the Desplaines street station.

Doubtless the policemen who brought her there considered it an act of charity. Perhaps it was. But to be charged with being "disorderly" when one is simply friendless and homeless seems hard.

Until last week Mrs. Paulson was not without a home. One small room out in North Western avenue was all that her heart desired. She did not think it hardship to work long, hot hours over washtub and board to keep this roof over her aged head.

Last week this poor washerwoman was evicted from the miserable room she called a home. She and her few wretched belongings were set upon the street. Her landlady did not mean to be cruel. She, too, belonged to the laboring class, and if her tenants failed to pay their rent it meant that she might lose her little all.

"I can work as well as any one, even if I do look old," this unfortunate creature told me through her native tongue, through Matron Ahlbeck, whose countrywoman she is. "I may be old, too; but I can work as good as though I was only 25, if I can only get it to do. That is all I want, just work. I have done washing and ironing ever since I came to this country from Norway years ago, and I can support myself, as I always have done, if I can only get places to work in. Then I can again have a room, if I can only find my furniture."

"People are so queer," she announced, as she came and grasped the iron bars for a moment and peered out at me. Then, as she wandered back to her forlorn-looking property, she added: "And they are deceitful, too. They all tell me that they will give me work. Then I am glad, but when I get to their houses they either have no work for any one to do, or they have given it to some one else."

LIEBKNECHT'S FUNERAL

Never Did Kaiser or King Hold Such a Reception at their Death—No Such Scene Ever Before Witnessed in Europe

(Herbert Burrows, in Justice)

The saddest, but at the same time the most glorious and inspiring function I have ever witnessed, is over, and our comrade, Wilhelm Liebknecht is at rest in his honored grave.

Delegated by the Executive Committee of the S. D. F. to attend the funeral, I left London on Friday night accompanied by our comrade, Saunders Jacobs, who had also been appointed to attend by our Stratford branch, Mrs. Jacobs, and their little boy, who was to receive his baptism of continental Socialism. With heavy hearts we arrived at Berlin. To me the sense of personal loss grew keener as we neared Charlottenburg, and it was with a sinking heart that I climbed the stairs to the well-known and modest fourth-floor flat in the Kantstrasse. Many times before had Liebknecht cheerily accompanied me, and now the home he loved so well was desolate. I took with me the wreath, which I had brought from the executive of red and white flowers, with Liebknecht's initials in red geraniums in the center. The dead man's small study, with its piles of papers, where so many well-known men and women had sat and talked with him, was strangely still and silent, and the air was laden with the almost overpowering scent of the innumerable wreaths and flowers which had already been sent from all parts of Europe. By the actual time of the funeral five thousand of these had arrived, and the Berlin postoffice states that never for Kaiser or for king had such a wealth of flowers passed through their hands. Of Mrs. Liebknecht and the family it is, of course, impossible for me more than briefly to speak. In tears they clasped hands and welcomed me as the bearer of affection and sympathy from the England which husband and father had loved so well.

Afterwards I went on to the Vorwaerts office to learn the actual arrangements for the next day. Here, as always, the calm strength of the German Socialist party forcibly struck me. Intense grief, but no hurry, no flurry, everything down to the last detail thoroughly arranged, and work proceeding as quietly and regularly as usual. I learned that from nearly all the countries in Europe representatives had arrived, and that for the morrow an enormous gathering was expected.

And so it proved. Let me say once for all that the whole funeral is indescribable. No written or spoken words can convey any sense whatever of its simplicity, its grandeur, and its strength, for that latter word is the best I can use. From seven o'clock this morning tens of thousands of people from all parts of Germany poured into Berlin, and when we reached Charlottenburg we found a living sea of humanity. Once more we ascended to Liebknecht's rooms to take a last farewell. In his sitting room we found him reposing on the lid of the coffin, covered with wreaths. At his feet the inscription in bronze which was presented to him by his fellow Reichstag members on his seventieth birthday. The body had been partially embalmed, and the face was covered. It would have been sacrilege to have disturbed that covering, and personally I felt that I would rather remember him as I knew him living, with cheery face and laughing eye. A moment we stood, and then we joined at a rendezvous the leaders of the party, the Vorwaerts staff, and the foreign delegates. Then, led by Paul Singer, we wended our way to the house and waited for the sad commencement. Presently hushed hushed noted that Liebknecht had begun his last journey. Never can I forget that journey. We had to march ten miles from the west to the east of Berlin. In long procession 100,000 men and women guarded the body, and in the streets it is no exaggeration to say that a million more must have been present. For the whole of the ten miles, on both sides of the streets, they stood always as deep, and in many instances twenty. As we passed the side streets we saw that as far as the eye could reach they were also full. Every window, and every one of the balconies for which Berlin is famous, had its own crowd.

Even the police, who for once with admirable discretion had almost effaced themselves, leaving to the people the management for one day of their own business, acknowledged that never had Kaiser or king held such a royal reception in their death. No such scene had ever taken place in Europe. Our French comrades said that the nearest approach to it was the funeral of Victor Hugo.

The hearse was followed by the Socialist members of the Reichstag, headed by Bebel and Singer, whose faces were white and drawn with pain. Then came the Socialist municipal councillors, the foreign delegates, the Vorwaerts' staff and representatives from the cities of Germany. It shows the bitter feeling of the bourgeoisie when I mention that not a single member of any of the other political parties in the Reichstag openly attended the funeral. But the dead man did without them, as he had done while living. We were told that there were six bands in the procession but we heard not a drum nor a funeral note. The concourse was too enormous. Nothing for hours but the steady ceaseless tramp of conscious Socialism, and it was the music of that which, could Liebknecht have heard it, he would have valued above all else.

As the evening shadows began to lengthen we learned that ahead of us was another procession of Liebknecht's constituents. A mile from the cemetery gates we found that, with their wives and children, thousands of them (he gained over 60,000 votes at his last election) had lined each side of the road and were waiting for us with bared heads. And so the body of their loved leader, member, and friend passed through a human aqueduct, the living walls of which were his personal friends.

We turned at last into the peaceful dwelling of the dead. The cemetery is a communal one belonging to the city of Berlin, and it was chosen because in it the police had no power to prevent speaking.

Into the little hall, which would only hold about 200 of us, the coffin, a wooden one encased in a massive copper sarcophagus, was reverently carried and placed in an alcove which was embroidered in ivy and laurel and lit by scores of massive wax candles. By this time the growing strain had become intense, and it culminated when from an ante-room we heard the notes of a weird funeral dirge exquisitely sung by an invisible workmen's Socialist choir. The undercurrent of sobs from men and women was almost a relief, for the strain was growing too great to be borne. Gently Singer beckoned the foreign delegates to take their places by him, and then Liebel stepped to the side of the coffin and delivered the funeral oration over the body of him who for thirty-five years had been his closest intimate and friend. Broken by emotion, his words told of the dead man's character and work and of what in him we had lost. Then in quick and brief succession Adler, his spare form quivering with emotion; Lafargue, with passionate declamation for revolutionary Socialism; Gerault-Richard; myself, with our message of sympathy from England; Anseele, with his fervid Belgic eloquence, and comrades from Holland, Denmark, Switzerland, Hungary, Poland, all voiced, not merely lamentations, but hope for the Socialism of tomorrow. Then another dirge, and slowly we took our way to the grave. In the rays of the setting sun the procession twined in and out of the winding paths, and through the green trees the sheen of the coffin and the red of the wreath ribbons gleamed, curiously enough, like a rosy dawn, typical of what the Socialism for which Liebknecht had lived and died should yet be. The closing and impressive oration at the grave was delivered by Singer. Two more songs by the choir, with a growing note of triumph in them, the countless wreaths, their ribbons detached to be given to Madame Liebknecht, were piled in picturesque confusion, and at last Liebknecht, the old soldier of the revolution, was at rest, as he would have wished, under the benedictions of his comrades and friends. For hours the vast crowd filed silently past with bared heads to take the last look at their leader, comrade and friend.

THE POOR MAN'S CHANCES FOR FREEDOM

By William Dean Howells

As to what empowers you to self-sacrifice, renders you responsible, makes you free, it is commonly supposed to be the citizenship of a free country.

But this is very questionable; freedom by no means follows from such a citizenship.

In the first place, there seem to be as yet no free countries in the world; there seem to be only freer countries; and not every citizen of a free country is a free man.

He is a free man if he has the means of livelihood, and is assured in their possession; if he is independent of others.

But if he is dependent upon some other man for the means of earning a livelihood, he is not free.

Freedom, in fact, which in its highest effect is self-sacrifice, and of the skies, is chained to the earth in the question of necessity, as certainly as the soul is chained to the earth in the body.

It is only occasionally a political affair, a civic affair; it is constantly a social affair, a pecuniary affair, an economic affair.

It is true that in a tyranny the richest are not free; but in a democracy not only is no man free without the means of livelihood, but the richer man is always freer than the poorer man, as he is in every state.

The failure of most revolts, even such as have permanently displaced an oppression, has been their failure to recognize this fact.

If the Venetians had agreed with Garibaldi when he came (he did not come in person, of course), or with Italy when they were united to it, that thenceforward all should be guaranteed the means of livelihood, they would really have all freed themselves.

If the French revolution had established these conditions, the first republic would still be one and indivisible.

But the Venetians fancied it was enough to drive out the Austrians; the French thought to end all injustice by beheading the aristocrats.

Even the Americans believed they had ordained universal freedom when they had thrown off their old allegiance to England, abolished titles, given every one the suffrage, and made their prince elective.

In each case something was gained, but it was not liberty for all.

Italy is now a freer country, or at least a freer government, and I do not suppose there are many Italians who would wish back the old despotisms; but probably most Italians under their crushing burden of taxation are now less free than they were under their alien masters.

The Venetians during their demonstration believed that if the Austrians were driven out the people would be free, just as the French during their revolution believed that if the aristocrats were killed the people would govern.

But I fancy none of the gay visions of the Venetians have been quite verified; they have got general progress, but not general prosperity. It is well that the Austrians are away, but the mass of the Venetians are sensibly no freer, have no more freedom of choice, no more power of self-sacrifice, than when the Austrians were in Venice.

We believe that a republic is a freer country than a monarchy; certainly a president is less absurd than a king, as a personification of the popular will, and doubtless such liberty as men now have is safer under democratic forms and with an elective chief.

At the same time it looks very much as if the great mass of people in every existing state were sacrificed to others without the power to sacrifice themselves.—From Chicago American.

SOCIALIST CAMPAIGN SONG

By E. M. Stangland, Chicago.

We are coming, Debs and Harriman, one million voters strong;
We come from shops and mines, from fields and plains with joy and song;
We'll teach the ruling class a point on how to right the wrong,
While we are marching on.

Chorus: Hall the Social Revolution!
Cheer the Peaceful Revolution!
Speed the Coming Revolution—
The Brotherhood of Man.

Men and women, children, too, are crying out for bread,
In their faces hopeless misery and sorrow can be read;
We will tell them to be cheerful, we will say: "Lift up your head,
For we are marching on!"

Our mission is to introduce the glorious commonwealth
And give each one an equal chance in pleasure, work and health;
No dukes nor idle parasites to plunder us by stealth,
For we are marching on.

Our army is composed of men who do the world's work,
In realms of brawn and realms of brain the task we do not shrink;
We have no use for swords or pistols, cannon, powder, dirk,
When we are marching on.

We'll give you, Debs and Harriman, ten hundred thousand votes,
We'll make the welkin ring again with our triumphant notes;
We'll make the politician ask what all this noise denotes
When we are marching on.

The night of competition is about to pass away,
The Brotherhood of Man will bring us all a happy day;
'Twill break the chains of slavery and misery alloy,
And we are marching on.

The day of small things now has passed, the trusts intend to stay,
But our Universal Trust will take the trusts some day;
We'll all be in it, we'll be in it, we'll sing and shout hurrah!
While we are marching on.

Republicans and democrats we equally will doubt,
The one kills niggers far away, the other in the south;
False friends they are to working men we long ago found out,
And we are marching on.

With charity to all mankind and malice toward none,
We yet remember Homestead strike and later Hazelton,
And Bull pens, too—we keep account till victory is won,
While we are marching on.

Then, comrades, let us work and vote for Debs and Harriman,
Roll up the vote, keep up the work from Maine to Rio Grande;
Wage slavery must cease and men be free throughout the land,
For we are marching on.

Chorus: Hall the Social Revolution!
Cheer the Peaceful Revolution!
Speed the Coming Revolution—
The Brotherhood of Man.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF AMERICA

CAMPAIGN OF 1900

THE PARTY.

The Social Democratic Party was organized at Chicago, June 11, 1898. It is the party that elected the first Socialist mayor of American cities, at Haverhill and Brockton, Mass., and in different sections of the country not less than thirty members of the party have been elected to public positions.

ITS METHOD.

Five or more members can organize a branch of the Social Democratic Party. Any reputable person subscribing to the principles of the organization is eligible to membership. Desiring to organize a branch, application should be made to the national secretary for copies of the constitution, which should be placed in the hands of prospective members. In these will be found the declaration of principles, as also the laws of the organization.

ITS OBJECT.

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists. Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism. TRADES UNIONISM. The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for emancipation.

NATIONAL EXECUTIVE BOARD

FREDERICK HEATH, Chairman
SEYMOUR STEDMAN, Secretary
EUGENE V. DEBS, VICTOR L. BERGER
CORINNE S. BROWN

NATIONAL SECRETARY-TREASURER

THEODORE DEBS
No. 126 Washington Street, Chicago.

ITS PLATFORM.

Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex. Public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines. Public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities. Public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells. Reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production. Inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose. Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public. Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible. National insurance of working people against accident, lack of employment and want in old age. Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women. The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by voters. Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

NATIONAL PAPER OF THE PARTY:

The Social Democratic Herald
50 CENTS A YEAR.
126 Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

HEADQUARTERS: 126 WASHINGTON STREET, CHICAGO

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Fifteen cents will purchase Merrie England in the German language, adapted to American needs. If you don't read German, buy one for your friends.

Send in your order now for Ben Atterbury's letter to workmen. Leaflet No. 2; $1 a thousand.

The small 4-page leaflet used by the Chicago comrades is good for any part of the country; 1,000 to any address, postage paid, for 75 cents.

All loyal members of the Social Democratic branches in Washington are hereby requested to communicate with Comrade L. W. Kidd, 1115 Sixth avenue, North, Seattle, Wash.

Socialists willing to assist in forming new branches of the Social Democratic party are requested to communicate with the secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

The comrades at San Antonio, Texas, have nominated a full county ticket and arranged for the publication of a weekly paper. Great enthusiasm prevails and a successful campaign is certain.

The Debs leaflet, at 75 cents per thousand, charges paid, is much the best leaflet for propaganda in some localities. We should receive more orders for them. They are small, but to the point, and will make S. D. P. votes.

Every branch should order a five-dollar bunch of literature, which would include 33 Debs lithographs and 4,000 leaflets. Every Socialist can place a few lithographs where they will make votes for the party and increase the local branch membership.

It is advisable to stamp all leaflets, etc., with the local branch address and time of meeting, in order to get more direct returns for the work of distributing them. Let the voters of your locality know of your meeting, and then provide a good speaker to explain the principles of Socialism.

The Stickers ordered by the national campaign committee are ready and orders can be filled as fast as they come in. They can be furnished only in packages of 500 or more, just as they come from the printer. Five hundred sent to your address by mail for 50 cents. An order for 10,000 has been received from Milwaukee. You will have more fun with this little Sticker than you can imagine. One thousand, $1; in lots of five or ten thousand, 75 cents per thousand.

A number of resolutions adopted by branches East and West refusing to recognize the Springfield executive board organically, have been received at this office. The attitude of a great majority of the branches is unmistakably expressed in these resolutions, but for good reasons no more space will be given to the subject. We are now in the political campaign, comrades. Let us work and wait.

Social Democrats of the Tenth and Eleventh representative districts of Massachusetts, met in mass caucuses Friday evening, August 24, and nominated candidates for the State legislature. Comrades Charles T. Laird and Elroy S. Thompson were chosen in the Tenth district and W. P. Bosworth in the Eleventh. All three are members of Branch 9 at Brockton and have been active workers in the movement.

Social Democrats of the Third Congressional District of Kansas have nominated John G. McLaughlin for Congress. Comrade McLaughlin is a member of the United Mine Workers of America.

Every name proposed by the Social Democratic ticket in Kansas has been approved by a referendum vote and Comrade Clemens stands as the party candidate for governor. Now look out for a mighty interesting campaign.

Social Democracy was well represented in the field on Labor Day. Comrade Debs spoke at Canton, Ill.; Clemens at Kansas City, Mo.; Stedman at Rockford, Ill.; Philip Brown at Sheboygan, Wis.; Strickland at Luddington, Mich.

Our platform, object, methods of organization and "The Man Under the Dray," by Prof. George D. Herron, are printed in the Debs leaflet with a fine picture of our candidate. This leaflet the campaign committee sends out, charges paid for 75 cents per thousand—little above cost.

The portrait of the presidential candidate gives great satisfaction. Thousands have been mailed to branches and comrades in all sections of the country. It should be seen in every community; it informs the observer, directs attention to the party and makes votes. Ten copies, 35 cents; 33 for a dollar; single copy, 10 cents; postage prepaid.

EDWARDS WITHDRAWS

To Social Democrats and Friends of Socialism in the Fifth Illinois Congressional District: Having been nominated by my comrades as a candidate for congress in the Fifth congressional district of Illinois, I beg to thank them once more for the honor thus conferred and to say that I retire in favor of Comrade John Collins, whose candidacy will receive my earnest support and I trust that also of every Social Democrat in the district. A. S. Edwards.

THE WISCONSIN TICKET

An enthusiastic and harmonious convention of Social Democrats was held last Sunday at Milwaukee, Wis., and the following State and Congressional tickets were nominated:

Governor—Howard Tuttle, Milwaukee.
Lieutenant Governor—George Dicke, Michicott.
Secretary of State—Charles C. Meier, Sheboygan Falls.
State Treasurer—John Doerfler, Milwaukee.
Attorney General—Richard Elsner, Milwaukee.
Superintendent of Public Instruction—August F. Buetow, Racine.
Railroad Commissioner—Frank Ellis, Monroe.
Commissioner of Insurance—Max Goeres, Kiel.
For Congressman—Fourth District, Robert Meisner, Milwaukee; Fifth district, Dr. H. C. Berger, Milwaukee.

IN MEMORY OF LIEBKNECHT

At the regular meeting of Branch No. 1, Social Democratic party of America, held in Portland, Ore., the following resolutions were unanimously adopted: "Whereas, The death of William Liebknecht, the Socialist leader of Germany, whose life has been closely identified with the movement for the past half century, is deeply regretted by all Socialists in the United States, and "Whereas, The nomination of Eugene V. Debs for president, and Job Harriman for vice president of the United States by the Social Democratic party of America, demonstrates beyond a doubt the present progress and eventual triumph of Socialism in this country. Therefore, be it

"Resolved by Branch No. 1, S. D. P., Portland, Ore., That we deeply feel and regret the irreparable loss of so good and great a man as William Liebknecht; that history has furnished us no greater character, political or social, the friend and uplifter of down-trodden humanity, the enemy of tyranny, and oppression. Demanding equal rights for all people, despite color, creed or social eminence. Fearless to defy the combined power of kings, armies and courts, when subservient to insolent and self-constituted authority. Promoting and advising peaceful arbitration instead of devastating, cruel war as a means of settling political differences between nations. Demanding and insisting on the rights of labor, to the just and honest share of its products. And finally closing a useful and eventful life, rounded out by 74 years of well doing for his fellowmen. Beloved by the world's masses, who have been are, and will be benefited by his noble example, patient suffering, indomitable courage and fearless will, to know the right and to do it regardless of any and all opposition.

"We, the Social Democrats of Oregon, take this method of conveying to the relatives, friends, and political associates of the great reformer and patriot, our deep sense of the loss the world has sustained in the death of William Liebknecht of Germany. "Resolved that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the 'Vorwaerts,' of Berlin, Germany." T. C. Wendland, H. E. Foetisch, Chairman, Secretary.

TRADES UNIONISM AND THE BALLOT

Organized Labor Has Asked for Public Sympathy—Is Organized Labor Going to Be in Sympathy with Itself at The Polls?

A TRADES UNION BALLOT!

Socialism Proclaims Justice For All and the Socialist Candidate for President Carries a Union Card

By Jacob Huff

One word to organized labor and trades unions—one word without malice or prejudice, but one word in behalf of all who labor without just reward: Are you going to vote the union-labeled ballot this fall? Are you going to be true to your brotherhood when you go to the polls?

Our candidate for president belongs to organized labor and carries the union card. Are you going to support Debs at the coming election?

Organized labor has asked for public sympathy and has requested the public to buy only such goods that wear the union label. Is organized labor, going to be in sympathy with itself?

I belong to no organization. Humanity oppressed is my brotherhood. It is a poor class struggle, where the poor class struggles with itself and against itself. When organized labor fears to go into politics, against the wishes of its employers, then it is favoring capital in its fight with oppressed labor.

I have a friend who is an active member of organized labor. He runs a labor column in a big newspaper. He advises organized labor to stay out of politics, tells them they are not ready and not yet qualified to go into politics.

I write him a letter and show him why I think labor should go into politics. I quote Homestead, and Chicago, and Hazleton, and Pana, and Worden, and the late strike in St. Louis, and prove to him that labor lost the day, in each and every place quoted because labor had not one true friend holding public office. I showed him how a measure to benefit labor was pigeon holed in congress during the last session for the want of a true labor friend, because labor never yet had the manhood to stand up solidly for its friends, because labor breaks in two at the polls, like a broken reed, and no public officer can or dare depend on the support of labor, no odds how faithfully he has served labor in the past.

Well, this member of organized labor did not publish a single quotation from my letter in his next batch of misleading stuff, proving that I had simply quoted facts and that every laboring man with a grain of common sense could see that a strike at the polls was of far greater force than a strike at the factory.

Since that day I have done a whole lot of thinking, and I find myself growing cold and mistrustful towards the leaders of organized labor. Men who write misleading industrial articles for revenue, or who omit the truth when their plutocratic employers demand it, are traitors to their organizations and scab writers to a plutocratic organ.

What right has organized labor to ask for sympathy when they show none to their weaker brethren? How much benefit will the poor wife and mother receive who is wearing out a miserable existence in some foul and dirty sweat shop or factory if I encourage the sale of union-labeled goods? Will my encouragement reach down and benefit this poor, God-forsaken woman? Will any other sympathy towards organized labor reach down and lift up the poor, unorganized victims of this brutal industrial system so long as organized labor wrecks on the rock of partisanship, one-half drifting into the republican boom and the other half into the democratic pond?

The only way to help the helpless is to change the industrial system and give everybody an equal chance.

Socialism will do this. Now, does organized labor desire to benefit the man with pick and shovel and the woman with scrub brush and pail, or have they narrowed their world down to a small fraternity who wear their blouse and button?

The foolish, idiotic idea of labor fighting capitalists for 364 days every year, and then on the odd day going to the polls and voting the country back into

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PRESAGES TRIUMPH OF SOCIALISM

CONCENTRATION; swift and irresistible, is a part—an inevitable part—of the economic development. The individual business man has long since been supplanted by the firm, the firm by the company, the company by the still more powerful corporation, and latterly the corporation has been swallowed up by the trust. And this concentration not only continues in spite of threat and protest, uttered by the thousands ruined or menaced by it, but is steadily accelerated as each revolution increases the momentum of a train rushing downward on a heavy grade.

McKinley thinks it isn't right, and Bryan is certain it ought to be stopped. Why? Because evolution is a crime? No; because the victims are more numerous than the beneficiaries, and they have votes.

One nation after another is becoming a manufacturing nation. The customers of yesterday are the competitors of today. How long will it be before the crisis, international in its scope, is reached?

Social Democracy solves the problem. There is no escape from it. Retarded it may be, and is by ignorance and prejudice, but its triumphant consummation cannot be prevented. All the laws of social and economic evolution are pledged to its supremacy, and the gates of hell cannot prevail against it.

Social Democracy is the only democracy. Our politics are not chainless so long as industry is in fetters.

—Eugene V. Debs in St. Louis Chronicle, Sept. 3, 1900.

the hands of their sworn enemies is too ridiculous for even boys' play—it is the work of traitorous leaders on the minds of helpless men who are grasping at straws.

During the strike at Homestead in 1892 I was threatened with lynch law for expressing sympathy with the strikers in a crowd of republican politicians. That same year many of the Homestead strikers voted the republican ticket, and will do so again this year.

And yet Eugene V. Debs carries the union card, and Socialism promises justice to all. Will organized labor be worthy of public sympathy if the vote for Debs is less than 1,000,000?

Jersey Shore, Pa. Jacob Huff.

EUGENE V. DEBS,
Candidate for President.

PLATFORM OF THE SOCIAL DEMOCRATS.

The Social Democratic party, which is the party of E. V. Debs, is small, but it has advanced opinions.

Its national convention met this year at Indianapolis and began its platform by demanding the revision of "our antiquated federal constitution." Its idea is that the people shall have "complete control of the government, irrespective of sex," which being interpreted means that the Social Democrats are in favor of woman suffrage, as in another plank they say that they are.

In the second place, the Debs party demands that the government, or the public, shall own "all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines." The adoption of this policy would, of course, transfer the right of refining "monopolies, trusts and combines" from the courts to congress. Congress would then have the power to say that a certain industry was controlled by a monopoly or a trust, and proceed to take its property, at a valuation of course, and manage its business.

Without regard to their character as monopolies, the Social Democrats contend that the government shall own all public utilities, specifically railroads, telegraph and telephone companies, all means of transportation and communication, all water-works, gas and electric plants, "gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal and all other mines, and all oil and gas wells." In other words, the government, according to this platform, is to produce all metals and minerals, and is to distribute these and all other products; natural and artificial. What an army of office-holders this would create for bosses and spoilsmen to manipulate!

The platform demands that as the facilities of production increase the hours of labor shall diminish. In some industries one man does the work which ten men did before. The ten men worked ten hours each day. The logical meaning of the Social Democrats is that the one man ought now to work one hour per day. All labor legislation, says the platform, should be national. The party favors the inauguration of a system of public works for the employment of the unemployed, the money for the payment of wages to be borrowed on the public credit. The nation is also to insure "working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age." —New York World.

SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST

In northern zones the raging bear
Protects himself with fat and hair;
Where snow is deep and ice is stark,
And half the year is cold and dark,
He still survives a clime like that
By growing fur, by growing fat.
These traits, O bear, which thou trans-
mittest,

Prove the survival of the fittest.

To polar regions, waste and wan,
Comes the encroaching race of man;
A puny, feeble little lubber,
He had no fur, he had no blubber.
The scornful bear sat down at ease
To see the stranger starve and freeze;
But, lo! the stranger slew the bear,
And ate his fat and wore his hair!
These deeds, O man, which thou com-
mittest,

Prove the survival of the fittest.

In modern times the millionaire
Protects himself as did the bear;
Where poverty and hunger are
He counts his bullion by the car;
Where thousands suffer still he thrives.
The wealth, O Croesus, thou trans-
mittest,

Proves the survival of the fittest.

But, lo! some people, odd and funny,
Some men without a cent of money,
The simple, common human race,
Chose to improve their dwelling place.
They had no use for millionaires;
They calmly said the world was theirs;
They were so strong, so wise, so many—
The millionaires?—There wasn't any!
These deeds, O man, which thou com-
mittest,

Prove the survival of the fittest.

—Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

THE TRUE BASIS OF FREEDOM

Social Democrats the world over understand that the real basis of freedom is to be found only in the passing of the present system of capitalist production and distribution and the inauguration of social production and distribution, in which all men are given equal opportunities in life by the social guaranty of individual access to the means of gaining a livelihood. As William Dean Howells clearly states elsewhere in this paper, no man who is dependent upon another for the means of getting a living, is free. And no party except that whose candidates are Debs and Harriman, the Social Democratic party, faces the real issue of the times. That issue is to make men free, to establish economic freedom. The following extract from "A Summary of the Principles of Socialism," by H. M. Hyndman and William Morris, is of special interest and value:

"Proletariat production—capitalist appropriation, workers make—traders take. Socialized production—individual exchange. Work in concert; exchange at war. Supremacy of town; subservience of country. Overcrowded cities; empty fields. Such are the briefest possible statements of the economical and social forms which result in our present anarchy, not for one class

Freedom Defined According To Social Democracy

A man is free if he has the means of livelihood and is assured in their possession; if he is independent of others.

But if he is dependent upon some other man for the means of earning a livelihood, he is not free.

Freedom is only occasionally a political affair, a civic affair; it is constantly a social affair, a pecuniary affair, an economic affair.

In a democracy no man is free without the means of livelihood.

—William Dean Howells.

alone, though that suffers far the most, but for all. And the system, as a whole, is now world-wide, though in different shapes. Capital dominates the planet, acts irrespective of all nationalities, grabs its profits irrespective of all creeds and conditions; capital is international, unsectarian, destitute of regard for humanity or religion. The proletariat must learn from the system which they have to overthrow to be equally indifferent to class, creed or color, religion or nationality, so long as the individuals sink their personal objects in a resolute endeavor against the common enemy. Unite! for this we educate, to this end we agitate, to achieve a certain victory for all we organize. Unite! Unite! Unite!

"How then would individuality, that unceasing cry of bore and the dullard, be stunted by a system which should leave full play to the highest faculties of every man in return for trifling, pleasant social labor, nay, which should develop those faculties for all classes far more than they are developed today? Under such a system, where mankind collectively controlled their means of production, with machinery ever improving by the genius of their fellows, but used for instead of against the mass of the human race, men would at length be really free in every sense, economical, social and political, save that they would no longer possess the freedom to enslave and enslave their fellowmen. Individuality is crushed today in every direction. The poor slave to the machine, the overworked hind or domestic drudge have no time for individuality, no strength left for their own education or development. Under our present system there is no individuality for the mass of mankind.

"Our first principle as Socialists is that all should be well fed, well housed, well educated.

"We appeal to men and women of all classes, all creeds and all nationalities to join us in the struggle wherein none can fail, to prepare for themselves and children a nobler, higher lot than has hitherto been theirs, and to pass on to countless generations that joy, that beauty and that perfect contentment which can arise from true Socialism alone."

Reader, in joining the Social Democratic movement, which is international, you are following the path trod by such beautiful characters as William Morris, who, as has been aptly remarked, "could have been willing to call himself a 'sociologist' instead of a Socialist."

Hurrah for Debs and Harriman and "the scientific organization of labor and the universal brotherhood of man!"

In the south of Russia, where about 20,000,000 Ruthenians live, there has been formed a new Socialist party, which has issued its programme. They wish to form a republic, and the articles of their programme are similar to those of the Socialists of the west. They state that they will act in concert with the Socialists in Poland and in Austrian Galicia. A newspaper—which will have to be published secretly—will soon appear, and it is to be called the Robitnyk (the Worker).

THE WHITE SLAVES IN COTTON MILLS

White Women of New England Work Under Conditions Worse than the Black Slaves of the South Under Chat-tel Slavery

DOES IT APPEAL TO YOU?

Fines are Substituted for the Whip and Death Involves no Loss to the Capitalist Master

By Jerry Knox.

The women of New Bedford will supply a chapter rather interesting to America when the time comes for writing truthful history. "Once," the historian will write, "we used in America to whip black women in the South. They were employed to pick cotton. They received no wages, so the plan to get work out of them was to whip them when they were careless. A severe whipping was found efficacious (says the New York Journal).

"The negroes at first would show sulkiness. When the time for whipping came she knelt and begged for mercy. During the whipping she screamed. After the whipping she was a much more valuable slave. She did her work carefully, and other negroes, observing her punishment, avoided her bad example.

"Nothing apparently could have been more satisfactory. But the people of the North, though entirely ignorant of the needs of cotton growing, interfered. The scream of those negroes so worked on their nerves, particularly in New England, that they fought for four years to stop slavery. And they were pleased with the result, although it cost millions of lives and thousands of millions of dollars.

"The American nation talked a good deal after that about American treatment of women, and much of this talk came from New England.

"Great surprise, therefore, when in 1898 an attempt was made to reduce to starvation wages by 10 per cent revealed a similar system of women treatment in New Bedford.

"Again the cotton industry was involved. White workers the women in this case. Great competition among cotton manufacturers, and mills paying about 10 per cent profits. A system discovered far better and cheaper than slavery.

"Instead of owning the worker, feeding her and taking care of her as valuable chattel, she was hired. She fed herself. Her sickness or death meant no loss. Invariably she sacrificed herself to her children, supplying workers to take her place at the loom when she should take her place in the grave.

The mill owners, by agreement, paid as little as would let the workers live and breed more mill hands.

"It was ideal. The slavery system was costly extravagance compared to it.

"And the getting of the most work was not difficult. The whip, of course, had been laid aside. After the grand national howl about the screaming negroes the whip could not be thought of. In the first place the mill owners were too refined to think of using it, and in the second place they would have been lynched if they had tried.

"But something, of course, had to be done. The tired woman, watching eight looms, working hard all day with an aching back, with tired eyes and brain and heart, would get careless. Her wages—$4 or $5 a week—seemed to inspire very little ambition in her. What should keep every particle of energy in that white woman centered in the mill owner's interest? That was the great problem. A genius solved it very simply by the system of fines. It worked thus:

"The white woman at the loom, aged from 15 to 60, was watched, by overseers. These made note of her conduct. If she looked up at the wrong moment, if through fatigue or unskillfulness she injured a piece of the precious merchandise passing through her hands, there was a ready lash that cut deeper than the old-fashioned blacksnake.

"Going for her pay she received instead of $4, perhaps $3.42. Fifty-eight cents deducted for fines," the clerk would tell her. "No explanation; please pass along."

"The white woman, whipped in this modern civilized manner, acted alto-

THE FOUR BEASTS

The antagonisms among men are due to four thieves; we call them Rent, Interest, Profit and Wages. These thieves have human society in their grip and every interest of mankind is subject to their depredations and malevolent influence.

All institutions of whatsoever kind, from which higher conditions of civilization are expected to evolve, are victimized and their best efforts rendered only partially fruitful or altogether fruitless by these social marauders and murderers of whatever things among men are pure and of good repute.

Not one division of society alone, but all are more or less the willing and manacled subjects of these four thieves.

That there exists in human society today a division into classes, each competing against the other for the possession of power or of what the other had previously competed for, is a condition brought about by the four thieves.

The great dividers are Rent, Interest, Profit and Wages. They have been more productive of human misery than war, pestilence and famine. More than that, they have been the procuring causes of famine, pestilence and war.

The road which humanity has traveled is strewn with the sacrificial offerings of men, women and children to this four-headed beast, and notwithstanding the awful warning which past devastation presents to thinking minds, the people of all classes still permit the ruin to continue.

History teaches them no lesson; experience fails to enlarge their view or beget wisdom, and Rent, Interest, Profit and Wages are not only the living progenitors of a dead offspring, but also the ruling and ruining powers of the present generation.

The four thieves persist while the people perish.

Competition has passed into selfishness and has generated its own destroyer in monopoly.

The vulgar rich and the arrogant mob of plutocracy, with a majority of the capitalist hirelings of the country who love the clank of their chains, have bowed down with blind reverence to the golden image whose Briarean arms are Rent, Interest, Profit and Wages.

But the relief the blind rich mob has promised, the relief the blind poor mob expect, will not come, and in the result capitalism has only deepened the grave it has been digging and into which it must eventually fall.

A brief inflation may be "arranged," something of a "boom" may be started, but the boom will burst and prosperity will again turn to ashes.

The people are as certainly doomed to the bitterest disappointment as an unarmed and defenseless man in an Indian jungle full of tigers is doomed to die.

Why? Because the four beasts of the jungle of trade and commerce—Rent, Interest, Profit and Wages—are left to blight and slay in the future as in the past.

Vote the four beasts down!

DENIALS AND AFFIRMATIONS.

The Social Democratic party denies that capital privately owned is a social blessing.

It denies that indolence is a source of wealth.

It denies that the poor are growing rich.

It denies that wages provide for the wealth producers more than a bare subsistence.

It denies that private ownership of capital any longer accomplishes the best results for society.

The Social Democratic party affirms that the separation of men into laborers and capitalists is the chief factor now operating against progress.

It affirms that private ownership of the means of life (capital) is a social crime.

It affirms that wage labor, which creates wealth, creates it not for the working class, but for capitalists.

It affirms that with ever-increasing facilities applied to wealth production, there is ever-decreasing opportunity for the people to gain a livelihood.

It affirms that the last named condition, far from being capable of solution by the present system of wage labor, must of necessity grow worse.

It affirms that social evolution, past and present, gives unerring proofs of the final establishment of industrial peace and social justice, which is Socialism.

It appeals to workingmen to help destroy the capitalist system by voting the Social Democratic ticket.

GREETINGS FROM ENGLAND

The independent labor party of Great Britain offers fraternal greeting to our comrades and brethren of the United States of America and cordially wishes success to Debs and Harriman during the presidential campaign. They also desire to emphasize the fact that only when workmen wrest political power from the present ruling classes and substitute Socialism for wage slavery will poverty and war be abolished and white-robed peace and smiling plenty, as heralded by divine dreamers in all ages, fold their wings and be at rest in a contented and fraternally governed world.

J. Keir Hardie,
Chairman of the Independent Labor Party.

DEBS' CAMPAIGN

It is necessary that arrangements for Comrade Debs' meetings be made in advance. His campaign will take in many of the principal cities, but in all cases where comrades and friends are expecting him they should communicate immediately with Secretary Seymour Stedman, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

NOTES AND COMMENT

Vote for McKinley or Bryan and you vote for the capitalist system.

For a system that suppresses the individuality of the working class.

For a system that destroys the home and breaks up the family.

For a system that divides up social wealth and deprives those who produce it of a just share.

For a system that reduces men to a dead level through the wage system.

For a system that destroys the incentive to labor and also the opportunity.

For a system that denies the right of property to those who produce it.

All this and much more a vote for Bryan or McKinley does.

The Iowa judge who the other day declared that a labor union is a trust, basing his decision on the ground that labor is nothing more than a "commodity" and that part of the state constitution that declares any organization undertaking the "regulation of any commodity" a trust or pool, has rendered a decision that will probably open the eyes of the blind to the necessity of political action. When capitalist courts put the working power and skill upon the same legal footing with the mere things which that skill and power produce, it is time for wage slaves to think.

The Austrian Socialists' congress in session at Gratz declared in favor of making the establishment of old-age pensions, as well as pensions for laborers incapacitated for work, compulsory. The measure is intended to protect workmen in both large and small industries of every kind—transportation, mining, domestic service and agriculture. Minimum pension should amount to half of the recipient's actual wages. The old-age pension, it is specified, should begin at the age of 60, and that for invalided workmen at the date of their incapacitation.

A copy of an Italian Socialist paper, L'Agitazione, has come to this office. On the first page nearly three columns of space contain no reading matter whatever, nothing but the white paper, while the second and third pages are similarly lacking in what was, doubtless, good Socialist propaganda matter. The paper appears just as the government censor allowed it to go to press in the land that produced Mazzini and Garibaldi.

While the republican and democratic parties have been see-sawing for office and making "good times" or "hard times," what has the working class been getting? Homestead, Spring Valley, Cripple Creek, Coeur d'Alene, Pullman, New Bedford, Hazleton, Oshkosh, Pana and Idaho's republican-democratic bullpen! Are you going to vote for more bullets and bull-pens or for freedom?

Vote for a principle this year and not a capitalist ready-made issue. Vote for Socialism if you are a Socialist, not for a mere man, like Bryan, who denies that he is a Socialist. If you have a conviction that Socialism is right, assert it at the ballot box.

The bottom fact in human progress is that men have been forced from savagery to civilization by their common need for food, raiment and shelter. The infamy which trails over all progress is that the class which has created food, raiment and shelter has been shut out from the full enjoyment of the fruits of their toil.

When some wisehead of the old parties raises the frivolous objection that Socialism would destroy the incentive to labor, remind him that the capitalist system takes from the people the opportunity to labor. This is amply proven by overwhelming facts. What is incentive worth when opportunity is gone?

If Bryan were elected he never would be able to settle any question at home or abroad that involved the commercial interests of the Crokers, Whitneys, Olneys, Joneses, Clarks, Hills and other "good" capitalist democrats. Any man with half an ounce of brains should see that.

There is only one real democratic party in the field with Socialists nominated for president and vice-president. It is not the Bryan party, but the Social Democratic party. It stands for Socialism; the Bryan party stands for capitalism. Vote for Debs and Harriman.

There is no Socialism in the democratic platform, none in the democratic candidate and none in the democratic party. If you want Socialism you must vote for Debs and the Social Democratic party. Mr. Bryan is an individualist supporting a capitalist system.

The locked-out workmen are "class conscious"—conscious that they belong to a class whose stomach-walls are flapping like a barn door. But a vote for "anti-imperialism" will fit that—and also the Wardner "bull pen." Yes it will—try it and see!

The industrial system, which has been defended on the ground of individual liberty and individual initiative, is now admitted to be a system in which there is no liberty for millions and initiative only for millionaires.

Get into a progressive movement, man, and stand for something that no capitalist or capitalist politician wants. Join the Social Democratic party, which stands for the next necessary step in social and industrial evolution.

In Adam Smith's day it was considered a wonderful achievement for ten men to make 48,000 pins in a day; now it is quite an ordinary thing for three men to make 7,500,000 pins of vastly better quality in the same time.

The capitalist class relies upon the working class to support either the republican or democratic national ticket. That is a good enough reason why the working class should support neither, but vote for Socialism.

To keep slaves ignorant of their condition is the chief requirement for the perpetuation of slavery. The requirement is met by capitalist newspapers and politicians howling "prosperity."

The Building Contractors' council of Chicago has entered into a conspiracy to boycott the woodworking firms who sign an agreement with the woodworkers' union.

"Five Powers Agree—Pekin Looted" was a big headline in the Chicago Record a few days ago. That headline can stand stripped of all paragraphic adornment.

The policies of the republican party produce beggars and protect capitalist bullies. And the policies of the democratic party? Not one whit better.

What with killing miners in Idaho, negroes in New York, Chinese and Filipinos, our great Christian nation is cutting a wide swath.

The regular shooting of coal miners by order of the plutocrats seems to have temporarily stopped while the plutocrats "save the country" again.

Doesn't it seem odd that McKinley don't open a lot of those trust mills that are closed? Maybe he has lost his jimmy.

The 17,500 cotton-mill workers in Fall River, Mass., recently had an aggravated case of "prosperity." Ask them.

Many a poor man's alleged mind is fearful for the success of his favorite old party. It makes so much difference to him!

When in doubt take a g. o. p. gold-standard capsule or a "paramount-issue" democratic pellet.

For "that tired feeling" there is nothing like shouting "Prosperity at home and prestige abroad."

There are mansions in the skies for the poor who build mansions on earth.

POSERS FOR BRYAN FROM A SOCIALIST

A Batch of Pertinent Questions by Eugene V. Brewster that the Neb-raskan and Anti-Socialist has Not Answered

STICKERS FOR STEP-AT-A-TIMES

(Mr. Brewster, having left his high place in the democratic party and declared himself a Socialist, sent Mr. Bryan the following letter. The questions are sufficiently pertinent to entitle them to be put in permanent form.)

Here are a few questions for my old and esteemed friend, Mr. W. J. Bryan:

1. Some of your followers claim that your doctrines are a step toward Socialism. Is this true or untrue? When asked if you believed in Socialism you answered in writing, "No." Do you not hope and believe, then, that your program is a step away from Socialism?

2. You say that you are opposed to trusts and would crush them. You believe in competition. Is not the post-office business the greatest trust and the most complete monopoly? If so, would you destroy it and go back to competition, where every man is to deliver his own mail?

3. Do you believe in economy—in eliminating waste, in doing away with useless labor, in getting the greatest good from mother earth with the least possible effort? If so, how can you consistently destroy the trusts, which are rapidly doing all this? If not, why don't you propose to destroy all improved machinery also?

4. Do you know that competition means enormous waste—means parallel railroads, useless clerks and drummers, wasteful advertising, innumerable small and needless plants, etc.? If you are a friend of labor why put it to all this useless work? If you simply want to give employment (regardless of its usefulness) why not hire men to dig holes and then hire them to fill them up again?

5. Do you believe in land monopoly? If not, why not say so?

6. Do you believe that the tools of production should be owned by a class who do not use them or did not make them? And do you not see that the monopoly of these tools has made labor dependent upon this class of work, and therefore existence?

7. Do you really want to destroy the money lender? If so, must you not destroy interest? And if you would destroy interest, why don't you favor letting the government issue and lend all money direct to the people without interest?

8. Are you really opposed to wars? If so, why did you enlist? If not, why not?

9. You are opposed to imperialism. Do you believe in capitalism? If so, you must know that wars and imperialism are necessary to capitalism. If not, why do you not say so, and show how you would remove the capitalist system and what you would substitute?

10. Are you satisfied with the present wage system, which is turning out such as the man with the hoe? If you are, how are you going to make the slave owners give to their slaves anything more than a mere living wage? If you are not, what other system than universal co-operation do you propose?

11. You speak of workmen as producers. Is the producer entitled to his product or not? If he is, how do you propose to get it for him? If he is not, how are you going to prevent an idle rich class that you so much condemn?

12. Do you believe in a system that permits a large class to consume without producing? If not, what other system do you favor? Or, how do you propose to make them produce?

13. In 1896 you said you wanted free silver because it meant rising prices. You say you still want free silver. Do you want any higher prices than we have now?

14. You say the trusts have arbitrarily raised prices to the consumer, and you would therefore destroy the trust. Do you want higher prices or lower prices, Mr. Bryan?

15. You say free silver is a blow at the money lender and a favor to the money borrower. In which, if either, of these classes does the wage earner belong, and if to either, how will it benefit him?

16. If free silver means double the volume of money, and this means double prices (according to your quantitative theory), and if the holdings of the monopolistic capitalists are mostly invested in land, machinery and commodities, and if these are all to be doubled in price, how would free silver be a blow at monopoly?

17. Granting that free silver means rising prices, and admitting that wages are always the last to rise, which you of course admit, when will labor benefit by free silver and how much more will his increased wage buy of the high-priced necessities?

18. Granting that the theory of bimetallicism is sound; granting that 16 to 1 is the proper ratio; granting that we need more money and that bimetallicism will yield more; granting that it will make rising prices and that rising prices mean better times and better (money) wages; granting that the bullion price of silver would soon rise to the mint price, making a 100-cent dollar, while we now have less than a 50-cent dollar—granting all this, and we believe it to be true—show me, if you can, how there can possibly be any more prosperity under bimetallicism than there is today. We now have about all the prosperity we can possibly have under the present wage system. Can there be any other than a class prosperity under this system?

19. You say you believe in equality, but you say it means only equality before the law. Don't you believe also in equality of opportunity? If so, how can this be when nearly all the means of production are owned and controlled by the capitalist class? To have an equal opportunity should not these social implications be owned by the collectivity—by all?

Do you believe in a step at a time in the industrial evolution? If so, won't you admit that everything points to combination, to solidarity, to co-operation, and that competition and individualism are doomed? If so, if you would take a step at a time, shall you take a step forward or backward? Are you now stepping backward by seeking to destroy these marvelous industrial organizations known as trusts? Can you not see that they are both proper and natural, that their present evils are due only to mismanagement by the few when they should be a blessing to the many—to all? Can you not see the inevitable finality of the trusts, that they are permanent, indestructible features, and that their natural and final place is beside the first and greatest of all, the post-office trust?

Curse not then the trust makers, because they are, unconsciously, perhaps, doing the world a great benefaction. To quote from the Scripture (1 John ii: 11): "He that hateth his brother is in darkness and walketh in darkness and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes."

Eugene V. Brewster.

MASSACHUSETTS PICNIC

The branches in the eleventh congressional district of Massachusetts, including Jamaica Plain, Roxbury, Roslindale, Dedham and Hyde Park (all loyal), will hold a picnic on Sunday, Sept. 23, at Oakland grove, East Dedham. This beautiful grove is situated on the banks of a branch of the Charles river, has plenty of level, cleared space, as well as shade, a handsome pavilion, booths and swings, and is only three minutes' walk from the electric cars. For a 10-cent fare it can be reached from any part of Boston, or from Malden, Everett, Cambridge and Somerville, changing cars at Forest Hills for Boyden square, East Dedham. It can also be reached from Quincy and Brockton, via Milton Lower Mills, for 15 and 20 cents respectively. There will be addresses by Mayor Coultas of Brockton, F. O. MacCartney, Dr. Gibbs and others. The tickets are 35 cents with refreshments and 25 cents without. The latter price is made for the benefit of those in the neighborhood who may want to come in after dinner for the sake of hearing our speakers. The proceeds will go to the national campaign fund, and affords a good and sufficient reason why every comrade should do his utmost to make the picnic a financial success. However, were it to be a financial success only, it would deserve, as a Socialist picnic, to be classed as a failure. While we hope to make money for the campaign fund, we are still more anxious to make it an occasion for cultivating and developing that feeling of solidarity, of mutual helpfulness, interest and comradeship which distinguished our organization before it was disrupted by "union." It is true that we are a political party, but God forbid that we should therefore degenerate into a party of politicians. It is a danger to be avoided as we would avoid the plague. Let us upon this and every other possible occasion seek to kindle and to keep alive among our new recruits, as well as our older members, the genuine spirit of comradeship and of disinterested devotion to the cause for its own sake alone, and to arouse the desire and confirm the purpose in each other to apply the principles we profess in our platform and demands to the carrying on of our organization and to our own personal characters and our relations with our comrades and our party. They talk about "Christian character." Why is it not proper to talk of "Socialist character," a character whose foundations should be justice, love of liberty, equality and comradeship, fidelity to principle and loyalty to the highest we know? If we can gather our loyal comrades together in this spirit our picnic will be a real success, whether we make many dollars or few.

Margaret Haile.

If some people would devote one-tenth as much time and energy to reading up on the principles of Socialism as they do to consuming large quantities of bad liquor and acquiring the inevitable "bust-head" the next day, they would soon be thorough Socialists. Yet these folk stand around and say, "Can it be done?" and then vote for "the lesser of two evils!"

CONDITION OF MINERS IN DAYS OF "PROSPERITY"

Winifred Black, the newspaper correspondent, has been investigating the condition of the miners in Pennsylvania and has this to say of workmen who are being forced to strike to live:

I have been among those suffering miners who are about to strike for the right to live. I have visited them in the mines which they call homes, have seen how they exist, how they are cheated and down-trodden; how they are forced, against the law, to pay tribute to the piratical company stores.

Every half mile or so in the mining region of Pennsylvania there is a hole in the ground, a yawning, black hole, and near it are the dumps and screens of the mines. Clustered around the yawning hole are the houses where the miners live. They are in every instance hideous sores upon the beautiful landscape.

The best of them are sheds that would disgrace any farmer's stable. The most of them are horrible sties, unfit for a decent pig to live in. They are, for the most part, built in barrack style, so that no man may have a roof to himself and his family, but must burrow with a hundred others.

The miners are of so many nations and of so many kinds. It is with the Americans that I had the most to do. Big, simple-hearted giants they are for the most part, with faces full of patient resignation that sets ill on the American visage. The woman-kind of these American miners are worn and haggard.

The children—there are no children in the mines. Little creatures there are, creatures who look like dwarfed images of their parents. But in all my seeing of the miners of Pennsylvania I never saw a laughing or crowing baby.

Time and again I saw a toddling creature and went up and spoke to it, only to have it turn and look at me with the eyes of old, old, anxious, worried men and women. I saw the women. They all talk alike.

"Do we women want the men to stay out on strike? Yes, we do. We'll starve anyway, so we'll take the chances. I've got eight children. My man makes sometimes $12 a pay, and sometimes $10 a pay, and sometimes $16 a pay. A pay is for two weeks' work, you know. "Live? How do we live? We eat meat once in a while. Now we pick berries, and we make bread and do the best we can. So what's the use? Strike? Yes, I believe in it. If my man went to work I'd lock him out of the house."

FREESPEECH AND DEMOCRATIC GOVERNMENT

To have a free exercise of their religious beliefs, to be freed from extortionate taxation without a voice in the law-making assemblies and an opportunity to express themselves freely on all subjects, led our forefathers, the Puritans, to seek an asylum on New England's bleak and unwelcome shore over three hundred years ago.

From their toil and patriotism has sprung a great nation, "the land of the free and the home of the brave."

They made for themselves a home and a new government, a government that we all idealize; it is "a government of the people for the people by the people."

It was intended to be a government that would satisfy the governed in every essential feature. The constitution was not intended to remain forever unchanged, but was to change as the people desired, and the many amendments already adopted show how the people have progressed.

As a people advance in ideas and accomplishments, so their government must advance in steady union or become a menace to the nation's peace.

China may be pointed to as a country whose people advanced beyond the laws and customs of their rulers, but dared not, till recently, force a change of government to suit them.

Let a government abridge the right of free speech of its subjects and progress is handicapped in a like proportion.

Where despotism reigns and the government becomes unbearable to its subjects civil war results, and of the very worst kind; but where freedom of speech is allowed a change may, and often does, take place just as important and effective, while it is a peaceful change, with all the horrors of war wholly averted.

A man who dares not speak his mind freely, though it be in opposition to the existing government, is a slave to that government and not a free citizen thereof.

European nations are never truly at peace except in name, nor will anarchy ever be rooted out by tyranny. Class legislation and tyrannical rulers will forever breed anarchy.

France's civil war, the most bitter struggle between citizens of a country for freedom of speech that the century has seen, was the result of unbearable oppression of one class upon another keeping them in political bondage.

Russia is ever hearing the internal mutterings of discontent rising from her desperate and almost enslaved subjects, while anarchy is, like a wolf, clutching at her throat.

Even the great religious denominations have come to see that people will progress in ideas and are determined to express them, therefore to maintain their membership they find it necessary to break down many traditional barriers and grant liberty of thought and action in their ranks.

I notice in a recent paper a comment on the assassination of King Humbert of Italy, in which the writer goes so far in his censure of anarchists and their crimes that he thinks all speech which is against a government should be suppressed and the speakers treated as criminals.

Now, that kind of talk savors somewhat of tyranny and despotism. True, a monarchy would not long exist if every one could speak as he thought, but to hear this from an American citizen is truly surprising.

In time of our civil strife John Brown was deemed a criminal and forfeited his life, and William Lloyd Garrison, for his too open opposition to slavery, was dragged through New York's streets; but who will deny the justness of the cause they supported?

They foolishly employed improper methods too soon, and, like the assassin of King Humbert, received the censure of the world.

Humbert was doubtless a good ruler as monarchs go, but the people are not satisfied and only a few dared show this to the world, and they are classed as anarchists. Give them a right to remove their rulers by law and the killing of kings will cease. Give them free speech and they will progress.

Could the executive officials censure our every utterance that criticizes their official acts it would not be long ere laws would be for the classes and not for the masses, resulting in an oligarchy.

Anarchy, when riot and bloodshed results, is terrible to think of, and, like civil war, should be avoided; but freedom of speech and liberality in law-making will do more to satisfy a people than all the prisons you can build.

Anarchy cannot exist where all are happy and content, therefore, look after the people who are dissatisfied and legislate for them, not against them.

MASSACHUSETTS' LOYAL BRANCHES HEARD FROM

The loyal branches of Massachusetts have organized and will carry on their work of educating and organizing as heretofore. This step is a protest against the corrupt methods by which a few have attempted to override the decision of the majority of the party and against the degradation of the sacred cause of Socialism, for which so many brave comrades in other lands have gone to prison and to death, to the level of ordinary American ward politics.

At the time of our state convention many comrades supposed that political co-operation and not organic union with the anti-Deleoneites was all they were committed to, and were satisfied. But the same week the two state conventions met and organized as one committee, and "organic union" was heralded far and wide. Still there were some who believed that the vote on the conference committee's report would fall so far short of a majority that it would never be heard from again. But it was announced, and with a great flourish of trumpets, 1,000 was declared to be an overwhelming majority of 7,000. Even after this, so reluctant were our members to believe ill of their brother Socialists, some of them maintained that the new headquarters would never be set up. Nevertheless, they were set up, and their faith in the honest intentions of the so-called unionists was shattered.

Following close upon this came a circular from the new party's headquarters offering a new charter in exchange for the one now held by each branch, and blandly informing the comrades how their branch would in future be designated. Then our comrades began to get mad. Next they were startled by the announcement of a tax of 5 cents per month per capita, which had been levied by the joint state committee without having been submitted to referendum. Next they heard that the joint state committee had ordered $50 worth of due stamps from the new party's headquarters, buying them at 5 cents each and retailing them at 10 cents to the branches which should transfer their allegiance to the new party. In other words, the joint state committee of Massachusetts had become the agent of the Springfield party, with a 50 per cent profit as an incentive to activity.

It is true the 5 cents profit was to be taken by the state committee in payment of the tax of 5 cents per capita per month above mentioned, levied without consent of the membership; but with its $50 worth of Springfield stamps on hand, to be disposed of at 50 per cent profit, it was not at all surprising to find, as we did, that when new branches sent to the state committee for applications for charter in the S. D. P. it was the new party's application which was sent to them, though the other one was desired.

In view of all these circumstances, on Sunday, Sept. 2, at the call of two branches (Rockland and Whitman), to their credit, be it spoken, at only ten days' notice, loyal members from all over the state gathered at 724 Washington street, Boston, in mass conference, to discuss the situation and determine upon their future course. Twenty-three branches were represented and nine others, which were unable to send representation, have assured us of their loyalty. A clear majority, therefore, of the branches of the state are staunchly loyal to the original S. D. P., as represented by the N. E. B. at Chicago.

And this majority, these thirty-two branches, are represented on the state committee (of twenty-four members) by just one loyal member, who got on accidentally through a slip of "the machine" at the state convention.

It did not take the assembled loyal comrades long to decide that it was the sense of the conference that they should organize a central committee, which should hold the branches together and keep them in touch and working harmoniously together. As to the kind of committee, there was considerable discussion. Many wanted a state committee, holding that the formation of a new party ought not to be allowed to deprive the original party of a state committee. The majority, however, were satisfied with asserting their absolute right to have a state committee of their own if they so chose, and, voluntarily yielding that right for the present, in the interests of a harmonious campaign, decided upon an organizing committee instead.

The following were then elected to constitute this committee: F. O. MacCartney, Dr. Gibbs, Charles E. Lowell, Charles H. Coulter, Charles W. White (Jamaica Plain branch), W. E. Dixon of Mendon, Hart of Everett, W. C. Soper of Rockland and Margaret Haile.

S. E. Putney, secretary of the joint state committee, came into the conference, claiming to be "loyal" on the ground that his branch had paid last quarter's dues to Chicago, and used his best endeavors to bring about a postponement of action; but this conference was well informed, and all his arguments rolled off the resolute crowd like hailstones off the gilded dome. Although a large proportion voted for the amendment to have a state committee, when the original motion favoring an organizing committee was put it was carried without a single dissenting vote.

The matter of a national organizer was then taken up and it was voted that this conference favored co-operation with the N. E. B. in putting a national organizer in the field for the original S. D. P., and over half of our share of the necessary amount was raised on the spot, the balance to be paid out of the regular quarterly dues of the loyal branches, which the conference advises the branches to empower the organizing committee to select.

The selection of the national organizer was left to the committee subject to referendum vote. The choice of the committee coincides with that of the national executive board, and the nomination of Comrade MacCartney only awaits the ratification of the loyal branches.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted amid much enthusiasm: "We, the members of the loyal branches of Massachusetts, in conference assembled, believe that a national organization is a necessity for the harmony and solidity of the Socialist movement and that it will be supreme in all party matters."

"We, therefore, accept the referendum of May 8 as binding both on state and local organizations, and declare that it should be considered final till repealed."

"We believe the N. E. B. at Chicago during the two years of its existence has stood for a broad and tolerant Socialist movement and true to the fundamental principles of Socialism. We therefore unequivocally affirm our allegiance to the N. E. B. at Chicago."

"We pledge our support to Debs and Harriman as national candidates, and endorse the state ticket nominated at Boston July 8."

As this was a mass conference, it was voted that the proceedings be submitted to the branches for referendum vote.

The conference then adjourned, the comrades feeling thoroughly satisfied with the afternoon's work, as well they might be, having demonstrated their independence of thought, their loyalty to their ideal of a Socialist party run upon Socialist principles and their ability to grasp and hold the conceptions of a grand national movement, which shall unite New England and the far West, vast Texas and the states on the great lakes, in the onward march towards national and international Socialism.

ILLINOIS CAMPAIGN

WHAT CAN YOU DO?

To all Socialist organizations, Turner societies, trade unions and all other associations in sympathy with the Socialist movement in Illinois, greeting:

The Socialist movement of this state is united politically and has one ticket, with Eugene V. Debs and Job Harriman as our presidential candidates. With a desire to make the campaign successful, we solicit your co-operation and financial assistance. We therefore request a contribution proportionate to your ability to give, either in a single sum or in weekly contributions during the campaign. Please send all contributions to Frederick G. Strickland, secretary, either care Workers' Call, 36 North Clark street, or care Social Democratic Herald, 126 Washington street.

Philip S. Brown,
R. A. Morris,
Committee.

CHICAGO NOTES

Last Sunday afternoon Comrade Strickland spoke to a good audience at Humboldt park.

Comrade A. S. Edwards addressed a meeting of about 400 last Thursday evening at North Clark and Walton place.

Meetings are announced this week at Oakley and Twenty-fourth streets Thursday evening and Paulina and Milwaukee avenue Saturday evening at 8 o'clock.

We regret to announce that Comrade H. C. Perry, candidate for governor of Illinois, is unavoidably detained at home by the illness of his little daughter. He is, consequently, unable to attend to the work of organization assigned to him by the national committee.

A mass meeting will be held Sunday, September 16th, 2 p. m., at Elke's Hall, 1148 63d st. Members of the united Social Democratic Party, as well as all unattached socialists living in or about Englewood, should make it their business to attend this meeting and lend every assistance to make the campaign in that part of the city an aggressive one.

Enthusiastic audiences turn out to Comrade McSweeney's meetings in the southwestern counties of Illinois and much good is being done by the irrepressible Mac. This week he has been at Arcadia, Chapin, Springfield and is billed at Taylorville, Pana, Decatur, Lincoln, Bloomington, Pekin and Peoria.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF AMERICA

CAMPAIGN OF 1900

THE PARTY.

The Social Democratic Party was organized at Chicago, June 11, 1898. It is the party that elected the first Socialist mayors of American cities, at Haverhill and Brockton, Mass., and in different sections of the country not less than thirty members of the party have been elected to public positions.

ITS METHOD.

Five or more members can organize a branch of the Social Democratic Party. Any reputable person subscribing to the principles of the organization is eligible to membership.

Desiring to organize a branch, application should be made to the national secretary for copies of the constitution, which should be placed in the hands of prospective members. In these will be found the declaration of principles, as also the laws of the organization.

ITS OBJECT.

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

TRADES UNIONISM.

The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for emancipation.

No. 126 Washington Street, Chicago.

ITS PLATFORM.

Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex. Public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities. Public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production. Inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

National insurance of working people against accident, lack of employment and want in old age.

Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by voters.

Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

NATIONAL PAPER OF THE PARTY:

The Social Democratic Herald
50 CENTS A YEAR.
126 Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

HEADQUARTERS: 126 WASHINGTON STREET, CHICAGO

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Fifteen cents will purchase Merrie England in the German language, adapted to American needs. If you don't read German, buy one for your friends.

Places desiring Comrade Debs for a meeting must send in applications at once.

Branch dues for last quarter of the year are payable October 5th. Comrades, please take notice.

Send in your order now for Ben Atterbury's letter to workmen. Leaflet No. 2; $1 a thousand.

Branch 33, Wisconsin, held a mass meeting in Yeager's hall, Thirteenth ward, Milwaukee, last Wednesday night.

The small 4-page leaflet used by the Chicago comrades is good for any part of the country; 1,000 to any address, postage paid, for 75 cents.

Comrade Jesse Cox declines the nomination for membership on the national executive board and his name is removed from the list of candidates.

All loyal members of the Social Democratic branches in Washington are hereby requested to communicate with Comrade L. W. Kidd, 1115 Sixth avenue, North, Seattle, Wash.

Socialists willing to assist in forming new branches of the Social Democratic party are requested to communicate with the secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

The Debs leaflet, at 75 cents per thousand, charges paid, is much the best leaflet for propaganda in some localities. We should receive more orders for them. They are small, but to the point, and will make S. D. P. votes.

Every branch should order a five-dollar bunch of literature, which would include 33 Debs lithographs and 4,000 leaflets. Every Socialist can place a few lithographs where they will make votes for the party and increase the local branch membership.

The management of the demonstration of the 29th inst., when Debs will open his campaign at Chicago, has been turned over to the state and county committees. Contributions of money for that occasion are needed and may be sent to Comrade Strickland, secretary.

It is advisable to stamp all leaflets, etc., with the local branch address and time of meeting, in order to get more direct returns for the work of distributing them. Let the voters of your locality know of your meeting, and then provide a good speaker to explain the principles of Socialism.

Our platform, object, methods of organization and "The Man Under the Dray," by Prof. George D. Herron, are printed in the Debs leaflet with a fine picture of our candidate. This leaflet the campaign committee sends out, charges paid for 75 cents per thousand—little above cost.

The portrait of the presidential candidate gives great satisfaction. Thousands have been mailed to branches and comrades in all sections of the country. It should be seen in every community; it informs the observer, directs attention to the party and makes votes. Ten copies, 35 cents; 33 for a dollar; single copy, 10 cents; postage prepaid.

Comrade E. V. Debs informs The Herald that he is overwhelmed with letters from every part of the country, to which it is impossible for him, owing to preparations for his national campaign and other work, to reply. He desires to make this general acknowledgment to all friends and requests their consideration and indulgence during the trying campaign upon which he is about to enter.

The stickers ordered by the national campaign committee are ready and orders can be filled as fast as they come in. They can be furnished only in packages of 500 or more, just as they come from the printer. Five hundred sent to your address by mail for 50 cents. An order for 10,000 has been received from Milwaukee. You will have more fun with this little sticker than you can imagine. One thousand, $1; in lots of five or ten thousand, 75 cents per thousand.

A large and enthusiastic meeting, under auspices of Branch 57, was held at East Braintree, Mass., Wednesday, Sept. 5. Comrade Harry E. Mooney of Brockton was the principal speaker. He acquitted himself most creditably and the comrades rank him with the best speakers in the state. "He is competent to address any audience," writes our correspondent, "being both forceful and logical; he kept his listeners up to concert-pitch all the time."

To one whose eyes are opened economically our present system is so absurd and so fearfully unscientific that it seems almost marvelous that thinking, honest people are not insulted when any claim is made in its favor. Yet millions are still unable to see it, even after reading on the subject and hearing it explained. It is so hard for people to break up their ugly, useless idols and follow the truth. They are stimulated in this ignorance by the old-party politicians, who ride into office on side issues, and by the great capitalists, who are shrewd enough to understand it thoroughly. So the hollow cries of "prosperity at home and prestige abroad" on the one hand and "anti-imperialism" on the other will fool a lot of fairly sensible people again this year. But won't they be disgusted when they cut their economic eye teeth two or three years hence!

THE WHITE SLAVES

gether differently from the black woman of the South. She said nothing. She scraped up the pennies and the three dollars paid by the mill for that week of her life and went home. When she got there she thought hard about it. The thing had happened before, but it was a problem how to live for a week on a little less than cost of living. The problem solved—a little less to eat or a little less to wear—she put her head on her arms to think and weep until the time came to go to bed and get strength to work at the mill again.

"No screaming as the negroes screamed. But the lesson was well taught. It was rarely necessary for a good many weeks to fine that same white woman again."

The above chapter of history, as the future will write it, is not imaginary. Every man knows that the New Bedford strike has brought out the fight of the mill women against the system of fines.

What do you think of the system? What do you think of the man whose pocket holds the fines taken from that woman?

NEW LEAFLETS

FOUR NEW LEAFLETS ARE NOW READY.

No. 3—Machine Production

Where the Profits Go.

The argument of this leaflet is a clincher because taken from the government reports made by the Commissioner of Labor, and proves that machinery, combinations, trusts and systematized production must lead to socialism. It's the only way out.

No. 4—Toilers of America

Vote for Your Freedom.

This is a remarkably effective campaign document. Written by a prominent member of the United Mine Workers, it sets forth in a convincing manner the reasons why the miners of the country, railroadmen and all other wage workers should support the Social Democratic ticket.

No. 5—Industrial Crises

Cause and Cure.

A strong appeal to the common sense of the voters, this leaflet gives the Socialist view of industrial crises and convincingly shows that Socialism is the necessary solution.

No. 6—Platform and Debs Epigrams.

This is a very attractive addition to our campaign literature; it gives the party platform complete with a collection of the very best epigrammatic sentences from the lectures of Eugene V. Debs, together with other striking contributions.

Social Democratic Party Leaflets

FOR CAMPAIGN PURPOSES

The National Campaign Committee of the Social Democratic party will issue for the campaign a series of well-written, effective four-page leaflets, two of which are now ready for delivery. These leaflets will be sent to branches and individual workers at cost of printing and postage.

LEAFLET NO. 1 is an address to unorganized Socialists; contains information concerning the Socialist movement, the party and its methods, object and program.

LEAFLET NO. 2—"An Open Letter to the Average American Workman," by Ben Atterbury. This is an admirable and convincing paper on the wage question, production, distribution of wealth and an appeal to the intelligence of the working class.

JONES SUPPORTS BRYANISM

These Who Are Not for Socialism this Year
Are Against It—A Socialist Who Votes for Competition is a Traitor

By Seymour Stedman

The attitude of Mayor Samuel M. Jones of Toledo in supporting William J. Bryan is not a surprise to those who were familiar with his economic views. His course is a lesson to all, that when the clash between economic freedom and industrial serfdom wrestle for the possession of the future, those men who are so sincere and whose hearts are so big and warm, will often try to lay our standard at the feet of the enemy. Had Jones understood the philosophy of Socialism, the glass struggle, he never could have made such a terrific blunder. His hope to bring Socialism through the Democratic party is about as sound as the judgment of a man who with equal logic and more discretion might have joined the Jesse James gang in the hope of doing away with robbery, or of a Hindoo joining the Catholic Church in the hope of introducing his theology into the halls of the Vatican! Lincoln was a most superb fool; he should have had Jones to advise him, and then the Union soldiers would have gone forth and joined the Confederate army in the hope of destroying slavery.

After reading the letter of Mr. Jones and stripping it of the poetry and song, we find practically two points made: a protest against imperialism and the juggling of the Philippines. This is one reason why Mr. Jones is going to support Mr. Bryan. We wonder if Mr. Jones has forgotten the fact that Bryan went to Washington and urged upon the Democratic senators the ratification of the Paris treaty and the buying of the Philippine islands. Bryan used his influence to buy these foreign islands for $20,000,000, then he opposes imperialism and Jones comes forth with cheers for Mr. Bryan, the "non-partisan leader." Mr. Jones is supporting Bryan because he wishes every man to have equal rights, etc., and to prove that Mr. Jones knows exactly what he wants, he is going to support a party which has done more to disfranchise the voters in states where it has absolute control than any other party or government in the world. The Czar is at least going forward to some extent. When the Democratic party disfranchises the voters it is surely going backwards and against this outrage, which is subversive of the liberty not of the Philippines, but of people at home, the Democratic party and Bryan enter no protest.

In Charlotte, South Carolina, children thirteen years old work in the cotton factories from 6 o'clock in the evening to 6 in the morning, twelve long hours in a factory in a Democratic state, which sent a solid delegation to a Democratic national convention, and which national convention never said one word against child labor, or in favor of factory legislation; and in Democratic New York city in one day thirty-seven babies were taken from the tenement district to the morgue, and now the leader of this party, with Mr. Jones, will stand upon these wretched infant forms and shed tears over Philipinos thousands of miles away. It is always so easy to weep and deplore the sorrows that are not standing at our door. Mr. Jones objects to "Gatling guns" and standing armies. At Hazleton, bullets whistled through the hearts of children and their blood moistened the highway; in Idaho martial law was declared. Men were shot and women outraged under a Democratic governor, and in all the thousands of words in the Democratic platform, not one is said about the conditions in this state, where men were required to obtain permission before they could work; but Mr. Jones' mind is resting in the Philippines.

This may be regarded as too severe, but I respect the motives of Mr. Jones, satisfied that he has a warm heart and therein lies his power for injury. Uncle George was a good slave owner; he had a warm heart. With him Uncle Tom was on "Easy street." Simon Legree

INSIDIOUS AND AUDACIOUS CLAIMS OF THE BRYAN DEMOCRACY

WHAT is erroneously and insidiously called Socialism in the Populist and Democratic parties, is a popular determination to do away with the inequitable and oppressive industrial advantage held by corporate combinations of capital.

If favoring municipal ownership of the so-called natural monopolies is to be called Socialistic, then Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, notably, and the leading men of all England must be called Socialists, and the great municipalities of England are Socialistic. And so if a considerable demand for state ownership of railways in this country is Socialistic, then the governments of the principal countries of continental Europe have long been Socialistic. If the Democratic demand for a graded income tax makes Socialists of Democrats, then Mr. Gladstone and Beaconsfield were, and Salisbury is Socialistic.

Whatever may be said of Mr. Bryan's audacious opportunism, of the facility with which he catches political sentiment of the hour and turns it to his own account, yet he undoubtedly retains the traditional or instinctive spirit of individualism inherited from a Democratic ancestry; and this quality still inheres in the Democratic party in the main.

The great body of Mr. Bryan's supporters have no thought of instituting or advancing Socialism. On the contrary, they are in a campaign for overcoming obstacles to competition and individualism in all the ordinary industrial pursuits.

—Albert Watkins in The Arena.

had no heart; he looked at Uncle Tom and broke his bones, and killed him, but this brutal monster and his act did more to free the negro than the warm-hearted "Master George."

When the Christians entered Rome and threatened the destruction of the economic conditions that supported her imperial power, the Emperor became alarmed. Imagine a warm-hearted man, sincere and foolish, saying to the converts, behold Nero hates war, loves poetry, he writes day by day, he thinks he is a re-born Homer and loves music; he fiddles hour by hour, we want an industrial system where all can fiddle, where all can write. Nero is coming our way, and at "a step at a time," and he yells three cheers for Nero, poetry and fiddling. That man unconsciously would be doing as much to light the skies of Rome with the burning bodies of converts as the Pretorian with his flame.

Mr. Jones seems to believe that opposition to the Philippine war will be a step towards ending all wars. It is strange that he cannot understand that the carrying on of war is born of internal conditions which make it necessary. The brutality of militarism and imperialism did not commence at the Philippines. It commenced the day the laboring people were unable to buy the product and consume the wealth which they have created. Expansion is logical from the capitalist system and if necessary to carry it out, all required force will be used. You can never treat foreigners kindly, whether Philipinos or Cubans, nor justly until you treat those at home the same way. Liberate and free the American laborer and he will never subjugate or take the freedom from any other people, but join the master classes, the employers, capitalists and those who hold the means of production and distribution and they will subjugate the workers at home and the slaves abroad, and I pay no compliment to the intellect of Jones by questioning his understanding of this proposition. It may be well here to call attention to another proposition of Mr. Jones, who hopes for the time when "the daily warfare of the competitive strife" will be no more and the party he supports and Mr. Bryan stands upon a platform which is against "private monopoly" of all kinds because "they destroy competition" (Democratic platform), in other words, the platform of the Democratic party believes and declares in favor of competition, and Jones says he is opposed to competitive warfare.

It may be opportune to ask how long it will take to bring the co-operative commonwealth by supporting a party which declares in favor of competition and that "corporations should be protected in all their rights and their legitimate interests should be respected" (Democratic platform). The interest of the corporations is to secure more profits; in other words, a greater share of that which labor produces. Mr. Jones, who professes to believe in the co-operative commonwealth, is found in the position of supporting exactly the opposite from what he says he believes in. The motive of Mr. Jones I should have no right to touch upon ordinarily, but when he opens his letter or declaration casting a light upon his intentions, I have a right to question them. The reason Jones is not supporting "the great souls who have a clear vision of the perfect social state" (Jones' letter), is because those who carry that "ideal" and bear this standard are surrounded by "the man with the hoe," and the sans-culotte, and is lacking in respectability, and because there is no hope of the immediate triumphant success of those who hold aloft the great ideal. The hour has come when men of moral courage will declare themselves for Socialism or against it and take their stand as they yearn toward the future or the past. This is no time to skulk nor to join the enemy and still proclaim a friendship and loyalty to the principles deserted and those who stand for them.

BRYAN'S PROGRAM IS ABSURD

Push the Evolution to its Logical Termination, Social Ownership of the Means of Production and Distribution

By Rev. Chas. H. Vail

Industry has passed through several stages of development. The difference between the several stages is not one of principle, but solely one of size and complexity of industrial organization.

At first the hand laborer worked alone and organized industry on a very simple basis and a very small scale. This was the handicraft stage—the period of small industry. In the latter part of this era the master workman had several journeymen and apprentices.

Then came the manufacturing stage, in which the master workman extended the field of his operations. The small shop was transformed into the manufactory and the workers increased in like proportions. It was here that the capitalist appeared, and consequently the beginning of capitalist production. The capitalist organized industry on a more extended scale and complex basis—employing more men and dividing and specializing their labor.

Next came the factory stage—the period of modern industry. In the beginning of this era the tools of production were owned by the individual capitalist, but machinery soon became so gigantic that it became almost, if not quite, impossible for the individual capitalist to furnish the necessary means to operate the improved methods, so the joint-stock company or corporation arose. By this association or concentration of capital industry was organized on a more complex and extended basis.

As individual capitalists unite and form a corporation, so corporations unite and form a combination or trust. This greater concentration of capital makes possible a more minute differentiation of labor and a higher industrial organization. As the corporation represents a greater aggregation and centralization of capital than the individual capitalist, so the trust represents a greater aggregation and centralization than the corporation. In each change the new form came because it was necessary. The trust, like the corporation, arose because the new method was necessary to secure the best economic results.

In this industrial evolution each stage has come and remained because it was more efficient than its predecessor—each new method lessened the cost of production else it could not have sustained itself in competition with the old method. It must be evident that the centralization of capital is necessary to the utilization of the best methods in modern industry. The business of the future must be done by organized capital; it is the only way the needs of the people can be met. Capital is the most effective in producing wealth when most concentrated. The modern factory, the great steamship lines, the railway system, the telegraph and telephone plants, could not have come into existence without the aggregation of large capitals. The whole history of industrial evolution has been one of concentration of capital into larger and larger establishments. If the railroad supplanted the stage coach, and the large factory and farm the small one, it must have been because they served the community better and cheaper. To return to the old methods would be reactionary. If the people do not receive the full benefit of these improved methods there is a remedy, but to destroy the methods would be absurd. The trust represents the most effective tool in production. To cry out against this tool is to evidence ignorance of the whole economic process. The trouble is not with the tool but with the method of ownership and control. The solution of the problem is not along the line of tool smashing, and yet this is the only remedy offered by the Democratic party. The Republican party does not pretend that it would destroy the trust, it merely condemns all "conspiracies" and reserves the right to pass judgment as to what combinations come under this head. Of course, as the Republican party is owned and controlled by the trust magnates, they have no fear of adverse legislation so long as that party is retained in power. The Republican party, then, has no solution to offer to the trust problem; in fact, it is not looking for one. The owners of the party own the trusts, and are satisfied with things as they are. They wish to retain the ownership of these great combinations that they may continue to reap the advantages of the improved methods of production. These "owners" have no complaints to offer, they are getting along fairly well under present conditions.

While the Democratic party is reactionary, the Republican party has become stationary. It is opposed to further progress. It recognizes the fact of economic evolution, but wishes to check its consummation. The policies of this party has thus become a block to the wheels of progress. We have now reached that point in the economic evolution where further progress is impossible under the present system. The private ownership of these perfected instruments of production is incompatible with the nature of these instruments. The Republican policy of "stagnation" has necessitated the rise of another party that would champion the cause of progress. This party represents the world-wide movement of Socialism.

The Socialist party is the only party in accord with economic progress. It recognizes the fact of the industrial evolution, and the advantages of organization in industry. The problem which it is called upon to solve is to show how this improved method of production can be retained and at the same time secure the benefits to the people as a whole.

Collective ownership, the Socialist says, is the only solution of the problem. When the people own the tools they will receive all the benefits. We ask that the next step in the industrial evolution be taken; as individuals have combined into corporations and corporations into trusts, so trusts should combine into a great trust, a trust of all the people—the co-operative commonwealth. It is only in universal or complete combination that the industrial evolution can be consummated. The Social Democratic party, which is a Socialist party, points out the necessity of pushing the evolution on to its logical termination—public or collective ownership of all the means of production and distribution. It is only by this consummation that the economic evolution can prove beneficial to society as a whole.

As no argument is needed to show the advantages of combination, this is evident upon every hand; none should be needed to show the advisability of society utilizing this principle. The principle is sound and should be extended to the whole social order. When these large combinations and trusts, which embody the principle of combination, are socialized, then the evils threatened by Democratic "reaction" and those realized by Republican "private ownership" will disappear, leaving only the benefits resulting from co-operation which are now appropriated by the few, and which will then accrue to all the people.

REPUBLICANISM AND DEMOCRACY IN 1900

Comparison of the Democratic and Republican Platforms—One Party Incapable and the Other Dishonest According to the Platforms of Each

THE BURIED ISSUES OF 1896

A Vote for Either the Republican or the Democratic Parties is a Vote for the Trusts, a Vote for Imperialism

Job Harriman in International Review

The national platforms of both the republican and democratic parties are so wordy that a reproduction of them would require more space than is herein available, and yet there is an abundance of room for the consideration of all points worthy of notice.

When reference is made to these parties it will be understood to include only the authors of the platforms and their associates, rather than the rank and file of the voters. It will be interesting to note the compliments each party pays to the other; their vociferous professions of their own sincerity; the contradictions contained in each platform; how the platforms conflict with the acts of each party; their feigned love for the workingman; their professed loyalty to the flag, to the constitution and to the declaration of independence; their "noble responsibility" (?) for the Porto Rican, Cuban and Filipino; their hatred for corporate "conspiracies and combinations," and their effort to keep the producing class divided by riveting their attention to these superficial declarations, while the capitalist class holds the scepter and reaps the harvest.

The republican platform compliments the democratic party in the following language: "Under democratic administration business was dead, industry paralyzed, and the national credit disastrously impaired"; "capital was hidden away, labor distressed and unemployed"; "the menace to prosperity has always resided in democratic principles and in the general incapacity of the democratic party to conduct public affairs"; "the democratic party has never earned public confidence." Meanwhile the democratic platform compliments the republican party as follows: "The Porto Rico law enacted by a republican congress is a flagrant breach of the national good faith"; "the republican carpet-bag officials plunder the revenues (of Cuba) and exploit the colonial theory to the disgrace of the American people"; "the declaration that the republican party steadfastly adheres to the policy announced in the Monroe doctrine is manifestly insincere and deceptive"; "the republican party supports the trusts in return for campaign subscriptions and political support." Thus the one is said to be incapable and the other dishonest; and who is there that would dare dispute such high authority? Indeed, upon reflection one is inclined to be even more liberal and to concede that what each party says is not only true of the other, but is also applicable to themselves. The logic of events has driven both parties from the issues of the last presidential campaign; the tariff and the money question are buried, and the respective planks in the platforms only serve as headboards to their graves.

The democratic party has openly confessed that the issue of 16 to 1, upon which only four short years ago the institutions of this country were to eternally stand or fall, is now of minor importance, and the question of imperialism has taken its place. Thus the burial ceremonies were said; while the republican party insists that their legislation on money and tariff has been followed by "prosperity more general and abundant than we have ever known." And this claim is made in the face of the facts that a high "tariff" and a "gold standard" prevailed under Cleveland at the time when the republicans insist that "business was dead," "industry paralyzed," "credit impaired," "money hid away," "labor distressed," and also in the face of the facts that they made no material change in the tariff and the gold-standard laws, and the slight alteration in the currency law was not made until the last session of congress, after the "wave of prosperity" had passed. Priding themselves on the "wisdom of the gold-standard legislation of the fifty-sixth congress," passed after

WORD AND ACT COMPARED

Mr. Jones of Toledo, claiming to be a Socialist, will support Bryan, who is an individualist.

Mr. Jones, claiming to believe in co-operation, will support Bryan, who believes in competition.

Mr. Jones, claiming to be a "non-partisan," has gone to the democratic party camp.

Mr. Jones, professing to believe in what he calls "new politics," has thrown his influence on the side of the rottenest "old" politics in the world.

Mr. Jones, proclaiming that "patriotism and partyism cannot abide together," has abandoned his own standard of patriotism and tumbled head-first into the most disreputable party in existence.

Mr. Jones, lustily denouncing "imperialism," has come out in support of Bryan, who used his influence with Democratic senators to force that "issue" upon the country and enlisted in the army to emphasize his at-one-ness with the McKinley policy.

Mr. Jones, declaring the position of the administration with respect to the Philippine war a "denial of equality," has gone to the party of Bryan, which denies political equality to black men in the south.

Mr. Jones, to emphasize his "hope for the future of America," which is "in the patriotism of the whole," has come out for the patriotism of a part of the whole.

Mr. Jones, sentimentally asserting his unswerving devotion to equality and justice, gives his support to a candidate whose policies are purely reactionary and, if possible of being carried out, would arrest the industrial evolution that leads to justice and equality.

Mr. Jones, instead of choosing to stand by "the high ideals of a few great souls who have a clear vision of the perfected social state" (see his letter), will stand by a mere man who is insidiously and distinctly using his popularity and his opportunities to make the attainment of the "perfected social state" impossible, or to postpone its attainment in the interest of the capitalist system, to which he is wedded.

Mr. Jones, asseverating his belief that the co-operative commonwealth is to be "set up" on this continent, instead of joining hands with those who work for it, goes over to a temporary popular politician and party that distinctly opposes what he says he wants.

Mr. Jones, deprecating Gatling guns and standing armies, declares for a party that says: "The national guard of the United States (used to murder workingmen who strike for a chance to live) should ever be cherished in the patriotic hearts of a free people!"

Mr. Jones, declaring himself for "brotherhood Socialism" and against "party Socialism," has come out for bull-pen democracy.

Mr. Jones, who would have you believe he is a Socialist, has arrayed himself squarely on the side of capitalism, on the side of a capitalist political party, on the side of a capitalist candidate for president.

THE STRIKE OF THE MINERS

The most important facts relating to the miners' strike to get before the people of the country are the causes which have made the strike necessary. No one can foresee what will be the result of a strike in which 140,000 men, most of them heads of families, are engaged. Already it is feared that thousands of industries will be shut down for want of fuel, and the poor miners of Pennsylvania will likely have plenty of company in their struggle before it is ended. No man able to discriminate between right and wrong and disposed to see fair play in this dispute will be justified in taking sides without first knowing what the miners demand and the reasons advanced therefor. The more important of these demands are as follows:

Abolition of the company stores.
 Reduction in price of powder to $1.50 a keg.
 Abolition of company doctors.
 Semi-monthly payment of wages and payment in cash.

Two thousand two hundred and forty pounds of coal to the ton.

An advance of 20 per cent in wages less than $1.50 and not exceeding $1.75 a day.

All classes of day labor not receiving $1.50 and not exceeding $1.75 shall receive 15 per cent over present wages; that all day labor now receiving $1.75 shall be advanced 10 per cent.

There is no doubt whatever that the mine owners are able to concede every one of these demands, if they will. Public sentiment should force them to do it, even though public comfort is to a great degree sacrificed. The average miner makes 90 cents a day when he works. Out of that he has to buy his powder and oil at the company store. He pays $2.75 for powder that costs 88 cents at the mill. The law fixes a ton of coal at the mines at 2,240 pounds, but the miners are compelled to load 3,300 pounds for a ton. When a ton is delivered at the home of the consumer it weighs only 2,000 pounds. These facts illustrate in part only the cruel and inhuman treatment meted out to the miners by republican and democratic mine owners. The sufferings and hardships of the miners of Pennsylvania beggar description, and while we hope they will win in the struggle, even against fearful odds, we hope, too, that they will see the impossibility of any great improvement in their condition so long as they remain slaves of private corporations and come out boldly next November for Debs and Socialism.

DEMOCRATIC NOTIONS OF FREEDOM

For some time past Comrade W. C. Bohanon has been working in the interest of the Social Democratic party at Fort Wayne, Ind., a city which has the doubtful advantage over some others of having a Democratic mayor and administration. Bohanon has succeeded in arousing great interest in the cause of Socialism—so much so, indeed, that the local politicians sent to the national headquarters of the Democratic party in Chicago an urgent appeal to have Bryan, the anti-socialist, sent there to repair the damage. And Bryan went. But Bohanon kept on the even tenor of his way with that persistence for which he is well known in Chicago. The Democratic lovers of freedom at Fort Wayne started all sorts of untrue and ridiculous stories about the agitator, but the people would go to the Socialist meetings to hear him. At last, driven to desperation and with a desire to preserve the freedom of the American citizen, of which Democrats prate so much, the mayor threatened to arrest Bohanon and actually stopped one of his meetings.

This incident is in perfect accord with the course pursued by Democratic officials and the Democratic party elsewhere. That party is a political prostitute; it joined with the Republicans at Haverhill and elsewhere to beat the Socialists. It is an old hypocrite serving the interests of capitalism under the guise of devotion to freedom and humanity.

And this is the party that has assimilated Jones of Toledo!

TO MAYOR JONES.

For a' that and a' that,
 Your good desires and a' that,
 You wish us well, but still mon,
 We're comin' yet for a' that.

NOTES AND COMMENT

One of the largest manufacturing plants in the United States, a concern that employs 6,000 workmen and pays big dividends to its shareholders, is the Illinois Steel Company at South Chicago. The work performed by the men is laborious and the product has been in great demand. One would be justified in supposing that in this establishment the workmen knew what "prosperity" is and were sharing in it. The company evidently think their workmen are sharing it, for the fact that the monthly pay roll for Wednesday, August 16, was $218,000 was given out as a "record breaker." The figures are imposing; they sound big; but what do they mean to the 6,000 men? Simply an average of only $36.33 per month for each man, or about $1.25 per man each working day. This is another example of your dollar-a-day prosperity under McHannaism.

Fifty years ago in England the Chartists told the workers that they could not hope for emancipation simply by relying upon unions of the skilled trades, which must act as an obstacle to complete socialization of the means of production. And the Chartists were right. Not until the working class organized for the purpose of controlling the forces of production instead of striking and frittering away its energies to gain trifling ameliorations of wage slavery, will it be emancipated. Vote the Social Democratic ticket and begin the work this year.

The kings are getting restless, confirming the testimony of King Henry when he said, "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown." Leopold of Belgium is ready to abdicate in favor of his nephew, and Victor Emmanuel has renounced $772,000 of his civil list—part of his pay as king—to win favor with the people of Italy. The purpose of this giving up so large a fortune is to reduce the tax on salt. These royal sops may win temporary favor, but they will not give the people what the rising Social Democracy of the world demands—absolute freedom from economic slavery.

Your "good citizen" is a fellow who, having had opportunities to get rich by plundering society and the producers of wealth, shirks his duty in contributing to the maintenance of the institutions which exist chiefly to protect him in his possession. The board of assessors of Cook County, Illinois, have just raised the valuation of one estate from $800 to $300,000, and of another from $12,000 to $300,000. These fellows who would escape with a tax 20 times too small are "good" citizens while another who holds you up and takes your week's wages at the point of a revolver is a criminal.

A vote for Bryan is a vote for the party of Steunenberg and the bull pen.

A vote for Bryan is a vote for the party that disfranchises American citizens in North Carolina.

A vote for Bryan is a vote for the perpetuation of the capitalist system, for competition, for war, for the imperialism of private capital.

No thorough Socialist can consistently vote for Bryan.

Competition reaches its tragic climax in militarism and imperialism.

Bryanism proposes more competition, which will of necessity lead to more imperialism.

Therefore, Bryanism, which favors competition, also favors war and all the imperialism necessary to maintain competition.

Bryan is an Individualist and Capitalist Politician

Mr. F. G. R. Gordon,
 Manchester, N. H.

Dear Sir.—You ask me whether I am in favor of Socialism and define it to mean "the collective ownership of all the means of production and distribution," and desire an answer "Yes" or "No." I answer, No.

Yours truly,
 (Signed) W. J. Bryan.

The British having annexed the Transvaal, are now hanging or shooting the brave Boers who cannot be reconciled to British rule. Weyler was damned in Cuba, but Butcher Roberts is deified in Britain.

The best things for the campaign are the six four-page leaflets issued by the National Committee. Mailed to any address for one dollar a thousand.

Every workingman who votes for Bryan in the expectation of improving his condition will throw his vote away.

You are a Socialist. But not of the Jones stripe, we hope. You can't be a Socialist and vote for an individualist.

You can't put out too many of the Campaign Leaflets. Each one is good and will do its work.

NATIONAL CAMPAIGN FUND

The national campaign committee has so far done very effective work with the funds at its disposal, and now has a series of six powerful, vote-making leaflets for circulation. More money is needed, however, and it is hoped that the comrades everywhere will realize the magnitude of the task committed to the hands of those who are exerting themselves to the utmost to enlighten the people in the principles of our party and the Socialist movement. At least a quarter of a million leaflets should be distributed in the mining districts of Pennsylvania during the next two or three weeks. To do this work requires money, and the committee can appeal only to Social Democrats for contributions. During the next three weeks, comrades, make your contributions to the fund as large as possible, thus enabling the committee to more effectively carry out its plans. The emissaries of capitalism are everywhere active and the people everywhere receptive. No comrade should allow the opportunities for disseminating the emancipating principles of Socialism to pass unimproved. Send your dollar now to the fund and give the committee the encouragement of your active work and support.

Who will be the first to contribute one dollar to a special fund to send a quarter of a million assorted leaflets into the coal mining districts of Pennsylvania?

the boom was over, they proceed to bury the tariff, with the following inscription upon the tombstone: "We renew our faith in the policy of protection to American labor," "whose constantly increasing knowledge and skill have enabled them to finally enter the markets of the world." Thus they paid tribute to the dead issue, for of what value is a tariff if we are able to "enter the markets of the world"? But since that is a fact, could protection have caused the boom of which they boast? Surely this will need no argument. These issues buried, they take their respective position upon the new issues of imperialism; of the trust and of expansion, with a bait on the side for labor. The republican party, in its efforts to justify imperialism, declares that the "war was for liberty and human rights," and that "ten millions of the human race were given a new birth of freedom and the American people a new and noble responsibility." If these men are free, are we responsible for them? Is it really freedom or slavery into which they have been born? The republican party says that the "largest measure of self-government consistent with their welfare and our duties shall be given them." What right have we to determine upon the measure of self-government consistent with their welfare? Was this not precisely what England said of us when we were weak? Is this not always the excuse of the powerful when they are unscrupulously forcing tribute from the weak? Thus our constitution and declaration of independence are trampled under foot, and taxation without representation becomes the policy of the republican party.

The democratic party, being ever watchful for political advantage, perceives this flaw and promptly declares "that any government not based upon the consent of the governed is a tyranny . . . and is a substitution of the methods of imperialism for those of a republic," "and that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." Indeed! and did the democratic party disfranchise the colored people of North Carolina because "all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed?"

The democrats assert that "no nation can long endure half republic and half empire." Can any state long so endure? Look again at North Carolina. Again they warn us that "imperialism abroad will lead quickly and inevitably to despotism at home." Has not despotism already followed imperialism in North Carolina? Were the democrats in power, would they be more just to the colored Porto Rican than they are to the colored Carolinian? Is not democratic imperialism and tyranny as hateful in North Carolina as republican tyranny and imperialism is in Porto Rico and the Philippines?

The republicans are doing in Porto Rico and the Philippines precisely what the democrats are doing in North Carolina, and there is no reason to suppose that either would change their conduct if they were to exchange places. Give them power, and they will both be imperialists. The democratic platform declares that "the burning issue of imperialism grew out of the Spanish war," and yet they declare that "trusts are the most efficient means yet devised for appropriating the fruits of industry to the benefit of the few, at the expense of the many, and unless their insatiable greed is checked all wealth will be aggregated in a few hands and the republic destroyed." Is this not imperialism? Does not imperialism reign in all our industries? Did it grow out of this Spanish war? Can a nation long exist half republic and half empire? Can imperialism continue in our industries and democracy in our politics?

The democratic platform says that "private monopolies are indefensible and intolerable." They destroy competition, control the price of all material, and of the unfinished product, thus robbing both producer and consumer." While the republican platform "condemns all conspiracies and combinations intended to restrict business, to create monopolies, to limit production, or to control prices, and favors such legislation as will effectually restrain and prevent all such abuses."

Since they are both agreed upon this proposition, and since they are the only parties represented in congress, it is pertinent to ask why they did not do something toward carrying out their professions? Each blames the others, and again they are both right, for they are both at fault. The proof is to be found in the fact that they are agreed upon two still more fundamental propositions, from which the other issues arise. They endorse the wages system, and uphold the rights of capital. The republican platform says, first: "We renew our faith in the policy of protection to American labor," by which "the wages in every department of labor has been maintained at high rates." Second: "We recognize the necessity and propriety of the honest co-operation of capital to meet new business conditions."

The democratic platform says, first: "We favor arbitration as a means of settling disputes between corporations and their employees." Second: "Corporations should be protected in all their rights and legitimate interests."

Upon these two propositions they are certainly agreed. But the wages system means that one man employs another for a part of his product and keeps the rest. It also means that the employer will keep more of the worker's product than is sufficient to live upon; otherwise he would do well to work for a wage. But since the workers produce more than enough to pay themselves and to keep their employers, where is there to be found a market for the rest? Evidently there will be no home market for such products. That which is left over will first become capital. The aggregation of this capital will grow into corporations with their alleged "legitimate interests." The aggregation of these corporations means trusts. In proportion as the number of trusts increases the number of employers decreases. As the machinery of production is improved in its efficiency, so also can fewer men perform the task and at the same time live on a smaller proportion of their increased product. Thus is the surplus for which there is no market constantly and necessarily increased.

It is for this reason that the republican platform says that "new markets are necessary for the increasing surplus of our products," and the democratic platform says "we favor trade expansion."

It was this surplus that caused our war with Spain, under the pretext of freeing the suffering Cuban. Yet the republican party claims that the war was "unsought and patiently resisted." It is also this surplus which is causing the war with China, under the pretext of saving the missionaries and legations. The republican platform says that "every effort should be made to open and obtain new markets, especially in the Orient." And those markets or people which are conquered will be given that "measure of self-government consistent with their welfare and our duties." And thus is political imperialism becoming established as a result of our industrial imperialism, and taxation without representation is the ruling policy. But it is to be expected that this will be the political policy when every industrial establishment in our country is a little empire, with an employer as absolute monarch, "protected in his legitimate interests," and where the workers are his subjects. Nor should we be surprised at the policy of taxation without representation in the colonies, for this is our custom in our industries.

STATE ORGANIZATION EFFECTED IN MONTANA

I am instructed to inform you that in pursuance to a call issued by Butte Branch, No. 1, S. D. P., a convention of the S. D. P. was held in the city of Butte on Tuesday, Aug. 28, 1900. The convention was called for the purpose of electing an executive board and to begin the necessary preliminary work required by law for the placing of a new party in Montana's political arena—at present the most turbulent in the west.

The convention was called to order by Chairman Davis of Butte Branch, No. 1, who was thereupon nominated as temporary chairman. O. M. Partelow was nominated as temporary secretary, as also was Fred Staub, who declined, and there being no further nominations, Comrade Davis was elected chairman of the first state union of the S. D. P. held in the state of Montana. Comrade Partelow was elected secretary pro tem.

A motion to appoint a committee on credentials was then put and carried, and the following committee appointed: L. E. Beaudry of Anaconda, V. S. Anderson of Livingston and Gustave Frankel of Butte. A committee on permanent organization and order of business was appointed as follows: J. F. Fox, M. J. Elliott and W. N. Holden, all of Butte.

A recess was then taken to allow the committees time to report. After a recess of twenty minutes the union was called to order and the committee on credentials presented their report, which was adopted as read. The committee on rules of order and permanent organization reported the temporary officers as permanent. The selection of an executive board, the selection of time and place for a nominating convention and the adoption of the national platform of the S. D. P. party.

The report of the committee was then adopted as read, and the executive board of five was then nominated, and upon ballot elected as follows: Martin J. Elliott, J. F. Fox, O. M. Partelow, W. N. Holden, all of Butte, and L. E. Beaudry of Anaconda, Comrade V. S. Anderson of Livingston declining.

After some animated discussion, the date and place of the nominating convention was set for Sept. 18 at Butte.

The committee on resolutions, composed of Gustave Frankel, Martin Elliott, O. M. Partelow, V. S. Anderson, L. E. Beaudry, simply adopted the national platform of our party.

The convention then adjourned and the executive board met at 8:30 p. m., and Comrade Elliott was elected chairman, Comrade Beaudry vice-chairman, Comrade Partelow secretary, Comrade Fox treasurer.

Oscar M. Partelow,
 Secretary State Executive Board,
 Butte, Mont.

WHY NOT NOW?

George C. Clemens' Caustic Criticism of the "Fusion Reformers" of Kansas

(From Western Socialist News)

Referring to Mr. Hoffman's address at the Fort Scott convention, a fusion paper says:

"The hearty applause which greeted Chairman Hoffman's allusion to Socialism as the great issue of the future demonstrated very conclusively the sentiments of the populists on that proposition."

And why is not Socialism "the great issue" of the present? Are we waiting for the capitalist system to come so Socialism will have something to fight? Or do some people wish to be elected to office now, and become militant Socialists when the party gets votes enough to elect them to office in the future? While the people's party lived, I steadfastly refused to join a Socialist party in Kansas, for the people's party of Kansas was headed for outright Socialism. In 1898 its platform declared for it in a pointed paragraph. What became of that paragraph at Fort Scott? Did it get lost in the shuffle?

I find much "talk" in the Fort Scott platform, but I do not find Socialism. Mr. Hoffman knows as well as any man that the democratic party is not hungering and thirsting after Socialism. He knows that Bryan and Stevenson are no more Socialists than McKinley and Roosevelt. He knows that it makes not a particle of difference to the poor whether the capitalist government they live under is a republic or an empire; that all governments are alike in their treatment of the poor. All this humbug about "saving the country" is so old that it is to be found satirized in George Eliot's novels. Oliver Goldsmith took a humorous shot at it a hundred and fifty years ago. It won't do. Mr. Hoffman is too much a man of the world to seriously believe any such nonsense. Then what other really important issue is there to prevent Socialism being "the great issue" of the living present? Last year, and up to the very hour I left the triune fake, I was constantly assured that the paramount issue of this campaign would be trusts, and that in the discussion of that issue we Socialists could and would discuss Socialism as the only remedy. For this reason, it was urged, the Socialists should remain with the "reform forces" and not throw away their opportunity for agitation. But the Kansas City convention not only declared "imperialism"—of trusts—the "paramount issue" of the campaign, but adopted such a reactionary trust plank as must effectually close the mouth of every Socialist, if he campaigns for the fusionists, as to the Socialist view of trusts. I knew it would be so. I knew also that if I waited for that convention it would be too late to organize the Socialists of Kansas for this year. I did not propose to be tricked again as I was in 1898, when at the urgent request of Socialists, a Socialist platform was adopted, thus putting us in a position which precluded our bolting, and the state committee persistently refused to put that platform on the stump except as pressure compelled them at last to put me on the stump with great reluctance. So I left early, and I am glad I did. It is my opinion that Socialism is "the great issue" of the present, and that it will be "the great issue of the future" also until capitalism shall be no more. Militant Socialism is organized in Kansas today in such a way that no fusionist need hope to ever fuse it with anything else. "Public ownership" don't go. The men afraid to say "Socialism" may go where they please. They will have no voice in the Social Democratic party. Government ownership of railroads and municipal ownership of municipal utilities, with the rest of the Bismarkian program of state Socialism, do not constitute scientific Socialism, nor even approach it. Many governments own railroads and telegraphs. Indeed, this is the rule outside of America. Many cities own public utilities. Yet has poverty diminished in those nations or cities? Glasgow is the shining example of municipal ownership, yet Glasgow can show you poverty at which, if humane, you cannot look, I know, for I have been there, and, when retreating before the appalling misery, the special constable who was conducting a party of us protested that we had reached only "the edge."

Let the government own the American railroads and under civil service security of employment you build up an aristocracy of labor—you will have a great army of employees who will care nothing for the condition of their brethren, who will take no part in the agitation for Socialism. Nationalize and socialize enough "public utilities" without touching the resources of nature and the tools of industry, and you set back Socialism for centuries, by withdrawing its voting and agitating strength under the operation of stringent civil service regulations. How many members of the paid fire departments of America are active Socialists? How many postal employees? How many teachers in the public schools? From colleges, not from public schools, have come Socialism's martyrs of the chair. From every avocation come Socialists in capitalistic employ. How many come from the departments at Washington? Socialism, as Socialists understand it, is not mere "public ownership of public utilities." It is the public ownership and operation of all the means of production and distribution, and their management to the exclusive end that all the people may have equal chance to live full human lives. All the Fort Scott platform stands for, Bismarck long ago proposed. It could all be accomplished and the great mass of the people be miserably poor. We Socialists refuse to be deluded. We will not compromise. We will not retreat a single inch to elect somebody to office. We will be "harsh as truth, as uncompromising as justice"; and we will be heard, even if every man on the triune ticket has to earn his bread like the rest of us. The poor we stand for do not want a few men to hold government jobs. They wish every man and woman to be in public employ. Appeals to Socialists, to support the triune ticket, national or state, might as well be omitted in convention addresses. The end of that sort of thing has arrived. You tell us "Breidenthal is an ardent Socialist?" "Where the carcass is, there will the eagles gather." If Debs were a candidate for governor, on a ticket hoping to win, as Breidenthal is today, would bankers and conservative republicans be for him? Would he have the support of leading republican, conservative newspapers? Why not? Can you think of any reason why not but that every voter would know that were Debs elected he would stand by the poor, and look after the rich only in case he had spare time? Why do bankers and conservative republicans and democrats support Breidenthal, while they would denounce Debs were he the candidate of the very same party? Answer this if you can consistently with the idea that, in the estimation of these conservative supporters, Breidenthal is as good a Socialist as anybody? He may be "a theoretical Socialist," as Webb McNeill says some men are "theoretical prohibitionists." What will Mr. Breidenthal do in case of a strike? Will he say? Dare he say? Dare he say he would do as Debs would? Will he dare say he would do as I would. Let us have done with this palaver. The fusionists are running on a capitalist ticket—a ticket capitalist to the core. The Socialists are through. If alleged Socialists in the triune ranks are nursing, as they seem to be, the fond delusion that the militant Socialists of Kansas are making sacrifices this year and enduring the abuse of the cohorts of reform for the sole purpose of building up another party for them to fuse and wreck, it would be well for them to disabuse their intellects at once. Until now there was reasonable excuse for Socialists in Kansas to refrain from joining a Socialist party, for, left to itself, the people's party was certain to become the Socialist party. But with no people's party in the field, and with the fusion national candidates anti-Socialists, upon a platform absolutely negating all discussion of Socialism, what excuse, but a desire to be with the winning crowd and secure the possible spoils, has any Socialist in Kansas to stand aloof from the Socialist party? The alleged Socialists who fight this year will be permitted to join us, of course, hereafter, for we welcome the world; but they will not be made "bosses" the first week or two. They are making their beds and must try to lie in them with what comfort they can. A republican is a man who votes the republican ticket. A fusionist is a man who votes the fusionist ticket. And from today henceforth only that man will be recognized as a Kansas Socialist who votes a Kansas Socialist ticket. The time has come to draw the line. Henceforth people can no more claim to be Socialists and vote against a Socialist ticket in order to get office, than after John Brown's scaffold had stood out against the bleak Virginia sky a man could claim to be an abolitionist while voting with a slaveholder's party. In every movement there comes a time when the sheep and goats divide. It has come in the Socialist movement in Kansas.

HEPRO IN MA CH'ETTS

Our branches are now voting upon the report of the proceedings of the conference of Sept. 2. As soon as the votes are returned we will get to work regularly and systematically. One comrade, whose branch was not represented at the conference for good and sufficient reasons, writes, upon receipt of the report: "To every section of the report of the conference I say 'Amen,' and feel certain that every comrade of Branch will gladly and even joyfully do likewise as soon as the work of the conference becomes known to them. Our next regular meeting comes on Sept. 23, but I will call a special one in a few days, as the news is too good to keep from the boys any longer than is necessary." Massachusetts will yet redeem itself. If we had a national organization composed of branches like that one, we would have the "bomb-proof organization" that Comrade Keliher wants.

The action of the conference has put new life into us. The comrades are active everywhere. Three new branches are under way, and another good healthy branch that I have classed a "doubtful" has this week declared itself loyal to the original S. D. P. and come into our loyal federation.

Open air meetings are popular these cool, pleasant September days. Everett branch holds one every Saturday evening. Sunday afternoon is a favorite time for out-door meetings. The one held at Island Grove, Abington, a week ago was attended by 1,500 people—"a good Plymouth county crowd, too," as one comrade expressed it. The Quincy boys are to have one next Sunday, the 16th, at Bellamy Grove, which they intend shall surpass the one they had last year, and that is saying a great deal.

Don't forget the picnic at Oakland Grove, East Dedham, on the 23d. In addition to our always popular Dr. Gibbs, Mayor Coulter and National Organizer MacCartney, we are to have Dr. Keown of Lynn, whose impassioned speech at the conference pleading that we hold high the standard of Socialism far above the defilement of political trickery and keep our organization worthy of the high principles we profess, made a deep impression. We expect to net a considerable sum for the national campaign fund.

But the greatest and choicest piece of news I have reserved to the last. Listen: On the 18th inst., at Rockland, in the opera house, we are to have speak for us Prof. George D. Herron. Isn't that good news, comrades? MacCartney is going to have a hard fight to get back to the legislature this year, but the boys realize it and have their coats off and sleeves rolled up already. There is one man who can produce more effect upon the people of Rockland than almost any other in the whole country, and that man is Prof. Herron, and we are to have him. You see, some four years ago he held a series of meetings in Rockland and made a profound impression. He was not a Socialist in those days, but he got hold of the people of this staid New England town, these descendants of the Pilgrims; and he holds them still. To have him come back as an avowed Socialist and speak under the auspices of the S. D. P. will have a tremendous effect. More about it next week. Margaret Haile.

NATIONAL SECRETARY-TREASURER

THEODORE DEBS
No. 126 Washington Street, Chicago.

THE NATIONAL PLATFORM

Adopted at the Indianapolis Convention, March, 1900

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America. The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man. As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

NATIONAL PAPER OF THE PARTY:

The Social Democratic Herald
50 CENTS A YEAR.
126 Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

HEADQUARTERS: 126 WASHINGTON STREET, CHICAGO

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Fifteen cents will purchase Merrie England in the German language, adapted to American needs. If you don't read German, buy one for your friends.

See notice of new leaflets—they make Socialists.

The new buttons are union made and all right. Twenty cents per dozen.

You write letters? Put a sticker on the back of each envelope. Five hundred for 50 cents.

Branch dues for last quarter of the year are payable October 5th. Comrades, please take notice.

Send in your order now for Ben Atterbury's letter to workmen. Leaflet No. 2; $1 a thousand.

The small 4-page leaflet used by the Chicago comrades is good for any part of the country; 1,000 to any address, postage paid, for 75 cents.

The Graham Gem, formerly a populist paper, published at Hill City, Kan., has hoisted the entire Social Democratic ticket, national and state.

Comrade Ricker of Iowa filled several appointments in Nebraska this week, speaking at Omaha, Council Bluffs, Plattsmouth and South Omaha.

Comrade E. V. Debs spoke to a deeply interested audience at Van Horn, Iowa, September 11, the occasion being the Firemen's annual field day.

All loyal members of the Social Democratic branches in Washington are hereby requested to communicate with Comrade L. W. Kidd, 1115 Sixth avenue, North, Seattle, Wash.

Socialists willing to assist in forming new branches of the Social Democratic party are requested to communicate with the secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

If any reader of the Herald has information of the whereabouts of Richard Scholl he will confer a favor by communicating with Wm. E. Eckart, 1211 Armstrong avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

The Debs leaflet at 75 cents per thousand, charges paid, is much the best leaflet for propaganda in some localities. We should receive more orders for them. They are small, but to the point, and will make S. D. P. votes.

Do you know the motto of the capitalist party voters? "We don't care if we never wake up." Socialists are awake, but must wake up the old party men before we can improve our condition.

It is advisable to stamp all leaflets, etc., with the local branch address and time of meeting, in order to get more direct returns for the work of distributing them. Let the voters of your locality know of your meeting, and then provide a good speaker to explain the principles of Socialism.

For $5 the national campaign committee will send, postage paid, thirty-three Debs lithographs (21x28 in.) and 4,000 Leaflets, the latter to include an assortment of all the six Leaflets so far issued. Every one is a vote-maker—every one will convert thinking people to Socialism. The expenditure of $5 in your community for this campaign outfit will start a movement where you live.

PROF. HERRON WILL SPEAK.

We have great pleasure in announcing that Prof. George D. Herron has accepted an invitation to speak at the Central Music Hall meeting, with Comrade Eugene V. Debs, Saturday evening, September 29. This will be Prof. Herron's first public appearance in Chicago since his return from Europe.

The office force at Campaign Headquarters had to call in volunteers this week to help with the work. But there are plenty of comrades ready to respond, so pile in your orders every day to the close of the campaign.

Watch our campaign fund grow—and help it along. Every dollar sent in will tell hundreds of wage slaves how to vote; that the Socialists are making a great campaign against capitalism; that Socialism will win out because we are here to stay. We are IT.

Samuel Hoar, of Terre Haute, has been nominated on the Social Democratic ticket for Congress; Pickett Connett for State Senator; Redman Keenan, of Clinton, for Joint Representative, and John Hoagland for Commissioner of the First District of Illinois.

Our platform, object, methods of organization and "The Man Under the Dray," by Prof. George D. Herron, are printed in the Debs leaflet with a fine picture of our candidate. This leaflet the campaign committee sends out, charges paid for 75 cents per thousand—little above cost.

The Social Democrats of the Pekin (Ill.) district met September 12 and nominated J. E. Edwards, of Canton, for Congress; B. F. Ordway, of Peoria, for Member of State Board of Equalization; C. E. Crandall, of Pekin, for Senator from the 26th District, and F. W. Moore, of Middle Grove, for Representative 26th District.

The portrait of the presidential candidate gives great satisfaction. Thousands have been mailed to branches and comrades in all sections of the country. It should be seen in every community; it informs the observer, directs attention to the party and makes votes. Ten copies, 35 cents; 33 for a dollar; single copy, 10 cents; postage prepaid.

The Stickers have made a hit. You should have a thousand or ten thousand to put up in your community. They are two inches square, put up in packages of 500 and very handy. They are designed to fix in the mind the fact that the Social Democrats are in the field with a candidate for president. They do the business. One thousand, postage paid, one dollar.

The Socialists would like to send a relief train to Texas sufferers—and to factory workers, farmers, railroad men, miners, and other wage workers in every state in the Union—but the relief we would send would be car loads of literature, and in place of doctors, nurses and medicine cases, we would send speakers, writers, organizers. Will some great newspaper pay for this? Has Hearst's American-Examiner-Journal something more important to do?

All organizations intending to take part in the parade of Sept. 29 are requested to carry banners and flags and assemble on Market square, between Madison and Randolph, at 6 o'clock p. m. The parade will start at 7 sharp, and line of march will be announced next week. Organizations will also send name, and marshal of the day to Ferdinand Svoboda, chief marshal, 694 West Eighteenth street.

NOTICE TO BRANCHES

The quarterly dues for the quarter ending Dec. 31 are due at the headquarters, 126 Washington st., Chicago, Ill., on or before Oct. 5. Prompt remittance is of the highest importance to insure the interests of the organization, and the branches are urged to provide for the collection, which should be begun at once.

CAMPAIGN LEAFLETS

PUSH THEM OUT AND MAKE VOTES

No. 1—Address to Unorganized Socialists

Contains information concerning the Socialist movement in the United States, the party and its methods, object and program.

No. 2—An Open Letter to the Average American Workman

By Ben. Atterbury. This is an admirable and convincing paper on the wage question, production, distribution of wealth and an appeal to the intelligence of the working class.

No. 3—Machine Production Where the Profits Go.

The argument of this leaflet is a clincher because taken from the government reports made by the Commissioner of Labor, and proves that machinery, combinations, trusts and systematized production must lead to socialism. It's the only way out.

No. 4—Toilers of America Vote for Your Freedom.

This is a remarkably effective campaign document. Written by a prominent member of the United Mine Workers, it sets forth in a convincing manner the reasons why the miners of the country, railroadmen and all other wage workers should support the Social Democratic ticket.

No. 5—Industrial Crises—Cause and Cure.

A strong appeal to the common sense of the voters, this leaflet gives the Socialist view of industrial crises and convincingly shows that Socialism is the necessary solution.

No. 6—Platform and Debs Epigrams.

This is a very attractive addition to our campaign literature; it gives the party platform complete with a collection of the very best epigrammatic sentences from the lectures of Eugene V. Debs, together with other striking contributions.

GEORGE D. HERRON A SOCIAL DEMOCRAT

His First Speech for the Socialist Political Movement Delivered to a Large Audience at Rockland, Plymouth County,
Massachusetts

PRESENT SYSTEM IS DOOMED

The System of Things Which Makes Men Depend Upon Other Men for a Chance to Earn Their Bread is Ele-mentally Wrong

Reported by Margaret Hall

The opera house at Rockland was filled on the evening of the 18th inst. with an audience which was intensely interested in Professor George D. Herron's first speech as an avowed Social-Democrat. It was the opening meeting of the campaign in Comrade MacCartney's district, and for that particular district there could not possibly have been a more auspicious opening. Professor Herron's speech was reported verbatim, and will be published in pamphlet form and used extensively during the campaign and afterwards. It will be ready in about a week, but in the meantime you will be interested in some extracts which reveal the man, and show what a valuable addition our party has received in Comrade Herron. He said:

"In speaking as a Socialist, and I have never been anything else since I was a student and began to think, I must speak from my own point of view and in my own terms, and give my own reasons, which to me are strong reasons, for standing here tonight as an advocate of the first political expression of Socialism that has presented itself to us here in America. We are just now in the beginnings of the first attempt to crystallize in political action an American Socialist movement.

"I came into the Socialist movement from a different point of view, perhaps, from many others. I was, as most of you know, a preacher and a teacher in connection with an American college, and I have been seeking to know how the highest ideals of life might be made livable in the world. Whether we take Jesus or Plato or Buddha or Mazzini, the sum of all that they have taught is—that human life, in order to become livable for the bulk of mankind, in order to become happy and reasonable and healthful and noble must be lived out under what they called the law of love, which, translated into economic terms, might be called the law of co-operation. And out of a passion of soul, out of an infinite yearning to find some way by which that law of love, of co-operation, might be realized and change the world from an arena of struggling and competing and destroying men into a world that might be indeed a paradise, I came into the economic problem, and through that into Socialism.

"All political questions are today resolving themselves into economic questions. The politics of the future will be economic politics. Although we are not aware of it, all political questions are already merely property questions. Politics the world over have nothing else to do but be the great agent of great business interests. Socialism comes to make politics economic in an entirely new sense. In fact, all that we have understood by politics will pass away.

"Without any regard to what you desire or would have, the present industrial system is getting to the end of its string. Face to face with this world crisis, it is easy to define the attitude of the two great political parties. The republican party is frankly and avowedly the party of the capitalistic order of things. It stands for the perpetuity and development of the system of private capitalism. At any rate the republican politicians, and the class behind them, know exactly what they want. Those who represent the leadership of the democratic party do not know what they want, but in so far as they attempt to meet the great industrial problem they meet it with methods which are entirely inadequate and unhistoric. The election of a democratic president and congress would be a retrograde movement. Why? Because they propose to go back and begin again a century ago. We cannot go back to individual ownership and free competition though the capitalistic development had not taken place. To talk of legislating against trusts is as

WARNING NOTICE

To our Comrades and Friends:

The persistence with which the report is circulated that I have resigned, or intend to resign, in favor of the Democratic candidate, impels me to issue this denial of the falsehood originated by the capitalist press to deceive and mislead our friends and supporters.

Comrade Harriman and I have been nominated as candidates for vice-president and president, respectively, of the Social Democratic Party, and we shall stand as such candidates to be voted for on election day, all reports and rumors to the contrary notwithstanding.

It is not at all improbable that this report may be sprung afresh on the very eve of the election, too late to be met and contradicted by the weekly Socialist press of the country, and for this reason I take the liberty to request all Socialist papers, and any others that may be friendly to our party, to publish this statement and keep it standing in the last three or four issues preceding the election.

To resign at such a time would be rank betrayal, of which no honorable man would be guilty; but if from any inconceivable reason such a step became necessary, I would not under any possible circumstances resign in favor of the Republican or the Democratic party. They are alike the representatives of the capitalist system; they are one in the support of private property in the means of production; they are agreed as to wage slavery; they do not differ in their hostility to Socialism, and I would as readily think of resigning in favor of one as the other of these parties.

Our party comrades understand this, and cannot be misled; but there is danger that some of our friends may be deceived, and hence this warning note.

The Republican papers declare that Socialists will vote for Bryan, while the Democratic press charges that Socialists are in the pay of Mark Hanna. These old campaign liars know better, but they understand each other. This fall they will be made to realize that with all the corruption funds at their command there is no private property in Socialists.

Others may prefer Capitalism and Slavery. We stand unyielding as a wall of granite for SOCIALISM AND FREEDOM.

Terre Haute, Ind., Sept. 21, 1900.

EUGENE V. DEBS.

[Friendly papers please copy.]

foolish as to talk of legislating against the rising tides or the solar system.

"Taken broadly, Socialism means simply the ownership of the sources and means of production and distribution by the people and for the people, instead of by the few for the few. That is merely expressed economically; but it has very much larger meanings than that. It seeks justice and equality in production and distribution not because men ask for more things, but because men want those things wherewith to express themselves in full and free and noble living. We have not yet had any such thing as a coherent and orderly civilization. We have as yet only a menagerie world. We have not yet ascended into sanity. Nothing is more insane or benighted than the notion that one man can really prosper at the expense of other men. Socialism does not come as an attack upon property; it comes as an attack upon the world-method of stealing the property of the people. No property is sacred property until it becomes in the truest sense of the word common property.

"It is not a question of character. Though employers were archangels and trades union men angels, the system of things which makes men depend upon other men for a chance to earn their bread is elementally and eternally wrong. To be obliged to sell one's labor power at terms out of one's control is simply to sell one's self into slavery. A man's labor power is his life, and when he sells it he sells his life and sells it for bread. I am not blaming you for it, nor myself for it. I should blame myself if I did not seek to remedy it.

"Socialism comes, then, not as a remedy, not as a tinkering and mending of the old, but as a new state of society. It does not come attempting to cure civilization; it comes proposing a new civilization—a civilization that shall be at last so organized that every child shall be born into the world with an equal inheritance with every other child in all the opportunities and the resources that go to make fullness of life, and all the forces that are in the world shall surround that child to make it blossom in love, in trust, in good will, in healthfulness of soul as well as body, and push it upward in freedom and beauty of living.

"And it is because this coming presidential election offers you through its candidates, both national and local, the first tangible, even tentative, step towards crystallizing an American Socialist movement, that I have hastened across the seas to take my place in the stress and struggle of the pioneer work, and to make my plea for Social Democracy."

Some of the Boston papers had it next morning that Professor Herron had made the statement that he "did not believe that the American Socialist party had yet been formed." This is being quoted widely; and I want to say right here that it is absolutely untrue. I took every word the professor uttered, from beginning to end of his speech, and there was no such statement in it. Certainly the closing paragraph of his speech, as given above, doesn't sound as if he had much fault to find with the Social Democratic party.

Because there is "no hope of electing Debs," the democrats who have no principles themselves, think Socialists, who are through with old party policies and stand on principles, should vote for Bryan who is opposed to their principles. It's a funny kind of a Socialist who would vote for a man opposed to Socialism.

Declares that Social Demo-

THREATEN TO DISFRANCHISE

Afraid of the Spread of Socialism the Bryan
Capitalist Party Have "Fixed" Things—
The Social Democrats Wide Awake and Active

The following appeared in the "St. Louis Globe-Democrat," Thursday, September 13, 1900.
Special Dispatch to the Globe-Democrat.

Rich Hill, Mo., Sept. 10.—Socialism is a new political factor in Missouri. If the Debs electoral ticket obtains a place on the official ballot, it will receive such a number of votes as will surprise the old politicians. Labor day the mottoes displayed in the processions and the principles asserted by some of the orators were straws in the populous centers of the state. But there are Socialists who do not live in the cities. Scattered through agricultural Missouri are communities in which the tenets have gained believers in numbers sufficient to form clubs. There are socialists in that rock-ribbed democratic stronghold, Callaway county. The nominee of the socialists for governor, Mr. Caleb Lipscomb, lives at Liberal. The nominee for railroad and warehouse commissioner is a resident of Harviell. One of the presidential electors is a Milan man. At California there is a new socialist paper, called the "Missouri Push." Organizers are now going through western Missouri organizing the socialist party in the smaller towns. At the town of Liberal the socialists mustered sufficient strength to elect a member of the council. They are claiming that the voters of Barton county are divided by thirds into republicans, democrats and socialists.

Bates is a county in which the movement has gained notable headway. It is the home of Congressman De Armond, which has hitherto been counted by the democrats as good for 1,000 plurality in their column. At the present time the socialistic organizer is canvassing Bates town by town.

Rich Hill, the center of the coal-mining industry of the lower part of Bates county, has a socialistic club numbering over 100 members. This club meets weekly. Its membership is by no means confined to miners. On the other hand, it includes men of various vocations. Four of the members hold positions in one of the largest stores of Rich Hill. A. J. Peters, a business man and for years a member of the city council, counts himself among the socialists.

At Rich Hill, the Warren brothers, Fred and Ben, publish a paper called "The Critic," in weekly and monthly editions, devoted to the cause of socialism. They are young men, and were formerly republicans. They founded the "Rich Hill Tribune," ran it for years, sold out, started the "Critic" as an independent paper, and developed it into an advocate of socialism. The new movement draws from both sides of the old parties, but in Bates county four-fifths of the socialists are former democrats. Probably in communities strongly republican the socialists drew more from that party. This Social Democratic club of Rich Hill by no means represents the voting support of the socialistic ticket. Caleb Lipscomb, the candidate for governor, was one of the speakers at the Labor day celebration last week. A quiet canvass seems to indicate that of the 900 coal miners in and around Rich Hill 400 are disposed to vote the ticket of the Social Democrats.

These Missouri socialists are not at all behind their fellows of other parts of the country in the sweeping character of the reforms they propose in existing conditions. "The Critic" sets forth "what socialists want" in the following form:

"Every human being to be well housed, clothed and fed and educated. The adoption of a social and industrial system that will put an end to profit, interest, rent and all forms of usury.

"Land, water, machinery, and all the means of production and distribution and all of the available forces of nature to be owned and operated for the benefit of the whole people.

"The gradual elimination, and finally the abolition of all useless and unproductive toil.

"Every person of suitable age and physical and mental ability must work or starve. He that will not work shall not eat."

"No child labor, except in the form of healthful, well-directed manual training.

"Every one to receive the full value of his or her labor."

Feeling their strength in the Sixth congressional district, the socialists have determined to add to their national and state tickets a candidate for congress. Their selection is A. E. Loudermilk of Rich Hill. Mr. Loudermilk is a commercial traveler for a Kansas City house. He has been on the road in this part of the state a dozen years and more. He has the reputation of being one of the smoothest talkers for socialism to be found anywhere.

"Unless a man is mighty well informed on the subject he's got no business to start an argument with Loudermilk," was the way one Rich Hill citizen put it. "He'll be run ashore sure."

To get Loudermilk's nomination on the official ballot the socialists of the Sixth district will have to resort to the certificate plan, and will be obliged to get a number of signatures of voters who will declare that they have not supported for the nomination any other candidate. The leaders profess to have no doubt of ability to comply with the law and have begun work on their petition.

Are socialists to be disfranchised in Missouri? The issue is up to the democratic organization and the democratic office holders. In the Labor day parade at St. Louis a week ago pictures of Eugene V. Debs, the presidential nominee of the socialists, were numerous. A former democratic secretary of state looking on, said:

"It will do them no good. There will be no opportunity to vote for Debs in Missouri. The socialists will not get their electoral ticket on the ballot. The last session of the legislature fixed that in the election laws."

PUBLIC UTILITIES WHAT ARE THEY?

Attempt of Municipal Ownership Advocates to Divide Public Utilities into Those Which are Monopolies and Those Which are Not is a Failure

CAPITAL IS A SOCIAL POWER

It Makes No Difference Whether a Man is Shut Out by a "Natural Monopoly" or an Aggregation of Social Capital in Private Hands

By Marcus Hitch

What are public utilities? There are many non-socialists who advocate the public ownership of certain things which they call public utilities. They see injustice in the private ownership of railroads, telegraphs, gasworks, etc., but no injustice in the private ownership of coal mines, factories, stores and the like. Is not a hotel or a store also a public utility? What use is a clothing store to a private individual? It is as useless to him as a telegraph line. It has only a public, i. e., a social utility. So with all commodities over and above what a man can convert to his personal use.

Money is a public utility. No individual should be allowed to traffic in a public utility as money and charge others a toll, called interest, for the use of the superfluity of it, which he holds and cannot use himself. If any toll is to be paid let it be paid to the government for public purposes.

With Socialists all public utilities are capital and all capital is public utility. What Socialists mean when they speak of capital is SOCIAL capital not personal capital. "Capital is not a personal, it is a social power." (Communist Manifesto, p. 33.) Socialists frequently speak of the collective ownership of ALL the means of production. To prevent misunderstandings and quibbling it is better to say all the social means of production; this excludes personal tools and belongings. Whatever has value is a public utility, a social utility, for the words "public" and "social" here mean the same thing. Value itself might be defined as public or social utility. With the old political economists a lead pencil, or a jack-knife, which a man carries in his pocket, is capital, the same as a rolling mill or the same as a carload of lead pencils or jackknives which are handled as merchandise. The latter are social capital, i. e., public utilities with which Socialism has nothing to do. It is one of those cases where a difference in quantity results in a difference in quality. The commingling of these two different kinds of capital enables quibblers to refute Socialism entirely to their own satisfaction.

The attempt of municipal ownership advocates to divide public utilities into those which are monopolies and those which are not is unsuccessful. There is no essential, though there is a superficial difference. Why is capital acquired by direct public grant or by condemnation proceedings under the law of eminent domain any more a monopoly than that acquired by the law of descent or by the law permitting the purchase and transfer of capital or the purchase and exploitation of labor power? One who has any social capital has an advantage which in effect amounts to a monopoly as against those who have none; and one who has a larger capital than others has a like advantage which in the long run generally ends in a monopoly. Different branches of industry are so interwoven and interdependent that if the larger capitalist cannot drive out his smaller competitor directly by underselling he will accomplish it indirectly by a flank movement, by branching out into other lines of business upon which his smaller competitor is dependent. What difference does it make to a man whether he is shut out by a natural monopoly like the anthracite coal business or by an aggregation of capital like the steel business? It is no consolation to him to be told that nature has not shut him out from the steel business; that the steel business is open to everybody; that all he needs is $100,000,000 of capital instead of the $10,000 which he may have on hand.

A difference in capital is another case where a difference in quantity results in a difference in quality. Hence we may say that wherever there is a

FARWELL, THE MORAL ESSAYIST

One of the prominent men of Chicago, who is given to writing letters and articles for publication and whose nocturnal studies are given space in Chicago daily newspapers, is J. V. Farwell. It would be very difficult for any man of reason or ordinary good sense and powers of discrimination to say why the managers of these newspapers do not dump the rubbish which Mr. Farwell is addicted to inflicting upon their readers into the receptacle provided for communications which are noticeable only for an impoverishment of ideas and a reckless perversion of the truth. His prominence as a contributor to the Chicago press can only be accounted for on the ground that he is a wealthy man, one of that commercially successful class to which the capitalist press panders. His views on all public questions are uniformly dull and uninteresting to men who do not live in an atmosphere of cant and hypocrisy. When he attempts to deal with any phase of the social and industrial questions of the day, he is frank in the defense of his class and his class interests, even to the verge of brutality. Though he passes for a "Christian gentleman" and writes much about morals, individual honesty and national virtues, Mr. Farwell can lie as easily as a democratic ward heeler, and maintain a serenity in the process that comes only to those with consciences not troubled by human suffering and eyes blind to existing social wrongs.

The deacon's last prize essay is a mournful, almost lachrymose, column of mere words on "Our Duty to the People of the Philippines," printed in the Chicago Record of September 18. There is nothing enlightening in it to anybody, from his opening quotation that "The powers that be are ordained of God" to his closing intimation that a vote for McKinley is an endorsement of "God's plans." But, as usual, with this prominent and pious person, he manages to get in a statement concerning the Socialists which is not true, and which, if he were as well informed as some people suppose him to be, he would know is false. This is what he says: "The Socialist party has nominated a candidate for the high office of president with no hope of electing him. The Socialists represent the party of government by revolution and advocate an equal division of tangible property among all classes."

The Socialists, it is true, have a candidate for the office of president; if there is no hope of electing him, that is due to the baleful influence of men like Farwell, who, with an incontinence of words and a stringency of ideas, are yet able to deceive so many workingmen who are as ignorant as themselves of the fundamentally important questions of the day, which are economic questions. When Mr. Farwell says the Socialists "advocate an equal division of tangible property among all classes" he writes nonsense. Instead of informing himself intelligently as any man of really high moral purposes would do, as to what Socialists really advocate, he chooses to repeat a wormy old chestnut as to what they do not and never did propose. This he does because it serves the interests of his class to deceive workingmen.

Again let it be stated that Socialists do not propose a division of property, but to put an end to the division now going on under capitalist production, whereby the class to which J. V. Farwell belongs gather in four-fifths of the wealth produced and the producers themselves are forced to be contented with one-fifth or die. The system by which Mr. Farwell has been made wealthy at the expense of others is a system that keeps the others in perpetual unrest and want; no more effective method for dividing property could possibly be devised than that which Mr. Farwell defends. The capitalist method does not result in "equal division"; it is distinctly unequal and unjust; it gives to the capitalist class as much as that class dare appropriate and leaves the working class enough to reproduce its kind.

The capitalist system is essentially a system of division—one-fifth to the wage slave, four-fifths to the capitalist.

Be sure and hear Debs and Herron at Central Music Hall, Saturday night.

THE COWARD'S REFUGE

The Elkhart (Ind.) Review, a Bryan organ, says: "No man with honest recognition of his duty as a citizen can be an independent in politics this year. The present policy of the government is either right or wrong. The two great parties stand for opposites on the present policies. The republican party stands for its endorsement; the Bryan party for its destruction. Between the two, there is no middle ground. The defenders of the policy want no change; the opponents suggest no new policy, no modification of the old, but positive destruction. Any man who votes for Social Democracy, or for any of the fold-out theories and parties is performing the act of a coward, a fanatic or a criminal."

The peculiarity about this sort of democratic argument is the assumption that an enlightened citizen can find no other ground to stand on except within the camps of the old parties. There has never been a time in the history of political parties, especially of the republican and democratic parties of the United States in twenty-five years past, when it has not been to the credit of any self-respecting man who believed in decency and loved freedom, to be outside both. There is absolutely no reason why any man who is looking for a solution of the economic question, which overtops all others, should hope to find it in democratic policies. The solution is not there. While there may be no "middle ground" between capitalist parties, as stated above, there certainly is advance ground which neither of these parties dares to take and which the Social-Democratic party occupies. They are the real cowards who fail to advance. The democratic party does not occupy ground where any true lover of freedom and human rights can stand. It is the coward's refuge, the hope of politicians who want jobs more than they want freedom.

NOTES AND COMMENT

What next? Hobson, just home from the Philippines, says Dewey did not destroy the Spanish fleet at Manila, but that the Spaniards themselves sunk the vessels. Thus the glory of another American reputation fades and the "hero" worshipers are greatly distressed. It is now in order for somebody to prove that Hobson didn't sink the Merrimack, and all the "heroes" will be satisfactorily disposed of.

Mr. Bryan wants to know if workmen are going to be content to live and die with "nothing more than a full dinner pail?" That is a matter for workmen themselves to settle. One thing is certain, however, assuming what is not true that their dinner pails are full, they will get nothing more by voting the democratic ticket.

Don't be fooled by the cry of imperialism or anti-imperialism. It does not make any difference whether you are governed by a president in broadcloth or an emperor in royal purple so long as the class which owns the means of life thereby exercises arbitrary and dictatorial power over your opportunity to gain a living.

The trusts are still wheeling into line for the support of Bryan. The latest to declare for him is David F. Brenner, one of the directors and principal stockholders of the biscuit trust. Bryan's new-found trust friends are crowding each other in their eagerness to get under his "anti-trust" standard.

A vote for Bryan and "anti-imperialism" is not a step toward Socialism and the co-operative commonwealth. It may easily turn out to be a vote to prevent a step away from a paltry political democracy which Bryan thinks is the final stage in human affairs.

The Haverhill Gazette concedes that the fight in Essex county, Mass., is between Debs and McKinley. It is now up to Bryan to instruct his friends in Essex to combine with the republicans to beat the Socialists.

It is not true that the trusts are afraid of Bryan, and there is no good reason why they should be. The trust attorney, Olney, is out for him, and the trust managers are coming out as fast as decency will permit.

A Social-Democrat is a man who is prepared to take a long stride toward the co-operative commonwealth. He is not "afraid of getting too much at once" and will vote for Debs and Harriman.

STORM FORT CAPITALISM

Words by Rev. H. S. Geneva Lake.
Tune—"Hold the Fort." (Gospel Hymns.) Key of D.

Hark! the watchword now is sounding
Over all the land;
See! the crushed are slowly rising;
Oh, the sight is grand!

Chorus:
Storm the fort, my gallant comrades,
'Tis a glorious cause,
Heart and soul against injustice,
We will make the laws.

Thunder tones the world are shaking;
From the prison wall
Forth came Debs, the prophet-hero,
With a ringing call.

Lo! the light is dimly dawning
Over land and sea,
As, with one accord we gather,
Shouting: Liberty!

Oh, we cannot shun the conflict,
Cannot be a slave,
Cannot wear these galling fetters:
Forward, then, ye brave!
Olympia, Wash.

COST AND PRICE OF COAL

The cost of hard coal laid down in Chicago is less than $4 a ton. This total is made up of the following items of cost:

Rail transportation to Buffalo....	1.00
Selling price at mines.....	$1.82
Lake to Chicago.....	.50
Unloading and loss.....	.50

Total.....$3.82

(Chicago consumers are paying $7.25 per ton, a profit of $3.43. The miner, without whose labor there would be no coal and furnace fires would go out, is paid 90 cents a day. Vote the Social Democratic ticket and put down such infamy. Under Socialism the miners would be freed from their present slavery.)

WHEN JACK AND BILL WENT FISHING

(Tune—Yankee Doodle.)

Mack and Bill went to a brook
To catch a batch of suckers;
Mack put Expansion on his hook
And Bill an Ant for luck, sir.

Oh it was a jolly pair,
Eating peanut candy;
Jones and Hanna, too, were there
And Roo-se-velt, the dandy.

Says Mack to Bill: "There's something wrong,
My bait don't seem to fetch 'em."
Says Bill to Mack: "Oh go along,
Just see how I will catch 'em."

I'll give my line another twist,
Just watch and see me do it;
Democrat and populist
Will all be hanging to it.

For this brook I'll let you know Is Popo-Democratic,
And where'er my line doth go
They're equally erratic.

He gave his line a good long twist,
But did not get a bite, sir.
The brook was full of Socialists
His face—it was a sight, sir!
Chorus: (Slow.)

Ah, it was a sorry pair,
Eating stale, old candy;
Jones and Hanna, too, were there
And Roo-se-velt, the dandy.

JACK POTTS' POINTERS

Puts His Finger on the System that Would Destroy the Coal Trust and Raise the Miners' Standard of Living

Mister Workingman, you probably have heard it stated that all the financial burdens rest on the backs of the workers. Maybe you have caught it vaguely as one sees something through an early morning fog—something that does not interest one much—and then let it float out of your mind. And maybe you have even thought it is not a true statement. Well, it IS true, and our half-baked "civilization" has reached a point where from your standpoint it is most terribly, infernally true. Any honest scholar will tell you it is true. Now I want you to remember this, and if it is not clear to you just ask some Socialist about it and get him to explain it; after that you will be a Socialist yourself.

There is a great deal of talk about "capital" in the newspapers by demagogues, and these people can easily fool you if you are not careful, but just you remember that labor is before capital in importance; that without it there is no capital; that the smaller your wages are—the less you get of what you produce—the more the capitalist will have and the finer his houses and yachts and summer resorts and the more clothes and "airs" his family will put on; that his financial prosperity consists in keeping wages just as low as he can; the more he grinds you down the more he can spend on colleges and things. If you think this over awhile you will go gunning—not for the capitalist, but for the system. There is one party, all over the world, that is gunning for this system, and that is the Social Democratic party. Every member of that party is a double-barreled gun loaded to the muzzle for the death of the competitive system.

Now, remembering that it is an economic axiom that the burden falls on the workers, let us talk a little about the Pennsylvania coal strike. The mine-owners are preparing to operate their mines "by force," the dispatches say. That means that they will be able to find enough poor creatures out of work in these "prosperous" times to go to work, submit to the "company" stores, "company" doctors, "company" powder and "company" everything else. They will swear in a lot of tough deputies to more or less protect the poor, hungry, "scab" miners, and if the deputies can't cope with the situation they will call on the state, and the state will furnish militia to fill the strikers full of good, cold lead. How kind the state is to the capitalists! But suppose the miners, realizing the importance of labor's part, should ask the state for troops to enforce THEIR demands; the officials would drop dead, wouldn't they? Honest, now, don't you think that the workers have just as much—even more—right to do that, as their employers have? Mind you, I am not advocating the state-troops business for either side, but simply putting the matter in a "different" way.

Now, there is another old saying among educated people—and for that matter, among all people who know enough to go in when it rains—and that saying is this: "No country can be truly prosperous unless the majority of the people are prosperous. In our country, as you can see, the welfare of the minority is carefully looked after by our officials. These mine-owners, for instance, arrogantly refuse an advance to the miners of not more than 20 cents a ton, which the public generally would be willing to pay, and then when the miners in desperation strike, they would raise coal prices to $7.50 a ton; and under our present system the authorities help rob us all!

Now one thing the Socialists want is social ownership of coal mines, so coal can be furnished at cost. The price of labor is the cost. So you see that would everlastingly bust the coal monopoly and raise the wages. But the dear, "great dailies" and their satellites, the country weeklies, tell you that is "Socialism and anarchy," and will never do! (In their alleged minds the two words are synonymous.) And you and these miners, who are in the majority, listen to these false prophets and teachers and vote for old-party candidates on both sides who talk against monopolists publicly while privately the parties are levying tribute on all the trust magnates they can "touch." Mister Workingman, the Social Democratic party is the ONLY one that is out for a complete change in our industrial system. It wants the people to do the governing, to live as one great and good family under a co-operative system. The others want to keep the old throat-cutting competitive plan, which arranges men against each other in perpetual, miserable warfare. A vote for the democratic or republican "evils," no matter which you may think is the lesser, is a vote for competition to continue. The scared Belshazzars of the old parties can see the terrible sentence growing plainer day by day: "Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting." This fall and henceforth thousands of clear-sighted ones will vote for what they want—Socialism and the co-operative commonwealth; I hope you are one of them!

If you were traveling the Jericho road and fell among highway robbers and were beaten and had your pockets "frisked," would it comfort you any to know that the robbers belonged to the same church or party that you do? The Wardner "bull-pen" is under the auspices of a representative of that "lesser of two evils," the democratic party; do you think the miners find it particularly different from the republican brand of despotism in Pennsylvania and elsewhere, or more enjoyable?

DOWNFALL OF CAPITALISM

By Eugene V. Debs

One state of society succeeds another in the ceaseless process of evolution, by virtue of which mankind reach higher elevations in the scale of being; and each period is so distinctive, so clearly marked that it is readily distinguished from all others which preceded or succeeded it.

The present capitalist system was quickened into life in the womb of feudalism, and sprang from that system. In its early stages it was received with ridicule and contempt, and the incipient capitalist was treated with the same lofty scorn by the feudal baron and subjected to the same social ostracism that the modern capitalist has decreed for the Socialist "agitator."

The progenitor of the full-blown capitalist was the Socialist of his day and generation. Capitalism has had its day; it has served its time; run its course, fulfilled its mission and must now give way, by the inexorable law of economic evolution, to its successor, which already appears upon the arena, and those with ears attuned can hear the lusty urchin shouting with imperious authority his decrees to clear the road for Socialism, which henceforward has the right of way on the track of the centuries.

Capitalism is rushing to its doom. Every new machine abridges its reign, every competitor crushed limits its regime, and every workingman displaced hastens its downfall.

The machine is the vital force in the transformation of the social organism. The machine increases production, displaces workers, intensifies competition and lowers wages. Production increases, while consumption, determined by wages, diminishes. There is bound to be a surplus.

DEBS ON BRYANISM

The Socialist Candidate Gives His Opinion of Mayor Jones' Support of a Capitalist Party

The following letter written to a friend, Mr. L. A. Russell of Cleveland, by Eugene V. Debs has been published. It gives the Socialist candidate's views of the democracy and his estimate of Mayor Jones' "Socialism":

"My Dear Mr. Russell: The action of Mayor Jones in voting for capitalism, while avowing himself a socialist, will, in my judgment, end his political career. I have not time to discuss the matter further than to say that Mr. Jones has made a mistake, and, unless I am wholly in error about its consequences, he will never again be elected to public office. This may be in accordance with his desire, and, if so, his action in supporting a capitalist party will serve the purpose intended.

"As for the democratic party as such I have no faith in it, nor have I any use for it. It professes to oppose private monopoly, but does it suggest public monopoly? It declares that it will break up the trusts, but it knows such a proposition is idiotic, to put it mildly.

"All the old bloated leaders that were supposed to have been kicked out in 1896, are coming back, one by one. Cleveland will probably be the next to declare for the democratic party to preserve the republic (?), as against the empire. Perhaps the kind of a republic Cleveland, Croker, Olney, Whitney, Gorman, Steubenberg, Van Wyck, Belmont, et al, believe in may suit you, but it will not suit me. We have an industrial empire here and whether McKinley or Bryan is elected, will not alter the situation, for the means of production will still be private property, and the miners of Pennsylvania and the workers generally will still be slaves.

"I am a socialist and my face is set uncompromisingly against capitalism. You say that I should be practical; I am intensely so, and that is the trouble.

"Let me remind you that four years ago, just after the election, and just after I had made almost 100 speeches for Bryan and the democratic party, the leaders of the party met at Chicago and solemnly declared through the press, that such socialists and anarchists as Debs (and others that were named), were responsible for the defeat of the party, and must be gotten rid of, as they had driven out the reputable elements.

"Please bear this in mind, Mr. Russell: The democratic party has chloroformed the greenback party, the union labor party and the populist party, but I will guarantee that it will not deceive and destroy the Social-Democratic party.

"I have not the least fear of an empire, for socialism is coming. I have not one moment to waste on miserable makeshifts under which the millions are groaning. The total abolition of the capitalist system is our uncompromising demand, and with that as our controlling purpose, we are marching direct as a rifle ball to the goal of emancipation. That march may be slow, but it is sure and free from pitfalls.

"Eugene V. Debs."

NATIONAL CAMPAIGN FUND

The national campaign committee has so far done very effective work with the funds at its disposal, and now has a series of six powerful, vote-making leaflets for circulation. More money is needed, however, and it is hoped that the comrades everywhere will realize the magnitude of the task committed to the hands of those who are exerting themselves to the utmost to enlighten the people in the principles of our party and the Socialist movement. At least a quarter of a million leaflets should be distributed in the mining districts of Pennsylvania during the next two or three weeks. To do this work requires money, and the committee can appeal only to Social Democrats for contributions. During the next three weeks, comrades, make your contributions to the fund as large as possible, thus enabling the committee to more effectively carry out its plans. The emissaries of capitalism are everywhere active and people everywhere receptive. No comrade should allow the opportunities for disseminating the emancipating principles of Socialism to pass unimproved. Send your dollar now to the fund and give the committee the encouragement of your active work and support.

WAGES AND PRICES

How the Matter Looks to a "Feller Sittin' on the Fence"

By George L. McNutt

"It seems to me as if the very devil gets into the workingmen. Just about the time that business begins to get in good shape the workingmen turn in and raise a row and upset everything and everybody. Almost before we know it, the switch is turned from the trunk line of prosperity, down into the swamps of an industrial panic. Then everybody suffers—the workingman worst of all."

The speaker was one of the heads of a department in a general factory. At heart he was kindly disposed to laboring men. Of this I can testify from experience and observation. I remember his saying that "they" regarded $2 a day the minimum wage of decent living. "They" had just had a meeting of all the heads of departments. The president had assured them that we have passed the crest of the wave of prosperity, and warned them to prepare for the inevitable panic.

Inevitable panic? True, the history of 100 years seems to show that there is an endless industrial chain, where panic follows close on the heels of prosperity, like a cat chasing its own tail, and with perhaps as much reason.

Are panics inevitable? If so, why? Who is to blame? Is it the workingman, who losing his head and his conscience, turns highwayman, sandbags the captains of industry, only to discover during years of bitter repentance that he has in the end stolen the food from his own children's mouths, the clothes from their backs, and torn down, like a blind Sampson, the very house that shelters him and all he holds dear? Maybe there is an industrial chain, where and because we go up, up into the sunlight of prosperity, we must go down, down, down to the bottomless pit of depression, of idle wandering, all but maniac men and women, who watch and weep over children, hungry and cold and sometimes still? Maybe it is inevitable.

Some folks say that the ways of Providence are very mysterious. Somehow, though, a "feller sittin' on the fence," looking out over the fields that stretch away down South to the cotton and the cane, and away to the west over seas of Indian corn and the billowed waves of Dakota's wealth of wheat, down where the sun sets among the orange groves; somehow, when he thinks of the exhaustless coal beds of Pennsylvania, the mines of Michigan and Missouri; of the precious metals securely locked in the safety vaults that stretch from the tropical gulf to the frozen North, with hints here and there where to find the key; somehow, to a plain, every-day mind, old-fashioned enough to see in the open mirror of nature, the broken reflections of a smiling Providence, a panic in such a country as ours, a stranger to famines and free from plagues, is unworthy the intelligence of a people one degree removed from the Hottentots.

There is plainly a nigger in the woodpile. Let us see if we can dig him out. Times are prosperous as never before. Mills are running night and day. Bosses are running after men. The volume of trade swells with its own momentum. Everybody ought to be happy. Times are prosperous. Are workingmen prosperous? "Why, yes, any fool knows that. Let us see. The panic broke in 1893. It had spent its fury in 1896; by 1898 the wave of prosperity was coming in; it has been high tide ever since. In 1893 and 1894 wages were cut, hours shortened or factories closed. Let us admit that by 1898 wages had been restored to the basis of 1892. Prices of goods had gone up to a normal standard. Granting that and that all men willing to work have had all they can do. Has the workingman since 1898 been a sharer in the country's prosperity? From careful inquiry I feel safe in giving the following table of advances, as reasonably correct:

	Per cent.
Shoes, advance	25
Groceries, advance	15 to 20
Tinware, advance	30
Stoves, advance	30 to 50
Beef, advance	20
Dry goods, advance	20 to 40
Table oilcloth, advance	100
Lumber, advance	30

These are the figures as the retail merchants give them to me. There may be individual inaccuracies, but all are agreed that 25 per cent is a conservative estimate of the average of the advance in the cost of the actual necessities of a workingman's family.

What is the meaning of these figures? Simply, plainly, bluntly this, the real wages of the mass of workingmen have been cut 25 per cent. I say the mass of laboring men. There has been what seems to the casual reader an advance in wages all along the line. The truth is that the advances since 1898 have been isolated and exceptional. Several branches of organized labor, share advances of 10 per cent, to even 30 per cent. But organized labor, though it cuts so large a figure in the labor world, is but a fraction of the country's wage-workers. The actual roll call of the laborers of Labor at Detroit last fall was less than 400,000. The rank and file of the great American industrial army are keeping step to the same stiped of 1898.

What then? While the politician, the press and the preacher are jollifying over prosperity, the workingman and his wife find their daily income gradually losing its purchasing power. The prayer, "Give us, this day, our daily bread," is for a scantier or a coarser loaf. In one Indiana gas belt city of 10,000 in three of the factories, employing nearly 2,000 men, wages of the common laborer in 1898 were these:

Factory P, 12 hours	$1.35
Factory A, 10 hours	1.25
Factory S, 10 hours	1.25

The wages today are the same. No more, no less—save in purchasing power. Those figures are eloquent with pathos. Deduct 25 per cent from such a wage, and then ask yourself what it means. It means, children taken from school and set before the furnaces. It means a scantier fare, thinner garments, the little home given up, sickness without the physician's help. It means lean cupboards and fat graveyards.

This is no disordered dream. It is what we see and feel every day. Maybe the workingman ought to keep very quiet while prosperity is marching by, lest the captains get scared, and there's a stampede—that is a panic. Maybe the wage-worker with a decreasing income ought to fortify his faith in a world where wages are never cut and the voice of bosses and the call of whistles are never heard. Maybe so. That's another question. The real question is one of the earth—earthly. Has the workingman combined to advance prices of abnormal figures, and forgotten to advance wages?

Who, then, has advanced the prices of products and forgotten to advance wages? It is plainly a clerical oversight. Just think of it. Can't any sane man see that if the giants who manipulate markets only had sense enough to raise wages first, that they would insure permanently widening markets, permanent prosperity for all, and banish forever the panic goblin that's going to "git us ef we don't watch out." The American goose has been laying golden eggs for two years. She is abundantly able to keep it up for years to come, provided we can keep some fellow in his financial zeal from killing the bird. Spot him! He is the nigger in the woodpile!

—George L. McNutt.

PROFOUND IMPRESSION MADE

The Van Horne (La.) Enterprise gives the following report of Eugene V. Debs' recent address at that place:

"The lecture by Mr. Debs made a profound impression upon his hearers as he was heard with closest attention. His statements bore the marks of truth. His arguments showed him to be a thorough student of history, of economics, and his earnestness gave evidence of his great heart, which goes out to all suffering and oppressed humanity. He explained clearly how the toiling millions would find no relief or amelioration in the triumph of either of the old political parties, for both represent and stand for one and the same system, namely the capitalistic. He showed that the real issue before the people is not imperialism, but capitalism. And that Socialism proposes to supplant this competitive, master making and slave producing system with the co-operative system. The system would mean equality, liberty and fraternity in industry, as we now recognize these principles in politics. The Trust cannot, will not, should not be abolished, but, he predicts, that it will grow until it perfects and completely organizes every branch of industry. By that time both the trust and the people will be ready for the next great step in the onward march of the race—to a higher, a better, a true civilization, namely, the absorption of the trust by the whole people to be publicly instead of privately owned and co-operatively managed in the interest of all the people. In other words the socialist of today stands for the same principle as the revolutionist of 1776 did. Our revolutionary Fathers advocated a governmental system of, for and by, the people. Socialism of today advocates an industrial system of, for and by, the people. We want industrial as well as political democracy. The speaker traced carefully the steps of human progress from the primitive tribal relations down to the grand finale, the program of the socialist, the co-operative commonwealth. In that system wealth will be produced to consume not to hoard. Production will be for public use and not for private profit. Finally he said in regard of attaining this end, that we can have these things just as soon as we are ready for them, just as soon as we become socialists and vote for the New Socialistic, Co-operative System."

THE PARADE

The line of march for the parade Saturday evening is as follows:

Market Square is the place where all comrades and friends will assemble; Randolph to Madison, Madison to Fifth avenue, Fifth avenue to Washington, Washington to Dearborn, Dearborn to Adams, Adams to State, State to Congress, Congress back on State to Randolph and Central Music Hall.

All organizations are expected to report promptly at 6 o'clock.

THE CAMPAIGN FUND

Comrades:—It is a plain fact YOU ARE NEGLECTING THE CAMPAIGN FUND.

Are you troubled with 'over-confidence'?

Well, I will tell you that you must understand it takes money to keep this campaign going, and you, comrades, WILL HAVE TO DO better or the committee will be embarrassed.

Now it is UP TO YOU!

Let me call your attention to a few words uttered by the Great Boss Hanna, he says that "the Republican party

IS NOT troubled by 'over-confidence.'

"Do you know what that means? Well, I'll tell you what it means. Simply this: the Republican capitalists are putting up 'the stuff' so they may carry on a rousing campaign."

We have witnessed your enthusiasm at the Unity convention.

We have seen your enthusiasm at other meetings; but plain facts, BACK UP YOUR ENTHUSIASM WITH MONEY, the thing that is important, AND NEEDED VERY MUCH.

Now we may sing, we may cry out with enthusiasm, we may tell what we are going to do, BUT WE CANNOT DO ANYTHING WITHOUT MONEY.

Let us get down to facts.

Let us not be over-enthusiastic.

MONEY IS NEEDED.

We hope that the new lists will COME IN WITH LOTS OF MONEY on them.

COMRADES, THE CAMPAIGN

OPEN LETTER TO MR. BRYAN

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 17, 1900.

Hon. Wm. J. Bryan, Presidential Nominee.

Dear Sir:—I voted for you four years ago and never voted the republican ticket in my life. I fully expected to vote for you again. Will you kindly impart a little information to such a one and others equally interested?

1st. You propose to abolish or to regulate the trusts. Please tell us how you propose to do it?

2d. Having made suitable laws for that purpose, how will you prevent the bribing of officials? (Of course, every intelligent man knows that the President does not make, but only executes

the laws made by Congress.)

3rd. When the trusts have been destroyed, how will you prevent existing causes from reproducing the same results?

4th. With the implements of labor in the possession of a (comparatively) few how will you secure the independence of the laborers? Trusting that you will think the foregoing worthy of notice, I remain, sir,

Respectfully yours,

Pro bono publico,

A Voter.

NATIONAL SECRETARY-TREASURER

THEODORE DEBS

No. 126 Washington Street, Chicago.

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man. As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

NATIONAL PAPER OF THE PARTY:

The Social Democratic Herald
50 CENTS A YEAR.
126 Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

HEADQUARTERS: 126 WASHINGTON STREET, CHICAGO

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Fifteen cents will purchase Merrie England in the German language, adapted to American needs. If you don't read German, buy one for your friends.

See notice of new leaflets—they make Socialists.

The new buttons are union made and all right. Twenty cents per dozen.

You write letters? Put a sticker on the back of each envelope. Five hundred for 50 cents.

Branch dues for last quarter of the year are payable October 5th. Comrades, please take notice.

Send in your order now for Ben Atterbury's letter to workingmen. Leaflet No. 2; $1 a thousand.

Smiley's excellent pamphlet, "To What Are Trusts Leading?," sent free to any address for 5 cents.

The small 4-page leaflet used by the Chicago comrades is good for any part of the country; 1,000 to any address, postage paid, for 75 cents.

All Socialists living in the 25th Ward, Chicago, are requested to communicate with Comrade Geo. A. Bateson, 85 Evanston avenue, with a view to organization.

All loyal members of the Social Democratic branches in Washington are hereby requested to communicate with Comrade L. W. Kidd, 1115 Sixth avenue, North, Seattle, Wash.

Socialists willing to assist in forming new branches of the Social Democratic party are requested to communicate with the secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

The Debs leaflet, at 75 cents per thousand, charges paid, is much the best leaflet for propaganda in some localities. We should receive more orders for them. They are small, but to the point, and will make S. D. P. votes.

The National Committee is now prepared to furnish Leaflet No. 2, Ben Atterbury's "Letter to American Workers," in German. The price is $1.25 per thousand. Send in your orders at once and put it out among your German friends.

The first money collected in Cincinnati for the striking miners of Pennsylvania was contributed at a meeting of Social-Democrats, Tuesday night, Sept. 18, when Rev. Father Thomas McGrady of Bellevue, Ky., delivered an address under the auspices of the Social Democratic party.

It is advisable to stamp all leaflets, etc., with the local-branch address and time of meeting, in order to get more direct returns for the work of distributing them. Let the voters of your locality know of your meeting, and then provide a good speaker to explain the principles of Socialism.

For $5 the national campaign committee will send, postage paid, thirty-three Debs lithographs (21x28 in.) and 4,000 leaflets, the latter to include an assortment of all the six leaflets so far issued. Every one is a vote-maker—every one will convert thinking people to Socialism. The expenditure of $5 in your community for this campaign outfit will start a movement where you live.

The portrait of the presidential candidate gives great satisfaction. Thousands have been mailed to branches and comrades in all sections of the country. It should be seen in every community; it informs the observer, directs attention to the party and makes votes. Ten copies, 35 cents; 33 for a dollar; single copy, 10 cents; postage prepaid.

The Stickers have made a hit. You should have a thousand or ten thousand to put up in your community. They are two inches square, put up in packages of 500 and very handy. They are designed to fix in the mind the fact that the Social Democrats are in the field with a candidate for president. They do the business: One thousand, postage paid; one dollar.

Turn out Saturday night and hear the Social Democratic candidate for President at Central Music Hall.

The Socialist Woman's Club of Chicago met at the Hall House, Wednesday evening, Sept. 19, a large attendance being present, including many working women. Mrs. Corinne S. Brown spoke on "What Socialism Means for Women," bringing out strongly the point that Socialism would give security to women. The meetings will hereafter be held on Saturday evening in order to accommodate working women and an effort will be made to secure a permanent meeting-place down town. It is expected that Mrs. Anna R. Weeks of Winnetka will be the next speaker. The address of the secretary, Mrs. (Frank) Roderus, is 61st street and Madison avenue.

DEBS OPENS THE CAMPAIGN

Comrade Debs' itinerary has been arranged by the National Committee for next week as follows:

Chicago, Sept. 29.
Chicago, Sept. 30.
Battle Creek, Mich., Oct. 1.
Fort Wayne, Ind., Oct. 2.
Marion, Ind., Oct. 3.
Cincinnati, Ohio, Oct. 4.
Louisville, Ky., Oct. 5.
Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 6.

All other dates, which were prematurely announced two weeks ago, are cancelled. Other appointments will be printed in next week's Herald.

ATTENTION, COMRADES!

Eugene V. Debs will speak Sunday afternoon, September 30, under the auspices of the Bohemian branches, also at the New Twelfth st. Turner Hall, near Western ave. Other speakers will be Herman C. Perry, Victor L. Berger, F. J. Hlavacek, Peter Knickrehm, Seymour Stedman, F. Svoboda, Jos. Kozak, A. S. Edwards and others. Both meetings will be opened at 2:30 o'clock.

THE MONTANA TICKET

The Social Democrats of Montana held their state convention Tuesday, Sept. 18, and nominated the following ticket:

Presidential electors—W. N. Holden of Butte, L. A. Van Horn of Butte, Jas. D. Graham of Livingston.

For member of congress—M. J. Elliott of Butte.

For governor—J. F. Fox of Butte, Fer lieutenant governor—Henry S. Davis of Butte.

For secretary of state—John M. Horne of Billings.

For state treasurer—Henry Tople of Bozeman.

For state auditor—Joseph G. Hoar of Butte.

For superintendent of public instruction—O. M. Partelow of Butte.

CAMPAIGN LEAFLETS

PUSH THEM OUT AND MAKE VOTES

No. 1—Address to Unorganized Socialists

Contains information concerning the Socialist movement in the United States, the party and its methods, object and program.

No. 2—An Open Letter to the Average American Workman

By Ben. Atterbury. This is an admirable and convincing paper on the wage question, production, distribution of wealth and an appeal to the intelligence of the working class.

No. 3—Machine Production. Where the Profits Go.

The argument of this leaflet is a clincher because taken from the government reports made by the Commissioner of Labor, and proves that machinery, combinations, trusts and systematized production must lead to socialism. It's the only way out.

No. 4—Toilers of America. Vote for Your Freedom.

This is a remarkably effective campaign document. Written by a prominent member of the United Mine Workers, it sets forth in a convincing manner the reasons why the miners of the country, railroadmen and all other wage workers should support the Social Democratic ticket.

No. 5—Industrial Crises—Cause and Cure.

A strong appeal to the common sense of the voters, this leaflet gives the Socialist view of industrial crises and convincingly shows that Socialism is the necessary solution.

No. 6—Platform and Debs Epigrams.

This is a very attractive addition to our campaign literature; it gives the party platform complete with a collection of the very best epigrammatic sentences from the lectures of Eugene V. Debs, together with other striking contributions.

Magnificent Audience Greet the Presidential Candidate of the Social Democratic Party at Central Music Hall

THOUSANDS TURNED AWAY

Two Great Meetings on Sunday at which Debs Spoke to More Than Fifteen Hundred Bohemians and Germans

SPEECHES OF DEBS AND HERRON

The announcement that Eugene V. Debs and George D. Herron would speak in behalf of Socialism and the Social Democratic Party, Saturday night, September 29, at Central Music Hall, Chicago, was sufficient, despite the rather paltry notices given to the fact in advance by most of the daily newspapers, to pack that historical meeting place from platform to the last chair in the gallery. Every seat was taken and hundreds stood up from an early hour in the evening until a few minutes to twelve, when Prof. Herron concluded his significant and masterly address. It was an occasion which marked distinctly the entrance of American Socialism into the arena of American national politics. It was a demonstration the full significance of which not a single capitalist newspaper in the city dared to publish. It was a magnificent inauguration of Candidate Debs' national campaign and a fresh proof, if any were needed, of the love and confidence in which he is held by the common people who hate despotism and love freedom. For an hour before the speakers' arrival the audience, one of the most enthusiastically demonstrative ever gathered within the Central, sang the newest Socialist songs, with pipe organ accompaniment, under the leadership of F. G. Strickland. The campaign yell, now familiar to all Chicago, was repeatedly called for and given with an earnestness that was tremendous:

Debs and Harriman, rah, rah, rah!
Debs and Harriman, rah, rah, rah!
Hoo-rah! Hoo-rah!
Socialist candidates, rah, rah, rah!

Long after every seat in the hall was occupied, thousands of people surged and struggled at the entrance to gain admission. So determined was the crowd to get in that it became necessary to station a line of policemen across the main entrance, and a great concourse of people, estimated at one time as high as 5,000, were held back by main force. During the evening most of these people heard Socialist speeches, delivered to enthusiastic overflow meetings, by Comrades Geo. Koop, Berlyn, Howard Tuttle of Wisconsin, A. S. Edwards, Eugene V. Debs and others.

While the vast gathering of people on State street was seeking admission to the hall, not less than 2,000 Socialists, with two bands of music and flags, banners and transparencies galore, assembled on Market street for the parade, which, though not large, proved to be one of the most picturesque and exuberantly happy ever seen on the streets of Chicago.

The Central Music Hall meeting was presided over by Comrade J. B. Smiley. Two companies of singers, one English and the other German, added to the interest and success of the meeting. Chairman Smiley's opening address was couched in most felicitous terms and made a fine impression upon the splendid audience that listened. At the close of his remarks introducing Comrade Eugene V. Debs, the memories of the great strike of six years ago were revived by John Lloyd, one of the "Old Guard of '94," who stepped upon the platform and presented to Comrade Debs a gorgeous bouquet of red roses bound with a white ribbon, on which was printed the letters "A. R. U." Here occurred the first great demonstration of the evening. The first speaker stood ready to deliver the first speech in the first national campaign of the Social Democratic party of America. The reception was tremendous in its earnestness; it was, as one daily newspaper said, "a great ovation to a public man." Again and again the vast audience rose in round after round of applause; handkerchiefs, flags and banners were waved, and men and women cheered and yelled for many minutes, as Debs, smiling and modest, bowed in acknowledgment. When the storm subsided he spoke as follows:

DEBS' SPEECH

Ladies and Gentlemen:—

No words of mine can possibly express my appreciation of this beautiful testimonial (a bouquet of roses) of the esteem and love of my old comrades, the members of the American Railway Union. I can only say that, like the rosebud under the influence of sunshine and snow, my heart opens to receive their benediction.

The only vital issue in the present campaign springs from the private ownership of the means of production and it involves the whole question of political equality, economic freedom and social progress. This fundamental issue has been studiously ignored by both the Republican and Democratic parties; it has been clearly stated and squarely met by the Social Democratic party. The alleged issues of the old parties are all rooted in the existing economic system, which system they are pledged to preserve and to perpetuate, and which the Social Democratic party is pledged to abolish.

The contest to-day is for the control of government by three separate classes, with conflicting interests, into which modern society has been divided in the development of the competitive system. The capitalist class is represented by the Republican party; the middle class is represented by the Democratic party; the working class is represented by the Social Democratic party. Each of these parties is committed to the economic interests of the class it represents.

The Republican platform is a self-congratulation of the dominant capitalist class. "Prosperity galore, give us four years more." The Democratic platform is the wail and cry of the perishing middle class; calamity without end. The Social Democratic platform is an indictment of the capitalist system; it is the call to class consciousness and political action of the exploited working class; and it is a ringing declaration in favor of collective ownership of all the means of production and distribution, as the clarion voice of economic freedom.

Parties, like individuals, act from motives of self-interest. The platform of a party is simply the political expression of the economic interests of the class it represents. The Democratic party differs from the Republican party as the small capitalist differs from the large capitalist; it is a difference in degree only. The Socialist party differs from them both as the exploited wage-worker differs from his exploiter; the difference here is not in degree but in kind. The Republican party is in favor of expansion, the acquisition of foreign territory; a colonial policy. Why? Senator Beveridge says, because we are the trustees of Jehovah. But Senator Depew, who is a man somewhat older, may be permitted to answer. Mr. Depew says: "The markets for the products of our farms and factories accessible by the Atlantic ocean will soon be filled, but across the Pacific are numberless opportunities. Within a distance from Manila not much greater than Havana is from New York, live nine hundred millions of people, purchasing now annually from all nations of the things which they produce, to the sum of one thousand millions of dollars, of which we furnish five per cent; that five per cent should be fifty per cent." The getting of the forty-five per cent constitutes "The White Man's Burden." Mr. Depew also says, "What is the tendency of the future? Why this war in South Africa? Why this hammering at the gates of Pekin? Why this marching of troops from Asia to Africa?" Why? It is because the surplus production of civilized countries of modern times is greater than civilization can consume; it is because this over-production comes back to stagnation and poverty. The American people produce two billion dollars' worth more than they can consume.

The Democratic party is flatly opposed to this policy; it denounces it as imperialism and declares that that is the paramount issue of the campaign. The difference between these two capitalist parties upon so-called paramount issues is so clear as to be self-evident. The small capitalists represented by the Democratic party lack the modern economic equipment necessary in the struggle for the control of foreign markets. They have none of the surplus products which must be disposed of to avoid stagnation. Upon the other hand, the expanding markets for which the large capitalists are struggling will extend their lease of power and greatly augment it. The vast foreign trade will develop and enable them the more easily to crush out their small competitors in the middle class. This is the bone of contention between these two capitalist parties, and what is called the burning issue of this campaign.

In the Republican convention, the national convention that was held in the City of Philadelphia, a most remarkable address was delivered by Senator Wolcott, the temporary chairman. Among other things, this gentleman, eminent in the council of that party, said: "There is not an idle mill in the country to-day." This in the face of the fact that at that very time there were scores of idle mills in the country, and multiplied thousands of workmen seeking in vain for employment. It is my judgment that the man who makes such a statement as this in the face of existing facts, ought to be sentenced to serve a term in the anthracite coal region.

He furthermore said: "There is no man who labors with his hands in all our broad domain who cannot find work, and the scale of wages was never so high in the history of our country." Another absolute falsehood. The Republican party touches this economic question as a vital point, but, as you will observe, does not attempt to grapple with it. In their platform we find this statement: "We recognize the necessity and propriety of the honest co-operation of capital to meet new business conditions, and especially to extend our rapidly increasing foreign trade, but we condemn all conspiracies and combinations intended to restrict business, to create monopolies, to limit production or to control prices, and favor such legislation as will effectively restrain and prevent all such abuses." If the Republican party favors legislation restricting such abuses, why has it not enacted such legislation when it has been in absolute control of every department of the government during the past three years? "Wages in every department of labor have been maintained at high rates, higher than ever before."

In Mr. McKinley's letter of acceptance we find this statement: "Prosperity abounds everywhere throughout the republic." This is doubtless true from the standpoint of the interests of the class he represents. The worst that can be said about the president is, that he has been absolutely true to the party that elected him. "Combinations of capital," he says, "which control the market in commodities necessary to the general use of the people by suppressing natural and ordinary competition, thus enhancing prices to the general consumer, are obnoxious to the common law and the public welfare. They are dangerous conspiracies against the public good, and ought to be made the subject of prohibitory or penal legislation. Publicity will be a helpful influence to check this evil. Honest co-operation of capital is necessary to meet new business conditions and extend our rapidly increasing foreign trade, but conspiracies and combinations intended to restrict business, create monopolies and control classes, should be effectively restrained."

Just where the line is drawn between honest combinations and vicious combinations he does not attempt to say. All combinations and monopolies privately owned and operated for private profit, are vicious combinations. All monopolies owned and controlled by the people, in the interests of the people, are good combinations.

We find by an examination of the Democratic platform that substantially the same statements are made upon this question: "Private monopolies are indefensible and intolerable. They destroy competition." Observe that both the Republican party and the Democratic party are in favor of competition, the existing system. They condemn its tendencies, its fraud, but they still favor the system itself. "They destroy competition, control the price of all material and of the finished product, thus robbing both the purchaser and consumer; they lessen the employment of labor; arbitrarily fix the terms and conditions thereof and deprive individual energy and small capital of every opportunity for betterment. They are the most efficient agent yet devised for appropriating efforts of industry to the benefit of the few at the expense of the many. They are fostered by Republican laws and they are protected by the Republican administration, in return for campaign subscriptions and political support. Corporations should be protected in all their rights, and their legitimate interests should be respected."

Corporations are organized purely for private profit; the rights of the corporations to exploit the working class and exact tribute from the people are to be respected, according to the Democratic platform.

In Mr. Bryan's letter of acceptance it is stated that "Private monopoly is an outlaw," and private monopoly is built absolutely upon private ownership. If Mr. Bryan is opposed to private monopoly why doesn't he propose a public monopoly in its place? A public monopoly, built upon collective ownership, which converts a curse into a blessing to society. He says: "I shall recommend such legislation as may be necessary to dissolve every private monopoly which does business outside the state of its origin." He might just as well attempt by legislation to prevent a river flowing outside the county in which it has its source. "The Democratic party does not seek to embarrass capitalists engaged in a legitimate business, but it does protest against capitalists entering politics and attempting to assume control of the instrumentalities of government."

Now, my friends, we observe after examining both these platforms, that both the Republican and Democratic parties are in favor of the private ownership of the means of production and distribution. They are in favor of the existing wage system. There is absolutely no difference between them. Upon the other hand the Social Democratic party, standing upon a platform declaring in favor of collective ownership of the means of production, declares to the world that there is no other solution of this economic problem.

There is an economic revolution in this and other countries in which modern industry has been developed in the past century. We have been so completely engaged in competitive labor that we are utterly oblivious of the fact. A century ago work was done by hand very largely, or with simple primitive tools. How to make a living was an easy question. The boy learned a trade, served his apprenticeship, and the skill inherent in the trade secured steady employment for him at fair wages, by virtue of which he could provide for his family, educate his children and discharge the duties of good citizenship. In that day the working man owned and controlled the tools with which he worked and was virtually his own employer. Not only this, he was the master of what his labor produced. It was a very slow age, meagre of results; it required ten to sixteen hours daily labor to enable the working man to supply his material wants. It was then the machine emanated from the brain of labor; it was designed to aid the laboring man, so that he could provide for his social, moral and intellectual improvement.

At this point an industrial revolution began. The machine, the new tool of production, passed from the control of the working man who used it, into that of the newly developed class. The small employer became a capitalist, and the employee became a wage worker, and they began to grow apart. The machine was crude and imperfect at first; it increased production, it began to displace the working man, it pushed him out of the shop into the street. The working man, forced into idleness, became a tramp. I have said again and again that I am with the tramp, and against the system of society that made him a tramp.

The machine became more perfect day by day; it lowered the wage of the worker, and in due course of time it became so perfect that it could be operated by the unskilled labor of the woman, and she became a factor in industry. The owners of these machines were in competition with each other for trade in the market; it was war; cheaper and cheaper production was demanded, and cheaper and cheaper labor was demanded. In the march of time it became necessary to withdraw the children from school, and these machines came to be operated by the deft touch of the fingers of the child. In the first stage machine was in competition with man, in the next, man in competition with both, and in the next the child in competition with the whole combination. Today there are more than three millions of women engaged in industrial pursuits in the United States, and more than two millions of children. It is not a question of white labor or black labor, or male labor or female labor or child labor, in this system; it is solely a question of cheap labor, without reference to the effect upon mankind.

The simple tool of production became an excellent machine, it necessitated the co-operation and concentration of capital. The tool of production was no longer owned and controlled by the working man who used it. It was owned by the class who didn't use it, and was used by a class who didn't own it. The owners of the machine want profit and the users of the machine want wages. Their economic interests are absolutely in conflict, diametrically opposite. What is good for one is not good for the other.

It is this conflict of interest which has given rise to the modern class struggle which finds expression in strikes, lockouts, boycotts and deep seated discontent. But I am not looking on the dark side of things. I am in no sense a pessimist. I am observing the trend of economic development. I realize it is only a question of time until this concentration of industry will be completed. One department after another is being monopolized in this march of concentration; the interests of these trusts are so completely interwoven that in the near future there will be a trust of trusts. In this trust the middle class, representing the small capitalists, is being crushed and ground beneath the upper mill stone of concentration of capital and the nether mill stone of vanishing patronage.

The working man has been impoverished. Examining the reports I find that during the past fifty years of the age of the machine, his producing capacity has steadily increased, but upon the other hand in the competitive pressure, his wage has steadily diminished. The more he produces the worse he is off. He cannot consume what he produces. The more he produces the more there is an over-production based upon under-consumption. The factories close down and he finds himself out of employment and the reason suggests itself; he no longer works for himself, he works for another, for a wage that represents but a small share of what his labor produces. This accounts for the fact that periodically the country is afflicted with over-production; this accounts for the fact that the large capitalists are struggling to open new markets for the sale of surplus goods, the very goods our own people here at home are suffering for the want of. In this great competitive system the mom-moth department store is sapping the life currents of the small shop keeper; the great bonanza farm is driving the small farmer to bankruptcy and ruin.

No power on earth can arrest this concentration. It is paving the way for a new economic system, a new social order. Socialists understand its trend; they are beginning to organize in every village and every hamlet, every town and every city, of every state and territory in the country. They are organizing their forces beneath the conquering banner of economic equality.

A century and a quarter ago this country witnessed a mighty struggle for political equality, the right of man to govern this country and the formation of this republic was the crowning glory of the century. Today there is another struggle going forward for economic equality. If men are fit to be political equals, they are also fit to be economic equals. If they are economic equals, they will be social equals; class distinctions will disappear from human society forever.

Look over in the direction of Europe; we observe that the Socialists there are organizing day by day; that before their conquering march the thrones are beginning to tremble and will, within the next few years, totter to their fall. The same movement is spreading over the United States. Its progress has not been so rapid here for the reason that we have had a new country, and until recently there has been some opportunity for individual initiative. But no country on the face of the globe has been so completely exploited within so short a space of time as the United States of America.

Socialists are organizing for the purpose of securing control of this government. Having conquered the political power upon the platform that declares in favor of collective ownership in the name of the people, they will take possession of industry. It will already have been organized to meet co-operation, that is to say, self-operation, in the development of the capitalist system. Industry will be rescued from cupidity; it will be co-operative in every department of human industry. The badge of labor will no longer be the badge of servitude. Every man will gladly do his share of the world's useful work. Every man can then honestly enjoy his share of the world's blessings. Every machine will be a blessing to mankind because it will serve to reduce the number of hours constituting a day's work, and the work day will be shortened in exact proportion to the progress of invention. Labor will no longer be bought and sold in the markets of the world. We will not make things for sale, but will make things to use. We will fill the world with wealth and every man can have all that he can rationally use. Rent, interest and profit, three forms of exploitation will disappear forever.

Every man will have the same inherent right to work that he has to live; he will receive the full product of his labor. The soul will no longer be dominated by the stomach. Men and women will be economically free; life will no longer be a struggle for bread; then the children of men can begin the march to the highest type of civilization that this world has ever known.

The abolishing of the capitalist system does not merely mean the emancipation of the working class, but of all society. It will level upward to higher and nobler elevation. This earth for the first time since it was flung into space will be a habitable globe; it will be fit for good men and good women to live in.

The existing system is unspeakably cruel; the life currents of old age and childhood are the tributaries of the bottomless reservoir of private profit. The face of capitalist society is blotched with the effects of a diseased organism. What is the estate of Christendom today? We boast of our civilization, and yet every Christian nation on the face of the globe is armed to the teeth. Against whom? Against heathens, barbarians, savages? No, against other Christian nations! And the world pays its highest tribute to that form of ingenuity that enables us to destroy the most human lives in the shortest space of time. Go to the city of Washington today with a device that will enable you to destroy one hundred thousand lives in a second, and your fame and your fortune are made. Is that civilization in the proper sense of the term? We must bear in mind, my friends, that competition is war; that war is the normal state of capitalism.

If there were no gold in the Transvaal, there would be no British soldiers there. If there were no prospect of acquiring material wealth in the Philippines, we would not worry ourselves into premature graves because the Filipinos lack capacity for self-government. Those wars were declared by the spirit of commercial conquest. They are necessary to the development of the capitalist system. With the end of capitalism comes the end of war, and the inauguration of peace.

In the march of invention space has almost been annihilated; the nations of the earth are being drawn into closer relation with each other. In the new social order, each nation will have its place in the sisterhood of nations, just as every man will have his place in the brotherhood of men.

I will do what little I can to hasten the coming of the day when war shall curse this earth no more. I am not a patriot in the sense in which that term is defined in the lexicon of capitalism. I have no ambition to kill my fellowman, and I am quite certain that I have no ambition to be killed. When I think of a cold, glittering, steel bayonet being pushed into the soft, white, quivering flesh of a human body I recoil with horror.

All hail to Socialism! You may retard it, you can hasten its coming by your actions; but you cannot defeat it, you cannot prevent it. It is coming just as certain as the rivers find their way to the sea. It is not yet a popular institution. It is right. A half a

A SYSTEM OF RAPINE

There are in the United States twenty millions of wage workers. No one pretends that they receive the compensation for their labor that simple justice demands. Every thoughtful man knows that the employers of this vast army of toilers, the capitalistic class, pocket the difference between what they earn and what they receive. The New York Journal of Commerce, a conservative paper, wearing no party tag, estimates the increased wealth of the country during the past ten years at $25,000,000,000—twenty-five billion dollars! Who has got this vast sum of wealth? Not the men who earned it. It has gone to swell the dazzling fortunes of the few. The facts are incontrovertible. They admit of no successful denial. How is the robbery practiced? That is the supreme question.

A few simple propositions worked out by plain arithmetical calculation serve to solve, at least in part, the problem.

If 20,000,000 of toilers are despoiled of 5 cents a day for 300 working days in a year the robbery amounts to the sum of $300,000,000.

If they are robbed of 10 cents a day, which they have honestly earned, the annual piracy swells to $600,000,000.

If 15 cents a day is withheld by the capitalistic class the spoliation amounts to $900,000,000 a year. Such exhibits of rapine do no violence to facts and are worthy of consideration.

The purpose of the Social Democratic party is to shape industrial affairs that toilers shall receive all they earn, thus equitably distributing the vast accumulations of wealth which labor brings to the country.

WE HAVE 'EM WORRIED

We have them guessing good and hard in Indiana and the Bryanites are thoroughly scared, while the McKinleyites have in the past week learned there is going to be a big Socialist vote throughout the gas belt which was Republican in 1896. The Indianapolis Press of September 24 had the following items, indicating that Debs is an important factor in the election:

"If the Republicans are counting on the theory that all the Debs votes will come from the Democratic party, they are making a grievous error. The bulk of the Debs vote in Indiana will come from the factories of the gas belt, which rolled up such great Republican majorities in 1896. The resumption of work in the iron mills is a piece of great luck for the Republicans."

"The Democrats have on hand a scheme to break the backbone of the Socialist strength in Indiana by sending Bryan into the Fifth District for a number of speeches. Debs lives in that district, and there is noticeable a big slump to him among the laboring people of the district. It is believed that a few speeches from Bryan would change the drift, and he probably will speak at Terre Haute, Brazil, Martinsville and other Fifth District towns on October 6."

Mr. Bryan has already made one visit to Indiana in response to the cry of his Hoosier following to help "break the backbone of the Socialist strength," and every day since the Socialist propaganda has shown increased activity and vigor. Not a single man has been deflected from a firm purpose to support Socialism by voting for the Socialist candidate.

It will do the Democrats and Mr. Bryan no good to go into the Fifth District. Forty speeches a day from Bryan could not "change the drift" or deceive a single Social Democrat. The Bryan-olators will get on to our curves after awhile; they will learn that men once converted to Socialism (in the Fifth District and everywhere else) are not to be turned away from their principles by a speech from any old-party capitalist politician.

TWO-CENTS-A-DAY PROSPERITY

The Indiana Bureau of Statistics published a bulletin reviewing the condition of organized labor in Indiana for the year ending May 31, 1900. Responses to inquiries were received from 408 unions, having a membership of 24,421. These union workers, it is shown, had average employment during the year of 78 days, at an average wage of $1.86 a day, giving an average income of $145.08.

The highest number of days that any one of the 24,421 men was employed was 162, at an average wage of $1.47, giving a yearly income of $238.14.

In view of capitalistic class contention that wage earners are prosperous, and their dinner pails well filled, it becomes interesting and instructive to analyze the foregoing official figures.

The union working man, receiving an annual income of $145.08, has for his support and that of his family for the 365 days of the year, 4 cents a day.

The union working man who was employed 162 days, and secured an income of $238.14, has for his support and that of his family for the 365 days of the year, 6½ cents a day.

The basic figures of the foregoing calculations are official, published by John B. Connor, a Republican, and chief of the bureau.

The picture of prosperity painted by the chief of the bureau exhibits a condition of haggard poverty that defies exaggeration. It shows to what depth of deprivation the capitalistic class has reduced even organized labor in Indiana, which is doubtless as prosperous as any other state in the Union—a condition which voices trumpet-toned the necessity for the trumped condition which the Social Democratic party is laboring to secure.

Pursuing the subject briefly: If the man securing an income of $145.08 has a wife then they must subsist on 2 cents a day each for the 365 days of the year. If there are three in the family they must subsist on 1 cent and 3 mills a day. And the union workman securing an income of $238.14 must be content with 6 cents and 5 mills a day for every day in the year. But if he is a man of a family, say four in all, they must subsist on 1 cent and 6 mills a day.

Such is the official presentation of the conditions of organized labor in Indiana.

But the chief of the bureau, seemingly dazed by conclusions to which he was driven by his own figures, and desirous of lifting himself out of his dilemma by his boot straps, seeks to placate the capitalistic class by supposing that every man works 312 days in the year and thereby secures an income of $577.72. But his effort to supply fancy for fact only sinks him deeper in the mire, from which he seeks to extricate himself.

The fact remains labor, whether organized or unorganized, is not prosperous, nor can it be under capitalistic methods. Socialism solves the problem, and only Socialism is equal to the Herculean task.

NOTES AND COMMENT

"Split of the Socialists. One faction seeks to bar the other from the official ballot." This is the heading to a dispatch from Springfield, Ill., dated Sept. 29, which says that Thos. J. Morgan of this city, "acting as representative of the united Socialist forces of the State," has filed objection to placing the caption "Social Labor Party" on the official ballot. In doing so he claimed to represent an organization which is incorporated as "The Socialist Labor Party." The Herald has no information as to the specific instructions given to Mr. Morgan as the "representative of the united Socialist forces," but we are quite sure that if the committee of the forces (united for political action in the present campaign) empowered him to resort to paltry technicalities to disfranchise any body of men and preventing a free expression of their preferences at the ballot box, then the committee made a great mistake and the Social Democratic branches in Illinois will not stand to be made a party to such petty interference with the political rights of others.

The street fight and assault upon Theodore Roosevelt at Victor, Colorado, was the legitimate and inevitable sequence of a campaign of brag, bluster and bullying inaugurated by Roosevelt himself. A braggart and refined blackguard himself, he ran up against the real thing. It was a disgraceful incident in his campaign which he had invited. When it was over he said: "The more of this they give me the better I like it. It was bully, sir, bully!" which showed that what he wants as a feature of the campaign he enjoys, is the street brawl. A choice candidate he for the party of Lincoln and Sumner.

Christ said: "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God"—a cartoon showing the hump-backed capitalists wriggling in the eye of a needle would be an object lesson and immensely interesting. It is gratifying to know there is one place where the investment of stolen money will not avail to help its possessor in a pinch. Old Rockefeller, for instance, will have to pipe himself through, with the probability of landing at last, when his royal cloven-footed highness has a cinch on brimstone.

Socialism proposes a new civilization. The present civilization is symbolized by the gun, the fetter and the tag. Old Isaiah, the poet prophet, saw a time when nations should learn war no more, when swords should be beaten "into ploughshares and spears into pruning hooks"—in a word, he saw the time when Socialism should come. Come it has—the present is its dawn. If men will vote the Social Democratic ticket they will expedite the full-orbed noon of the new civilization.

If the Social Democratic party were in power, what would it do? Well, it would take the injunction screws and fetters and bludgeons out of the constitution, and out of the hands of a gang of autocratic judges—and never more, in this land would the flag wave over state or national troops engaged in shooting impoverished working men.

Every star in the blue concave shines for freedom; every wind that blows sings an anthem for freedom, and every Socialist in the campaign has his or her battle cry—freedom! It must come. The eternal years of God are pledged for the emancipation of men from the cruel grasp of capitalistic taskmasters.

The old parties are singing with mellifluous cadence the spider's song to the fly. But working men have heard it in every campaign—some of them have been caught and robbed—but not all of them. As Lincoln would say: "You can't fool all of the workingmen of the country all the time."

Teddy the Terrible would be a winning card in a dime museum by the side of the tattooed chief from the Fiji Islands or the latest importation of the orang-outang from Borneo. Chasing Jack-rabbit theories of empire is too spectacular for plain people.

In Plutonian darkness, amidst fire damp, a lurking hell, the miners of Pennsylvania toil for a starvation pittance, and when they strike for food, for home and family, troops are ordered out to kill them. Socialism would change that sort of civilization.

Socialism demands moral courage of the highest order. Its shibboleth is emancipation, the one redeeming word of the ages, coined by God Himself, when he ordered the prophet, priest and judge to "Harken to the voice of the people."

The ideas of the Social Democratic party constitute its capital. The moment a man owns himself he becomes a capitalist, more, a sovereign. He wears neither fetters nor tag, and expands to full proportions of a free man.

If politics is the science of government the anthracite coal miners of Pennsylvania would like to have a change of science, and they can have it by voting for the Socialist principles and candidates.

The capitalistic policy is to rifle the working class, and if they object call out the troops and rifle them till they are reduced to quietness.

A vote for the Social Democratic ticket is a vote for the prosperity of wage workers—not their degradation.

A real good mark to kick at is Mark Hanna.

PRINCIPLES REPUDIATED IN THE INTEREST OF A PERSON

From a Letter Written by
S. M. Jones, of Toledo, in February, 1900.

The difference between the Bryan and McKinley program is a difference in degree; it is the same in kind. I have no faith in either; they are both evil. I am a Socialist. I believe in brotherhood and can only find peace in advocating those principles that lead men to live brotherly. Mr. Bryan is advocating an entirely different set of principles.

From a Letter Written by Him in September,
Seven Months Later.

I am for brotherhood Socialism... Desiring not to influence the signing of petitions [requesting him to run for Congress], I have carefully refrained from saying whom I am for in the National Campaign now on... I believe that here on this continent is to be set up the co-operative commonwealth of equals... I shall vote for W. J. Bryan as the best way I know of to give expression to these sentiments, believing him to stand for what is best in the public conscience of America today.

National Campaign Opened

century ago the institution of chattel slavery was very popular in the United States. It was doomed to disappear. There were thousands who believed that it was criminal and unjust; that it ought to be overthrown, but they did not have the courage of their convictions; they dared not speak out. There were a few, however, who stood erect. They were agitators in their way, and they were covered with odium. William Lloyd Garrison was one of them. Not a great while ago in Newberry Parish in Massachusetts I saw a little church where the bells rung to assemble a mob to attack him when he attempted to make a speech against slavery. Wendell Phillips was another. Elijah Lovejoy was another. In 1837 in Alton, Ill., Elijah Lovejoy published the Alton Observer; a committee of friends called on him and said: "You will have to stop these attacks on slavery, our people believe in it." Mr. Lovejoy said: "I have sworn eternal opposition to it, and I will not turn back." They called on him again. He said: "I can die at my post, but I will not desert." His printing office was attacked and he was mobbed and murdered. The state of Illinois applauded the crime. Sixty years after the grandchildren of the men who murdered him erected a monument above his self-sacrificed dust in memory of his name. These men were great men, because they dared to be true to themselves and to their convictions of right and duty. They didn't ask: "Is it popular, can I afford it, does it pay?" They simply asked: "Is it right?" and satisfying themselves that it was right, they stood by it without fear of consequences.

Ab, my friends, this movement of Socialism will be popular in the next few years. It is moving forward in all directions; every man, woman and child in the land is vitally interested in it. Such a meeting as this is immensely suggestive, immensely significant; it bears testimony to the fact that men and women are thinking upon this great question as they have never thought before; they realize that the world is trembling on the verge of the greatest organic change in human history. And the Socialists realize that the next ruling class of the world will be the working class. So they are pressing forward step by step until the minority they represent today becomes the majority, and seizes the reins of government and inaugurates the system of the co-operative commonwealth. If you believe in these conquering principles we ask you to join the new crusade and stand side by side with us, and cast your lot with Socialism and cast your votes for the Social Democratic party and hasten the day of its triumph.

I would address a few words to those who are in sympathy with the Social Democratic party, but who hesitate to vote for it for fear they may lose their votes. Let me say to you: It is infinitely better to vote for freedom and fail than to vote for slavery and succeed. The Social Democratic party also appeals to the considerate judgment and the common sense of the middle class of the country. This class is doomed to disappear in the march of the capitalist system; it is only a question of a short time until the middle class will be in the working class. And the sooner the better. For the middle class—the best investment of the little capital that still remains for you, is to put it in Socialistic propaganda. It is possible that you may reach your journey's end in safety, but how will it be with your son? You have a boy twelve or thirteen or fourteen years of age; if you have that solicitude for him a good parent should have for his child, this question can cause you no little concern. He can no longer learn a trade; there is not a trade but that is crowded to overflowing. If he spends three or four years learning a trade he will find that a machine has arrived there in advance of him. He has no capital. He has simply his bare hands that represent his labor power. He cannot buy a factory; he is compelled from the very nature of the situation to offer his labor power, that is to say himself, for sale. If he is fortunate he becomes a wage slave. But even the privilege of selling himself into bondage may be denied him, and he may become a tramp. We cannot tell, for in this system everything is insecure, in doubt, uncertain; you may be worth forty or fifty thousand dollars today and a bankrupt next week or next month, and in the very sunset of your life the poorhouse looms in your vision.

Is it not possible to improve upon such a condition as this? Yes, by the intelligent application of the principles of Socialism. We live in the most favored land beneath the bending sky. We have all the raw materials and the most marvelous machinery; millions of eager inhabitants, seeking employment. Nothing is so easily produced as wealth, and no man should suffer for the need of it; and in a rational, economic system poverty will be a horror of the past; the penitentiaries will be depopulated, and the shadow of the gallows will no longer fall upon the land. Co-operative industry carried forward in the interest of all the people, that is the foundation of the new social order; economic freedom for every human being on earth; no man compelled to depend on the arbitrary will of another for the right or opportunity to create enough to supply his material wants. There will still be competition among men; but it will not be for bread, it will be to excel in good works. Every man will work for the society in which he lives, and society will work in the interests of those who compose it.

I look into the future with absolute confidence. When I strain my vision the slightest I can see the first rising rays of the sun of the co-operative commonwealth; it will look down on a nation in which men and women— I say, men and women, because in the new social order, women will stand side by side with men, the badge of inferiority will be taken from her brow, and we will enjoy the enraptured vision of a land without a master, a land without a slave.

Comrade Debs was followed by Comrade Herman C. Perry, candidate for governor of Illinois—a man from the mines of Spring Valley. The audience had rapturously applauded every telling point made by the presidential candidate, but gave Comrade Perry a reception that showed it had not exhausted itself. With no pretense whatever to oratory, Comrade Perry made a telling speech, every sentence carrying with it the conviction that the speaker was a true and thoroughly class-conscious Social Democrat and a man of genuine worth, in whom confidence was not misplaced.

He was followed by Mayor J. C. Chase of Haverhill, Mass., who told of the progress of Socialism in Massachusetts, especially in the municipality over which he presides, where the Social Democratic party of America elected its first mayor.

Then came what was distinctively the most significant incident in the onward march of Socialism in this country since the Indianapolis convention, the speech of Prof. George D. Herron. He had shortened his trip abroad, denying himself the pleasure of visiting Leo Tolstoi, in order to make public avowal of his full sympathy with political Socialism and to bear his share in the first national campaign of the party. Comrade Herron was given a tremendously cordial reception and his thoughtful address stirred the audience to the highest pitch of enthusiasm. The address follows:

HERRON'S SPEECH.

In speaking for Socialism to-night, I shall be as frank with this audience as I am with my own soul. I must give my own reasons for standing upon this platform. I cannot give the reasons of any other man, or of any sect or party, for supporting the Social Democratic movement, though I respect all the men and motives that here converge. The best service which I can render the cause is to bear witness to the light that is in me, and not to the light that is in some other man. I am a Socialist, and all my voting for the last eight years has been with the Socialist-Labor party. But before I am a Socialist I am a free man; I am a Socialist because I am a free man. I have paid too great a price for my freedom, and have left too many blood stains upon the capitalistic order, to make any compromise with what I have won and intend to keep. And I have resolved that I can best serve the world and the cause of Socialism as well, by telling the truth exactly as I see it, or seem to see it. I will never limit the liberty of another man's soul, nor permit any man or party to limit the liberty of my soul. I will not tell lies to support the truth, or conceal one truth for the sake of helping another truth, or be anything else than wholly frank with all men, everywhere. I will not evade bearing witness to exactly what I seem to see this year in order to be consistent with something I may have said last year. I will not tell anything less or more than the whole truth as I see it at the moment I am speaking, to support any party, or even to support the throne of God itself. More than anything else, the world needs men who will confess the truth exactly as they see it, and stand by that truth in the faith that it will be its own witness; in the faith that it needs no tactics or concealment or scheming for its support. If economic Socialism means anything, it means just this liberty of every man to take a free look at life and all its problems and to be gladly heard by his comrades while he tells what he sees.

When I left Chicago last January for Egypt and eastern lands, I had the intention of staying across the seas until a later time than the present. For many weeks I was living tent-life in Syria, out of the reach of letter and newspaper communication with America. Only recently, on coming into Europe, have I understood something of the beginning and meaning of the American Socialist movement. I could have gone on with my plans and have committed myself to the cause of political Socialism at a later period. The Socialist movement does not seem to me to have yet taken its coherent and conquering form in the politics of America. But when I saw that American Socialism was actually in the political melting-pot, being tried by fire in order that it might come forth as a national effort for that freedom and fullness of life which was promised by our fathers, then I also saw that my place was in the melting-pot. I could not wait until Socialism should be altogether pleasing to me in all of its aspects, or until I should be altogether pleasing to Socialism in some of my views of life; my place was with my comrades, sharing with them in the struggles, the defeats and disgraces, that are always involved in the first creative steps of an organized movement. So I gave up my plans of travel, and am here to publicly commit myself to the political Socialist movement as the only collective expression of the things I have preached from this Central Music Hall platform in the name of Christ. And I am here to stay until the Co-operative Commonwealth be established, or until the possibilities of my life be exhausted in helping American labor to consciously and nobly express itself in a coherent effort towards that order of society that shall change labor from a curse into a song; and the lot of labor from poverty and struggle to fullness and freedom and gladness of life.

It may be that the American Socialist party is yet to be formed. If that be true, all of us who call ourselves Socialists are ready to form in any party that shall truly stand for the cause and philosophy of Socialism. It is to Socialism itself we are committing ourselves to-night, and not to any particular party as a final expression of Socialism. Socialism is larger than any sect or any party or any definition or creed. It has no Bible except the living human facts as they unfold. The particular name or party under which Socialism shall finally come is not here important. The thing of importance is this, that we now have an opportunity to politically express ourselves in a movement which is at least the germ of the great American Socialism that is to fulfill what was good and true in the Democracy of our fathers.

Three great lines are converging in the American Socialist outcome. We must name the first the Socialist Labor people who brought from Europe to America what is sometimes called dogmatic Socialism. These men have seemed to some of us to be sectarian and harsh, and to have carried class consciousness into class hatred. But it is to be wondered at that they have been bitter and dogmatic in their advocacy of Socialism, and in their attacks upon the capitalistic order? Our early Socialists were men who had themselves experienced the bitterness and devastation of life that comes to labor in the service of capitalism; they were men who spelled out their Karl Marx in the hideous misery of sweat-shops; men who pawned their threadbare coats to print their tracts. They were Socialists when it took a fanatic and a hero to be a Socialist; Socialists when to be known as a Socialist meant hunger or starvation for themselves and their families. They were men who made brave and pitiful self-sacrifices for one another as comrades; men who, however fierce, practiced towards each other some of the ethics which we Christians are not even heroic enough to preach. These men do not make a Bible of their Marx, and they understand as well as any of us that the economic philosophy of fifty years ago will have to be recast in the mold of present American facts and ideals. What they now justly ask is, that Socialism, under whatever name it appears, or by whatever party it is brought before the people, shall base itself directly upon the fundamental fact that those who live by selling their labor to capital must become class-conscious of the fact that they are the rightful owners and real producers of the earth; and that this producing class must bravely and coherently set to work to achieve its own liberty from the capitalistic and labor-consuming system of industry. I do not see how any Socialist, or any nobly thoughtful man, can dispute this fundamental proposition, however fiercely it may have been advocated. Nor do I see how American Socialism can be established until American labor comes to such a consciousness of its manhood and worth as shall lift it into mighty response to this summonsed task to which mankind has ever summoned itself; the task of organizing out of the materials of nature and history a coherent and free society, in which every man shall inherit with every other man the resources and opportunities that open whole and gladness of life to the human soul.

Another converging line is that individualism which was the genius of our American political origins, and which was the meaning of eighteenth century political and social philosophy. The end which that individualism sought was right. Rousseau and Jefferson, and the French revolutionists, had a claim which shall be justly and fully acquitted in the court of American Socialism. Socialism does not come to destroy but to fulfill the ideals of liberty, fraternity and equality which made our century so big with promises in its beginnings, and so sad and skeptical with failure in its endings. The liberty which early American aspiration sought can be fulfilled only in the association which Socialism offers; individualism can be fulfilled only in collectivism. I have often said, from this platform, that no man can be free, or ought to be free, until all men are free. The whole world is enslaved as long as there remains a single slave on the earth. Liberty is a social achievement, and must be achieved by men together; not in competition with each other. American Democracy, which originally meant voluntary co-operation as the order of state, will soon be lost, even as an ideal, unless it realize itself in Democracy and co-operation in production and distribution.

The third converging is a new religious movement developing a much keener and more comprehensive spiritual consciousness in the common life. It is a movement so wide and deep that it is scarcely yet recognized and has nothing to do with the conventional religious experiences. It is so altogether outside of historic religious institutions, and has come upon the world so unawares, that it does not even know itself as religious or spiritual. But it is no less than the coming of the Son of Man to a consciousness of himself as a Son of God. It is upon the tides of this new spiritual movement that some of us have been borne into Socialism, and we must be true to our inspiration, while fully recognizing the worth of other inspirations than our own.

Let me explain the point of view and advance from which this unobserved spiritual movement becomes one with economic Socialism. We began our working life with the conviction that the individual soul is all that has any worth. The individual man, his wholeness and liberty, are the untraveled concern of the universe, and all that gives it any worth or meaning. Nature and economic things have a value just to the extent that they are the materials by which the human soul may freely express itself. All material things are intrinsically spiritual values; they are the coin of the spiritual realm. The goal of history, if the universe is sincere and has a meaning, is the liberty of each soul to at last become a divine law unto itself; the liberty of each man to individualize God and nature and truth for himself, and to live an original life of his own. If you examine closely enough just what it is that has made the centuries blood red with human struggle, you will find that it is just this struggle of the soul of man for emancipation from every form of coercion; this struggle of the individual life to freely and deliberately and unfearingly choose for itself what it should be, to richly and fully be what it should choose, and to actually lay up its treasure where its heart should be. It was upon the tides of a spiritual passion for this liberty that some of us were beaten against the hard fact that there is no liberty for the individual soul so long as some people own that upon which all people depend for their bread. We have discovered that no spiritual freedom can achieve or maintain itself except it be realized in economic freedom. Private property in the natural resources upon which all men depend, and private property in that capital which all men create, is nothing less than private traffic in human souls; yea, it is the foundation of the ecclesiastical claim of private property in God and the truth, which is no less vicious than the claim of the monopolist to private ownership of the earth. The liberty of the soul can be achieved only through the passing away of the capitalistic form of society, and the coming in of the free and co-operative state.

The soul cannot find its freedom in "a free field and a fair fight"; for the soul is not free so long as it is compelled to fight for anything; the individual is free only when he is liberated from fighting, that he may live for the common good in company with his brothers.

But there is still another factor in this spiritual movement towards Socialism, and that is the ethical strain that has come to some of us who have faced the whole truth about our economic selves. We who are at once the receivers and victims of special privileges know that we are on the backs of our brothers. We know that our books, our clothes, our privileges are ours because we have dipped our hands right into our brothers' blood. I am able to stand here to-night and make my plea for Socialism, because I have consumed the labor-product which pays for all that I am able to be and all that I am able to give. I cannot believe that I can serve my comrades best by withdrawing from the problem, with the Tolstois, and setting up a private kingdom and Heaven of my own; it would be an unspeakable relief to me to pay my world-debt so cheaply. But my place is in the thick of the social plan and travail, to the depth of the heat and chaos, even if I have to bear this ethical strain and shame to the end. The least that I can do to pay my debt to my brothers, the least that I can do to be decent, is to contribute the whole of my life to the emancipation of labor from that capitalistic order which makes the product of the millions the profit and luxury of the few.

I said when I began that the American Socialist movement had not yet been fully and coherently organized, and that these three ethical factors which I have named are converging in that movement. But whether you agree with me or not to these converging lines, let me ask you to face clearly the fact that Socialism in some form is coming, without any regard to what you or I want. Closely speaking, Socialism can have but one meaning and issue. Loosely speaking, there might be many kinds of Socialism. There can be a thoroughly Democratic and spiritual Socialism, and there might be an imperialistic or Bismarckian Socialism, in which the state would own the people rather than the people the state. If I might prophesy I would say that in twenty years from now there will be, as now, two great political parties in America; but both of them will be Socialistic; one the party of Tory Socialism, and the other the party of Democratic Socialism. But whatever the form under which collectivism comes, the next stage of the world will be a collective stage of production and distribution. We might just as well appoint a committee to sit down on the sun, to keep it from going on its way, as to attempt to obstruct the Socialistic issue of the capitalist mode of production and distribution. We are nearing the end of an old stage of production and distribution, for competition and private industry no longer work, and they ought not to work. The present industrial system is approaching an economic world-crisis which is also the world's spiritual crisis.

What is the attitude of the two great national parties towards this evident world-crisis? The Republican is frankly the party of the capitalistic order. Under the priesthood of Mr. Hanna, it has been indissolubly wedded to capitalism as its weaker and obedient half. Let us credit Mr. Hanna and his party with all sincerity in their belief that capitalism is the best and only safe order of production and distribution. I am not here to question the sincerity of any man or party; but only to state their attitude towards social reconstruction. The Republican party is so openly the capitalistic party that its principles need no discussion before an audience anywhere in sympathy with Socialism.

But the Democratic party gives somewhat intangible hints of social reform. Let us examine those hints: So far as I can see, I am not able to find in any of Mr. Bryan's utterances, nor in the platform of his party a syllable that indicates the slightest knowledge of the real human problem that now confronts us. Mr. Bryan is a very sincere and upright man, and he numbers men of noble human sympathy among his supporters. But the Democratic propositions for economic and social reforms are negative and meaningless. Their talk of anti-trust legislation is childish, as well as unhistoric. You might just as well legislate against the tides of the sea, or the movements of the solar system, as to imagine that anti-trust legislation can for a moment hinder the present industrial development from going on to its consummation. If Mr. Bryan does not know, I am sure that Mr. Altgeld knows, that anti-trust declarations and legislations are silly; and have about as much relation to the real economic facts as Mr. Roosevelt has to modesty and gentle instincts. It is sometimes mysteriously hinted that Mr. Bryan has up his sleeve some very telling card which he intends to play in the economic game if he is elected; that he is playing politics just as Lincoln did. I do not believe that Mr. Lincoln played politics in any such sense as some of Mr. Bryan's supporters credit their candidate with doing. It is true that Mr. Lincoln shrewdly adopted every available means to achieve his end; but he knew exactly what he wanted from the beginning, and made clearly his goal from the opening of his political career as a member of the Illinois legislature. He wanted the progressive abolition of slavery and a union composed of entirely free men, and he said so. Furthermore, even if Lincoln did play politics in the sense in which Mr. Bryan's friends would indicate, we have nothing to do with that. It is time that we quit asking what Lincoln would do, or what Jefferson would do, or what Moses would do, or what Marx would do, and decide for ourselves, and by our own original inspiration, what we are to do in the face of the world-problem that confronts us. No age or its leaders can live by the inspiration and leadership of a past age. There is always more truth and resource in the present that have ever been available in the past. Besides, this method of playing politics as a game will no longer work with the awakening moral sense of the common life. The people do not want to know what card a man has up his sleeve, but what coherent and frankly spoken principles a man may have wherewith to meet the problems that are meeting him. There is no game that could be so wisely played, just now, as the hitherto untold game of honesty. Leaders whom the people will trust in the future must be leaders who believe in principles so strongly that they are not afraid to tell them to the world. They must be leaders who will trust the people and the truth so fully that they will shake out before the face of the people all the truth they have in their heads and hearts.

If we further examine the policy of the Democratic party, we will find that it is haltingly against the evils that are, but that it has not a single constructive proposition to make as to future good. It is idle to protest that we are against one order of things if we have no better order to propose. Whatever it may disclose in the future, the Democratic party has not disclosed any constructive ability in the past. The best that its most ardent reformers propose is the abolition of special privileges and the restoration of an imaginary free competition. Now twentieth century problems cannot be solved by eighteenth century phrases. So-called special privileges can be abolished only by making the highest privileges of the few the common privileges of all. The special privileges at which the individualist reformer would aim, are the direct results of the very competition which he proposes as a remedy. Special privileges, class legislation, and industrial monopoly are merely the triumph of the strongest competitor; they are the big fish that have swallowed the little fish. Even if the abstract "free field and fair fight," which has never existed outside of the economist's brain, could really exist, the result would again be special privileges and monopoly. In the freest economic field and fairest competition somebody would get whipped; and the triumph would be the triumph of sheer brute strength expressing itself in economic might; not the triumph of those men and politics socially fitted to survive. Besides, a rational civilization has for its end, not the so-called survival of the fittest, but the fitting of all to worthily survive. Furthermore, we are not seeking remedies for the existing social order; for it is an order of things that we do not want, well or ill. It is not a remedy for a capitalistic order that the present human situation demands, but a manhood with spiritual nerve and mighty grace to create a co-operative order which shall realize all the best ideals of all Democracies and political philosophies of the past.

I know that there are many that will vote for Mr. Bryan in the hope that the imperialist which reveals the degradation of our nation, and which has made our government the betrayer and the assassin of the liberties of a helpless people, may be rebuked and corrected. But these good people ought to see that imperialism is merely the result of capitalism. Capitalism increases itself out of the produce of the people until they are too poor to buy what they produce. India, starving in the presence of walled-up and plentiful food supplies, is a monument to the capitalistic order. As Thomas Carlyle said, England was making new markets, while the million and a half of men and women and children of London who made the clothes, went with bare backs because they had nothing wherewith to buy the clothes they made. Strange as it may seem, they were not making clothes to wear, but clothes for the increase of capital. The capitalistic order of America has debauched the conscience of the whole nation, and used its government to betray and conquer weaker peoples, in order to find markets for the produce of the dwarfed and struggling and blighted lives of the laborers who cannot buy what they produce. Capitalism, after absorbing the purchasing power of the real producers, destroys the liberties of weaker peoples in order to compel them to furnish a market, and besides coerces them into paying interest upon bonds. Suppose a man should come to your room to-night with a revolver and forcibly take your money, watch, clothes and available possessions; and then suppose that, to-morrow, he should send an armed officer with a bill for services rendered in keeping you in order while he robbed you; suppose, further, that in lieu of your having nothing left wherewith to pay the bill, he should compel you to sign a note for an amount of money so large that you could never pay it, but not too large to consume the produce of each year's toil in paying the interest thereon; suppose all this, and you have an epitome of imperialism, which is nothing less than capitalism preserving and extending itself through diplomatic and military force. Imperialism has always been the immediate result of centralization of wealth in the hands of a few, and can be dealt with only by changing the order of things from which it naturally springs.

Socialism comes not as a remedy for the evils of existing society, but as a program of principles for a new society; or rather, let us say, as the first proposition for social order that has ever been presented to the world. Mankind has not yet had anything that can properly be called social order. Society has not yet been created. The materials for the building of a human world are here, but the creation remains to be undertaken. The task of creating a coherent and free society is the mightiest to which man has summoned himself, and it is the task which now presses urgently upon us. Socialism does not recognize as society, anything that has hitherto come, but it sees in every preceding human stage a preparation for society. The Socialist is an evolutionist, but with this difference between himself and much that is called scientific evolution; namely, that the social will is henceforth to be the supreme factor in evolution. Hitherto, what we call society has been the evolution of blind forces which man did not understand and could not control. But we are reaching that moment when man will become the evolver as well as the evolved; when man will become conscious of himself as the decretal and creative force in evolution. Man will henceforth take evolution in his own hands, and fashion creation according to his own will, and make out of society what he wants it to be. Henceforth the social will is to become the creator and master, which the winds and the waves shall at last obey, and at whose word the strifes and storms of history shall be stilled, and give back their responsive peace to the masterful social will to love.

Socialism starts with the brotherhood and unity of the race as a fact. It does not proclaim it as a sentiment, but recognizes it as a scientific fact. Each for all and all for each is the only rational mode of procedure in view of this fact. That where one suffers all suffer is not a sentiment to meditate about, but the hardest unescapable fact with which we have to deal. The gripe breaks out in a wretched hamlet of two or three hundred peasants on the Siberian frontier; and every home in America is endangered or broken. A little girl is shot down by the constituted authorities at a Pennsylvania coal mine; and every thoughtful American recognizes that capitalistic government is not law, but brutal and lawless authority founded on economic might, and that his little girl in Chicago or California may be the next victim of the brute lawlessness of capitalistic government. For good or ill, whether we will or no, we are bound up together in this world, and can only achieve our well being together. We might like to have separate interests, and be able to extricate ourselves as individuals from the divine compulsions of this unity; but we cannot do so any more than we can individually extricate ourselves from the law of gravity. We all in common depend upon the same common sources of nature and history. None of us are rightly or nobly born until every child born into the world is born as the immediate inheritor of all the resources of nature and history, of industry and society, of inspiration and culture; of all that tempts to goodness and greatness, and makes for fullness and freedom and gladness of life. If the whole world were full and glad with life, and should yet consent that one child should be born with less, the world would be economically and spiritually damned. Until all of us together see to it that every man is equal with every other man in resource and opportunity and resource and liberty, we shall none of us see the kingdom of fullness and freedom upon the earth. In this sense brother-interest and self-interest are one and the same; for no man has a true and noble interest in himself who does not regard the whole life of man as his calling and interest, and no man has a true regard for his brothers who does not seek to make of himself a whole and free man in their service.

Now, Socialism comes as the scientific and economic recognition of this unity. Since all people in common depend upon the sources and tools of production, there can be no individual liberty save these sources and tools belong to the people in common. There can be no social peace and sanity, no full liberty of the human soul, so long as some people own that upon which all people depend. All that can be said against slavery can also be said against the private ownership of economic sources and tools; for the private ownership of the common sources and machinery of life is nothing less than a substantial ownership of human beings. No man is free so long as he is dependent upon some other man for the chance to earn his livelihood. If a man owns my bread, or owns that which I must have in order to get my bread, he owns my moral being, unless I choose to revolt and starve. Private ownership of the earth and its productive machinery means private ownership of the people who live on the earth. He who sells his labor-power for wages sells himself; for his labor-power is his life. The wages system is merely an advance in the slave system, but it is no fit system for free men; and there can be no true freedom for all men until there is not another hiring left under the sun. The labor of the world is essentially slave-labor. There is not a wage-earner on the earth to-night, who is not in some degree debauched in soul, even in spite of himself, by his dependence upon the private buyer of his labor. So long as some men own that upon which all men depend the owners and the dependents are alike corrupted, and enslaved and robbed.

Yet our whole industrial system rests upon this power of private capital to legally appropriate the fruits of the labor of society. But behind the economics of capitalism rests the question of elemental right and wrong. If nature and history have a meaning and a goal, if the universe be sincere, then it is elementally wrong that some people should own that upon which all people depend; and the only elemental right is that the people in common should own that upon which the reward of labor is the whole produce of labor. The elemental right cannot be amended or evaded, as history well witnesses. The centralization of the wealth of the people in the hands of the few has been the poison of history, and has brought the decline or destruction of every nation, every civilization, every religion that has come to its end or decline. The pages of history are blood-red with the retribution that comes to the whole people through the centralization of wealth in the hands of a few; for centralized wealth is not prosperity but disease, congestion, and destruction. No man or civilization can escape this retribution. It lies not in the power of man or governments or armies to make practicable what is elementally wrong. No religion can go deep enough to bring forth universal individual nobleness out of a political or economic system that enslaves souls and bodies by enslaving labor. No law or custom is mighty or sacred enough to bring forth peace and order out of injustice and elemental disorder. It is beyond the power of kings or parliaments, priests or politicians, to bring forth good effects from bad causes. There is no God in the universe almighty enough to make right out of sheer economic might; and there is no civilization strong enough to prevent that which is elementally right from becoming the ultimate and universal might. A house built upon the sand cannot be made safer by priestly steeples, political declarations and police protection; the longer and stronger the building the more appalling and complete the ruin. A civilization built upon fraud and force, gambling and lying, stealing and political debauchery, capitalism and slave-labor, simply builds for its own retribution. Unless the universe itself be a lie such a civilization cannot stand. We build on a sure foundation only when we build a system that has for its end the common wealth, the common wholeness, the common freedom, the common abundance and gladness of all men and women. Nature convicts our impoverishing civilization to its face; the profusion of life is nature's eternal message. Nature offers resources enough for abundance of life for countless billions of human beings, and will never consent that these resources should be appropriated by the few for the exploitation of the many.

I know that some of you are indulging in the popular saying that Socialism might answer for a society of angels, but not for a society of human beings such as we are; that we must wait till we have a better brand of human beings before we can have Socialism. All of which is very much like saying that it is not safe to cure a man of his disease until he gets well; or like saying that we will not come in out of the rain until we first get dry; or like refusing to abolish the devil in order that we may preserve the job of saving the people from him. It is a strange superstition that makes men regard what they know to be elementally good as dangerous in practice, and what they know to be elementally wrong as practically safe. Socialism strikes at the root of the chief cause of our unangelic conduct, and proposes to abolish that slavery and competition and capitalism which sends all its forces in the direction of making men brutal and dishonest. The whole influence of competition and capitalism is to war against love and liberty, and to make all that is noble and lovely in human life impossible. Socialism comes to remove the causes that prevent men from being lovers and brothers one with another, and to bring in that equality of opportunity without which there can be no true fellowship, no abiding social love.

Many of you, too, are raising the question of whether people are yet prepared for the economic administration and liberty involved in what we call public ownership. The question is often raised with reference to a public utility, such as the railway system. First of all, there is the principle that nothing prepares people for responsibility save experience in responsibility. It is only in liberty that man learns to be free; only in the possession of his rights does a man learn to practice the highest right. And in the immediate question of advisability, lies the foundation fact that it is elementally wrong for public functions to be privately owned and administered for private profit. No principle of expediency can make this elemental wrong result in the good of either individuals or society. That I may think some other man shiftless with his money does not excuse me in taking it away from him and spending most of it for myself. The lesson of co-operation in liberty has got to be learned, and it can only be learned by practicing it. We shall have to go the whole length of liberty or finally have no liberty at all. You doubt whether liberty can be trusted. I am very sure that tyranny cannot be trusted, and I am furthermore sure that the care of liberty cannot be delegated to any representatives. Liberty cannot be put under bonds to keep the peace without liberty being lost and peace unattained. All the so-called evils of liberty have been the evils of the lack of liberty. We shall have to accept the full logic of liberty at last, for there is nothing under the sun that can be trusted in its place. The lesson of co-operation has got to be learned, and learned in liberty; and the lesson of liberty has got to be learned, and learned in co-operation. We had just as well set about the task.

Again, some of you are offended at the class-conscious appeal of Socialism. I think it is because you do not rightly understand its meaning. Socialists have no thought of arraigning one class against another class as individuals; class-consciousness does not mean class-hatred. Let us admit that Socialists sometimes give utterances that have the class-hatred ring about them. Class-hatred is none the less alien to the spirit and genius of Socialism. Even so bitter a controversialist as Karl Marx says that of all men Socialists can afford to be tolerant and kindly towards the capitalist class, knowing that class to be the victims of a system as truly as the laborer. What the Socialist does mean by class-consciousness is this: that nothing can obviate the hideous fact that one class of human beings is living off another class; that a capitalistic class is heaping up the produce of the producing class. And he appeals to labor to become class-conscious, because he knows perfectly well that the laborer cannot achieve his freedom, nor have the produce of his labor, until he becomes conscious that he is the real producer and the owner of the earth. Capital lords and landlords will exist, and despoil the earth with economic and military wars, until the disinherited labor of the world rises to nobly take possession of its inheritance. So long as the laborer is willing to be a mere wage-earner, so long as he is led about by politician and agitator, so long as his weariness and poverty, his dependence and hopelessness, so eat out his nerve of soul and body that he will not act, just so long will his condition wax worse and worse. Labor must achieve its own liberty, if it is ever to be achieved. Liberty cannot be handed down by a superior class to an inferior class; it has never been so achieved and ought not to be so achieved. If liberty were something that could be imposed upon one class by another; or could be presented as a gift from superiors to inferiors, it would vanish in a night. Men are not free until they have won and established their freedom in experience, and in the power of their own manhood. The class-conscious appeal is not for strife or hostility or antagonism, but for manhood; for constructive purpose, and spiritual nerve and genius. The end of Socialism is the abolition of all class and parties, and the coming in of but one class, the people, with opportunity for every man to produce his own living, and at the same time become as Charles Kingsley, "a scholar, a saint, and a gentleman." Unless American laborers as a class are so spiritually awakened that they become noble and courageous enough to adopt the Co-operative Commonwealth as a working ideal, and adopt it in the spirit of good-will toward all men; no one can achieve their liberty for them or even to achieve it for them. All history demonstrates how the people have had to achieve for themselves each inch and gain of liberty, and how they have been again and again betrayed when their liberties have been committed to those above them in worldly condition.

I know that some are waiting until Socialism shall present a more pleasing aspect. But we cannot wait until the Socialist movement is just to our liking before we take creative part in it. Our place is in the blood and the dust, the struggle and the disgraces, that always inhere in the beginnings of every great movement. Our place is at the heart of the chaos in order that we may work with the cosmic heart purpose. How can we truly respect ourselves, or help to make the Socialist movement what it ought to be, if we fail it in its moment of severest need? Socialists are not appealing to you for support on the ground that Socialists are better than other men, but on the ground that Socialism is better than capitalism, and that Socialism will bring forth and educate the best that is in man, while capitalism and competition are bringing forth and educating the worst.

We do not deny that Socialism has its risks, and its advocates the common share of human passions and imperfections, but we insist that the risks of adventuring upon Socialism are as nothing compared to the risks of continuing in capitalism. Besides, if we only knew it, the dangers to human life lie on the side of staying where we are, while safety lies only in going on. As Louis Kossuth pointed out, conservatism has been the cause of every violent revolution. We cannot avert disaster by sitting on the throttle valve of the forces that are making for universal change; we cannot prevent the change; we only cause explosion and disaster.

In the truest sense, Socialism is essentially conservative; it comes not to destroy, but to fulfill all the true ideals of order and liberty and property; it offers that equality which must be the foundation of brotherhood; that liberty which must be the vital breath of the love which the Lord Christ taught; it offers the economic basis for the realization of that fraternity which has been the dream of the ages. It comes with no attack upon any man, but with the message of good-will among all men. It comes with no attack upon property, but rather to save property from the attacks and ravages of a system that is the destruction of all that makes property sacred; for property is sacred only as it serves the highest uses of all men in common. It comes not to destroy private property; for capitalism has already destroyed the possibility of the bulk of mankind ever becoming property owners; but it comes to place within the reach of every man that private property upon which he may stand and live a free and original life of his own, and express his noblest ideals and being. It comes to make the strong bear the infirmities of the weak, until they, too, become strong; knowing well that if we do not actually become our brother's keepers, we shall be destroyed in our brother's destruction, as we ought to be. It comes to put all the temptations of life on the side of service and freedom and goodness, and to abolish the temptation to avarice and meanness and oppression.

I know that there is needed a vast spiritual preparation to prepare the way of political Socialism; but that preparation will come. In its essence Socialism is a religion; it stands for the harmonious relations of the whole life of man; it stands for a vast and collective fulfillment of the law of love. As the Socialist movement grows, its religious forces will come forth from the furrow of consuming experience. No matter how materialistic its origin, when Socialism brings men together in a great purpose it soon begins to develop fidelity and tolerance, and patience and good-will, and the noblest human graces. As American Socialism goes on its way it will become a spiritual passion; not a cry for rights, but a call to elemental righteousness. It will make its appeal to the instinct of man for a divine public life, for communal heroism, and will show how the individual life can fulfill itself only by relating itself to the whole life of mankind. It will create a conscience that shall at last become cosmic and titanic, and able to grapple with all the problems the universe can bring forth. In place of the individual hero of the past, it will submit to you the ideal of a heroic common life; the ideal of a common citizenship that shall truly have its consciousness in heavenly things.

It seems to me that America stands in order to be the birthplace of just such an appeal, and the social ground for just such a realization. Emerson once said that America seemed like the last stand of Providence in behalf of the human race. If the sorrows and the struggles that have made the centuries run blood-red with effort are to have their fruition, it must be upon our American soil. Back there in the shadows, the oppressed peoples of history are waiting for some great word to be here spoken that shall call them into resurrection and liberty. Egypt and Syria; Persia and Greece, Italy and peoples that we have forgotten, are waiting for the word from us that shall call them into the sunlight and the God-light. Peoples and nations unborn are stretching forth entreating hands to us from out of the future. If we should fail here in America, then six thousand years' of history will have failed; for history has come to its limit on the shores of the Pacific; it has come back to its starting point. If we fail the heart of God will break again,

NATIONAL SECRETARY-TREASURER

THEODORE DEBS

No. 126 Washington Street, Chicago.

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of cooperative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Fifteen cents will purchase Merrie England in the German language, adapted to American needs. If you don't read German, buy one for your friends.

See notice of new leaflets—they make Socialists.

The new buttons are union made and all right. Twenty cents per dozen.

J. A. McIsaac has been nominated for Congress in the 11th District of Massachusetts.

You write letters? Put a sticker on the back of each envelope. Five hundred for 50 cents.

All the leaflets are going out fast and the comrades write in that they give great satisfaction.

Send in your order now for Ben Atterbury's letter to workingmen. Leaflet No. 2; $1 a thousand.

Smiley's excellent pamphlet, "To What Are Trusts Leading?", sent free to any address for 5 cents.

The Central Trades and Labor Union of St. Louis has declared in favor of the Social Democratic national ticket.

The small 4-page leaflet used by the Chicago comrades is good for any part of the country; 1,000 to any address, postage paid, for 75 cents.

All loyal members of the Social Democratic branches in Washington are hereby requested to communicate with Comrade L. W. Kidd, 1115 Sixth avenue, North, Seattle, Wash.

Socialists willing to assist in forming new branches of the Social Democratic party are requested to communicate with the secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

The Debs leaflet, at 75 cents per thousand, charges paid, is much the best leaflet for propaganda in some localities. We should receive more orders for them. They are small, but to the point, and will make S. D. P. votes.

Registration days in Illinois are Tuesday, Oct. 9 and Tuesday, Oct. 16. Information as to method of obtaining naturalization-papers will appear in the Herald next week.

The Social Democratic picnic of the Boston, Rockland, Whitman, Chelsea and other branches in Massachusetts, Comrade Haile writes us, was "just the kind of a success that was most desired."

All comrades in St. Louis who are "loyal" are requested to attend a meeting at Druid's Hall, 9th and Market Streets, Sunday, October 7, at 2 p. m., when important business will be transacted.

It is of the highest importance that all branches remit at the earliest time possible, the quarterly dues for members. The prompt payment of dues is necessary to the proper carrying on of the work at headquarters.

Comrades: Wherever our candidate speaks during the present month (see list of cities in this issue of the Herald) the local branches should have thousands of leaflets to distribute at the meetings, lithographs to display in store windows, and stickers by the thousands.

Our German comrades will do well to distribute the German translation of leaflet No. 2, Ben Atterbury's "Letter to American Workmen." Give every German voter a copy and you will much increase the German Socialist vote. The price is $1.25 a thousand. Send in your orders.

The portrait of the presidential candidate gives great satisfaction. Thousands have been mailed to branches and comrades in all sections of the country. It should be seen in every community; it informs the observer, directs attention to the party and makes votes. Ten copies, 35 cents; 33 for a dollar; single copy, 10 cents; postage prepaid.

The Stickers have made a hit. You should have a thousand or ten thousand to put up in your community. They are two inches square, put up in packages of 500 and very handy. They are designed to fix in the mind the fact that the Social Democrats are in the field with a candidate for president. They do the business. One thousand, postage paid, one dollar.

For $5 the national campaign committee will send, postage paid, thirty-three Debs lithographs (21x28 in.) and 4,000 Leaflets, the latter to include an assortment of all the six Leaflets so far issued. Every one is a vote-maker—every one will convert thinking people to Socialism. The expenditure of $5 in your community for this campaign outfit will start a movement where you live.

The National Committee is now prepared to furnish Leaflet No. 2, Ben Atterbury's "Letter to American Workmen," in German. The price is $1.25 per thousand. Send in your orders at once and put it out among your German friends.

It is advisable to stamp all leaflets, etc., with the local branch address and time of meeting, in order to get more direct returns for the work of distributing them. Let the voters of your locality know of your meeting, and then provide a good speaker to explain the principles of Socialism.

and another cycle of history, with its weary procession of bleeding centuries, will have to begin. But we cannot fail, we dare not fail. Liberty and fraternity and equality are not tantamounts to hopeless human suffering, but ideals to be realized by human worth and effort. We must prove our worth to match these ideals. Potential within this meeting is the power which God might use for the freeing and the healing of the nations. Within this audience are the resources and weapons for conquering the world for love and liberty. The saving sword which the peoples now need is not the sword of Joshua or Cromwell, but the sword of an awakened and inspired and ennobled common life. And as the hand of God reaches out in the dark of our social chaos, it is our privilege to put within that hand the sword of comrade-love that shall liberate the world, and make every child indeed the heir of all the good of all ages. I pray that the highest and most unselfish that lies in you and in me may respond to the highest and most unselfish inspirations of history, as we go forth to support this cause of Socialism, and to support in its presidential candidate one who has proven his fidelity to American labor, and who is in his rightful place as the leader of this first national campaign for Social Democracy.

During the meeting a resolution ratifying the nomination of Debs and Harriman and the union for political co-operation of the Socialists of Illinois in the present campaign was adopted.

SUNDAY MEETINGS

With just forty-eight hours' advertising two splendid meetings were held on Sunday, Sept. 30, the first in the afternoon at Twelfth Street Turner Hall, the other at Bohemian National Hall in the evening.

At the afternoon meeting Comrade Jacob Winnen presided, and the speakers, besides Eugene V. Debs, were Peter Knickrehm and A. S. Edwards. It was the largest political meeting held in the hall this year, about 700 being present, and although many Socialist gatherings have been had there, never before was so much unrestrained enthusiasm manifested. Comrade Debs was unusually effective and made a speech brilliantly epigrammatic and bristling with telling hits on the capitalist system and the two capitalist parties.

In the evening the Bohemian National Hall was filled to the door with an audience of over 1,000. Comrade Frank Mudra presided and Comrade Hlavacek, editor of Spravedlnost, was the first speaker. The editor of the Herald is able to say, on the authority of many in the hall, that Hlavacek's speech was the best he ever made and he has made many a good one. The occasion was calculated to draw out the best in any man. Comrade Debs followed the Bohemian editor in one of his very finest presentations of Socialist principles and arguments, speaking for an hour and a half. Notwithstanding so many in the hall were Bohemians, few were there who did not understand him, and none failed to catch the spirit and enthusiasm of the great meeting.

Debs-Herron Speeches

The speeches of Eugene V. Debs and Prof. Geo. D. Herron which appear in this number of the Herald, will be printed in pamphlet form and sold by the National Committee of the Social Democratic party at five cents a copy. Special rates will be made on quantities. Send in your order without delay and help put this effective campaign document into circulation throughout the country.

A PRIMER OF SOCIALISM

We have just received the "Primer of Socialism" from the press of the Debs Publishing Company. This pamphlet of 32 pages is from the pen of G. C. Clemens, and is a valuable contribution to Socialist literature. It also contains "Socializing a State," by the late Laurence Gronlund, and "Economic Terms and Phrases," by A. P. Hazell, which makes this an exceptionally strong number of Progressive Thought for propaganda. It can be supplied at 5 cents per copy, or $1.50 per 100, by addressing Debs Publishing Company, Terre Haute, Ind.

The campaign committee has a few dozen photographs, cabinet size, of Eugene V. Debs, which they are selling at 15 cents each:

Comrade J. W. Kelley, candidate for governor of Indiana, will open his active campaign October 15. He will visit the following towns: Kokomo, La Porte, Elkhart, Fort Wayne, Muncie, Indianapolis, Terre Haute, Clinton and Evansville. Comrade E. V. Debs will speak at Indianapolis October 6.

CAMPAIGN LEAFLETS

PUSH THEM OUT AND MAKE VOTES

No. 1—Address to Unorganized Socialists
Contains information concerning the Socialist movement in the United States, the party and its methods, object and program.

No. 2—An Open Letter to the Average American Workman

By Ben Atterbury. This is an admirable and convincing paper on the wage question, production, distribution of wealth and an appeal to the intelligence of the working class.

No. 3—Machine Production Where the Profits Go.

The argument of this leaflet is a clincher because taken from the government reports made by the Commissioner of Labor, and proves that machinery, combinations, trusts and systematized production must lead to socialism. It's the only way out.

No. 4—Toilers of America Vote for Your Freedom.

This is a remarkably effective campaign document. Written by a prominent member of the United Mine Workers, it sets forth in a convincing manner the reasons why the miners of the country, railroadmen and all other wage workers should support the Social Democratic ticket.

No. 5—Industrial Crises—Cause and Cure.

A strong appeal to the common sense of the voters, this leaflet gives the Socialist view of industrial crises and convincingly shows that Socialism is the necessary solution.

No. 6—Platform and Debs Epigrams.

This is a very attractive addition to our campaign literature; it gives the party platform complete with a collection of the very best epigrammatic sentences from the lectures of Eugene V. Debs, together with other striking contributions.

SOCIALIST CANDIDATE'S TOUR A POPULAR TRIUMPH

Great Enthusiasm Everywhere Prevails

Immense Audiences Greet Candidate Eugene V. Debs at Every Point and His Speeches Arouse Packed Houses to Enthusiasm

VOTE WILL BE A SURPRISE

What the Newspapers in Three States Have to Say of the Astonishing and Wide-Spread Growth of Socialist Sentiment

A POLITICAL STRAW FROM CLEVELAND

BATTLE CREEK WELCOMES HIM

A special telegram from Battle Creek to the Detroit Tribune said: "The campaign opened tonight with a speech by the Socialist Democratic candidate for President, Eugene V. Debs. Whether coming out of curiosity or interest in the movement, the audience present constituted one of the largest political gatherings ever held here."

The Battle Creek Evening Journal in a very fair account of the meeting had the following: "Eugene V. Debs, candidate of the Socialist party for President, but better known as the leader of the great A. R. U. strike of '93, was greeted by a crowd at the opera house last evening which packed the room from footlights to gallery, while many were turned away unable to gain admittance."

"Seldom, if ever," said the Morning Enquirer, "has there been such an enthusiastic audience from the orchestra to the gallery, and the noted labor orator received a welcome that must have been flattering to him. Notwithstanding the crowd that was packed in the house and on the stage, nearly as many more were turned away."

Battle Creek Moon says: "Eugene V. Debs, candidate of the Socialist Democratic party for President of the United States, spoke to as many men and women as could be crowded into Hamblin's opera house last evening, the occasion being a notable one."

"People began to throng into the house early in the evening and by 8 o'clock the theater was packed with the vast audience, mostly men although a goodly number of women were scattered among the crowd."

OVATION AT FORT WAYNE

Comrade Martin H. Wefel sends the following brief but graphic account of the meeting at Fort Wayne:

In regard to our meeting here on Oct. 2d, I want to say it was the grandest demonstration of intense activity I ever saw. The Princess rink in which our meeting was held is the largest hall in the city and 2,500 people were present to listen to the masterly address of Comrade Debs. The hall was full. The aisles were filled with people standing. The doors were crowded and many left owing to their inability to get a comfortable position. Enthusiasm? Well, I should say there was. I am conservative in my judgment. If Debs don't get 1,000 votes in Ft. Wayne, then I'll be surprised. People with Bryan and McKinley buttons on their coats removed them, threw them on the floor, then trampled on them, after that speech. This was done by many. Cheers after cheers all through the address was the way his telling points were greeted, and at the conclusion 1,500 of the audience, at least, got up on their feet, yelled, threw their hats up in the air and so on. It is the talk of the town. Everywhere and on every lip Debs is the man.

It is the opinion of our level-headed Socialists that one thousand were absolutely converted that night in the Princess rink hall.

ROUSING GREETING AT MARION

Comrade J. W. Kelley writes from Marion, Ind., the following brief but satisfactory account of Candidate Debs' reception, October 3:

"We had a grand meeting last night. An hour before the time for speaking to begin Wyandot hall, which seats 1,200 people with standing room for as many more, was packed to the street and when the speaker arrived the stairway leading up was jammed with anxious people and the sidewalks on either side of the entrance were blocked for half a square. Through this dense crowd we fought our way, finally arriving at the speakers' stand amidst a regular tumult of applause. No such turnout has greeted any other speaker here during this campaign. Today Comrade Debs' name is on every tongue and the air is full of Socialism."

"Social Democracy turned out last night in Marion as it never did before," says the Marion Morning News. "The occasion was the visit of their presidential candidate, Eugene V. Debs, and long before the speaker arrived at Wyandot hall it was crowded to its fullest capacity. Mr. Debs held the attention of his audience splendidly and in a clean, concise and effective manner discussed Social Democratic principles."

GREAT RECEPTION AT CINCINNATI

The Cincinnati papers gave very good reports of the big meeting at the Odeon Thursday evening, Oct. 4, the Enquirer containing more than two columns of the speech and saying the hall was crowded with an enthusiastic audience. The report closes with the following interesting reference to a meeting between Comrade Debs and Comrade Father McGrady of Bellevue, Ky.:

"After Mr. Debs had finished some-what noticed Rev. Father McGrady in a box and called on him for a speech. He said a word or two from his box, but the audience insisted on hearing further from him, and when he went back to shake hands with Mr. Debs he was prevailed upon to say a few words from the stage. Father McGrady, although a Catholic priest, has leaning toward Socialism, and has often before been heard in advocacy of the rights of the working man. The meeting between the two champions was interesting. They clasped each other's hands and Father McGrady said: 'Mr. Debs, I am delighted to meet you. This is an honor.'"

"Father McGrady," said Mr. Debs, 'although we have never met before, I have read much of your work and feel that we are not strangers. We have been in touch all the time, but it gives me keenest pleasure to clasp your hand.'"

"After these gracious speeches Father McGrady made a pretty little talk to the audience, in which he paid a most glowing tribute to Mr. Debs."

WHAT LOUISVILLE DISPATCH SAYS

The Louisville Dispatch, referring editorially to the Socialist candidate and Socialism, said:

"Hon. Eugene V. Debs, nominee of the Socialist Democracy, was the first of the Presidential candidates to visit Louisville. His meeting at Music hall last night was not the largest nor the most enthusiastic ever held in Louisville, but it was a most respectable meeting in the personnel and size of the audience, as well as in enthusiasm. It was at least an interested and earnest meeting. Many men heard things that will start into life the processes of thought. Whatever else may be said of Mr. Debs nobody can doubt his sincerity and his earnestness. No man can hear him and doubt that he is a student and thinker who is living in the present rather than dreaming of the future. He will not be elected President. He will not carry Kentucky, and Louisville is certainly overwhelmingly against him, but if one may judge by last night's meeting he will get a vote that will surprise the natives. It is folly to seek to ignore the fact that Mr. Debs is a leader in a movement that is growing with marvelous rapidity, and that has the support of some of the most intelligent and noblest men of the day; a movement that will be promoted rather than retarded by abuse."

The audience, the same paper says, was limited only by the full seating capacity of Music hall.

AT THE CAPITAL OF INDIANA

The Indianapolis Journal printed a column report of Debs' speech and said of the meeting:

"Eugene V. Debs, the candidate of the Socialist Democratic party for President, who spoke at Masonic hall last night on the principles of his party, was greeted by a large and enthusiastic audience. Mr. Debs spoke for two hours and a half, addressing himself particularly to the evils of trusts and monopolies, and the ways and means whereby the evil is to be eradicated. Mr. Debs' appearance on the platform was greeted with prolonged and enthusiastic applause and at times during his speech his utterances were so well received that several minutes elapsed before he was allowed to proceed."

DEBS WEAKENS BRYAN

The Democratic state central committee has received word from the district committeemen in western and southwestern Indiana to the effect that the Social Democrats (the Debs men) are making manifest inroads upon Bryan's strength in the mining counties of Clay, Park and Vermilion; and that in this county the drift to Debs among the miners is too apparent to be ignored. In several counties the Social Democrats have formed large clubs, and the members, who were formerly democrats and voted for Bryan four years ago, are very active and are sending their agents into all the labor centers of the state. Word from the gas belt towns of the same tenor.—Terre Haute Tribune.

IN MARK HANNA'S TOWN

The Cleveland Press brings the following political straw from the home of the republican boss:

"L. A. Russell wrote, Thursday, to Chairman J. K. Jones, of the national democratic committee, warning him of danger in the Debs' vote."

"The great obstacle in the way of Bryan carrying Cuyahoga county," he wrote, "is neither 'republicanism' nor Hannaism, but Social Democracy, which, unless stopped in time, will poll a heavy vote for Eugene Debs."

"Russell writes he is doing all in his power to stem the tide, but to win Debs men back to Bryanism greater effort will be necessary and with such effort, Russell thinks it can be done."

"Speaking of the Debs vote, Russell said: 'The size of the vote is going to surprise the country. Debs will get roads upon Bryan's strength in more votes than people give him credit for. I have been told that in one shop in this city 150 men who voted for McKinley in '96 will vote for Debs.'"

NATURALIZATION PAPERS

First Papers—Declaration of intention.

The applicant being 21 years of age or more, applies to the clerk of the circuit or superior court, second floor county building, who is authorized to issue the first papers.

Second Papers—Citizenship.

The applicant having his first papers and having resided in the United States five years, two years having expired since he secured his first papers, must appear again before the clerk of the circuit court, or superior court, with his first papers and a witness, who can swear to the five years' residence and to his good character. The clerk will prepare a paper which the applicant and witness will sign and swear to. With the paper so prepared the applicant and his witness will appear before a county or circuit or superior court judge for examination, after which his clerk will administer the oath and the clerk of the circuit or superior court will then issue the citizenship papers. Fee, fifty cents.

A soldier or militia man, with an honorable discharge and a residence of one year, may, on declaring his intentions to become a citizen, obtain his final papers at once.

Others—One who arrived in the United States under the age of 17 and who has been a resident for five years and who for two years prior to his application has had the intention of becoming a citizen, may, upon proxy of the same by witness obtain his final papers.

The wives and children of naturalized citizens are also citizens.

The widow and children of one who having procured his first papers dies before securing the second papers are citizens.

Women not wives or daughters of citizens may become citizens under the same conditions as men, but in Illinois they can vote only for officers of public schools and public universities.

Registration, October 9th, October 16th.

E. V. DEBS TO MAYOR JONES

The Man of Toledo Having Allied Himself With the Democratic Party is Doing Battle Against Socialism

ON BOTH SIDES OF CLASS STRUGGLE

Being for "All of the People," Mr. Jones is, as a Matter of Fact, for None of the People

Samuel M. Jones of Toledo, having written a long letter to Eugene V. Debs defending his action in declaring for Bryan and attempting an answer to the Socialist criticism of his course, Comrade Debs publishes the following reply:

Terre Haute, Ind., Oct. 8, 1900.
Mr. Samuel M. Jones, Mayor, Toledo, Ohio.

My Dear Mr. Jones:—Your communication of the 20th ult. was received some days ago, but I have been too busy to make earlier reply. In all you say you are kind and gentle, and I trust that there may be no lack of the same spirit in my answer, although I shall be perfectly candid in the expression of my views touching your recent action in allying yourself with the democratic party and doing battle against the cause of Socialism.

Do not, I pray you, tell me that you have not "joined" the democratic party. That is puerile, if not disingenuous, for it implies evasion of responsibility for an action from which your own conscience would seem to shrink in disapproval. With David B. Hill you have declared, if not in words, in deed, which is more conclusive, "I am a democrat," and you are today as much a part of the democratic party as Croker and his Christless gang who are levying blackmail upon moral affliction to save (I) our Republic (?) from "imperialism."

You sign yourself, "a man without a party." Permit me to observe that you are not that now, but when the democratic party gets through with you, you will indeed be "a man without a party."

Let me now quote briefly from your letter. You say, "Suppose I am never again elected to office, etc." You must know it is not the "office," per se, that is in question, and yet to a man with whom serving the people is a consuming passion, I imagine that if my prediction proves true you are doomed to be a sorely disappointed man.

As for the implied spirit of martyrdom which characterized your action, it should be said that no great self-sacrifice is required to join the majority, the strong, in crushing the minority, the weak. Had you, as a professed Socialist, taken your stand on the side of Socialism, instead of joining hands with its avowed enemies, the case would be different and your contention might be urged with some degree of consistency.

You say you are for "all the people." Do you think you are for the poor negroes of the south who have been disfranchised by your party, the party you are supporting with pen and speech? Do you really think you are for the working class, the prisoners of private property and competitive conquest which your party is pledged to perpetuate? If you really think so, then I say for these voiceless victims, deliver us from such a friend.

Are you for the exploiters as well as the exploited, the masters as well as the slaves?

Moses was not for all the people; Jesus Christ was not for all the people; Jehovah himself, if he is correctly quoted, was not for "all the people." They smote their enemies and they smote them hard. Only Mr. Jones of Toledo is for "all the people," and being for "all the people," as a matter of fact he is for none of the people.

Ultimately I am for "all the people," but not now. Till the fight is fought and won, I am for the working class and against their exploiters, the capitalist class. In your effort to perform the miraculous feat of being upon both sides of the class struggle, you have somehow gotten on the side that represents your class interests. I will not accuse you of capitalist class consciousness, but simply observe in a spirit of charity that you have committed political suicide, and this you have done, not for a principle, but against a principle; and that you are conscientious in the matter makes your demise all the more pitiable.

You may remember what I said in a previous letter about your alleged Socialism, and your extreme popularity with such papers as the New York Journal and Cincinnati Enquirer. When these papers are entirely through with you, they will relegate you to obscurity only equaled by the prominence into which they boosted you to serve their own capitalistic designs.

All the popularity and influence these papers developed in you have been east with the exploiting class and against the working class. The working men and women of the country will never forget that in a critical hour of the contest you, their professed and trusted friend, joined the enemy and turned against them.

The only ground upon which you attempt to justify your attitude is your pretended fear of "imperialism." Is it possible? Did I not know you as I do, I would openly question your sincerity. You certainly cannot be in ignorance of the fact that this so-called issue is simply an effect of private ownership and of competitive warfare inherent in the capitalist system. You are opposed to the fruit of the system, but you have joined the party pledged to perpetuate the system, and such influence as you still have you are now using to prolong the barbarous struggle which in the past you denounced with such passionate severity and condemned as void of a single redeeming feature.

You may still be esteemed as the modern apostle of the "golden rule," at least until the election is over, but I cannot imagine how you can enjoy mental serenity when you contemplate your connection with, and your activity for, a party explicitly committed by its own platform to revive and renew and intensify and continue forever the competitive strife you have so fervently denounced, as with tears streaming from your eyes you recited its agonizing woes to the listening multitude. In what I have had to say I have not questioned your motive. I leave that entirely with your own conscience. I have simply discussed your action from my point of view and this, I trust, I have done in all kindness consistent with perfect candor. Since you have seen proper to give your letter to the press I may avail myself of the same privilege.

With the strength of all my being pledged to Socialism, come it soon or come it late, Socialism as uncompromising as truth, I remain

Most truly yours,
Eugene V. Debs,
A Man With a Party.

All loyal members of the Social Democratic branches in Washington are hereby requested to communicate with Comrade L. W. Kidd, 1115 Sixth avenue, North, Seattle, Wash.

The Stickers have made a hit. You should have a thousand or ten thousand to put up in your community. They are two inches square, put up in packages of 500 and very handy. They are designed to fix in the mind the fact that the Social Democrats are in the field with a candidate for president. They do the business. One thousand, postage paid, one dollar.

For $5 the national campaign committee will send, postage paid, thirty-three Debs lithographs (21x28 in.) and 4,000 Leaflets, the latter to include an assortment of all the six Leaflets so far issued. Every one is a vote-maker—every one will convert thinking people to Socialism. The expenditure of $5 in your community for this campaign outfit will start a movement where you live.

THE MINERS' ONLY HOPE.

Conditions in the anthracite coal regions of Pennsylvania constitute an object lesson for Socialists and others who have any comprehension of the curse of capitalism in its grasp upon industrial affairs. The strike of the impoverished miners is the one redeeming feature of the otherwise gloomy picture of work and want and woe. Multiplied thousands of men engaged in a great industry which keeps the wheels of commerce and progress in motion, overworked, underpaid and half fed, strike against conditions which stagger credulity and almost extinguish hope.

Some sort of a compromise will doubtless be patched up, as is usual in such cases, but no sane man believes that any permanent relief will be secured, and this is rendered all the more probable by the announcement that Mark Hanna has espoused the cause of the miners. When rattleers hold a convention and resolve to dispense with their fangs, it will be in order to believe that a capitalist like Mark Hanna, whose coffers are full of money wrung from the earnings of toilers is honestly engaged in changing conditions for the better in the anthracite coal districts of Pennsylvania.

There is one, and but one hope for the toilers in mine, factory and forge and every other industrial enterprise and that centers in the ultimate triumph of the Social Democratic party, and a vote cast for that party, like seed planted in good ground, will ultimately yield a hundredfold in achieving victory for the welfare of all the people.

THE SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Historically, the reasons why of present economic conditions in the United States has been and is being learnedly discussed. To remedy the evils complained of is the purpose of the Social Democratic party. The party is well named. Those who stood sponsors around the baptismal font when it was christened were wise in their day and generation. The name stands for something. "Social," society, "Democrat," individual independence, "Party" organization to achieve results.

What are the results proposed? The amelioration of social and economic conditions; the betterment of society as a whole; the redemption of the toiling masses from wage slavery. How is this to be accomplished? By moral suasion, by the logic of facts and events, by the votes of the people, animated by as holy a purpose as embellished and embalm the labor of Jesus Christ.

What of other political parties, great or small? Take the two most prominent now before the country. The country has tolerated them for a century under a variety of names. They have orated, have legislated, have combined, derided, wrangled and fought with resulting victory and defeat, differing in name and method, but whether one or the other has been in power, their achievements have been alike disastrous to the great body of the people.

Again, these old parties are asking for the votes of the people, and are calculating upon the suffrages of the men who have been the victims of their spoliating policy.

Has any intelligent workingman one sufficient reason for believing which ever of these two parties succeed, that any measure, free from chicane and duplicity, will be proposed whereby his condition will be improved? Not one.

But a vote cast for the Social Democratic party will be a vote in the line of ultimate emancipation from degrading, impoverishing, enslaving environments. The affirmation is supported by history. Great achievements must have their dawn. Within the memory of men now living, the first utterances of great men to free the land of chattel slavery were heard—when a few struggling votes were cast in favor of emancipation. They were right, and when the fetters fell from three millions of slaves and the slave-block and pen and whip disappeared, one of the grandest achievements in history, if indeed not the most sublime, was consummated.

The Social Democratic party is now battling for the right as certainly as the old abolitionists battled for the right. Just one question now: Will you vote to enthrone its policy of emancipation, when every wageearner shall secure for himself and his family the just rewards of his toil?

PROSPERITY IN INDIANA

[The following article, which appeared in the Herald last week, is reproduced for the purpose of correcting printer's error in the fourth and fifth paragraphs.]

The Indiana Bureau of Statistics published a bulletin reviewing the condition of organized labor in Indiana for the year ending May 31, 1900. Responses to inquiries were received from 408 unions, having a membership of 24,421. These union workers, it is shown, had average employment during the year of 78 days, at an average wage of $1.86 a day, giving an average income of $145.08.

The highest number of days that any one of the 24,421 men was employed was 162, at an average wage of $1.47, giving a yearly income of $238.14.

In view of capitalistic class contention that wage earners are prosperous, and their dinner pails well filled, it becomes interesting and instructive to analyze the foregoing official figures.

The union workingman, receiving an annual income of $145.08, has for his support and that of his family for the 365 days of the year 39 cents and 7 mills a day. If there are two in the family they must subsist on 19 cents and 8 mills a day. If there are three in the family the allowance must be reduced to 13 cents and 2 mills a day. If there are four in the family, they must live on 9 cents and 9 mills a day, and if five surround the family board they will be required to eke out some sort of a living on 7 cents and 9 mills a day. But if the union workingman has to pay rent, say, $8 a month, reducing his income for food and raiment to $47.08, then, in that case, the family, whatever its number, must live on 1 cent and 3 mills a day.

The union workingman who was employed 162 days, and secured an income of $238.14 had for his support and that of his family for 365 days 65 cents and 3 mills a day. If the workingman pays rent, at, say, $8 a month, reducing his income for all other necessities to $142.14, he would have $142.14 to meet such expenditures for 365 days, or about 40 cents a day. If he has a family of five they must manage to live on 8 cents a day each, which includes food and raiment, school books and all else that goes to make up the expenditures of a workingman's family.

The basic figures of the foregoing calculations are official, published by John B. Connor, a Republican, and chief of the bureau.

The picture of prosperity painted by the chief of the bureau exhibits a condition of haggard poverty that defies exaggeration. It shows to what depth of deprivation the capitalistic class has reduced even organized labor in Indiana, which is doubtless as prosperous as any other state in the Union—a condition which voices trumpet-toned the necessity for the changed condition which the Social Democratic party is laboring to secure.

Such is the official presentation of the conditions of organized labor in Indiana.

But the chief of the bureau, seemingly dazed by conclusions to which he was driven by his own figures, and desirous of lifting himself out of his dilemma by his boot straws, seeks to placate the capitalistic class by supposing that every man works 312 days in the year and thereby secures an income of $577.72. But his effort to supply fancy for fact only sinks him deeper in the mire, from which he seeks to extricate himself.

The fact remains labor, whether organized or unorganized, is not prosperous, nor can it be under capitalistic methods. Socialism solves the problem, and only Socialism is equal to the herculean task.

NOW FOR A BIG LIFT

The national campaign fund must now be given a big lift, so that the committee may put more activities to work in the interest of the national ticket during the three weeks that remain for the campaign.

Every dollar subscribed to the fund enables the committee to do effective work for Socialism.

Has the committee received your dollar yet? The reports of the vast audiences eager to hear Candidate Debs, thousands turned away at almost every place unable to gain admission, is a spectacle in the history of the Socialist movement in the United States to inspire every Social Democrat to the highest pitch of enthusiasm and devotion.

Don't wait till the election is past to get in your share of work—work that will count November 6.

Let every man be up and at it now! Get the literature and if you can't have the speakers that suit you, scatter the printed page and help make Socialists.

The Leaflets (there are six of them—see advertisement elsewhere) are $1 per thousand and the committee pays the charges for delivery.

Remember this—there is no charge for delivery.

Order Leaflets, lithographs, stickers and buttons—now, and don't forget your individual or branch contribution to the campaign fund.

The committee sent out more speakers this week and more money is immediately necessary.

NOTES AND COMMENT

It is held that the civilization of Europe, excepting the Turks, is a Christian civilization. Name these Christian nations of Europe and note their standing armies on a peace or a war footing, and it will be seen at once that European civilization is that of the shotgun, and that sort of civilization is rapidly increasing in the United States. No sooner was the miners' strike in Pennsylvania announced than capitalism had the guns on hand to assure the plundered miners that they must obey the civilization of the gun. Socialism, when victory gives it free sway, will eliminate the gun from civilization. Providence and powder will no longer be in alliance and the last sermon of the gospel of the gun will have been preached.

The Democrats reiterate the charge that Republicans, if not overthrown, will change the republic to an empire. Republicans retort if Bryan is elected and Democrats obtain control of the government the country will be overwhelmed in disaster. In either case capitalism would prevail. And the potent and corrupting influence of the money power would control the government. The way out of the bad business is to vote for the Social Democratic party, for the co-operative commonwealth, for economic reform, in a word, for a new and a better civilization.

Life is of no value—indeed, it is a ceaseless scourge—when a man realizes he lives by the permission of another man. Millions are thus situated in the United States of America. The statement is incontrovertibly true. It is neither an illusion nor a delusion. It is free from duplicity and all the wheedling arts of the demagogue. It is possible to change such conditions and the Social Democratic party stands pledged to change them when victory perches upon its crusading banners.

Mark Hanna says a man who would oppose the settlement of the coal miners' strike should be hanged upon the "nearest lamp post." What about the men, who, by fraud, extortion and degradation, made the strike necessary? And what about the millionaires who oppose the settlement of the strike upon terms of absolute justice to the miners? Enthrone Socialism and the anthracite coal region of Pennsylvania would be transformed from a hell to a paradise.

Old Shylock reasoned well when he said:

"You take my house, when you do take the prop
That doth sustain my house; you take my life
When you do take the means whereby
I live."

Capitalism takes houses and lands and the means whereby toilers live, and will continue its policy of rapacity until Socialism ushers in a new era.

From Florida to Washington, from Maine to California, from Texas to Michigan, from center to circumference in almost every city in the broad land, the voice of Eugene V. Debs has been heard, and always and everywhere in the interest of the toiling masses. In voting for him working men in every industrial enterprise will vote for a man who knows the right and has the courage to defend it.

A correspondent of the Indianapolis News, a widely circulated paper in Indiana, predicts the Social Democratic party will receive fully 12,000 votes in Indiana. He calls it the "Debs movement," and says Debs is immensely popular with working men. The indications are that the Social Democratic party will receive more than 2,000,000 votes at the November election.

Professor Herron's First Address for Social Democracy, delivered at Rockland on Sept. 18th ult., has been published in pamphlet form by the organizing committee of the loyal branches in Massachusetts. It can be ordered of the treasurer, Charles W. White, 9 Sachem St., Roxbury, Mass. Single copies, 5 cents. $3.00 per hundred.

German Social Democrats in St. Louis, Cincinnati, New York, and elsewhere: Catch on to the German Leaflet, "Kapital ist ein Produkt der Arbeit. Wer sollte Kapital besitzen?" It is a German translation of Ben Atterbury's "Letter to American Workmen." Sent to your address, charges paid, for $1.25 a thousand. It is sehr gut.

The Tribune of Chicago, which reports Teddy Roosevelt's average audience at 2,000, thinks a Socialist meeting at which Debs speaks to less than six or seven acres of people—or 15,000, eager to hear the gospel of Socialism, is a failure. The Tribune is well on to its function as a capitalist prostitute.

"Money talks." What is wanted is that money in this present campaign shall talk for the Social Democratic ticket, and every dollar and dime contributed by Socialists and those who are in sympathy with their teachings will talk for our standard-bearers—Debs and Harriman.

Judge Jenkins of the United States circuit court is reported to be losing his eyesight. Perhaps the affliction is due to nocturnal wanderings in the labyrinthine mazes of the law in search of injunctions against labor. A judge should confine himself to the administration of justice.

Eugene V. Debs, the Social Democratic candidate for president, is one of those lofty characters who can neither be bought, sold, bribed nor intimidated. His courage is equal to any emergency. He has been imprisoned for his fealty to labor, and the principles of Socialism he advocates.

It has passed into an adage that capitalists are "timid" about investing their money. But when labor has been disciplined and the choice is between work and starvation, capitalists cease to be timid, and are as courageous as wolves when unprotected sheep are in sight.

Vox populi, vox Dei—"the voice of the people is the voice of God"—depends upon who the God is. If Joss, then we have Chinese civilization, capitalists and coolies. If Jesus, Socialism, the highest ideal of civilization ever offered to the world.

Chicago comrades please take notice: The headquarters of the national campaign committee will be open every day, including Sunday morning, and work-day evenings until 8 o'clock until election day.

We are climbing the ramparts, the earth to gain; help us along; help yourself; help all humanity. Now is your opportunity; the hour has come. The clarion call resounds, and you must stand up and be counted.

A vote for Debs and Harriman voices a thrilling, soul-inspiring appeal for the emancipation of workingmen from environments which mantle the cheeks of civilization with a deep and abiding blush of shame.

A vote for Debs and Harriman is a vote to break the fetters which capitalism has forged, that toil in the future as in the past, may build palaces for the rich on the highlands, and huts for themselves in the slums.

The Social Democratic Herald is the official organ of the Social Democratic party. In subscribing for it Socialists broaden its influence and add to the vote for Debs and Harriman.

The Social Democratic party in conducting its campaign against capitalism, McKinleyism and Bryanism, must have money—a campaign fund—the larger the better.

All hail the day! We see it coming
When capitalism's rule of pelf
Will be dead as an Egyptian mummy,
And every man will own himself.

By their acts ye shall know them.
Comrades are giving their time to our committee freely, as well as contributions. What are you doing?

Carnegie of Homestead and "blowable" fame, says he will support McKinley. Why not? Even an ass knows its master's crib.

We are selling literature below cost, and if each comrade does his duty, we will send out over two million pieces of propaganda literature.

Now, of all the days and years, is your opportunity to load our Socialist guns. Send in your ammunition and hear the roar.

When a vote is cast as the result of convictions and courage, there is always a freeman behind the ballot.

The Republicans and Democrats contribute millions to forge your fetters. What can you afford to break them?

Comrades, it is your duty to contribute to the national campaign fund.

DEBS ANALYZED

George Hughes, Son of the Author of "Tom Brown at Oxford," writes of the Man.

To the outward senses Mr. Debs presents a very pleasing picture of a gentleman in the conventional sense of the word. He is tall, erect, very bald, with an expressive, sensitive countenance. His manner is cordial, and his language and method of utterance are as beyond reproach as those of any man I have ever seen in Mayfair or Fifth Avenue. It was almost a shock to me to behold the man as he is, after the scurrilous descriptions one has read in those organs which help to form public opinion, which are such a questionable addition to our national intelligence. So much then for what Mr. Debs appears to the outward senses; it bears that test, which is said to be infallible in judging the conventional gentleman; namely, that if he were standing silent and unknown among a lot of men, one would notice him a I know not why.

This, however, is very immaterial, for it is when one approaches that part of man which lights and forms the outer man, that one becomes really conscious that one is in the presence of a true man. It becomes evident to any eyes that can see, that here is a really manly man, whose soul dwells higher than his stomach, from that fact that like every great man, he is possessed by his idea.

"They master us and force us into the arena, where, like gladiators, we must fight for them."

And, further, his idea is that which 1900 years ago mastered and led to death the greatest man that ever lived. And one can see that as Mr. Debs has already passed free from all cowardice, through bribery and slander and persecution so like the master of old for the cause he is proclaiming, he will be faithful to the very gates of hell.

With clear, if not rhetorical eloquence, with artistic allusion to nature and quotation from those singers who have sung liberty and the rights of man, with facts that will stand the test of any searching mind, Mr. Debs from his large experience of laboring mankind and their conditions and trials, diagnosed the social problem and our dire need of remedy.

His audience of at least 1,200 people would testify to his skill and truth. For my part, and I claim to have heard some of the best, I have never heard a speaker who had a clearer or more sanguine and thorough belief in true knowledge of his statements.

I declare that he who is unhesitatingly following wherever the truth shall lead him, cannot dare to miss hearing and explaining the idea of so true a man as Mr. Debs. It is with the purpose of moving men of all parties to hear him and without bias to consider his plan, it is because I know that, whatever their ultimate conclusion and action may be after hearing him, their sense of patriotism will be more logical and purer, and their action in any direction more full of brotherly love and the knowledge of our present chaos, that I have written this at such length.—George Hughes in Topeka State Journal.

SOCIALIST CONTENTION VINDICATED

The Cosmographic of New York has copyrighted and published a statement relating to the gravity of the national political situation, made by Richard Croker, the notorious Tammany Chief and Democratic politician. It is true, and, strange to say, is a triumphant vindication of the declaration of Socialists and of the Social Democratic party.

True, Mr. Croker drives his shafts at the Republican party, but the facts stated, independent of the partisan purpose in view, corroborate the affirmations of the Social Democratic party. For instance, Mr. Croker says:

"This country has become a close corporation, in which the man with his way to make in the world has no part or prospective place."

"Twenty-five men can tie up this country with their vast wealth."

"The young man leaving college or home to go to work finds every avenue closed to him unless he becomes the servant of a trust in a hired capacity, from which there is little hope to rise."

"I have received more than a thousand letters from young men in all walks of life asking what they shall do to make a living."

"I can not answer these letters with encouragement, because there is no open door through which the young man of to-day, without capital can enter commercial life with any future prospect."

Such is the testimony of Richard Croker. Socialists aver that capitalism has closed all the doors to better conditions against the toiling masses. Mr. Croker includes young men from college, who must, if they would live, become the servants of capitalists, without the prospect of ending their servitude, except in death.

Richard Croker, the Democratic political boss of New York, in making a fight for Bryan against the Republican party, bears testimony against capitalism and its operations in degrading men who are required to engage in industrial pursuits for a livelihood.

WHY WAGE WORKERS ARE WAGE SLAVES

No Man Gets Rich by Selling His Labor Power—It is Profits and Not Wages that Make Men Rich—The Slaves' Battle for Life

A VOTE GIVEN TO CAPITALISM

Is a Vote for Class Ownership of the Tools of Production and Continued Slavery—A Vote for Socialism Counts For Freedom

By James O'Neal

To the workers of America. You are slaves! Now don't curl up your lip and throw the paper down. I mean just exactly what I say and before we go any further I want you to read this quotation from Epicurus, an old Greek, who lived thousands of years ago. It's good reading. "Ere we come to this important inquiry, it behooves us to see that we come with willing minds, that we say not, so far will we go and no farther; we will make one step but not two; we will examine, but only so long as the result of our examination shall confirm our preconceived opinions." In our search after truth, we must equally discard presumption and fear. We must come with our eyes, our hearts and our ears and our understandings open; anxious, not to find OURSELVES right, but to discover what IS right; asserting nothing which we cannot prove; believing nothing which we have not examined; and examining all things fearlessly, dispassionately, perseveringly."

Bear in mind these words as we proceed with the discussion. I contend that the position you occupy in modern society is that of a slave. What is a slave? A slave is that condition wherein one man or one class are in a state of entire subjection to the will and dictates of another man or another class. Do you workers as a class come within the limits of this definition? I answer yes. Let us examine "fearlessly, dispassionately, perseveringly." You, in order to live, must work. But you cannot work where or when you please. WHY? Because the tools or machinery which you use in producing wealth, and without which you are helpless, are owned by another fellow, a CAPITALIST if you please. If HE does not want you, YOU must suffer in silence. HE owns the INSTRUMENTS by which wealth is produced, but YOU use them,—when he allows you, not before. On the other hand, you, also, have in your possession that which the capitalist cannot do without, and many politicians point to this fact, claiming that the interests of the tool owners (capitalists) and tool users (workers) are identical. I mean labor power. You sell your labor force, your muscles, bones and sinews by the day, week or month and the tool owners must have this labor power or the factories, mills and mines must stop.

It is claimed by the politicians that the possession by these two classes, capitalists and workers, of the two essential factors in production, tools and labor power, results in a harmonious balance of power, from which each gains in almost equal proportion. This theory sounds very plausible, but what are the facts? You know facts and theories do not always confirm each other, and if we can discover facts that disprove this supposed "identity of interests" then the theory falls to the ground, and a new one must take its place.

Let us again examine "fearlessly." The capitalists, by owning the machinery have amassed large fortunes and live in luxury and "refinement" undreamed of in any other age. Your class produced these fortunes and yet YOU HAVE WHAT YOU STARTED IN LIFE WITH, YOUR LABOR POWER STILL FOR SALE. Why is it, that, if your interests are identical with those of the capitalists, it does not find its expression in a more EQUAL DISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH?

Surely, if there is a "harmonious balance of power" the workers would exercise their power and by so doing get a larger return for their labor! Let us proceed. While it is true that the capitalists must buy labor power in order to operate their factories, yet they do not have to buy ALL that is offered for sale. They are constantly buying new and improved machinery, and when the machine goes in YOU go out, or at least some of you do. As this machinery is introduced, the number of those of whom the capitalists MUST BUY labor power is DECREASED, while the number of workers who MUST SELL labor power and no market for its sale, INCREASES. In other words the army of the unemployed who have LABOR POWER FOR SALE BUT CANNOT SELL IT, increases year after year through the introduction of machinery. Now you know what happens to a number of business men when they have to sell their goods to realize money. The competitor FORCES THEM TO CUT PRICES. The same thing is true of workingmen. The unemployed like those who have employment must live and they are forced to CUT DOWN THE PRICE OF LABOR POWER. This competition between workers who MUST sell, drives wages down to the lowest point that it is possible for them to exist on, that is STARVATION WAGES. Now do you see the reason why you are in the same condition that you were when you started in life? And was I right when I said that you were SLAVES?

Let us investigate a little further. The politicians, whom you have continued to elect to office, tell you that you can also become rich by saving your money and starting in business yourself. First, let me ask one question: Did you ever hear of a man getting rich selling labor power? NO! It is the man who BUYS labor power who gets rich. No man gets rich on WAGES, nearly all get rich on PROFITS. Then what does the politicians' advice amount to? It means this: You should try and place yourselves in a position where you can also rob your fellow workers in the manner in which you are being robbed now! But even this advice, brutal as it is, cannot be followed, for thousands of small business men are failing every year through competition with department stores and trusts. How, then, can you hope to succeed with your inexperience, when thousands with years of experience constantly fail and drop into our ranks, thus intensifying the competition still more between us for jobs? Looks pretty blue, does it not? ARE YOU A SLAVE?

But you say that by banding into trades unions we overcome all these evils. I deny it. I am a member of a trades union myself and believe that but for organized labor the conditions would be much worse than they are, but I still maintain, even with this qualification, THAT WE ARE SLAVES. What are the conditions we face when on strike? Capitalists who do not have to buy, workers who must sell. Capitalists with a full stomach and an inexhaustible storehouse to draw upon, workers with an empty stomach and nothing to draw upon, except a small strike fund that is soon exhausted. With capitalists, larger profits, with workers, a battle for LIFE. In short, it is war between hunger pangs and bags of gold, and the gold will hold out longer than the hunger pangs can be endured. It is unnecessary for me to point out the functions performed by the militia, the courts and police when on strike. You have all been "up against it." Again, I ask, ARE YOU SLAVES?

This is the condition that you workers face in modern society. An idle tool-owning class on the one hand, and an industrious tool-using class on the other. The owners get nearly all the product, yet do not work, the users do all the work, yet receive a small subsistence wage. McKinley stands for ownership of these things by the large capitalists; Bryan is against the large capitalists owning them and wants to "smash" their trusts, so that the small capitalists will have a show. Bryan hasn't told us yet how he is going to redistribute the trust property back into the hands of small owners—and never will. Debs is against capitalist ownership of the machinery of production, either large or small, and stands for collective ownership by those who use them with the full value of their labor.

Workingmen, the first two candidates stand for class ownership of the tools which you use; one wants large and the other wants small capitalists to own them, but they are both agreed that YOU should not own them. Both want a class to own them but not the WORKING CLASS. ARE YOU SLAVES? I ask again. Will you sanction your slavery by casting a ballot for Bryan or McKinley, or will you protest by a vote for Debs and the entire Socialist ticket? Don't go to the polls and vote a capitalist ticket and then whine for four years more. The man who votes a capitalist ticket should keep silent when he sees its results. Remember the following words of the old Greek: "Do you doubt the way? Good and evil lie before you. The good is,—all which can yield you pleasure; the evil,—what must bring you pain. Let us arise in our strength, examine, judge, and be free!"

GLORY—A NATION'S BOAST

The Nation's boast! I heard it then. In the wake of that bursting shell—The moaning of town and bleeding men In the land where Lawton fell!

The "glory" of war! Behold its light Where suffering comrades groan, Where the soldier dies in the cheerless night, And a mother weeps alone.

"A victory won!" the papers said, But not unto us revealed The vultures gloating o'er the dead Upon that conquered field.

We did not see, in surge on surge Of battle charge, the ranks of Hate; The morrow came with wailing dirge And plaint of homes made desolate! —Chas. E. Upton.

LABOR COST OF MACHINE-MADE GOODS

Mr. W. L. Thurman of Durwood, I. T., has been studying recent United States reports on the above subject. We give below some of the results, which others may verify if they are incredulous. Mr. Thurman says:

"I have before me Vols. 1 and 2 of the Thirteenth Annual Report of the Commissioner of Labor. Congress appropriated the money to bear the expenses in getting up the facts and having them published in book form for public information.

"From them I present the following facts as regards the labor, cost and time of manufacturing a few articles:

"A 3/4-inch farm wagon is made in 48 hours and 17 minutes; that is, it equals the work of one man for that length of time. The total labor cost—that is, the amount received by labor for making it—is $7.19. Yet this same wagon is bought by the farmer for $75.00.

"How can the farmer hold his own and swap $75.00 earned on the farm for $7.19 earned in the factory?

"A leather top, piano-box buggy, finely finished, is made at labor cost in time of 39 hours and 8 minutes, and labor cost in wages of $8.09. This same buggy is sold on the markets at $100 to $125.

"A platform spring hack, two seats, nicely trimmed, is made in 53 hours and 28 minutes. Labor receives only $8.48 for making it. But this same hack costs $100 on the market.

"A clock, mahogany veneered, 26 inches high, 8-day movement, is made in 1 hour and 23 minutes. Labor receives only 25 1/2 cents for making it. Yet this clock costs on the markets about $12.50.

"How can the people hold their own and exchange $12.50 earned on the farm against 25 1/2 cents earned in the factory?

"A common straw-carpet costs the housewife about 40 cents a yard, and yet a fine Brussels carpet costs only 9 cents a yard to make it, and including cost of material, it should cost not over 40 cents a yard, just what we pay for a poor straw carpet.

"Labor in the factory gets only 6 cents a yard for making ingrain carpets and 8 cents a yard for making velvet carpets. Yet these same carpets, under capitalism, cost from $2.00 to $5.00 a yard.

"Tanning leather costs 11 cents a side, and labor receives from 18 to 75 cents a pair for making shoes. So the finest shoes on the market should cost less than a dollar, and the grade generally worn should not cost over 35 cents, including cost of raw material.

"The farmer sells a bale of cotton for $25.00. It is made into 2,000 yards of gingham or calico. Labor in the factory gets $2 for making the 2,000 yards. The 2,000 yards, under capitalism, costs the people $100.

"The same holds good in all other kinds of goods, cotton or wool. How can the farmer hold his own and sell a bale of cotton for $25 when that same bale in goods comes back in bolts worth $100. The farmers get $25; factory labor gets $22; capital gets $55 on the bale!

"Labor gets 3 1/2 cents a pair for making woolen hose. Ninety cents, including cost of raw material, is the factory cost of a dozen pairs of stockings (woolen), legs fourteen inches long. Woolen stockings on the market are three times that amount. Labor gets 5 1/2 cents, capital 21 1/2 cents.

"Labor gets $10.33 for making a dozen ash bedsteads 6 feet 4 inches high, while one such bedstead will cost about that much on the market. Labor gets 50 cents for making a common bedstead 4 feet 7 inches high, and it sells on the market for about $4.50.

"The labor cost of a 4 1/2-pound axe is 13 cents, and it sells for $1.

"Pitchforks are made at a cost of 5 cents. Ask the farmer what he paid for his.

"Labor gets 79 cents for making a turning plow. Ask your neighbor what his cost him.

"A 14-foot garden rake is made at a cost of 10 cents. What did it cost you? "Cassimere pantaloons cost in labor and material less than 80 cents. Go to the dry goods house and see what they will cost you.

"A worsted Prince Albert coat costs less than $3. See what it will cost you.

"Labor gets 75 cents for making a four-drawer pine bureau, and it will cost you about $8.

"The labor cost of an oak or walnut bureau is $1.75. It will cost you from $10 to $15.

"Labor gets $4.59 for making a set of heavy wagon harness. Tanning the leather costs 11 cents a side. Get some harness-maker to tell you how many sides will make the harness. The harness will cost you $25 to $30. Capital gets 75 cents on the dollar.

"On page 423, Vol. 1, of the Thirteenth Annual Report, we learn that the entire labor cost of transporting passengers on one railroad is 14-100 of a cent a mile, yet the fare is 3 cents, over 21 times more than the labor cost.

"On another railroad the total labor cost is 22-100 of a cent a mile. So it is seen that the fare at 3 cents a mile is nearly 15 times more than the labor cost.

"In this case the passengers pay the railroad fifteen times as much as the railroad pays out for hands to keep up the roads and run the trains. In the other case the passengers paid in fare 21 times as much as the railroads paid out for labor.

"Socialism would furnish fare at cost. Taking these examples furnished in our government report, it is seen that if we take the average cost of fare people ought to ride on trains at 1-18 of a cent a mile, or ride 1,800 miles for a dollar.

"After paying tribute to capitalism on everything, from the baby's cradle and rattle to the end of life, we are not yet done. Capitalism lays its hands upon the dead and demands enormous tribute for the privilege of being decently buried, as is evident by the following:

"Labor cost of a white wood coffin 5 feet 3 inches long is $1.32. Poplar coffin, 6 feet long, 60 cents. These are finished and lined. Go to the undertaker's and ask what they cost, if you need one.

"With all the machinery of manufacturing in the hands of private capitalists, operated for private gain, the ratios of labor cost to the selling, or market price, range all the way from 4 to 1 up to 400 to 1. Add to this the burden of landlordism, money-lenders, national banks, interest on bonds, national, state, county and city government; the enormous expenses of a navy and army, and almost all officers from president down, drawing a salary vastly out of proportion to the earnings of labor. What is labor to do? What is the prospect for the producer? Ask McKinley. His answer is: 'We are a great and prosperous people. Just let our system of capital alone. Private capitalism is all right.'

"Ask Bryan. His answer is: 'Private capitalism is all right. It ought to own the land and factories. What we need is to license the trusts and establish free silver at 16 to 1.'

"How can silver at 16 to 1 cover the ruinous ratios on all manufactured articles from 4 to 1 up to 400 to 1? Can Bryan tell?

"How can free silver at 16 to 1 relieve labor of the curse of landlordism, interest to money-lenders, big salaries to worthless officers, exorbitant freight and passenger rates and enormous profits to private manufacturing concerns?"

"The people must collectively own the land, transportation lines and factories and mines. By thus abolishing private capital the curse of profits will be killed and labor will be free."

"It is infinitely better to vote for freedom and fail, than to vote for slavery and succeed."—Eugene V. Debs.

I'm the dandy Rough Rider,
The bran blatherskite.
Just notice my hat,
My plume and my saddle.
Gods! I'm a Colossus.
See how grandly I straddle!
McKinley looks on and
He's clean out of breath,
While Dollar Mark Hanna's
Just laughing to death."

THE FULL DINNER PAIL.

Acts of rich men all remind us—
Heed the lesson, do not fail!—
To note they are solicitous
About the toiler's dinner pail.
They see it half filled with bread—
Note their groans as they repent.
And when their victims are half dead
Advance their wages ten per cent.

Ten per cent more of tater,
Ten per cent more of rice,
Then blubber thanks to their Creator,
That men can live like rats and mice.
Not ten per cent, but all we earn,
Nothing less is our demand.
Our shibboleth—pray, vote and learn
Not to obey, but to command.

NATIONAL SECRETARY-TREASURER

THEODORE DEBS

No. 126 Washington Street, Chicago.

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Fifteen cents will purchase Morris England in the German language, adapted to American needs. If you don't read German, buy one for your friends.

Presidential electors in Oregon are: N. P. J. Folen, J. Frank Gilbert, Joseph Meindl, C. P. Rutherford.

Smiley's excellent pamphlet, "To What Are Trusts Leading?", sent free to any address for 5 cents.

Rockville, Conn., had its annual town election, October 7, Republicans polling 600, Democrats 400, Social Democrats 128.

The loyal branches of Massachusetts have elected an organizing committee of nine with Comrade MacCartney as organizer.

The campaign committee has a few dozen photographs, cabinet size, of Eugene V. Debs, which they are selling at 15 cents each.

The small 4-page leaflet used by the Chicago comrades is good for any part of the country; 1,000 to any address, postage paid, for 75 cents.

The following ticket has been nominated in Tazewell county, Ill.: Circuit Clerk, J. W. Larimore; Surveyor, Theodore Vogel; Coroner, Jacob Schneider.

The national emblem of the party, adopted by the national campaign committee and printed on second page of the Herald, will be furnished to branches and committees at 25 cents, postage paid.

The presidential electors of the Social Democratic party in Florida are Ernest Untermann, William P. Neeld, Edwin C. Smith, W. P. Reed. They were chosen at a convention held at Ocala, Sept. 22.

Branches in the 11th Congressional District of Massachusetts are requested to elect representatives on the congressional committee and report as soon as possible to R. F. Schmidt, 35 Creighton St., Roxbury.

A new branch organized at Louisville, Ky., is composed chiefly of trades unionists, including the president of the Central Labor Union. Jas. H. Arnold is secretary, C. J. Lehman, organizer and J. J. Donohue, treasurer.

The Socialist Women's club was entertained by Comrade Anna R. Weeks of Winnetka last Sunday. Two new members were received. The meeting was addressed by Comrade Ellen Edwards, Socialist candidate for university trustee.

Members of the Social Democratic branches who are vitally interested in the cause of Socialism will not permit these present days, which are of vast importance to the cause, to pass by without paying their membership dues. This is the nearest to hand duty of every Social Democrat.

It is of the highest importance that all branches remit at the earliest time possible, the quarterly dues for members. The prompt payment of dues is necessary to the proper carrying on of the work at headquarters.

Socialists willing to assist in forming new branches of the Social Democratic party are requested to communicate with the secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

The Debs leaflet, at 75 cents per thousand, charges paid, is much the best leaflet for propaganda in some localities. We should receive more orders for them. They are small, but to the point, and will make S. D. P. votes.

The National Committee is now prepared to furnish Leaflet No. 2, Ben Atterbury's "Letter to American Workmen," in German. The price is $1.25 per thousand. Send in your orders at once and put it out among your German friends.

The Socialist Woman's club reminds all men comrades, that all women 21 years old can vote for university trustee, and should register on next Tuesday, Oct. 16. Remember every ballot cast for a Socialist candidate will help swell the Socialist vote.

Comrades: Wherever our candidate speaks during the present month (see list of cities in this issue of the Herald) the local branches should have thousands of leaflets to distribute at the meetings, lithographs to display in store windows, and stickers by the thousands.

Our German comrades will do well to distribute the German translation of leaflet No. 2, Ben Atterbury's "Letter to American Workmen." Give every German voter a copy and you will much increase the German Socialist vote. The price is $1.25 a thousand. Send in your orders.

It is advisable to stamp all leaflets, etc., with the local branch address and time of meeting, in order to get more direct returns for the work of distributing them. Let the voters of your locality know of your meeting, and then provide a good speaker to explain the principles of Socialism.

Last week over 100,000 copies of the Leaflets were shipped from the office of the National Campaign Committee and orders are coming in daily. At One Dollar a thousand (postage or express charges paid) they are the very best publications obtainable for propaganda. Hand them out and keep them going until November 6.

The portrait of the presidential candidate gives great satisfaction. Thousands have been mailed to branches and comrades in all sections of the country. It should be seen in every community; it informs the observer, directs attention to the party and makes votes. Ten copies, 35 cents; 33 for a dollar; single copy, 10 cents; postage prepaid.

The Woman's Political Equality league, Chicago, invited all women candidates for the position of university trustee to address them last Saturday afternoon. Our candidate, Comrade Ellen Edwards, gave an earnest, impassioned plea for Socialism. She demonstrated that under Socialism only could the benefits of a state university be extended to all children. Her radical remarks were well received. It was evident that there were more in sympathy with her than might have been expected.

HERRON AT MILWAUKEE

Prof. Geo. D. Herron will speak in behalf of the Social Democratic ticket at Milwaukee, Thursday, October 18, after which he goes east to fill a number of lecture engagements and during the last week of the campaign will speak at several points in Iowa.

WANTED

Five Hundred Social Democrats to give One Dollar each to the National Campaign Fund for the work of the committee during the last three weeks of the campaign. The committee is dependent entirely upon voluntary contributions from friends of the movement for funds to discharge the duty assigned to it.

It expects every Social Democrat to do HIS duty.

NEW YORK COMRADES, ATTENTION

A meeting of Branch 20, S. D. P. of New York, will be held on Sunday, Oct. 14, 2 p. m., at 2766 Third Ave., Cor. 146th St. Business of importance will be transacted, and all members are earnestly requested to allow nothing to interfere with their duty to attend this meeting. Comrade H. Donohue will address the audience.

P. Donohue, Sec'y.

FLORIDA SOCIALISTS

E. C. Smith, Ocala, Fla., chairman of the State Executive Committee, Social Democratic Party, wants the name and address of every Socialist and sympathizer in the state.

Do not save a large order until the last week of the campaign and then expect us to fill it by return mail or express. Order now.

Besides the regular office force at campaign headquarters, 126 Washington street, Chicago, we have volunteers every day, sometimes two or three comrades at a time, filling orders, stamping and weighing mail matter, filing letters, sending out circulars and in various other ways helping on the campaign work. These comrades, many of them women, have an unsurpassed enthusiasm and are willing to back up their enthusiasm by good work for the coming commonwealth—for Socialism.

The new leaflets, Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6, are going out fast. We hope to put in another order with the printers in a week or ten days.

The No. 2 leaflet, by Ben Atterbury, to the American workingman, has run a quarter of a million in the English edition. It is an excellent vote maker and can now be supplied in German, Polish and Bohemian.

Rev. H. S. Geneva Lake, one of the most able speakers in the country, is engaged to deliver addresses on Socialism at Aberdeen, Huguam, Elma and Olympia. Comrade Lake has been in the field twenty years and needs no introduction.

The largest single orders so far during the campaign were for 10,000 leaflets and another for 500 lithographs. The largest order for stickers was 10,000 and for buttons 500. Orders for 5,000 leaflets, 100 lithographs and 100 buttons are quite common.

Nearly one million copies of the leaflets have been disposed of by the national campaign committee up to date. During the next three weeks another million should be distributed, and it is your privilege to help by forwarding an order for a thousand or ten thousand. One thousand, $1.00, all charges prepaid.

THE COLORADO TICKET

The following is the ticket nominated by the Social Democrats of Colorado: Presidential Electors—Thos. H. Gibbs, Wm M. Ash, John H. Morrow, J. Everett Seeley.

Justice, Supreme Court—Eugene Engley.

Governor—DeWitt C. Copley.
Lieut.-Gov.—Patrick W. Doyle.

CAMPAIGN LEAFLETS

PUSH THEM OUT AND MAKE VOTES

No. 1—Address to Unorganized Socialists
Contains information concerning the Socialist movement in the United States, the party and its methods, object and program.

No. 2—An Open Letter to the Average American Workman

By Ben Atterbury. This is an admirable and convincing paper on the wage question, production, distribution of wealth and an appeal to the intelligence of the working class.

No. 3—Machine Production Where the Profits Go.

The argument of this leaflet is a clincher because taken from the government reports made by the Commissioner of Labor, and proves that machinery, combinations, trusts and systematized production must lead to socialism. It's the only way out.

No. 4—Toilers of America Vote for Your Freedom.

This is a remarkably effective campaign document. Written by a prominent member of the United Mine Workers, it sets forth in a convincing manner the reasons why the miners of the country, railroadmen and all other wage workers should support the Social Democratic ticket.

No. 5—Industrial Crises—Cause and Cure.

A strong appeal to the common sense of the voters, this leaflet gives the Socialist view of industrial crises and convincingly shows that Socialism is the necessary solution.

No. 6—Platform and Debs Epigrams.

This is a very attractive addition to our campaign literature; it gives the party platform complete with a collection of the very best epigrammatic sentences from the lectures of Eugene V. Debs, together with other striking contributions.

Ovation Upon Ovation Grooms Candidate Debs in this Most Remarkable Campaign

Tremendous Meeting in St. Louis

Some idea of the St. Louis meeting of our candidate, held Oct. 9, may be had from the following extracts from a report in a capitalistic daily, the St. Louis Globe-Democrat:

"Eugene V. Debs, candidate for president of the United States on the Social Democratic ticket, last night addressed a mass meeting in Lemp's Park hall, estimated as high as 6,000 people. Caleb Lipscomb, of Liberal, Mo., Social Democratic candidate for governor, also spoke and the speeches were liberally applauded. A torchlight procession in which were 2,500 members, added to the crowd which gathered earlier in the evening and formed an overflow meeting in the pavilion, at which the same speakers spoke. Mr. Debs' address was cheered and applauded. Long before the arrival of Mr. Debs and the other speakers of the evening, a crowd had packed the hall so that standing room was not to be had when J. F. Bergheim, a shoe worker, called the meeting to order at 8 o'clock. After making a brief speech, in which he complimented the followers of Mr. Debs and Social Democracy upon the strides the party had made during the present campaign, Mr. Debs was introduced. He spoke along the lines which have become associated with his name, and he appealed to his hearers to exercise their suffrages in behalf of the party he represents, declaring that only by the success of the principles it advocates can the condition of the laboring class be bettered. In the meantime a torchlight procession, headed by a band and drum corps, was in process of formation at the old French market. William Brand acted as grand marshal. T. M. Putnam, one of the street car strikers and candidate for congress, marched on foot at the head of the parade. When Lemp's park was reached the marchers took possession of the pavilion, Debs having by this time finished speaking in the hall. He was introduced by E. V. Putnam and spoke for half an hour. The same topics came in for his attention, though here his remarks met even greater applause than in the hall. Following Mr. Debs, Caleb Lipscomb addressed the gathering. He took up the issues made prominent in the platform of the party in Missouri, discussing industrial and trust conditions in the state and pledging himself to do all in his power to prevent class legislation should he be elected."

Speaking of his meeting Mr. Debs said: "If all the people who come to our meetings will vote the ticket the result will be astonishing. I feel confident that the party will receive large accessions this year, though the loss of the older parties will be equally divided."

The Westliche Post, St. Louis, gave a three-column report of the meeting and demonstration and printed a two-column half-tone cut of the presidential candidate.

Enthusiasm at Pana

Comrade J. A. Bruell writes of the Pana meeting as follows: "Pana voters turned out en masse to hear the great apostle of Socialism, Eugene V. Debs, deliver his masterly address here on Monday evening. The meeting started at 8 o'clock, but at 7 o'clock all seats were filled, and when the meeting started over 600 people had assembled—all that could wedge their way into the hall. The speech was interrupted by outbursts of enthusiasm that lasted several minutes at a time. Democrats and republicans both agree that it was the best speech delivered here during the campaign. Debs' name is on every tongue and Socialism is being discussed on every street corner. The democratic paper ignored the meeting before and after."

Following is what the Pana Beacon Light said of the meeting:

"Eugene V. Debs, the leader of the Social Democratic party and its candidate for president of the United States, addressed a big audience at the old Hayward opera house last night. The crowd was made up of Social Democrats, democrats and republicans, who had gathered to listen to the apostle of labor and liberty. It was an orderly crowd, and listened to what Mr. Debs had to say with interest. The address lasted nearly two hours. . . . Mr. Debs referred sarcastically to the claims of the democrats that the Social Democratic campaign fund is being put up by Mark Hanna. "We try to emancipate humanity," he said, "and they say we have been bought."

Debs at Kansas City

The Kansas City meeting was a sweeping success. It was held in the Turner hall the sides of which almost bulged out from the over-crowding. The Star began its report thus:

"If Mr. Bryan is opposed to private monopoly he is opposed to private ownership. If he is opposed to private ownership he is a Socialist. If he is not opposed to private ownership or all natural monopolies he favors the capitalistic class. There can be no middle ground for him."

"Thus declared Eugene V. Debs, Social Democratic candidate for President, in a speech at Turner hall last night. Mr. Debs arraigned both of the old political parties. It seemed to be half expected that he would make a vigorous attack on the administration of President McKinley, but the severity with which he handled Mr. Bryan seemed to surprise many of his hearers."

"Turner hall was packed and an overflow meeting on the outside was addressed by Carl Brown of Coxe army fame. Mr. Debs' audience was composed largely of workmen and there was a good sprinkling of women and girls. A number of merchants were also present."

"Mr. Debs was introduced amid vociferous cheering by Garrett Fulvove, a member of the Jackson county Social Democratic central committee, which arranged the meeting."

Comrade Clemens also spoke, making a fine presentation.

Taxed the Hall at Wichita

Of the Wichita meeting, the Wichita Daily Eagle gave over two columns, referring to the meeting and speaker in the following words:

"If ever the Garfield hall was crowded it was packed last night by people who turned out to hear the candidate for President on the Socialist ticket, Eugene V. Debs. While the hall was crowded, Debs could have filled the Auditorium, and owing to a mistake in regard to the place of speaking, many were disappointed and went to their homes not knowing that the man was at the Garfield hall."

"People were surprised at the appearance of Debs. He is a nice appearing man. He has a good countenance. He is bald headed and, as one man said last night, reminds one of Bill Nye, only he is better looking. After all that one could say about Eugene V. Debs he has an attractive personality. Every person present last night stayed in the hall until Debs concluded his speech. His language in the main was interesting. He rapped both parties. He paid no particular attention as to where his blows landed and when they did land a cheer went up from his audience, whether it was republican, democrat, populist or not."

"Perhaps no character which has been in Wichita for a long period of time has interested Wichita people as much as did Debs. They had heard about him, read of him, talked about him, but as far as Debs himself was concerned, Wichita people did not get a chance to see him until last night. The meeting was in charge of Dr. W. L. Rose."

The Wichita Eagle in advance of the meeting there said, among other things:

"Eugene V. Debs, candidate for President on the Socialist National ticket, will speak at the Auditorium in this city to-night. This is the first time during the present campaign that a presidential candidate has made his appearance in this section of the state. Debs has the reputation of being a brainy man and the ideas which he is imparting under the Socialist movement is new to the people of this state. The Socialist party has a following, however, in this county. Since the announcement of the coming of Debs to the city, there has been considerable curiosity evinced among the people of all parties to know just in what manner Debs will handle the issues of the campaign from a Socialistic standpoint. The democrats are inclined to think that it will amount to nothing, but at all events he will have an audience composed of thinking people."

Capitalist Trickery at Topeka

The Debs meeting at Topeka was a magnificent one, the new Auditorium being packed to the ceiling. Comrade G. C. Clemens presided and introduced the speaker. The papers studiously avoided so much as a brief mention of the meeting, and the bill poster did not put up the bills given him. Comrade Clemens, with his well known power for cutting criticism, denounced the whole outfit in scathing terms and the audience cheered wildly, stood up and yelled when he characterized the old parties as rotten to the core. Comrade Debs spoke for two hours and was listened to with marked attention and demonstrative approval. At the close of the meeting the crowd seized Debs and almost tore him to pieces in its exuberance. A feature of the evening was the presence of the members of the grievance committee of the Board of Locomotive Firemen representing the entire Santa Fe system. They were in session in Topeka and adjourned to be at the meeting. There were many other railroad men present, and when Comrade Clemens said in his speech that the three thousand railway men employed at Topeka were the friends of Eugene V. Debs and would resent at the polls the insult of the capitalist papers in not sending a reporter to such a great meeting, there was a rising demonstration that fairly shook the building.

Colony's Welcome to Debs

Fort Scott, Kan., Oct. 11.—The entire Socialist colony of Freedom, in this county, drove five miles to-day to greet Eugene V. Debs, its candidate for President, as he passed through Fulton on the train. The colonists carried transparencies and a large crayon portrait of Debs and Clemens, the Socialist candidate for governor. The train would not stop long enough for Debs to speak.

Notes of Western Tour

Debs and Clemens are stirring Kansas from center to circumference. The fusionists who have tasted the blood of capitalist office, are howling in impotent rage. On with the revolution!

In his Kansas campaign Comrade Debs had an amusing experience. At a certain station (it shall be nameless, as also the railroad, for obvious reasons), a crowd had gathered to see the presidential candidate. The train only stopped a minute, but the engineer, who was a veteran of the A. R. U. strike, found it easy to discover that there was something wrong with the engine that required about fifteen minutes' tinkering to put in shape. Debs got in a red-hot Socialist speech, and the train pulled out with everybody cheering.

The dinner hour at Fort Scott, Kan., where the train stopped twenty minutes, offered Comrade Debs a chance to address the large crowd from a baggage truck.

Winfield, Kan., was well represented at the station. Debs and Clemens spoke to the crowd from the rear platform of the train.

The campaign in Kansas is of the cyclone variety. Comrade Clemens, our candidate for governor, is touring the state with Debs and they are speaking to large crowds at the railway stations where stops are made. The Associated Press is significantly silent about this remarkable campaign and the mighty outpouring of the people all over the Sunflower State.

The Debs meetings in Kansas were big in spite of such obstacles as capitalism was able to throw in their way. The bill posters refused to put up the bills for the meetings, and those that were posted by the extra exertions of comrades were torn down by people in the pay of the politicians of both old parties. This same sort of thing is being systematically done all over the country, but our party has tremendous meetings everywhere just the same. The attitude of the railroads is also becoming manifest and the evidences show that they are concertedly fighting us.

While at Wichita Comrade Debs received the following dispatch:

"Geary, O. T.—Greeting and best wishes. Sorry cannot hear you to-night. Oklahoma will speak in November. "E. T. Tucker."

The Toledo Blade, administration organ, is making all kinds of fun of Mayor Jones because of his taking the stump along with Bryan, even charging him with neglect of his official duties. This isn't very serious considering that all office-holding politicians are open to the same charge.

Old Parties Getting Uneasy

Admit they Cannot Figure Out the Debs Vote in the States of The Middle West

Democrats Worried

Under a flaring heading: "Is Debs' Stronghold," the Chicago News last week published an interview with Chairman Jones of the National Democratic committee, in which he admitted that the Debs' vote was a source of worry, but insisting that its strength in Illinois would be centered in Chicago. Evidently he doesn't want to give the mining district too much encouragement. The article is as follows:

"Democratic leaders do not attempt longer to conceal their anxiety over the Debs' vote, and Senator Jones, chairman of the Democratic national committee, stated today that he believes Chicago is the strongest Debs city in the entire country. What worries the Democratic leaders is their absolute inability to size up the vote that will be cast for the Socialist-Democrat candidate in the doubtful states. Throughout the middle west the Democrats admit that their ranks will furnish the great bulk of the votes that are cast for Debs next month, except in Indiana, where they assert that 'Debs is strongest among the workmen in the natural gas belt. This is a Republican stronghold.'"

"I confess that the Debs vote is an unknown quantity so far as I have been able to discover," said Senator Jones today. "I cannot find anybody else who knows any more about the probable size of the vote Debs will poll than I do. I don't know what truth there is in the assertion that Debs will draw heavily from the Democrats in the coal mining district down in the central and southern portion of Illinois. It is my opinion that Debs is strongest right here in Chicago, and at that I don't anticipate that he will poll a dangerously heavy vote here."

Republicans Too

And now it is the Republicans who are frightened about Indiana. Witness the following dispatch to the Chicago Record, and note also the Republican trick it exposes, a trick that by their own admission has given them the worst of it:

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 11.—The Republicans of Indiana who appreciate the political situation are badly scared. Witness the words of one, upon whose efforts depends the capture of the farmer vote, which is considered necessary to Republican victory in the state:

"The lethargy of the majority of the Republican managers in Indiana is threatening us with disaster. The Democrats are spending more money in this state than we are. The railroad employes are almost solid for Bryan. They scoff at prosperity, because while the roads have made more money since 1896 than ever before, wages have not been raised and the employes are discontented."

"In the rural districts we planned to aid Debs because we thought he would draw largely from the Democratic party. But we were fooled. He has drawn mostly from the Republican party. The small storekeeper and well-to-do farmer will not contribute to the campaign fund. They say: 'Why don't you get your money from the trusts? That is the interest that profits most by the McKinley administration.' Our sole chance of carrying Indiana lies in the farmer vote, and, while we have made gains there, I doubt seriously whether they are enough to offset the loss in the towns."

"But the question is, can we bring out the farmer vote that we have won. Rain on election day will probably defeat McKinley in Indiana. It is sure to be close. A sick hog will keep one farmer from the polls, and 100 sick hogs may give the state to Bryan."

A Two-Edged Sword

And still the speculation as to the Social Democratic vote goes merrily on. The Kansas City Times does some wild guessing, as follows:

"Realizing that the labor vote was lost to them in a number of the debatable states, the republicans conceived the idea of encouraging Debs, figuring that every vote he received would come from the ranks of organized labor, and every vote would be one less for Mr.

Bryan. Of late they have begun to realize that the Debs vote is a two-edged sword, and that it cuts both ways. Mr. Debs recently made an excursion into the natural gas belt in Indiana, and was greeted by large audiences of working men employed in the factories there. The republicans were jubilant until they discovered that the majority of these men voted for Mr. McKinley four years ago, impelled thereto by a belief that they were voting for prosperity, 'full dinner pails,' fat savings bank accounts and all that. They have not received what they consider their share of the heralded McKinley prosperity; sometimes their dinner pails were not very well filled, and their savings bank accounts have not grown to such proportions as to tempt dishonest bank officials. When the republicans realized that the votes which Mr. Debs would get in the gas belt would come from Mr. McKinley's plurality of four years ago, they saw that in Mr. Debs they had, like Frankenstein, constructed a monster that was destroying them. But they were game, and are still encouraging the Social Democracy movement and depending upon it to pull their chestnuts out of the fire in Illinois and Indiana."

"The democratic leaders are not worrying about the Debs vote. They frankly admit that they cannot with any degree of certainty estimate its strength, but that it will be heavy enough to materially affect their chances of success in any state they do not for a moment consider a possibility. Senator Jones said yesterday he was unable to discover anywhere that Debs would poll a dangerously large vote."

"I have heard a good deal of talk about the Debs vote," he said, "but I do not believe it will be nearly as large as the republicans would have us believe. At any rate, I see no reason why it should be drawn more largely from the democrats than from the republicans."

Kansas Pops Startled

Topeka, Oct. 10.—The fusion managers in Kansas were somewhat surprised to-day to learn that George D. Herron, of Chicago, had come out for Debs for President and had contributed $500 towards his campaign fund. Herron has been a regular idol among the Socialists faction of the populist party in Kansas. John Breidenthal has insisted that Herron is one of the greatest men in this country. He has fairly worshipped him in the past. He will probably revise his opinion in the event that Herron comes to Kansas and makes some speeches for Debs and Clemens. An effort is being made to get him here. —Kansas City Journal.

Likens Debs to Lincoln

The Rev. Frank De Witt Talmadge, D. D., of Jefferson Park M. E. church, Chicago, preached a sermon on the coming election and the presidential candidates last Sunday, in the course of which he took occasion to pay a rather unusual, yet well deserved compliment to the Social Democratic nominee. He singled Comrade Debs out from the whole list for a special and beautiful tribute to his sincerity and worthiness. The Rev. Talmadge is a large improvement on his sire, the czar-eulogizer.

His reference to the candidates was, in part, as follows:

"In the first place the signs of the times tell us we ought to thank God because we have honest candidates. Never since the country was started has there been purer or better men nominated by the different parties than those presented now. The Republican party with President McKinley at its head; the Democratic party with William J. Bryan; the Prohibition party with John G. Woolley, and the Socialistic party with Eugene Debs, have all honored their country by honoring themselves. AND AMONG ALL THESE FOUR MEN THERE IS NO HONESTER ONE THAN EUGENE V. DEBS. I heard him speak at a great mass meeting in Central Music Hall. Among all the speakers whom I have ever heard there has not been one which came nearer to my idea of Abraham Lincoln than Eugene Debs."

HE COULDN'T DELIVER SOCIAL DEMOCRATS

Failing to Reap the Harvest Sown,
Editor Hearst Looks for Ways to Block the Socialist Advance

GIVES HIS GAME DEAD AWAY

Wants Certain Measures Adopted to Delay
The Coming of the Co-Operative Commonwealth

When the New York Journal was begun by Hearst he undertook to make it the especial pet of the large, but scattered, radical element in the country, and to have his radicalism as scientific and "startling" as possible, he employed several well known Socialists to write his editorials, and gave them carte blanche to write as radical as they liked. Little he cared how much forbidden truth they told so long as the people liked it and it brought shekels into the Hearst coffers. The most notable of those who came to the Journal's editorial staff was the late Laurence Gronlund, long to live in the memory of men as author of "The Co-operative Commonwealth," and other Socialistic books. Then there was Arthur Brisbane, son of Albert Brisbane, of Fourierite fame, a Socialist less known than Gronlund, but just as sharp and cultured a writer. And Herbert Casson was another, and so on. The Journal's editorials caught on in great shape, and people imbibed new ideas, new hope and better guidance from them, but the coin came in, and Hearst cared not. It is true that these Socialist writers in the Journal's pay were a little cautious. They never quite pounded in the logical conclusions of their articles strong enough, but still they were good stuff, as the saying goes.

However, Mr. Hearst got ambitions politically, and then came some embarrassments. He thought at first that he could swing the Socialists of the country round to the Bryan camp, and he tried to do it, but it didn't work for shucks. Bryan and Socialism didn't dovetail and the Journal—and its twin, the Chicago American—discovered that it could not ride the two horses successfully at once, and so it prepared to come down from its menage act as gracefully as possible, and it did so in a long editorial entitled, "The Socialism of the Trusts." At best it was a labored effort to hide a retreat, an attempt to throw dust in the eyes of those who had been made quasi-Socialists by the Journal editorials. And the interesting thing about it is that the editorial is calculated to make more Socialists, instead of throwing them off the track.

Cut down a little, for the sake of brevity, the editorial is as follows: "The American Republic was built upon the foundation of individual enterprise. This old economic order, which has produced what we know as the American character, with all its vigor, audacity and self-reliance, is threatened from two sides. The avowed Socialists would take all business out of the hands of private citizens and intrust it to public officials. The trusts would take it out of the hands of ordinary men and give it to a few monopolists.

"In so far as the conduct of the national industries is concerned, there is no difference between state Socialism and trust Socialism. Both abolish individual enterprise in business. Both reduce the population to the position of employees. But there is a great difference in the distribution of the product, and in the effects on national happiness and character. State Socialism gives everything produced to the workers. Trust Socialism gives the workers the lowest wages for which they can be induced to labor and turns over everything else to a handful of capitalists. Under State Socialism the employee is a self-respecting public official who works for no man, but for the whole community, of which he is a citizen equally with his superior officer. Under trust Socialism the employee is a servant. He is working for men who stand on an entirely different level from his own. There is no possibility of winning promotion that shall put him on their grade.

"By all its traditions the democratic party is pledged to the maintenance of the American system of individual enterprise as far as possible. The ideal of its founders was a state of society in which every man should be his own master. But due regard must be paid to the course of social development. The tendency toward the concentration of industries in many directions cannot be and ought not to be resisted. Where an industry has passed beyond the stage in which competitive, go-as-you-please management can secure the best results for the public, it ought to be organized under a single control. But in that case, as a rule, that control should be directed by public authority.

"In other words, where the progress of events has made an infusion of Socialism unavoidable, the democracy prefers state Socialism to trust Socialism. (1)

"That is the case, for instance, in the matter of the telegraphs. The telegraph business is organized on a thoroughly Socialistic basis. A single vast system extends its wires from Key West to Puget Sound. Competition is practically non-existent and individual enterprise entirely so. In such circumstances private control is wholly mischievous. In every respect except its management and the distribution of its profits the telegraph system is a public enterprise, and the process of nationalization ought to be made complete.

"So of the railroads. We have not yet reached the single railroad trust that is to control all the transportation routes of the country, but things are moving that way so rapidly that the end is plainly in sight. Already we have single men in command of railroad systems greater than the whole mileage of important European countries. Half a dozen men could get together about a lunch table and dictate the policy of all the roads in the United States.

"The railroads of the country employ a million men—one-fifteenth of all the voters of the Union—representing a population nearly equal to that of the state of New York. These men constitute a force too formidable to be under any control but that of the nation. We talk about the dangers of militarism, from a standing army of a hundred thousand men, but here is a standing army of a million men—the picked men of the country for vigor, courage and endurance. By the side of such forces how petty were the little bands of men-at-arms with which the Colonna and the Orsini terrorized Rome in the Middle Ages!

"The railroads not only control the largest organized force of workers in the United States, but they control practically all the industries in the country. By their alliance with the trusts they are helping to kill off competition everywhere. They built up the Standard Oil combination by discriminating rates and persecution of rivals until now the creature is greater than its creator. They have maintained the monopoly of the sugar trust. They uniformly use their power to build up great combinations and destroy individual enterprise.

"The railroad system has passed beyond the competitive stage of organization, and therefore it ought to belong to the public. Under national control, with discriminations abolished and a fair field opened to all, IT WOULD HELP TO DELAY THE ADVANCE OF SOCIALISM IN OTHER DIRECTIONS.

"Meanwhile it should not be forgotten that THE ONLY PARTY THAT CAN LOGICALLY OPPOSE THE GENERAL ADOPTION OF STATE SOCIALISM IS THE DEMOCRACY. It is the only guardian of the competitive system. The trusts have deprived their friends of every argument against Socialism. They have trampled on the principle of individual enterprise; they have proved that the national organization of industry is practicable, and they have carried it out in the most offensive form—a form in which the masses do all the work and the few absorb all the profits.

"An advocate of the trusts must be either a Socialist or a pirate. The man who abhors piracy and still clings to so much of individual enterprise AS CAN BE PRESERVED in our stage of development must of necessity be a democrat." (1)

There is some very specious reasoning in the above. It is an attempt to confuse the voter as to what Socialism is. He is made to think that it is State Socialism that the Social Democrats want, which is untrue. State Socialism is the thing that will be resorted to by capitalism when it finds the Socialistic demand among the people so insistent that it must be met. We will be checkmated with Bismarck Socialism, with autocratic Socialism, as a means to give capitalism a little longer lease of life. The enemies of Socialism always take pains to call it State Socialism. The Journal says the democratic party is the guardian of what there is left of individual "enterprise" in our present society. This is rich. Before the Socialists get through democracy's ward will have so shriveled that the Bryans and other office hunters will have deserted and tied up to some new prejudices. Meanwhile we smile.

Pres. Edward Boyce, editor of the official organ of the Western Federation of Miners, prints a signed card in the current issue of that magazine, declaring that "the only logical candidates for president and vice-president that workingmen can CONSCIENTIOUSLY SUPPORT and be true to themselves," are the candidates of the Social Democratic party. He treats the old parties scathingly, showing how capitalism uses them, republicans or democrats alike, to crush labor.

Hearst's Chicago American printed a garbled version of the resolutions passed by the national convention of brewery workers in which they declared for Debs and Harriman, left out all reference to our party and candidates and made it appear to be an endorsement of Bryan.

BLOODTHIRSTY TEDDY'S ROUGH RANTING

Is After Workingmen in Same Spirit as he Branded Cattle and Shot
His Fellow Humans

LOW VIEW OF HUMAN NATURE

Roosevelt and Bryan at the Same Game and Only Gudgeons will Bite—Eugene
V. Debs The Only Hope

By Jacob Hafl

Of all the ridiculous phases of the present presidential campaign, the Don Quixotic triumphal tour of Teddy Roosevelt, the remarkable, resplendent, retaliatory, rhomboidal rough rider and his retinue of roughs, who were saved from annihilation by the colored troops at San Juan hill; of all the morbid appeals to American manhood for support and veneration, this little tattle-tattle Te Deum Teddy toadism takes the whole cake.

Think of it, you sober men of sound, common sense, a man at the close of the nineteenth century going about a so-called enlightened and Christian country, boasting of his willingness to kill his fellowmen, and waving the scalps of his past victims in the American voter's face, and asking to be elected to second place at the head of a great country.

How much difference between this bombastic, triumphal march of bloody splendor and sounding brass of Teddy and his mob and some old barbarous chief going about through the jungles of heathendom with a dozen bleeding human heads reared on bamboo poles, and naked criers announcing at the entrance of every squalid village: "Behold the man who delights in blood! The man who kills for pleasure! Behold the bleeding heads of his last victims, who were slain by his mighty hand! Great is Potbelly Jackasso, king of the Gudgeons!"

Nonsense, do you say? Well, is it any more nonsensical than Roosevelt's appeal to American manhood? What has this man done for his country, or for humanity, outside of his rough rider fiasco at San Juan hill? Has he ever in all his miserable and insignificant life given birth to a single thought that could be applied to any social or political reform? Has he ever advocated one single idea or theory for bettering the condition of the American laboring man? Has he ever condemned child labor, or the enslavement of American women?

Our wives, mothers, sisters, sweethearts, daughters are every year driven in larger herds into the slave mills of capital, and yet this great Teddy overlooks it all, and only asks the voters to look upon him and live, the same as the children of Israel were commanded to look up to the brazen serpent in the Egyptian wilderness.

What a farce! Have we drifted back to the days of war and conquest, when the women went crying through the streets, "Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his tens of thousands!" I thought the days of brute force were past, but Teddy has resurrected the ghosts of barbarism and is trying to pose as the most holy ghost of them all. The only redeeming feature about Teddy is our genuine faith in the solemn fact that he never killed anybody to a noticeable extent. Yet Teddy sees nobody worth talking about but the men who have died on the field of battle. The American workingman has no grievance, no reason to kick. He was born a slave, and must be satisfied with his condition, or get off the earth.

And, as a companion farce comedy troupe, playing jingoism on the political platform, our great reformer, W. J. Bryan, looks over Teddy's bloody battlefields and sees only the living Filipino struggling for liberty. Bryan is a far-sighted man. He sees nothing wrong at home, except that a few of the competitive forces have grown into such big fish that they are devouring the dear little competitive fishes he loves so well.

Bryan does not believe in any more rights for the laboring man. He only wants to see capital in small lots protected from capital in large gobs. Labor does not need anything but lots of work. Laboring men are slaves, and they must not think that because they are Democrats they have any right to an inheritance on earth. The earth belongs to capital—to capital in small quantities. Bryan is opposed to billionaires, but he wants quite an army of millionaires. He wants capital to stop crushing small capitalists, but he gives it full permission to grind labor at its own sweet will.

But marching beside these two fakirs who are spreading their halo of jingoism, we find Eugene V. Debs, at the head of the Social Democratic ticket, standing on a platform that promises labor all it produces. A platform that assures the laboring man that the mistake is not the Creator's, but through just such scheming politicians as Roosevelt and Bryan have the poor been robbed of their inheritance on earth.

With due veneration for all the dead who died in the cause of human liberty, and with heartfelt sympathy for all the living anywhere on this greed-cursed ball, who are struggling for liberty and justice, our candidate and our platform recognizes the cause of liberty and justice at home as the paramount issue.

How long, great God! how long will human reason become choked on chaff? How long will the humbug and the fakir grow fat on our sweat and blood and toil, while we eat the crust of accursed slavery and cheer the dealers in human flesh who lead us to the public block, like cattle, every year? Jersey Shore, Pa.

To Workingmen

Workingmen and workingwomen produce all the wealth of the world.

Up to the present age they have been robbed by a leisure class of non-producers of a greater per cent of their wealth. Chattel slave owners of ancient times took all the wealth of their slaves; less a small amount necessary to keep them alive.

Feudal landlords owned the earth and the serfs thereto attached; men thought they were free, but they were not.

Modern capitalists own the machinery—the tools of production and distribution—and the workingmen and women, depending on wages from the capitalists for working the machines they themselves invented and made, are still enslaved to a leisure class of non-producers.

Chattel slavery was abolished and free citizenship, as then understood, was established.

Feudalism has passed away and a more or less politically free citizenship has taken its place.

Wage-slavery still remains. Is there any hope of abolishing it? Read further.

The working people abolished slavery in first one country and then another; the same with kings and feudal lords. This was not done at one time, or with very great success, for they overthrew one set of rulers only to uphold another set of rulers, that is to say, of non-producers.

Capitalism cannot be overcome by removing one capitalist and upholding another. Capitalism reaches out, around the world, it unites Earl Li in China with Krupp of Germany; the czar of Russia; Carnegie, the Scotch-American nobleman and steel magnate; Vanderbilt and all other owners of the tools of production and distribution, of land and capital.

Capitalism knows no country.

Neither does Socialism.

Capitalism aims to preserve the safety of a leisure class by the slavery of the wealth producers.

Socialism aims to preserve for the workers the wealth they produce.

The leisure class has heretofore been divided; different sets of rulers were apparently opposed to each other and the wealth producers were engaged in the useless task of turning the government over from one to another—the "ins" and the "outs."

But capitalism is international, and the working class begins to see it.

Socialism has also become international and the leisure class begins to fear it.

Socialism does not deal with the "ins" and the "outs."

Socialists are not concerned in the see-saw game between Republicans and Democrats.

Socialism is against capitalism.

Socialism is in the line of evolution of progress.

Capitalism is satisfied with conditions as they are, because the leisure class that composes it is well satisfied to receive the wealth of the working class.

The leisure class has, in truth, always been united, but machine ownership by capitalists was necessary to make this union of interests among the leisure class apparent to the wealth producers.

The working class interests are opposed to capitalism the world over, and the days of chattel-slavery, serfdom, and wage-slavery, in the interests of a leisure class, are growing less as the working class understands Socialism.

The working class is justly opposed to slavery or a system that gives a greater per cent of wealth to the leisure class, and, very naturally, any change of system must come from the working class, as it always has in the past.

International capitalism would give to the leisure class all wealth, less a small amount necessary to keep the producer alive.

International Socialism would secure to the working class all the wealth it produces.

The large capitalists will vote for capitalism—for Republicanism.

The small capitalists (desiring to be large capitalists) will vote for capitalism—for Democracy.

The wealth producers should vote for Socialism.

Vote for the Social Democratic party and its candidate for president, Eugene V. Debs, who said:

"It is infinitely better to vote for freedom and fail than to vote for slavery and succeed." HORSESHOE JOE.

Says Rockefeller Is The Peer of Shakespeare, Tra La!

According to Dr. Oscar L. Triggs, professor of literature at the University of Chicago, England, Greece and Rome are by no means the only countries of the world which have produced men of genius, whose works will make them immortal.

Dr. Triggs believes that in John D. Rockefeller and George M. Pullman America has produced men who are not only the peers of Shakespeare, Homer and Dante, in creative genius, but men who are their superiors because of the more practical value of their efforts. He rejoices in the trusts which these men have labored to form, and says they are a part of the very nature of things. Politics, too, he says, will eventually be one great trust.

In a lecture to his class in American literature yesterday Prof. Triggs said: "I am tired of hearing America criticised for its lack of artistic sense and creative power. Hereafter when people ask me who among Americans have shown a really wonderful creative genius and stand out head and shoulders above other men as Shakespeare does I shall point to John D. Rockefeller and George M. Pullman.—Chicago Record.

Tammany to Feast Mr. Bryan

New York, Oct. 9.—Richard Choker has planned a love feast to signalize William J. Bryan's first visit east in the campaign of 1900. At a meeting in Tammany hall tonight it was announced that a dinner would be given to Mr. Bryan at 5 o'clock in the afternoon of Oct. 16, in the Moorish rooms of the Hoffman house. Mr. Croker will preside. The dinner pail brigade having dined out of its tin cans at an earlier hour, will not be invited.

Wastes and Profits of Competition

Wabash, Ind., Oct. 9.—The stupendous task of destroying an industry representing an outlay of $2,000,000 five years ago was begun today in the removal of the six-inch pipe line which starts in Nottingham township, Wells county, and runs westward 150 miles to the oil refineries at Momence, Ill. The abandonment of the line, which was built by Michael and John Cudahy, is said to be due to its purchase by the Standard Oil Company, to compete with which it was constructed. Through the transfer of the property the Cudahys are said to have cleared $1,000,000 each. The Kankakee refineries will be closed.

Tires of a Hopeless Fight

According to the following dispatch Monnett of Ohio, the man who raised the hopes of thoughtless radicals by his legal fights on the trusts has acknowledged his defeat by going over to Bryan. Now he wants revenge, not having deep vision enough to see the Socialists' way out of the difficulty.

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 9.—Former Attorney-General Frank S. Monnett has joined the Bryan column. Trusts are responsible for the new allegiance. Mr. Monnett for many years held office as a Republican, and during his administration as the state's legal representative he brought many suits to dissolve what he judged to be illegal combinations of capital. In none of these actions was he successful, and he was much piqued over his numerous failures.

From Humane Motives—Of Course

Chicago, Oct. 10.—Hereafter trainmen on the eastern division of the Chicago & Alton railroad will not be required to work WHEN THEY NEED REST. A. Griggs, superintendent of the division, with headquarters at Bloomington, Ill., has issued an imperative order to trainmasters, roundhouse foremen and yardmasters on the division to that effect. By his action Superintendent Griggs has launched a reform that long has been sought by trainmen everywhere, and some operating officials believe that other superintendents will spread the reform to affect the employees on the divisions in their charge.

Almost from the time that the operation of railroads in this country was begun the uncertainty of hours has been one of the most undesirable and unattractive conditions in the lives of trainmen. In these days it is not an infrequent thing for a trainman to be KEPT ON DUTY FOR TWENTY-FOUR HOURS or more, and THIRTY-FOUR and even THIRTY-SIX-HOUR "TRICKS" sometimes fall to the lot of the trainman.

Railroad officials always have realized that a trainman, employed either in yard work or in "line" work, should be alert, quick of wit and action, and, most important of all, steady and reliable, notwithstanding. Trainmen have been frequently discharged because of their refusal to respond to calls to duty WHEN THEY WERE NOT SUFFICIENTLY RESTED FROM THE EFFECTS OF A LONG "TRICK" IMMEDIATELY PREVIOUS.

He Knows What's What

"Men may come and men may go" but it is safe to wager that Prof. Triggs will go on forever. 'Cause why? 'Cause the professor knows which side his bread is buttered on, that's why. Prof. Triggs is a pedagogue at the Rockefeller university and to his class in American literature he recently said of Rockefeller:

"With their own individual intellects they have performed two herculean tasks, and today their power is felt throughout the world. Shakespeare pictured to himself a scene and put it into words; these men conceived great industries, where thousands of men might find employment in producing what millions of people need. Who shall say that their genius was less than the genius of Shakespeare? It has a far-reaching, practical influence, and in my opinion it will be just as lasting."

Verily, Prof. Triggs is the fittest to survive as a teacher of youth in an oil-endowed university. And such men as Prof. Herron, Frank Parsons, E. Benjamin Andrews, Prof. Bemis are the unfit, don't you know!

A Democratic paper sets up a pitiful whine about the Republican congressmen using their postal franking privilege to flood the country with Republican campaign literature. The pot loth to call the kettle black. As far as our observation goes, they are both at it, and at it hard, as our comrades probably know. Every voter, capitalistic or socialistic, whose address can be secured by either of the old party national committees, stands to receive from one to five of these campaign effusions a week, sent out, post free under some congressman's name. They are ostensibly extracts from speeches delivered in congress, but most of them, as a matter of fact, are out-and-out campaign stuff, blowing hot or cold on the various fake issues of the present campaign. The franking privilege accorded members of congress is a good one when used legitimately, and is in the interest of the spread of knowledge on public questions among the people. It can be used, however, and through it the capitalistic parties save enormously in the matter of postage. In our own case, the affair is different. All Social Democratic campaign mail matter is fully prepaid in the matter of postage—we get none of Uncle Sam's charity.

A Chicago university professor says truly that the trust is the product of evolution and as such is a part of the order of things. And then he adds: "It has been coming for more than a hundred years, and seems to have reached its culmination in men like Rockefeller." That the trusts will reach their culmination in men like Rockefeller is not at all unlikely. They are voracious and will as willingly swallow each other as they do the little fish. The sooner they prepare the field for collective possession the better, and when the time comes no Rockefeller will be mighty enough to stay the people's hand.

The Democrats seem to have stolen a march on our ex-S. L. P. comrades in New York. The latter chose as their campaign device a flaming torch, and the Democrats have now sent out window lithographs of Bryan and Stevenson with the self-same torch between them. As they are ruled by passion, prejudice and ignorance, a torch ought to be a dangerous thing in the hands of the Democrats. As the torch in this instance was originally devised to singe the pin feathers off of the arm with the hammer, our New York comrades can well afford to let it go and to center their attention on the real enemy, the capitalist system.

The Republican papers willingly print speeches made by Democrats before audiences limited to a few hundred people and the Democratic papers cheerfully print speeches made by Republicans at like meetings, and the capitalistic associated press takes pains to put long accounts of such meetings on the wires, but when Eugene V. Debs addresses a vast concourse of 8,000 people, as he did at St. Louis, two or three lines are sent out about it, and most of the papers throw the dispatch in the waste basket. Never was capitalism so afraid to have the people hear Social Democracy.

Sixteen speeches a day is the record of the presidential candidate of one of the capitalist parties, and those sixteen were all aimed at coaxing the workingman to vote the class he does not belong to into power. With all the jawing the workingmen are getting they are voting less and less for the plute candidates. Just wait till we force the old parties to discuss Socialism and then see the working class get its eyes open.

Here is a sample of many a letter that comes to headquarters from members of the vast army of men who "live by permission":

"Please send me instructions how to organize a local Social Democratic branch here. I can organize a branch here if the trust by whom I am now employed do not cut off my employment and force me to leave here to hunt for work. I am a Debs' man, first, last and all the time, and believe Alabama will put up an electoral ticket."

The Social Democratic movement calls for heroes and martyrs such as the writer of the above—and it is getting them!

"We are opposed to the government of ten million Filipinos without their consent," shouted the campaigner, and Mayor Jones shed a tear and led the applause. "And," continued the campaigner, with ringing voice, "we are also opposed to the government of seventy-five million Americans without their consent," and Mayor Jones hung his head.

Hearst's New York Journal and his western campaign sheet, the Chicago American, continue to brazenly and dishonestly to declare that Debs will withdraw in favor of Bryan. Thus far all efforts to make these papers call in the falsehood have been unavailing. They have no shame, no conscience that can be appealed to. They have a wide circle of readers who, to a large extent, read no other papers. Hearst is therefore in a position to do as he pleases, knowing that the fact of the falsity of his claim will hardly get to them. This being the case, it is a situation that should be met and our people must devise ways to get the truth to the voters. By passing denunciatory resolutions and forcing their local newspapers to publish them, by circulars even—by any means conceivable, in short, must this wrong be fought.

NOTES AND COMMENT

Right wrongs no man. Socialism is right.

What is an autocracy? It is a government in which one man; the autocrat, rules. Capitalism is autocracy.

The timidity of capital is consequent only upon the opportunities it can create to reduce the incomes of workingmen.

Capitalism pursues the methods of miscreants who hold up trains to increase its capital. The train may proceed if all aboard hand over their pocket-books.

A key note is the first or fundamental note in the scale, all other notes take their tone from it. What is the key note of labor in the campaign of 1900? Vote for Debs and Harriman.

The silk worm spins its task and dies. The rich get the silk for their adornment. The workingman performs his task, grows old, and fills a forgotten grave. The rich riot on the wealth he creates.

Chauncey M. Depew was long since due in England to dine with the Prince of Wales. Chauncey is never so much at home as when distending his waistbands with the menu luxuries of the British aristocracy.

Roosevelt, as a cowboy, learned how to punch and round up cattle, brand them and ship them to the shambles. In his rough-riding tour over the country he is punching and rounding up working men and trying to put his brand upon them to be counted at the polls as his steers, to be skinned by capitalism if he and McKinley are elected.

Truth forever on the scaffold,
Wrong forever on the throne,
Socialists, though often baffled,
Will yet cheer the world in every zone;
Bounded by Truth's sacred light,
With shouts of triumph for the right.

Capitalism has a cinch upon all the great industrial enterprises of the land. Like the centurion to his soldiers, it says to thousands of workingmen "go" and "they go;" to other thousands, "come," and "they cometh." It is an autocrat whose word is law, and labor must obey or starve.

A footpad may take your watch, your coat, your cash, or even your dinner pail, but he does not cut down your wages or remand you to idleness. Capitalism strips you naked, closes factory and shop and sends you forth to join the army of tramps and become a footpad yourself, if you resist its demands.

In dividing the game between the white man and the Indian, the white man said to "Poor Lo": "You take the buzzard and I'll take the turkey, or I'll take the turkey and you take the buzzard." In dividing the wealth which labor creates the capitalist says to the workingman: "You do the work and I'll take the profits, or I'll take the profits and you do the work." The Indian's reply to the white man's proposition was: "You no say turkey to me once." And the workingman replies to the capitalist: "You no say profits to me once."

Notes of the Movement

Philadelphia, Oct. 8.—A flutter of excitement went round the meeting of the delegates to the United German Trades Union yesterday, when it was announced that Eugene V. Debs, the presidential candidate of the Socialist party, will be in this city on Thursday, Oct. 25. An effort will be made today to secure the Academy of Music for that date, so that the Socialist leader can have a suitable place in which to further his campaign.

Aside from reports by the delegates of various trades, the principal business transacted was the donations of money to the Socialist campaign fund, to the Galveston sufferers, and to the textile workers in Jamestown, N. Y.

Money was voted to the Socialist campaign fund by unions as follows: Bakers, $5; Brewers, $25; German Machinists, $10; Beer Drivers, $15; Butchers, $5; Musicians, $5; Typographers, No. 1, $20. Following are the amounts of money sent to Galveston: Woodworkers, $10; Typographers, No. 1, $15. The striking textile workers of Jamestown received contributions as follows: German Machinists, $10; Upholsterers, No. 37, $5; Butchers, $5; Typographers, No. 1, $5.

Milwaukee, Oct. 10.—The Milwaukee Federated Trades Council has voted $50 to the Social Democratic campaign fund. At a recent meeting a committee of seven stanch and well-known union men was appointed to visit the meetings of the various unions of the city and to show them why it was necessary for the workingman to work actively for the Social Democratic party. Thus far the committee has met with cordial receptions and has been listened to attentively. Some idea of the keen interest in the campaign among workingmen may be had from the fact that a second lot of tickets had to be printed for the entertainment and ball which the party will give at the Freie Gemeinde Hall, Fourth street, Sunday, Oct. 21. Prof. Herron will speak Thursday, Oct. 18, at Lincoln Hall, Sixth street and Grand avenue, and a big crowd is assured. On Monday evening, Oct. 22, the big Debs' meeting will take place, the Pabst theater having been secured for the purpose. It is a large auditorium and centrally located. Our comrades have just decided to have 1,000 of the Debs' lithograph portraits posted on the billboards of the city under a guarantee from the bill posters that they will remain up until election day.

British Columbia, Oct. 8.—Wednesday, Oct. 3, was a red letter day in the history of Socialism in this province, for the first annual convention was held in the city of Vancouver of the Socialist organizations of British Columbia, together with the opening of a new hall built by the United Socialist party of Vancouver. The convention was attended by delegates from the Nanaimo Socialists and from the Canadian Socialist League of Victoria, Port Moody, Saperton, and other points. Some others sent letters of regret. Resolutions were passed calling on the Socialist organizations to join in political action, to abstain from political action in the coming Dominion election save in the Delta district where Comrade Will McClain has been nominated for parliament by the Fraser river fishermen on a strict Socialistic platform. Resolutions were also passed urging the building up of the trade union movement and the educating of trade unionists on correct economic lines. J. M. Cameron was made secretary of the central organization, and a committee of three appointed to draw up a manifesto. In the evening the hall was appropriately dedicated, with Frank Webster presiding. Ernest Burns made the dedication address and remarks were also made by J. M. Cameron, Rev. McCall, Ben Baker, Will McClain, and T. Matthews. There was great enthusiasm and the meeting closed with three cheers for the social revolution. The U. S. P. was originally formed of members of the Vancouver section of the S. L. P., who had become disgusted with the blind, intolerant bigotry and abusive propaganda of the Socialist Labor party. The methods and tactics of the U. S. P. are identical with those of the S. D. P. of America.

Chicago.—A meeting will be held at 2525 S. Halsted street, Sunday, Oct. 21, at 3 p. m. Speakers, F. G. Strickland, Peter Knickrehn, and E. Svoboda. A distinguished comrade from Germany, a member of the Bricklayers' union, will address a meeting Sunday, Oct. 28, at 714 Blue Island avenue, at 3 p. m. The other speakers will be Comrade Collins, of the Machinists' union and candidate for congress Peter Knickrehn, of the Cigarmakers' union, Comrade Kurzer, of the Amalgamated Woodworkers, Philip Brown and F. Svoboda, members of the state campaign committee. The ninth anniversary, concert and ball of the Socialist Saengerbund, will be held at Brand's hall, Clark and Erie streets, Sunday, Oct. 21, at 3 p. m.

Gossipy Dashes

New York comrades will wind up the campaign with a torchlight procession.—Comrade A. S. Edwards, of THE SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC HERALD, who is making a speaking tour through Indiana, will speak in Terre Haute, Oct. 22. Meetings at Clinton and Brazil have also been arranged. He spoke in Muncie on the 17th.—Kier Hardie and John Burns of Battersea, have been sent to Parliament by our English comrades.—Beyven, a long established Scandinavian paper, has come out for the party.—The Reveille of Butte, Montana, ought to add Gov. Steunenberg to the list of Democratic candidates it urges laboring men to vote for.—An exchange quotes a traveling man as saying that every two out of three votes cast for Debs in Indiana will come from former republicans.—The Chicago American of Sunday, Oct. 14, ran a half-page display contributed editorial from Prof. Herron, "Why I am a Socialist."—This campaign presents some woeful sights. Renegade Powderly is campaigning against the Socialists. Helen Gouger, who has tried to maintain that she was "a Socialist, too," is at the same game. And then

"It is infinitely better to vote for freedom and fail, than to vote for slavery and succeed."—Eugene V. Debs.

The legislative nominees from the first and second Wisconsin districts are Fred Luedke of Manitowoc and Henry Goeres of Kiel, respectively.—In Chicago the republicans are sending out "heart to heart" talk-wagons to the factory district. Heart to heart is good. The heart of the predatory class is a minus quantity.

The following comrades constitute the Wisconsin state campaign committee: Victor L. Berger, John Doerfler, Eugene H. Rooney, Emil Seidel, L. A. Arnold, Jacob Hunger, and Edward Ziegler.

No Social Democrat's library, however small, is complete without a copy of the Social Democracy Red Book. Order it while the edition still lasts. It contains information you can get nowhere else. Price 15 cents, this office.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

A. B.—"Merry England," with preface by Debs, can be secured at this office. The price is 10 cents. The facts you are looking for can be found in Prof. Thorold Rogers' "Six Centuries of Work and Wages." We have it on sale at 25 cents.

E. P. Hasenger, Wis.—That annoyance will be but transitory. The Democratic party has not long to live. Its following will before long disperse, some to go into the ultra capitalist Republican party and the rank and file into the ranks of militant Socialism. The Democratic party is falsely named, and ours is the task to show that this is so. Our party stands for just what its name indicates, for a society democratically administered. Any confusion as to its name on the part of the public is due to the fact that we have hitherto been too small to be correctly known by it. This campaign is settling that and hereafter the confusion will disappear. The objection to the name Socialist party is that it is not explicit, there being various kinds of socialism. It may mean Black socialism, or Christian socialism (which has no thought of the class struggle and centers its interest in profit-sharing and like palliatives—vide Kingsley, Hughes, et al.), or Utopian socialism. As our kind of socialism—scientific or modern socialism—really stands for democracy in its truest, most literal sense, we fail to see any wisdom in advocating a change of name.

J. E. C., Mo.—The comrade you refer to left the campaign to attend the congress at Paris.

Wm. J. N.—If you are skeptical about the conspiracy of silence, just try personally to get Debs' speeches over the Associated Press. The Associated Press agent in your city will do some amusing squirming if you try to personally corner him. Try it.

NATIONAL SECRETARY-TREASURER

THEODORE DEBS

No. 126 Washington Street, Chicago.

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America. The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man. As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Fifteen cents will purchase Merrile England in the German language, adapted to American needs. If you don't read German, buy one for your friends.

Don't be contented to live among anti-Socialist neighbors. Convert 'em!

Smiley's excellent pamphlet, "To What Are Trusts Leading?", sent free to any address for 5 cents.

Modern Socialism, by Chas. H. Vail, 180 pages, 25 cents, this office.

The campaign committee has a few dozen photographs, cabinet size, of Eugene V. Debs, which they are selling at 15 cents each.

Comrade Albert E. Tibbetts of Hyde Park, Mass., has been nominated as a candidate for the legislature from the Third Norfolk district.

Portions of Comrade Debs' reply to Mayor Jones got into the daily papers and furnished good warm reading for people with consciences.

The small 4-page leaflet used by the Chicago comrades is good for any part of the country; 1,000 to any address, postage paid, for 75 cents.

Comrade Jesse Cox, ex-chairman of the national executive board and Secretary Seymour Stedman are campaigning in Milwaukee and Sheboygan this week.

The national emblem of the party, adopted by the national campaign committee and printed on second page of the Herald, will be furnished to branches and committees at 25 cents, postage paid.

Comrade Julius Fix of Lincoln, Ill., is our party candidate for congress in the Seventeenth Illinois district. He is a cigarmaker, an old time worker, and a trade unionist.

Branches in the 11th Congressional District of Massachusetts are requested to elect representatives on the congressional committee and report as soon as possible to R. F. Schmidt, 35 Creighton St., Roxbury.

Members of the Social Democratic branches who are vitally interested in the cause of Socialism will not permit these present days, which are of vast importance to the cause, to pass by without paying their membership dues. This is the nearest to hand duty of every Social Democrat.

Get your friend that you are trying to convert to read The Co-Operative Commonwealth, by Lawrence Grovland. You can have it for fifty cents by sending to this office.

The Indianapolis Press has discovered that there are quite a number of Debs voters among the men in the railroad shops at Ft. Wayne, Ind.

It is of the highest importance that all branches remit at the earliest time possible, the quarterly dues for members. The prompt payment of dues is necessary to the proper carrying on of the work at headquarters.

Among the 'five-cent books,' Debs' great speech on "Liberty," his address on "Prison Labor," and Hyndman's Socialism and Slavery, can be used effectively in propaganda. This office.

Socialists willing to assist in forming new branches of the Social Democratic party are requested to communicate with the secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

The Debs leaflet, at 75 cents per thousand, charges paid, is much the best leaflet for propaganda in some localities. We should receive more orders for them. They are small, but to the point, and will make S. D. P. votes.

Howard Tuttle, candidate of our party for governor of Wisconsin, has begun a speaking tour of the state and will visit the chief centers so far as possible in the time remaining to him.

The National Committee is now prepared to furnish Leaflet No. 2, Ben Atterbury's "Letter to American Workmen," in German. The price is $1.25 per thousand. Send in your orders at once and put it out among your German friends.

The Chicago Daily News of Oct. 10, in making fun of Roosevelt and Bryan, exchanging salutations as their special trains passed by each other; printed a cartoon in which various political enemies were grouped in attitudes of mock friendliness. Among others were Debs and Depew "Swapping stories."

Comrades: Wherever our candidate speaks during the present month (see list of cities in this issue of the Herald) the local branches should have thousands of leaflets to distribute at the meetings, lithographs to display in store windows, and stickers by the thousands.

Our German comrades will do well to distribute the German translation of leaflet No. 2, Ben Atterbury's "Letter to American Workmen." Give every German voter a copy and you will much increase the German Socialist vote. The price is $1.25 a thousand. Send in your orders.

It is advisable to stamp all leaflets, etc., with the local branch address and time of meeting, in order to get more direct returns for the work of distributing them. Let the voters of your locality know of your meeting, and then provide a good speaker to explain the principles of Socialism.

The portrait of the presidential candidate gives great satisfaction. Thousands have been mailed to branches and comrades in all sections of the country. It should be seen in every community; it informs the observer, directs attention to the party and makes votes. Ten copies, 35 cents; 33 for a dollar; single copy, 10 cents; postage prepaid.

If you have your eye on a friend or fellow workman who is half a Socialist and whom you wish to make a real, full-fledged one, the best thing you can do is to get him to pay fifty cents for a year's subscription to the Social Democratic Herald. If after reading the Herald a year he is not a Socialist, it will not be your fault.

SPECIAL CAMPAIGN NUMBER NEXT WEEK

Number 10 will be a special campaign propaganda issue, and it will be a hot one. The contents will be selected as to make the paper interesting to everyone. To begin with, it will have a

SPECIAL ENGRAVED HEADING

Order it in bundles and give it out at your meetings. It will be a Socialist maker! Jump in with your orders, as time is short. The campaign will soon be over, work done now will count at the ballot box.

PRICE:—65 CENTS PER HUNDRED COPIES, IN BUNDLES

The Illinois Socialists will hold another mass meeting in Central Music Hall, Chicago, October 31. Comrade Geo. D. Herron will give one of the addresses. Every seat in the house will be sold for the uniform price of fifteen cents. The sale of seats will open at Room 64, 163 Randolph St., Saturday, October 2. Not more than twenty tickets will be sold to one person during the first day of sale.

Our speakers in Indiana have been giving the Democratic managers conipition fits. When Bryan heard last week that Comrades Oneal and Evenger had gone to the town of Linton to speak, he hurried there with his special train to try to offset the result of their visit! The probabilities are that before the close of the campaign men like Oneal and other Social Democratic speakers will have their footsteps dogged by the great Democratic candidate.

FLORIDA SOCIALISTS

E. C. Smith, Ocala, Fla., chairman of the State Executive Committee, Social Democratic Party, wants the name and address of every Socialist and sympathizer in the state.

Are you the only Socialist in your town or in your factory? The Social Democratic Herald will furnish you with the best arguments for Socialism to fire at your neighbors and friends and the members of your union. The Herald will give you Socialism up-to-date and supply you with the most telling ammunition for your arguments.

The new leaflets, Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6, are going out fast. We hope to put in another order with the printers in a week or ten days.

The No. 2 leaflet, by Ben Atterbury, to the American workingman, has run a quarter of a million in the English edition. It is an excellent vote maker and can now be supplied in German, Polish and Bohemian.

Do not save a large order until the last week of the campaign and then expect us to fill it by return mail or express. Order now.

If you want to be a good, reliable member of the Social Democratic army you should be posted on the past history of the party and the Socialist movement in this country from the early days down. Only in this way can you understand the significance and aims of the present day movement. You will find what you want in the Red Book.

The Chicago central committee passed the following resolution at its regular meeting on Wednesday, Oct. 10, 1900:

"The Chicago central committee of the Social Democratic party, recognizing devotion, ability and worth of Comrade Seymour Stedman, do hereby request and insist that he reconsider his declination of the nomination for a member of the national executive committee, and do further again nominate him for that position.

"We further express our confidence in his honesty and integrity."

PHILIP T. BROWN,
Temporary Secretary.

CAMPAIGN LEAFLETS

PUSH THEM OUT AND MAKE VOTES

No. 1—Address to Unorganized Socialists

Contains information concerning the Socialist movement in the United States, the party and its methods, object and program.

No. 2—An Open Letter to the Average American Workman

By Ben Atterbury. This is an admirable and convincing paper on the wage question, production, distribution of wealth and an appeal to the intelligence of the working class.

No. 3—Machine Production Where the Profits Go.

The argument of this leaflet is a clincher because taken from the government reports made by the Commissioner of Labor, and proves that machinery, combinations, trusts and systematized production must lead to socialism. It's the only way out.

No. 4—Toilers of America Vote for Your Freedom.

This is a remarkably effective campaign document. Written by a prominent member of the United Mine Workers, it sets forth in a convincing manner the reasons why the miners of the country, railroadmen and all other wage workers should support the Social Democratic ticket.

No. 5—Industrial Crises— Cause and Cure.

A strong appeal to the common sense of the voters, this leaflet gives the Socialist view of industrial crises and convincingly shows that Socialism is the necessary solution.

No. 6—Platform and Debs Epigrams.

This is a very attractive addition to our campaign literature; it gives the party platform complete with a collection of the very best epigrammatic sentences from the lectures of Eugene V. Debs, together with other striking contributions.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE ARE READY FOR SOCIALISM

CAPITALISM ALREADY ON THE RUN

Tremendous Meetings in Nebraska and Iowa

Progress of the Campaign

During the past week the presidential candidate of the Social Democratic party passed through the states of Nebraska, Iowa and Wisconsin, with tremendous meetings everywhere. He spoke at Omaha, Clinton, Muscatine, Davenport, Burlington, Sheboygan and Milwaukee. The size of his meetings has been a genuine surprise to the old parties, and the enthusiasm for Social Democracy all along the line has taken them off their feet. Up to time of going to press we are able to insert reports of the meetings specified below.

A Dense Crowd at Omaha

The Debs meeting at Omaha on the 16th was a bombshell in the camps of the two wings of capitalism. He held his hearers as under a spell for two hours and a half. State Organizer Edwards writes: "His appeal to American manhood fell on eager, listening ears. The absolute benefit to the cause in Omaha can hardly be measured." Some idea of the meeting may be had from brief quotations from the capitalist papers. Said the Omaha Bee: "Eugene V. Debs opened his campaign in Omaha as candidate of the Social Democratic party for president last night at Washington hall, which was crowded to the doors to hear him. The stage was filled with sympathizers and there was no room left in the gallery. Mr. Debs was introduced by Clement Ryan, chairman of the Social Democratic organization. Some 200 or 300 of the audience crowded forward to the stage to grasp Mr. Debs' hand when he finished, many of them being women and enthusiasts."

Under the caption, "Debs Talks to a Big Audience," the Omaha News prints a column report and a large cut of the speaker.

The World-Herald, a Bryanite paper, printed an eight-line report, but admitted that the meeting was a big one.

The Iowa Tour

Comrade A. W. Ricker writes: "The tour of Comrade Eugene V. Debs through Iowa has been a continuous ovation. Such crowds have seldom greeted a public speaker in Iowa as filled the seats, jammed the aisles and were turned away at the doors—and in spite of the intense opposition of the two old parties, who have seen their following among the working class slowly and surely walk away, and without a band or torchlight on our part to invite them, with one single exception. In truth, we are as much amazed as the politicians. In all the cities visited two-thirds of the audiences have been from the labor ranks, who have listened, cheered and thrown away their McKinley and Bryan buttons. At Clinton the meeting was the largest in numbers and the most intense in interest of any held by any party in years. At least 500 people were turned away. At Muscatine the largest hall in the town was packed to the doors and hundreds turned away. At Davenport the great Turner opera house, holding 1,800 people, was packed to suffocation and hundreds also turned away. At Burlington the story of the other three cities was repeated. The politicians are unnerved. Brass bands, torchlight processions, free passes on railroads and street cars, all have failed to draw the crowds that have greeted the Socialist leaders. Hundreds of voters have been converted beyond a doubt. The election will surprise and strike with consternation the old party politicians. Capitalism has waxed fat through being able to weaken labor at the ballot by dividing it. The breaking of the chains of partisanship and the coming together of the working class into one mighty class-conscious workingman's movement marks the eve of the fall of capitalist oppression."

A Crush at Clinton

"Candidate for President on the Social Democratic Ticket Draws an Immense Audience to the People's Theater," is the way a heading in the Clinton Daily Herald reads. It printed a three-column report, also noticing the remarks of Comrade Ricker and Comrade Breckon, the candidate of our party for congress.

And at Muscatine

"Stein's Hall Was Packed," reads a headline in the Muscatine Journal, and its report opened as follows:

"Last evening at Stein's hall the disciples of Socialism held forth, and a remarkably fine audience was out to hear them, the hall being packed to its utmost capacity. George A. Lloyd, who has been prominently identified with the Socialist movement in this state for some time, presided over the meeting, and the speakers of the evening were Charles L. Breckman, candidate on the Socialist ticket for congressman from this district, and Eugene V. Debs, presidential candidate."

The Muscatine News gave a column report, quoting the speaker at length and commenting on the fact of his having a greater audience than one of the old parties had the night before.

The Davenport Demonstration

Under the flaring heading, "Thousands Hear Debs at the Turner Opera House," the Davenport Republican ran a three-column report of the meeting, together with an amusing and harmless cartoon on Debs copied from the Minneapolis Tribune. "Social Democratic Candidate for President Makes a Fine Explanation of the Movement of Which He is Leader," the headlines continue, and then comes this introduction: "At 8 o'clock last evening Turner opera house was crowded with a larger audience than any political speaker, except Col. Roosevelt, has been able to attract during the present campaign. Every seat in the parquet, gallery and boxes was occupied and standing room was at a premium. The attraction was Eugene V. Debs, the Social Democratic nominee for president of the United States, who talked for nearly two hours and held the close attention of his audience during every minute of that time. The meeting was opened with a song by the German Glee club. Eugene V. Debs was introduced and was warmly greeted by the audience, which was composed of people of all parties and all classes. Mr. Debs as a man was certainly a favorite with those whom he addressed last night. As an orator, too, he did not fail to please. He is a ready speaker, undoubtedly much in earnest and a firm believer in what he had to say."

Campaign Notes

Debs' last speeches in Kansas were at Herington and Armourdale. Both were boomers.

At Sedalia, Mo., where a new branch has been recently organized, a large crowd was at the station as the train bearing Debs went through. The presidential candidate mounted a trunk and gave the crowd a five-minute speech, which evoked cheer upon cheer.

SOCIALISM IS THE ONLY OUTCOME

Editor of the Cosmopolitan Magazine's Stirring Words

By John Brisbane Walker

Very curious have been the many expressions on the subject of the trusts during the past year. A quarterly dividend of twenty millions of dollars for the Standard Oil Company, and nearly forty-two million dollars profits for one member of the steel trust—Mr. Carnegie's end of it—for one year are facts sufficiently surprising to startle even the deaf and dumb. Either of these fortunes continued at this rate would shortly gather to itself all the wealth of the United States and shortly thereafter might command that of Europe as well. It is a very simple problem in arithmetic. Nearly all sorts and conditions of men unite in declaring the danger which lies in the trusts; and the most delightful suggestions are made regarding the methods of curbing them. President Hadley of Yale suggests that the heads of these trusts are improper men, who should be socially ostracized. But this idea is evidently not fully shared by all college presidents, because in the New York "Mail and Express" we have headlines reading this way: "Brown Alumnae Dine. President Faunce Makes Address. Doctor Schutman Also Speaks; He Pays a High Tribute to Andrew Carnegie and John D. Rockefeller."

"Brains," Doctor Schurman is quoted as saying, "can make money, but money cannot make brains. One of the greatest problems of the day is presented by the inequality of wealth. I begrudge no man his twenty or thirty millions a year without considering some other things: Has he increased the wages of his employees? Is he using his wealth in a way to benefit the people? If he is, he is a benefactor. All honor to Andrew Carnegie as long as he uses his money in such fashion."

If President Hadley had in view the social ostracism of Mr. Carnegie and Mr. Rockefeller, it is quite apparent that it would be difficult to carry out the scheme without the co-operation of his distinguished collaborators in the field of education.

Other thinkers, after wrestling with this difficult problem of what will become of us if the trusts go on eating up the wealth of the country with such avidity, finally get down to the conclusion which deserves to rank with President Hadley's. "If we have publicity, the problem will be solved," they say. Yet we have publicity now. Everybody knows the actual facts; there is no dispute regarding the conditions; nothing that could be divulged could be more startling than what we now know; all are agreed, and evidently some of these gentlemen have in mind that old fable of the cat and the mice. If the cat only had a bell on her, they would be comparatively safe, they argue. Ting-a-ling, a-ling, a-ling, and everybody, they imagine, might dodge out of the way. But the trouble is that not everybody can dodge. Pretty much everybody has been hearing the ting-a-ling for quite a while now, and with no other result than that they are compelled to sit still to be presently gobbled up. This gobbling process has now got to a very interesting stage. It is now up to the millionaires.

But the gentlemen who are almost equally divided between social ostracism and publicity as a remedy for trusts, are, ostrich-like, SIMPLY POKING THEIR HEADS INTO THE SAND and kicking their heels in the air. They refuse to recognize this scientific truth, that the trusts are in the direction of good organization. Trusts are doing away with the wasteful methods that have come down to us from barbarism. It is the trend of the times; it is bringing accurate thinking and thorough organization to bear upon the great problems of production. The advantages of this process have now been so well learned that the evolution in organization can never stop. The President Hadleys and the advocates of publicity might as well fix this thing in their minds first as last. What we call the trusts are simply the latest development of organization of the methods of production. Because mankind at large has refused to study these problems of organization and a few individuals have mastered the science, those few individuals are reaping all the benefits. Four chief points present themselves, and only four:—

First. The trusts are in the direction of scientific organization of the methods of production.

Second. Nearly all the benefits of these magnificent organizations now go to a few individuals.

Third. It is contrary to the best interests of the public and dangerous to a republican form of government that these profits should continue to accumulate in such enormous percentages.

Fourth. How are we going to bring the benefits of scientific organization into the hands of the many instead of the few?

A hundred thousand of the best brains of the world are to-day engaged on this problem. Most of these brains are those of men who have begun life by believing in the system of individual competition. Therefore they turn away

NATIONAL TICKET

Social Democratic Party

For President:

EUGENE V. DEBS

For Vice-President:

JOB HARRIMAN

Inhuman Humans

The working class own nothing but their labor-power, which they must sell to the capitalist in order to live. The machine competes with the worker and reduces the number of jobs. The great number of workers bid against each other for the small number of remaining jobs, and wages go down practically to the subsistence level. It is no fault, therefore, of the worker that his wages are low, and no badge of his personal inferiority.

In Chicago the other day a wealthy cloak manufacturer gave a "heart to heart" (ugh!) talk to a theater full of the victim class—the sharp-faced, hollow-eyed toilers in the cloak and other factories, and he told them what a blessing McKinleyism was, and how it kept wages up so that the working people "shared with capital and did not have to work for foreign pauper wages." And then a poor, goaded slave in the gallery called out:

"But I only get $7 a week!"
And what was the "heart to heart" orator's reply, do you think? He said: "If you do you are probably not worth any more," and the thoughtless crowd set up a laugh, while the other $7-a-week fellows kept silent.

It was a cruel, brutal retort and it showed the real heartlessness of capitalism as exemplified in one of its beneficiaries, who probably thought himself humane.

If you will cast your eye over the national Republican campaign book you will find that the industrial workers in the prosperous western state of Iowa get on the average $6.80 a week, and in the representative eastern industrial state of Pennsylvania an average of $8.60. But these are capitalistic figures, and in compiling them the fat salaries of stock-holding presidents and of superintendents have been included. These will balance the item of child labor. So you can see that the $7-a-week Chicago man was an average worker after all, and the remark that he wasn't worth any more would apply to the average worker—man, woman and child—in this great land of the "free."

Capitalistic Buncombe

"I declare most emphatically that the interests of business-men and working-men are identical. They cannot be separated. We cannot benefit the one without conferring a corresponding benefit on the other; nor can we injure the one without injuring the other."

There is just enough truth in the above piece of republican campaign oratory to fool some workingmen. Under the present capitalistic system—a system of a master class and a servant class—the servant is affected by the fortunes of the master. The more resplendent the table of the master the more the crumbs that fall to the servants. So if you believe in a system that divides the people into a master class and a servant class, you will doubtless vote for the republican outfit. But do not forget that such a division of society is an abomination to all our ideals of brotherhood and the rights of equality in citizenship. It is your duty, not to look for crumbs like some domesticated inferior beast, but to vote out the bad system and to vote in the new system of brotherhood, of Socialism. Vote to hold your head as high as any other man, and to cut yourself off from dependence on the fortunes of any other man. To-day the capitalist class owns and controls the means of production, and only by their permission can you earn a "living." You are puffed up with the idea that you are a "free" American citizen. Why don't you vote to make yourself truly so? A ballot for Eugene V. Debs is a world-shaking kick against the present iniquitous and hellish system.

An Impending Change

This has been a campaign without issues so far as the capitalist parties are concerned. The things they trumped up as issues were puerile in the extreme. Light weight Bryan is the same old voluble, anti-anything-for votes that he has always been, and has given the Republicans a seeming walkover. The disintegration of the Democratic party is impending, and no big party will step into its shoes, for the reason that the rising Social Democracy will drive the capitalists and believers in capitalism into the ultra-capitalist (republican) party, the better to fight the young labor giant. Capitalism will be forced to close in its ranks, for to divide its forces will be to give the Socialists a clear road to Washington. From the break-up of the democratic party we will get those who are truly democratic, the reactionaries will go to the party of capitalism. Who says we are not making history?

The Dignity of a Day

"In the present campaign the brunt of the fighting will again fall upon the workingman. The fate of the nation is once more in his hands. Upon his decision may depend the prosperity and happiness of this and many future generations of Americans."

The above is out of the mouth of a Republican stump orator. Ah, if the toilers only understood the truth of it as well as the masters do! Think of it, the great class of oppressed, distressed and harassed people having it in their power to unilaterally vote away the incus. Why not do it? Is there any good reason why? Why not vote out the condition of perpetual embarrassment, of the endless worry and anxiety of existing under capitalism? Why not stand together? If we "do not hang together we will hang separately" as things are going to-day. Let us meet the occasion as becomes vigilant, thinking human beings—let us be our own true friends, and with our united strength wrench the reins of government from the clutch of the oppressing class, and make clear the pathway along which will come the co-operative commonwealth.

Mayor Jones contributes a short letter to Hearst's Chicago Nightmarer in which he says that what the starving miners need is arbitration. And Bryan also sends a letter and says the same thing. With due respect for these two campaigners for capitalism, we would modestly submit that a better thing still would be PUBLIC OWNERSHIP.

Think of the many half-starved workingmen who have applauded the political speeches of Corporation Attorney Bourke Cockran, and then say there is not plenty of work to be done by the Socialists!

Senator Beveridge says it is the trusts that are preparing opportunities for young men. This is an admission that the competitive system has outlived its usefulness.

A timely note to our comrades everywhere: Make your preparations to have watchers in all the voting places. Do not underestimate the importance of this. Do not leave the emissaries of capitalism, the fellows who have torn down our bills and destroyed our literature, to be masters of the situation. Let them know that they are watched and that to destroy a ballot is a much more serious thing than to deface a poster or a sticker.

Thus far considerably over a million pieces of campaign literature have been sent out from the headquarters of the national campaign committee. Two hundred thousand of the small Debs leaflets have been sold, 250,000 of the stickers, 400,000 each of leaflets 3, 4, 5 and 6, 350,000 of leaflet 2, of which 50,000 were in German, 30,000 in Polish and 25,000 in Bohemian.

The reports of the Paris World's Congress of Social Democrats are so meager and unsatisfactory that we must ask our readers to wait for the special report which we will shortly receive from our party's representative at the meeting, Comrade Eugene Dietzgen.

NOTES AND COMMENT

There are distinctions without a difference. What difference would it make to Socialists whether Bryan or McKinley is elected? None whatever. The rule of capitalism would proceed as at present, and workingmen would be plundered as at present. The right thing is to vote for Debs and Harriman.

"If Bryan is elected," says Mark Hanna, "the country will be ruined!" "If McKinley is elected," says Boss Croker, "the republic will be wrecked and an empire will be established upon its ruins." In either case it is from the "frying pan into the fire." Workingmen by voting for Debs and Harriman will avoid all responsibility for the calamity predicted.

The republican party has a Mark Hanna with a jimmy to crack safes and rake in all the cash he wants. The Socialist Democratic party has no Mark Hanna with a jimmy. It depends upon free-will contributions for its campaign fund.

There is one way out of the sad conditions which environ workingmen—not to back out a la crawfish; not to fight out a la strike; not to shoot out a la Christian civilization, but vote out like a courageous, independent, liberty-loving Socialist.

Would you like to behold a picture more precious than silver or gold, jeweled crowns and garnered pelf? Then go to the polls on election day and hear a Socialist freeman say, "Here is a man who owns himself."

It was Goldsmith's idea that those who think govern those who toil. When toilers think as well as toil, and vote their convictions, the new civilization which Socialists contend for will be inaugurated.

Capitalism, unlike the spider to the fly, doesn't invite the workingman into its parlor nor its dining-room, but seizes upon his wages and tells him to find consolation in his hut at the foot of the hill.

"Let well enough alone," is an old adage. But when did well enough in human affairs exist? Just now things are bad enough to satisfy Satan. To let them alone is to obey the behest of capitalism.

Socialism proposes a new civilization by the ballot. Capitalism proposes to retain and maintain the old civilization by the bullet.

Big Herron Meeting at Milwaukee.

Last Thursday evening Professor Herron addressed a big meeting at Lincoln Hall, Milwaukee, the audience being made up of radicals of various sorts and also those who went out of mere curiosity. Robert Meister presided, and a brief address was also made by J. Still Wilson, of Michigan. Prof. Herron was received with strong evidences of approval and spoke for two hours. He made many telling points. Speaking of "prosperity" of the McKinley sort, he likened society to the human body, and said that if the blood all went to the head it would not be called prosperity, but apoplexy.

How are we to settle the unequal contest between man and machine? Will the machine finally go into partnership with the laborer? Can these forces of nature finally be controlled for the benefit of her suffering children? Will these giants, these Titans, shorten or lengthen the hours of labor? Will they give leisure for the industrious, or will they make the rich richer and the poor poorer? In the days of cannibalism the strong devoured the weak—actually ate their flesh. In spite of all the laws that man has made, in spite of all advances in science, the strong, the heartless, still live on the weak, the unfortunate and the foolish. The poor man who deforms himself by toil, who labors for his wife and children through all his anxious, barren, wasted life—who goes to his grave without ever having one luxury—has been the food of the others.—Col. R. G. Ingersoll.

Texas—The initial number of the Southern Socialist, published at Blum, Texas, is a creditable production. Its motto is: "He that won't reason is a bigot; he that can't reason is a fool, and he that dare not reason is a slave." The number contains the Social Democratic platform and a well-selected miscellany. A Texas comrade writes that the capitalistic politicians are conceding the Social Democrats a vote of 20,000 in the Lone Star state.

Don't forget Prof. Herron at Central Music Hall, Chicago, October 31st. Bring a friend. An admission fee of 15 cents will be charged, which will pay for the hall and leave a snug sum over, so that no further call for money will be made on those in attendance.

Campaign Notes

Comrade Chas. E. Breckman, our candidate for congress in the Second Iowa district, is making a stirring canvass. As an old trades' unionist he is bringing the party the active support of organized labor, and his capitalist competitors are wroth to see their constituents intellectually stamped.

The battle is raging fiercely in Iowa. The Socialistic shells are bursting all along the line and the old politicians are trying frantically to check the stampede. Rally, comrades, rally!

At Topeka the old A. R. U. veterans, scarred and weather beaten with black-list persecution, were a commanding feature of the meeting, and when Debs said: "In 1894 we were clubbed, jailed and shot by the government for venturing to make a very modest request of the railroads, while in 1900 we are marching on the government, and when we take possession of that we will take care of the railroads," the roar that went up made the windows rattle and jarred the rafters.

Comrades Ricker, Lloyd and Breckman toured Iowa with Comrade Debs and took care of overflow meetings at every point. The enthusiasm everywhere is intense. Watch Iowa!

At Topeka Comrade Debs was met on the stage by a delegation of engineers and firemen, headed by Joshua A. Leach, the founder of the Brotherhood of Firemen, who initiated Debs into the brotherhood at Terre Haute twenty-five years ago. The tears glistened in the eyes of "Old Pap" Leach, as he embraced Debs and exclaimed, "My boy," and those who witnessed the touching scene will not soon forget it.

The meeting at Armourdale was the most satisfactory of those held in Kansas. It took place in the open air, and at the conclusion over a hundred, in shaking hands with Debs announced their conversion from old partyism. Among these was a family of five brothers, all Republicans.

No political meeting can be held in Kansas on Sunday, so Comrade Debs gave free lectures instead. They were straight Socialism and made many converts. At the one held at Abilene scores took off their McKinley and Bryan buttons.

Sees the Populists' End

Under an Abilene (Kan.) dateline the Kansas City Star last week published the following: "E. V. Debs made two addresses in this county yesterday, speaking at Herington in the afternoon and here last night. His lectures were upon the ethics of Socialism and made little reference to the political campaign."

"I find," he said this morning, "a very strong Socialist sentiment in Kansas. Many men tell me they are going to support the movement and I have fully realized all I expected in this state. Were we able to make the canvass in Kansas that the old parties are making, we would cast 50,000 votes. A large element is ripe for the teachings of Socialism. After the election that element of the people's party that keeps up a separate existence for the purpose of allying itself in fusion with the democracy will be dead as a door nail. It will be one thing or the other. This is the last campaign in which the people's party will cut any figure. The fight is narrowing down to capitalism and Socialism, and there is no room for a party that is neither flesh, fish nor fowl."

Our comrades in Newark, N. J., have flung to the breeze an elegant street banner, a photograph of which has been sent to this office. The banner is a large net-work affair, hangs over the middle of the street, and bears portraits of the two national candidates, together with suitable lettering. These are the things that help thwart the conspiracy of silence and which send to the toiler's consciousness the message of the coming of Social Democracy to strike down his chains.

To the hundreds of comrades who have written to headquarters for a Debs date for their city and have been disappointed, the national campaign committee would suggest, as a substitute, that they order a hundred, or a thousand, Debs and Herron speeches. The committee has had these grand opening speeches of the campaign printed in small booklet form, and offers them as the best literature of the campaign. Comrades who were willing to stand the expense of a lecture by our presidential candidate should invest the amount in these speeches at $3 per hundred, $15 per thousand.

NOTICE

The old parties got better treatment from the button factory than we did, and this accounts for the delay in the buttons. They failed to keep their contract to deliver the new buttons on the 15th, and last week, with orders from all sections to the number of 8,000, we were not able to ship a button. They are here now and they are beautiful! We can now sell either old or new patterns at the old price, 20 cents a dozen.

Comrade F. J. Hlavacek, the Bohemian organizer, has been doing great havoc in the Illinois coal region.

Farmer Socialists

The interest in Socialism on the part of the farmers is one of the surprises of the last few years. It used to be supposed that Social Democracy was a thing to interest city wage-workers only, but this notion is being summarily dispelled. The earnestness of the farmers in studying scientific Socialism has come as a surprise even to the Social Democratic agitators themselves. The Appeal to Reason, the most extensively circulated Social Democratic paper in this country (only the Youth's Companion has a larger weekly circulation), says that a large fraction of its readers are farmers, and we are gratified to state that a large number of our branches are made up of the same class. And it is no wonder that the farmers are waking up to their peril when it is understood that less than half of the farmers of the United States actually own their own farms.

It used to be supposed that the farmers' great enemy was the bonanza farm, but now there is a wakening up to the fact that the farmer is exploited more directly through the transportation companies. Instead of working for himself, the farmer really works for the greedy railways and the other highwaymen of commerce. He is at their mercy. He cannot get to market except under the conditions they are pleased to lay down. The government statistics show that, while the farmers as a class are not being decimated in number, they are being ground down to most miserable poverty. Between the railroads and the money-lenders, the farmers have been squeezed most viciously, and the world-wide gambling in food-stuffs, the tampering with national conditions by wheat and other corners, have all sooner or later come down upon his unprotected shoulders with the full ferocity of a wolfish civilization. To keep his head above water is the great daily worry with the tenant of the farm. The amount of hired farm help is decreasing, and the farmer himself and his family are doing the work. They are workers and have at least the same interests as the workers of the cities. Capitalism, as has been said, exploits the farmer terribly, it having absolute control not only of the means whereby he gets his crops to market, but of the fixing of the prices of the crops.

According to the government census of 1890, the average income of the American farmer was $540 a year, with an average of five mouths to be fed in his family. Now notice how close this is to the average income of a city wage-worker, who gets $440, as shown also by the census. In this latter figure is included the wages of child labor, so that the probability is that the farmer and the city worker fare about alike. There are 2,512,604 farm families who live on farms they have not a clear title to—over half the entire number of farm families. There are over 2,000,000 tenant farmers in the country. And those who have mortgaged farms or crops are worse off than those who are mere tenants. They may be able to pay off the mortgage, but it takes all they have and they must immediately open up accounts under a mortgage for the next year.

No scheme of finance, tariff or taxation can better the farmers. They must join with their brothers in distress in the cities to fight for Socialism.

Startles the Conservatives

Prof. Albion W. Small, of the Chicago University, uttered a truth last week that must sound ominous to the hosts of capitalism. With the dignity that pertains to the office of college instructor, and in plain, dispassionate language, he gave it out cold that Socialism was to be the issue of the immediate future, willy-nilly. The following from a daily paper tells the tale:

"Prof. Albion W. Small head of the sociological department at the University of Chicago, told the members of his classes yesterday that in subsequent political campaigns the issues will be questions having a sociological and social bearing. 'In 1904,' Professor Small said, 'socialism will be the issue of the national election.'

"If it happens that there shall be a time of business depression between the election next November and the election four years later Socialists will make a strong bid to the people for their votes. Socialism will take a more conspicuous part in politics the longer you live. So far Americans have not been called upon to settle questions of this kind, as have the English and the Belgians. Nevertheless social problems are bound to take the place of the questions on which issues are now based."

Professor Small is one of the leading sociologists of the country and is editor of the Journal of Sociology. He has long been one of the most fearless of college professors in the matter of the social problems, and seems thus far to have successfully braved the Rockefeller censorship. He claims to be a republican.

Comrade Edwards is having big meetings in Indiana. Particulars next week.

The Cook County, Illinois, ticket will appear next week.

TRAVELING MEN ARE IN THE SOUP

Overtaken by the Brutal Might of the Competitive System they Go Down Like Bees in the Shambles

COME TO SOCIAL DEMOCRACY

Drummers for the Wholesale Grocers Make Profits for their Employer and End
The Year in Debt

No class of workers has been struck harder by the recent development of commercialism than the traveling men. The old-time jolly drummer, dressed faultlessly, putting up at the best hotels, and liberal in his expense account, is a thing of the past. His was a sort of specialized, skilled work, for which he had fitted himself by years of experience, and he was worth a good deal of money to his house, and if his house did not appreciate him, there were other houses ready and anxious to get his services. In other fields of toil, the workers were more and more getting the worst of it, but the drummer never gave this a thought, for he felt himself secure beyond peradventure. In the factories and mills and mines, perfected machinery produced an overplus of workers and they had to underbid each other for the number of jobs that remained. In the great mills, machines were introduced that could be run just as well by women, and, later on, by children. Homes were desolated, men and women were brutalized and made reckless even unto suicide, but the drummer did not allow this to worry him; nay, more! it was quite probable that his sympathies were with the capitalists when the poor wretches struck against degrading conditions. On the political field the drummer was either a whooping republican or a hurrahing democrat. He said that only lazy people could not succeed in this great land of the free and that if there were any real justification in the murmurings of the toilers it lay in the fact of "too many foreigners coming here"—in very few instances seeing down deep enough to realize the true cause of their misery: the exploitation under the capitalistic wage system.

But the drummer finally found himself in the plight of the boy who stood by grinning when his companions were attacked by bees. Something suddenly struck him, and struck him hard. And then our friend the drummer found himself in the same boat as the toilers of mill and factory.

The concentration of business under fewer heads, the driving out of the smaller concerns under the remorseless law of competition, the more economical organization of the great business interests soon brought about a condition under which one traveling man could do the work formerly done by the competing many. The many thrown out of work soon discovered that while they were valuable men in their life-long calling, they were misfits and incompetents where they tried to invade new fields. Wherever they turned they found seekers after employment ahead of them, and they began to think there were too many men in the world. Then there was naturally a turning back to the old field and a desperate scramble to get at the few remaining jobs. As always, capitalism saw its advantage, and down went the drummers' wages.

And this is the condition of things to-day. It is no wonder that the more clear-headed drummers (those who still have employment, and those who have not), are turning to Social Democracy as the only hope of humanity. They can see now the trend of things, the inevitable and unchangeable law, and the only possible salvation. Many of their brothers, it is true, have gone wildly into the trust-smashing camps and have grasped at the first reactionary scheme of wily politicians that has come to their notice, but even they, after they get a dose of experience, will get in line for the co-operative commonwealth.

But let us give a concrete case, to give point to the above. Let us take, for instance, the drummers for the big grocery houses, men who were formerly among the best paid and valuable of traveling men. To-day, almost without exception, they are lucky to eke out a bare living. Under the new conditions they are paid at the rate of 4 per cent on their sales, and an extra good man who can sell from $70,000 to $80,000 worth of goods would therefore appear to make about $3,000 per annum; but this is not the case. Out of that $3,000 he has to pay his expenses, which amount to about $1,800 a year, which means that his income is not over $1,200, where it used to be from $1,800 to $2,000.

Now, mind you, the above pertains only to the privileged few, the pink of the profession, who are able to make big sales. The majority sell much less than the amount given above. They do well if their yearly sales reach $40,000 or $50,000, so that, at the 4 per cent rate, we see that they make SCARCELY A PENNY OVER THEIR TRAVELING EXPENSES. Some may make a trifle over, but surely not enough to support a family on! There you see where men land under the competitive system.

And the wholesale grocer is careful to manage so that he does not lose anything. He makes it a rule to demand a deposit of at least $1,000 from every traveling man he sends out, and he takes from this anything the drummer uses while on the road, either for himself or for his family. In most cases, the fact is that the deposit is used up before the year has passed, and the traveling man, WHO HAS MADE PROFITS FOR HIS EMPLOYER, BECOMES HIMSELF A PAUPER, or the next thing to it, AND HAS TO QUIT.

Frederic Heath.

Socialism Is The Only Outcome

now from any true solution of the difficulty. They exchange such valuable suggestions as those regarding social ostracism and publicity. Why? Because they do not wish to see the figure of governmental co-operation, which looms up as the only barrier to individual accumulation.

A man whose father was one of the great operators of Wall street, who controlled so many millions that he was able to wreck or make the great business enterprises, said to the writer recently at a dinner that all investment was becoming doubtful; he did not know where to put a dollar. All classes of enterprises were so largely at the disposal of manipulation in the street, one day depressed far below par and the next raised far above, always with a like purpose, the one of serving individual interests, that investment in securities quoted on the street had become a lottery. It was in the power of four or five men, by manipulation of the stock or by starting a parallel enterprise, or by any other of the numerous methods so well known, to make or break literally anything or anybody. Here were the methods of the father being applied to the son's disadvantage. Greater whales had appeared in the seas which were capable of swallowing the sharks; the sharks were in jeopardy.

No well-informed man in the business world of to-day but believes that with two or three hundred millions at his disposal, a brain as able as some of those now in active careers may in turn attack and crush one leading business interest after another until even the millionaires may be swept from the field and practically all the wealth of the country concentrated in one great corporation.

It is lucky that the first man to perfect a science of business organization should also be a man whose impulses carry him in the direction of education. The same means that build great universities might just as deftly merge the republic into a monarchy. Any one who is at all on the inside of affairs in New York has hourly proof of the endless influence which money exercises over politicians, the press, educational institutions, and even the ministry itself. A hundred thousand apologists of no mean intellectual capacity are always at the beck and call of a hundred millions of dollars, together with a less army of viler minds who stand ready to tear down the best and noblest if by so doing they can earn a fee.

Here we are then.

Eighty millions of people under a form of government which may be denominated a republic tempered by the use of money at the polls, up against the question of the distribution of wealth. Let it go on upon present lines, and in ten years more not all the intelligence of the nation can provide a remedy. AND IS THERE ANY REMEDY TO-DAY? ONE ONLY—GOVERNMENTAL OWNER-SHIP. Buy out these great interests; pay them a fair price—an extravagant price if need be, but buy them and turn them into the hands of the people to manage FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL.

Ah! the people! I hear you say that they are crude and stupid and corrupt and will not manage well. Perhaps. Undoubtedly the management of many will never equal in economy of management the management of one brain. But then, economy is not the sole purpose; and if it costs more to manage, let us bear in mind that this additional cost will be represented by salaries of the many.

We have no civil service capable of administering such things? I grant you. We have never had occasion for a civil service. Our postal affairs and our collections of customs dues are comparatively unimportant. A little better or a little worse does not concern the average man. He would scarcely cross the street to help better the civil service. But if the street-cars were under the control of the civil service, if the great transportation com-

TRAGEDY OF THE ECONOMIC PROBLEM

Quotations from Rev. George D. Herron's "Between Caesar and Jesus":
We live near the culmination of a social system.

The social crisis discloses conscience and civilization becoming separate entities. Civilization no longer represents the conscience of the individuals who must find therein their work. The facts and forces which now organize industry and so-called justice violate the best instincts of mankind. Civilization affords no industrial machinery by which the Christ-spirit can express itself in things. This best force in society is helpless to effectuate itself in facts.

In fine, civilization denies to man that highest of all rights—the right to live a guiltless life, the right to do right. It is only the densest ethical ignorance that talks about a "Christian business" life, for business is now intrinsically evil, whatever good may come out of it. Whoever says that a man can live the Christian life, while at the same time successfully participating in the present order of things, is either profound in the lack of knowledge, or else he deliberately lies.

Only by a sort of terrible daily denial of his spiritual self, a crucifixion of the principles by which he longs to organize his life, can a man wrest a stained and insecure livelihood from this terrible war for bread which we call "industry." This forcible appropriation of the resources of the people and of the products of their toil we are taught to view as the development of industry; while people starve in a world of abundance because, as Edward Bellamy says, too much is produced. In a competitive society, with its natural monopoly of opportunity and power by the strong; with its desolating conquests of sheer economic might, a complete ethical life is impossible to the weak and strong alike.

Only in a subjective and inadequate sense, and that through collision and suffering, can a man even try to follow Christ in the present system.

There must be a new social machinery in order that love and conscience may organize the world for the common good of all. It does not lie in the nature of things that righteousness should be pursued and achieved only through tragedy. There is no individual redemption from a social system; only a social redemption will free each individual at last. Society can be healthy only in the health of the whole body. The church that stands for a mere saving and culture of the individual soul is the abode of the lost, and not an ark of safety. Private property in righteousness is the worst form of private property.

panies having in charge the safety of his person and the prompt delivery of his freight were in charge of the civil service, how quickly the public interest would be aroused. Then we should have a civil service in reality.

I challenge any reasoning mind taking up this subject without regard to past prejudices to arrive at any other goal than public ownership. "Social ostracism," "publicity"—they are the FEEBLE CRIES OF CHILDREN. Let us brace up and look the situation fully in the face. Either it must continue, and it is every moment growing more like an avalanche, or it must end in public ownership.

Notes of The Movement

Chicago—Social Democrats of this city have a fad. They call it Sticker parties, and they have more fun than a barrel of monkeys and do some pretty tall campaigning at the same time. Night after night parties of our comrades, both boys and girls, sally forth with their pockets full of Debs stickers and nothing escapes them. Windows, telegraph poles, railings, lamp posts and what not. The approaches to the elevated railroads are almost white with the bits of propaganda paper, and they have given the old parties a genuine fright. They begin to realize that Socialism must be reckoned with. Nor do the stickers give undue indications of strength. The Debs sentiment is growing amazingly. A month ago the street campaign button men had no use for Debs buttons; now there is a local Debs button famine because of their anxiety to stock up with them. One man, for instance, who came into the office of The Herald last week, said he had over 250 calls for Debs buttons in two days. He wanted twenty dozen, but had to be temporarily disappointed. A speaking campaign of unprecedented magnitude is being carried on all over the city. Over twenty-five meetings are held each evening, and street meetings without number on all evenings and Sunday afternoons. Some of the campaigners who are at work are: J. Stitt Wilson, Seymour Stedman, Walter Thomas Mills, George Koop, Geo. Evans, J. B. Smiley, Jesse Cox, Philip Brown, F. Svoboda, Chas. Soelke, W. C. Horgan, Jacob Winnen, F. C. Strickland, Peter Knickrehn, James Wright and—but it would make a long list to give them all. You can look for a big Debs vote in Chicago.

Wisconsin—Racine comrades have been doing effective work by asking old party speakers what they think of Socialism. Their replies have been funny, and the audiences have rather relished the interruptions. Milwaukee is doing a good speaking campaign. Besides our candidate for governor, Howard Tuttle, we have had J. Stitt Wilson from Michigan, Prof. Herron, Dr. Berger, Emil Seidel, Thos. C. P. Myers, Richard Elsner, Carl Malewsky, Victor L. Berger, Robert Meister and others. Howard Tuttle held a big meeting at Two Rivers last week. Two Rivers is the home town of Comrade Dicke, our candidate for lieutenant-governor, and his fellow townsmen showed their appreciation of his worth by their greeting as he appeared at the meeting. The Milwaukee Federated Trades Council has voted to attend the Debs meeting in a body.

Massachusetts.—A pamphlet has been issued for distribution to voters in Hanson, Hanover and Rockland, in the interests of the candidature of Comrade McCartney, who has so faithfully served the people of those places during his term in the Massachusetts legislature. It gives a list of the bills introduced by him and also several really surprising excerpts from Boston and other papers showing the power for the people wielded by him in the halls of state legislation, with an introduction by Comrades Inkley and Holmes, respectively the president and secretary of Branch 20,

S. D. P. There is also a card from Comrade McCartney in which he "hopes that this new method of rendering an account to the people will meet with approval." The hearts of all true Social Democrats go out to the Massachusetts comrades in their bright prospects of again placing in the state house so wholesome a personality as Comrade McCartney, and such a true socialist.

Michigan.—The Rev. C. A. Varnum was recently required by the Methodist Michigan Conference to withdraw from his candidacy for judge of probate of Calhoun County on the Social Democratic ticket, although other Methodist preachers were candidates on other tickets. Being threatened with removal if he refused to withdraw, and knowing that with millions of workers in other fields he was dependent upon the powers that be for his daily bread, he complied. He was not thereby converted from Socialism, and it is a gratifying fact that through this partisan action the cause of Socialism has received larger attention than it had before in that portion of the state.

"It is infinitely better to vote for freedom and fail, than to vote for slavery and succeed."—Eugene V. Debs.

NATIONAL SECRETARY-TREASURER

THEODORE DEBS
No. 126 Washington Street, Chicago.

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission, to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man. As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—A reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

NATIONAL PAPER OF THE PARTY:

The Social Democratic Herald
50 CENTS A YEAR.
126 Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

HEADQUARTERS: 126 WASHINGTON ST., CHICAGO

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Fifteen cents will purchase Merrie England in the German language, adapted to American needs. If you don't read German, buy one for your friends.

Smiley's excellent pamphlet, "To What Are Trusts Leading?", sent free to any address for 5 cents.

Modern Socialism, by Chas. H. Vail, 180 pages, 25 cents, this office.

We have received a small lot of the Social Democratic red buttons gotten up by comrades in Milwaukee which will sell at the rate of two for 5 cents until they are gone. In the past we have had numerous calls for them. They have a field of white and the letters, "Social Democratic Party," are of white with the flag as a background. They are pretty and artistic.

The campaign committee has a few dozen photographs, cabinet size, of Eugene V. Debs, which they are selling at 15 cents each.

The small 4-page leaflet used by the Chicago comrades is good for any part of the country; 1,000 to any address, postage paid, for 75 cents.

A new lot of superb campaign buttons have been received at headquarters. They comprise the presidential candidate singly or the two candidates together. They are the same price as the old ones, two for 5 cents, or 20 cents a dozen.

The national emblem of the party, adopted by the national campaign committee and printed on second page of the Herald, will be furnished to branches and committees at 25 cents, postage paid.

Comrade Edwards held his first meeting in Indiana at Kokomo, speaking to 300 people at a street meeting. A local paper said of him: "Mr. Edwards is a fluent and at times an eloquent speaker and is evidently a gentleman of wide reading and high intelligence."

Members of the Social Democratic branches who are vitally interested in the cause of Socialism will not permit these present days, which are of vast importance to the cause, to pass by without paying their membership dues. This is the nearest to hand duty of every Social Democrat.

The Debs-Herron pamphlet is positively the finest propaganda literature ever gotten out in this country. They are 5 cents each, or $2 by the hundred. They will be just as good after election as before.

The National Committee is now prepared to furnish Leaflet No. 2, Ben Atterbury's "Letter to American Workmen," in German. The price is $1.25 per thousand. Send in your orders at once and put it out among your German friends.

The Illinois comrades have done great execution with the stickers. They lick them and slap them into place and then hit them a blow with a newspaper formed into a spat. Thus treated they stick like grim death.

Socialists willing to assist in forming new branches of the Social Democratic party are requested to communicate with the secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

Get your friend that you are trying to convert to read The Co-Operative Commonwealth, by Lawrence Grovland. You can have it for fifty cents by sending to this office.

It is of the highest importance that all branches remit at the earliest time possible, the quarterly dues for members. The prompt payment of dues is necessary to the proper carrying on of the work at headquarters.

Among the five-cent books, Debs' great speech on "Liberty," his address on "Prison Labor," and Hyndman's Socialism and Slavery, can be used effectively in propaganda. This office.

Now is the time to subscribe to the Social Democratic Herald and get the campaign news of the party. You may be sure this news will not appear in the capitalist papers. The Socialist vote in many places will be suppressed in the press reports, and will only reach us through our comrades. Every man who votes for Debs will be interested to know how many voted the same way, and only the Socialist press will tell him. Subscribe for the Social Democratic Herald; 50 cents a year, 25 cents for six months.

Comrades: Wherever our candidate speaks during the present month (see list of cities in this issue of the Herald) the local branches should have thousands of leaflets to distribute at the meetings, lithographs to display in store windows, and stickers by the thousands.

Do not be merely an approving bystander. Get into the fight and bear your share of the burdens. Capitalism will not be conquered by half-heartedness.

Our German comrades will do well to distribute the German translation of leaflet No. 2, Ben Atterbury's "Letter to American Workmen." Give every German voter a copy and you will much increase the German Socialist vote. The price is $1.25 a thousand. Send in your orders.

It is advisable to stamp all leaflets, etc., with the local branch address and time of meeting, in order to get more direct returns for the work of distributing them. Let the voters of your locality know of your meeting, and then provide a good speaker to explain the principles of Socialism.

The portrait of the presidential candidate gives great satisfaction. Thousands have been mailed to branches and comrades in all sections of the country. It should be seen in every community; it informs the observer, directs attention to the party and makes votes. Ten copies, 35 cents; 33 for a dollar; single copy, 10 cents; postage prepaid.

Questions

Have you contributed to the national campaign fund?
Have you stuck up 500 stickers—at 50 cents?
Have you formed a new local branch?
Have you increased the membership of your branch?
Have you made a Socialist of your neighbor, your employee, your employer, your grocer, or your landlord?
Have you ordered and distributed a thousand leaflets?
Have you done all you can for the campaign and Socialism?

STICK UP THE STICKERS MAKE THE FACT STICK

That Socialism is Here to Stick
STICKERS NOW READY

They are two inches square, and a capital thing for Propaganda because they can be used in a hundred ways.

Sent only in packages of 500 or more. Price of 500, by mail, 50 cents.

Address, CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE,

Notice to Texas Comrades

It will be only about one week until we will begin the work of printing the election tickets for the Social Democratic party of this state. Every Socialist should take an interest in this matter and assist us in the distribution of the tickets, that we may poll our full strength in Texas. The tickets will be ready for distribution by Oct. 25; in time to get them well distributed before election day. Let us hear from you, and send a little help.

CAMPAIGN LEAFLETS

PUSH THEM OUT AND MAKE VOTES

No. 1—Address to Unorganized Socialists

Contains information concerning the Socialist movement in the United States, the party and its methods, object and program.

No. 2—An Open Letter to the Average American Workman

By Ben Atterbury. This is an admirable and convincing paper on the wage question, production, distribution of wealth and an appeal to the intelligence of the working class.

No. 3—Machine Production Where the Profits Go.

The argument of this leaflet is a clincher because taken from the government reports made by the Commissioner of Labor, and proves that machinery, combinations, trusts and systematized production must lead to socialism. It's the only way out.

No. 4—Toilers of America Vote for Your Freedom.

This is a remarkably effective campaign document. Written by a prominent member of the United Mine Workers, it sets forth in a convincing manner the reasons why the miners of the country, railroadmen and all other wage workers should support the Social Democratic ticket.

No. 5—Industrial Crises—Cause and Cure.

A strong appeal to the common sense of the voters, this leaflet gives the Socialist view of industrial crises and convincingly shows that Socialism is the necessary solution.

No. 6—Platform and Debs Epigrams.

This is a very attractive addition to our campaign literature; it gives the party platform complete with a collection of the very best epigrammatic sentences from the lectures of Eugene V. Debs, together with other striking contributions.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC HERALD

THIRD YEAR. No. 20.

CHICAGO, ILL., U.S.A., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1900.

Whole No. 122.

Surging Onward, Upward, Forward!!

During the week preceding the time of going to press with this issue of The Herald, Eugene V. Debs, candidate for president of the Social Democratic party, continued his remarkable speaking tour from Iowa into Wisconsin, holding monster meetings at Sheboygan and Milwaukee, going thence to Cleveland, to Wheeling, to Philadelphia, to Trenton, and up into Massachusetts, with his last speech of the week at Whitman and Brockton. At all these points vast crowds of people surged against each other for the opportunity of hearing the truths of Socialism from the lips of its gifted presidential nominee. The marvelous success of the tour continues to worry the old party politicians, and surprise even the Social Democrats themselves. From Massachusetts Comrade Debs will visit New York, Hartford, Rockville, Rochester, Toledo, Evansville, Linton and then close the campaign at Terre Haute, his home city, on Nov. 5, where the comrades are preparing for a monster celebration.

A Crush at Sheboygan

The meeting at Born's hall, Sheboygan, on Sunday evening was like unto those held in the Iowa cities, a monster affair, and an eye-opener to the capitalists. Addresses were also made by National Committeeman Seymour Stedman and Howard Tuttle of Milwaukee, candidate for governor of Wisconsin, who took care of the overflow meetings as well. The labor bodies were present at the meeting, and delegations from outlying towns and Socialist strongholds were also on hand. The enthusiasm was intense and the applause incessant.

Milwaukee's Record Breaker

Never in the history of the labor movement in Milwaukee was there such a monster outpouring of people to hear the cause of the dispossessed espoused as that of Monday night at the Pabst theater. The large playhouse was full to bursting by 7 o'clock, while outside a surging multitude struggled to reach the doors. Prior to this the delegates of the Federated Trades council met at their hall, Sixth and Chestnut streets, and marched down to the theater in a body, 237 men by actual newspaper count. They occupied seats on the stage and in the orchestra chairs, and later, through their organizer, Comrade Louis S. Wieman of the Cigarmakers' union, presented Comrade Debs with a big bunch of American beauty roses amid tumultuous applause. National Committeeman Victor L. Berger presided and introduced Comrade Debs as "the pathfinder of Socialism in America; the Fremont of the Social Democratic party." When Comrade Debs was finally able to speak, he thanked those present for their good will and then paid a pretty tribute to the chairman of the evening, Comrade Berger, from whom, he said, he had taken his first lessons in Socialism. He it was "who had made him see new light and filled his almost despairing soul with new ideals and new hope." He was pleased to make public announcement of this in Mr. Berger's home city. Comrade Debs then spoke for two hours, the vast audience being swayed between the greatest quiet and the most enthusiastic huzzas.

The Daily News, in a three-column account, said:

"The ovation tendered Mr. Debs last evening was a notable event. There are 2,400 seats in the theater. There were nearly 4,000 people in the hall at 8 o'clock. Hundreds were turned away and the overflow was caught and held by George Koop, a Chicago Socialist, who delivered an address in the street.

Debs was greeted by tremendous applause. Three times the uproar was renewed before the speaker was permitted to speak.

Mr. Debs talked for two hours, and the manner in which he held and swayed the vast audience was marvelous. While he arraigned the democratic and republican parties, his statements were clean, though penetrative. Throughout the address Mr. Debs attacked a principle and not individuals. Today, Mr. Debs said, the cheapest commodity on this earth is human flesh and blood,

Campaign's Close Marked by an Enthusiasm Paralleling Abolitionist Days.—Monster Audiences Greet Eugene V. Debs Everywhere.—Now for the Vote but there is a star of hope in the horizon of the future, and it has come to the vision of those who will follow it to better things."

The Journal gave three columns of verbatim extracts from the address, and the Sentinel, the morning republican organ, gave a very good two-column report. The speech was the talk of the down-town streets next day, and the Social Democrats felt a foot higher in stature because of it.

A Jam at Cleveland

The Cleveland meeting was held in the Academy of Music, with an attendance of 3,000 and the usual overflow, notwithstanding that the democrats rushed Mayor Jones upon the scene for a meeting with which to try to counteract the effect. Says the report in the Cleveland Leader:

"M. S. Hayes, the Socialist candidate for congress in the Twentieth congressional district, presided, and in the audience could be recognized every known Socialist in Cleveland. On the stage with the speaker sat Robert Bandlow and Harry Thomas, veterans in the party, and beside them their newest convert, David Rankin, formerly a trusted lieutenant in the local Bryanite camp.

"Mr. Debs touched upon nearly all the issues between the two old parties, but only to ridicule them. He was especially merciless on what he called the 'purified democracy,' always with a sarcastic drawl upon the 'purified.' He referred to the so-called imperialism as the 'greatest of all humbugs,' and to the Bryanite anti-trust agitation as a 'sham issue intended to catch votes.' To 'Dick' Croker he referred as the dominant spirit in the 'purified democracy,' and he spoke of Bourke Cockran as the 'trust attorney with all the power of his purchased eloquence.'

"The democrats cannot smash the trusts," said Mr. Debs, "but they would not if they could. Four years ago, during the campaign Croker was in Europe. This year he is the dominant spirit in the 'purified' democracy. Four years ago Dave Hill never opened his mouth during the campaign. This year he is making speeches for Bryan. Four years ago Bourke Cockran would have nothing to do with democracy. This year he is one of the party's chief orators. Edward M. Shepherd is this year one of the chief apostles of the party. And who are these men? Croker and Shepherd are trust magnates, and Cockran and Hill are trust attorneys. Do you suppose they would work for Bryan if they considered him at all dangerous to the trusts?"

Wheeling Capitulates

The Wheeling Register said of the Wheeling meeting:

"Eugene V. Debs, candidate for President on the Socialist Democratic ticket, addressed a mass meeting composed chiefly of laboring men in the auditorium of the Arion Clubhouse last night. The meeting was worked up by the Wheeling branch of the Social Democrats evidently to good advantage, for when he began his address the house, both on the floor and in the gallery, was crowded to the doors. Mr. Debs held the audience during the two hours and fifteen minutes he spoke almost breathless. At every point in his discourse where the speaker wished, he almost brought his auditors to their feet. There was not the least sign of disorder, so that not one word of the speaker was lost on any one in the audience."

The tremendous ovation accorded Comrade Debs at Wheeling gave the old party papers no little concern and they rushed out with editorials full of advice to the dear working man, the sum of which advice was to fight shy of Socialism. But the comrades there are only amused and are using the great interest created by the Debs meeting to draw into the ranks the rank and file of the army of toil.

Monster Meeting at Philadelphia

And then came the great meeting at Philadelphia. Never was there anything like it in the history of Socialism in the Keystone State. The capitalistic papers were all forced to remark on the great crowd and the numbers turned away. "A monster demonstration," said the Philadelphia Call. "The attendance was unexpectedly large, even to the officers of the meeting," admits the Public Ledger, and it added: "No audience ever listened with closer attention or warmer sympathy." "For an hour before the opening of the meeting the people poured into the great auditorium," says the Times.

day. In his speech Comrade Debs predicted a panic, no matter whether McKinley or Bryan occupied the White House. This was sent out over the country by the Associated Press, contrary to its usual rule.

Trenton Tumbles

Comrade Debs' meeting at Trenton set the whole town agog. The newspapers couldn't ignore so big a meeting, and some of their editorials were funny in the extreme. Association hall held the usual Debs meeting crush and there was the usual breathless interest for two full hours. At the close of the address people jumped to their feet and cheered, and among those who pressed forward to grasp the candidate's hand were many former hard-shelled republicans and democrats, who proclaimed their conversion.

An' there's 'Gene Debs—a man 'at stan's An' jest holds out in his two hands

As warm a heart as ever beat Betwixt here an' the judgment seat. —James Whitcomb Riley.

DEBS' FINAL WORD

Comrades and Fellow Workingmen:

By your unanimous vote of confidence I was designated as one of the standard bearers of the Social Democratic party in the political campaign now in progress throughout the country.

The responsibilities of the position are appreciated in no small degree, and I am doing all that lies in my power to achieve success for the party.

The vast assemblages of people we are daily addressing bear eloquent testimony, not only to the righteousness of the principles of Socialism, but demonstrate beyond cavil that wisdom, truth and justice were in holy alliance when the Social Democratic party was organized and sent forth on its class-conscious mission.

But we cannot be in a hundred, nor even in two places at the same time, nor are we able to respond to one in twenty of the calls made upon us, and this must be my apology, if one is required, for resorting to this method of addressing the many thousands I cannot otherwise reach.

The thronging multitudes of earnest men and women who press to the meetings held under the auspices of the Social Democratic party and the inspiring and tumultuous applause which greets the announcement of its principles, bears trumpet-toned appreciation of the cause in which we are engaged and of its ultimate triumph.

Comrades, there is a mighty wave of thought, of intense interest sweeping over the country. Workingmen and women, everywhere in our broad land, are aroused as never before to the woeful condition of the working class in the capitalist system. They have tried the Republican and Democratic parties again and again with the same results. They are beginning to realize that they are but two sections of the same party of the capitalist class, two wings of the same unclean capitalist bird, and that what is required is a change—not merely of parties, but of systems, and hence they are coming to the Social Democratic party, which stands committed to abolish wage slavery by making common property of all the means of wealth production.

A wide field of observation enables me to say that the outlook for our party is inspiring and that, all things considered, it could scarcely be more hopeful or animating.

The Social Democratic party in its youth is developing the stature of a giant. It has torn off its swaddling garments and with startling strides of self-contained strength already menaces the reign and rule of capitalism and the two old parties which do its bidding like trained monkeys in a circus ring. It has created consternation in their ranks, and as they see the pedestaled gods of crime which they worship with pagan devotion tumbled down by the iconoclastic attacks of the Social Democratic party, they know their doom is sealed.

If but yesterday the light of the Social Democratic party flashed upon the country was that of the glow worm in the meadow, it is to-day as effulgent as that of a fixed star in the realm of political activity.

Comrades, a vote cast for the Social Democratic party in this campaign is to be, by the fiat of history, a landmark—aye, a minor mark—better still, an emancipation mark in the onward and upward march of Socialism, of the working class, until they reach the highlands of that rightful freedom where a man owns himself, works for himself, and enjoys all the fruits of that liberty that knows no master, where fetters of the mind and shackles of the body disappear and he stands free and disenthralled by the overmastering power of the genius of Socialism.

Comrades, the battle is on. The serried hosts of capitalism confront us on every hand. They are as numerous as the sands and have money beyond the dreams of avarice. They ride in special trains provided with all the appliances of luxury and repose that plundered wealth can provide. They flash their shining blades in the faces of the working class upon which are engraved the texts from the sacred Koran of capitalism, and the wires flash the exultant boast, "We have smiled upon the working class and they are ours."

Comrades, now is the time for men to do and dare. Now is the time for the workingman to show that he is the equal of the capitalist. Are we ready for the fray? Is our courage equal to our conviction?

Comrades, my faith in your integrity is abounding. I take your hand and feel the thrill of comradeship. I catch the gleam of victory that flashes in your eye and hope takes on a warmer glow. I hear your resounding battle cry as if coming from the throat of a cyclone: "Lead on, we are with you to the end." It is enough.

Eugene V. Debs.

Roosevelt's Shame.

A correspondent in South Dakota asks for more information regarding Roosevelt's barbed policeman club.

The club was approved by Roosevelt while he was president of the police board of the state of New York, and an attempt was made (1896) to introduce it on the police force there, but was later abandoned for fear that the thugs would themselves use it. A patent was applied for but was refused by the United States commissioner of patents, for the reason that it was "barbarous in every characteristic" and "repugnant to the genius of our institutions." The decision was made at some length and was dated Nov. 14, 1897. The report in full will be found in Patent Office Reports, Mechanics, Vol. 2, for 1898. The examiner of patents first rejected it, and the report is made by the commissioner on an appeal.

The club is described as follows: Its barrel is hollowed and within it is an ingenious mechanism connected with four longitudinal rows of spurs or lancets, which lie concealed in the tube. On touching a secret spring these lancets spring from their hiding places, and through them, by a single wrench of the weapon, a most fearful mutilation is inflicted on the hand of an adversary that may have grasped it.

APOPLECTIC PROSPERITY!

SOCIALISM as a science analyzes economic conditions as they exist, and it encounters the proposition that the world now exists to produce wealth for wealth's sake. Profit, trade and business today are but forms of brute force by which the few get control over the masses. Centralization of wealth in the clutches of the few has been the cause of the destruction of the greatest nations that ever existed. They fell all through taking what we today call "prosperity." If I had a rub of blood to the head, all through taking what we today call "prosperity." No, I should have apoplexy. Still, with the nation's blood—her wealth—congested in a small portion of the system, we say we are prosperous.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—The Associated Press is too capitalistic and hostile to give our party vote much consideration on election day, save at points where the vote is so large or the Social Democrat elected such an unexpected event that it cannot help itself. We therefore charge our members in the different towns and cities to themselves see that we have quick and accurate returns the moment the votes are counted. If possible, where the local comrades are willing to bear the expense, send by wire. The Herald will be held on the press, so as to get as late news as possible to our army of readers. Do not send reports by wire later than Nov. 7. Do not neglect this!

About Farm Wagons

An old-party wisecrack of Amesbury, Mass., one Geo. H. Briggs, in order to show the "kind of stuff the (Social Democrats) Ideal Paper publishes," writes a half-column communication to his local paper, quoting certain statistics given in The Herald recently, which showed the labor cost of a number of articles, among them farm wagons and buggies. Mr. Briggs says he wants to find out "whether Socialistic papers are published to give the truth to their readers, or for the benefit of the publishers."

Inasmuch as Mr. Briggs in quoting the items from The Herald also gives the authority for them—namely, the thirteenth annual report of Carroll D. Wright, United States commissioner of labor (Vols. 1 and 2)—we are somewhat at a loss to see why he challenges us to prove their correctness. Carroll D. Wright is not a Socialist, and his government statistics are prepared under capitalistic auspices. Mr. Wright belongs to Mr. Briggs' class, the capitalist class, and his interests are with that class. So far as we know, the capitalists of the country have never doubted the correctness of the figures of the department of labor. But be this as it may, we are glad to take up the cudgels on behalf of the labor bureau, in the case of the farm wagon or the buggy.

The government statistics show (and these figures are made up from direct information received from the manufacturers themselves) that a farm wagon "body brake, double box, spring seat, three and one-fourth skein, wheels three feet eight inches, one and one-half inch tread, is made in the average time of one person in forty-eight hours and eighteen minutes, and the wages paid for its production amount to $7.19." This does not allow for the labor cost of the wood and iron, but Mr. Briggs will admit that it will be reasonable to figure this additional labor at not over, say $1.75. Let us then say that the entire labor cost of the wagon, from the time the material leaves the mine and forest, equals $9. The wagon sells in the market for $75. So you see, because the workers work for a competitive wage and do not own the tools or forces of production, they only get a miserable fraction of the market value of the articles their industry produces. The great balance goes to enrich the beneficiaries of the capitalist system, and this is why the producers are poor and the non-producers rich. The farmer who buys such a wagon, as has been described, pays heavy tribute to the capitalist system. Under Socialism the cost of the wagon would be the sum of the well-paid labor contained in it. The profit system robs both producer and consumer and builds up a millionaire and billionaire class to crowd the people out from the right to live happily in a world of beauty and abundance. This is an unrelished truth with Mr. Briggs, we fancy.

It is because the workers of the land get in exchange (wages) so small a fraction of the value of the wealth they create that capitalism has to look for foreign markets. The workers as a class are not able to buy back the things the industry of their class produces. The government reports of the census of 1890 show that the wage workers of the country averaged in wages a trifle over $1.25 a day, and that the average value of the product of the average worker was $10 a day. Now where does the $8.75 go to? Labor does not get it. SOMEBODY does. With the tools and forces of production collectively owned, these "somebodies" would cease to be a master class, a predatory class, a class of human vampires, and would become part of the one universal class, the class of producers and enjoyers. That is just what we Social Democrats are fighting for.

Not Fair Samples

The Bryanite orators delight to single out the Standard Oil trust and the coal trust as representative of the great trust organizations. They do this because these two aggregations of capital are notoriously dishonest in their methods and because they have come about by fraud and brigandage. The moral they wish thereby to convey is that if trickery and brigandage be prevented by sundry laws that the trusts will be dealt a body-blow from which they cannot recover. Such an idea is the sheerest nonsense. In the first place both these trusts are not representative. They were organized before the late newly-dawning era of trusts, their lawless methods are not the methods of all the trusts. Many, indeed, most of the trusts are formed entirely within the law. They are safeguarded under the law and cannot be reached except by new and special laws and such laws cannot be framed without also working hardship to various other businesses which the professional trust fighters do not wish to injure. In short, the trust is the legitimate child of the competitive system, the natural and inevitable next step in the evolution of trade and manufacture.

It is with trusts much as a certain writer has said of Socialism—It is a part of social evolution, therefore, "the danger lies not in forwarding it, but in trying to prevent it."

The Immensity of the Plunder.

The "minimum of profits" enjoyed by the millionaires of the country, to put it large—say 50,000 of them—amounting to $25,000,000,000 surplus wealth created by workingmen during the past ten years would require for its counting a cashier working eight hours a day and three hundred days in the year, and counting $100 a minute, 1,755 years. The centuries would come and go, nations would be born and decay, and still the work of counting the wealth labor created in the short space of ten years would proceed. The millionaires who got the wealth would die and their remains be housed in palatial mausoleums in aristocratic cemeteries, and their posterity would inherit the wealth created by workingmen between the years 1890 and 1900. During the ten years to which reference is made, 50,000 workingmen averaged incomes, as Hon. John B. Conner, state statistician, says they averaged for the year ending May 31, 1899, in Indiana, $145, or a total of $74,500,000.

Now, then, to count the profits of these 50,000 workingmen for ten years would require a cashier, working eight hours a day, and 300 days in a year, and counting $100 a minute, a fraction over five days. Hence it is seen that to count the profits for ten years of 50,000 millionaires requires 1,755 years, while to count the profits of the same number of workingmen for the same time requires five days.

Socialism'll catch YOU!!

If You Don't Watch Out!

The Republicans say things are all right and everyone contented.

The Democrats say things would be all right if it wasn't for the trusts.

The Social Democrats say that times are good for men of wealth only and that these men of wealth are, and always have been, a burden on the people. It holds that they are the legitimate fruit of the capitalistic system and that they have a right to their wealth under it. The entire system must be abolished before their right to plunder through profit, interest and rent will cease. Only then will there be actually good times.

The propertyless class to-day is estimated at thirty-four millions of people, almost exactly the total number of people who made up the nation's population in 1865! And during the years that this great dispossessed class was growing up, the national wealth increased forty-two billions.

The Southern Mercury, a Texas Populist journal, republishes Prof. Heron's Central Music Hall speech with favorable comment.

The trust is a natural development. It cannot be smashed. We do not want to smash it. We want to make it the property of the people.

The Social Democratic party holds that the present system is quickly outliving its usefulness and that it is rapidly working out its own downfall.

In our last issue, first page, the item concerning Bryan and the Philippine treaty should read: "Bryan favors the ratification of the treaty with regard to the Philippines."

Judge Kirkpatrick of New Jersey has refused naturalization papers to a negro, holding that the federal laws permit the naturalization of white men only.

The number of former Populist papers that have come out for Debs and Harriman is large enough to mean something to the student of political developments in the United States.

The settlement of the great coal strike hangs fire, but the miners appear to have gained their point—till after election, anyway, as the settlement is only till April 1st next. Whether the strike was an actual success or failure will not be clear till we can see how the poor victims vote on election day.

The Ohio supreme court, in the case of the State vs. The Continental Tobacco Co., has decided that a foreign corporation coming into Ohio to do business is not liable for the double liability enforced against Ohio corporations. This was one of the fights that ex-Attorney General Monnett was interested in, but the court goes dead against his contention.

Eugene V. Debs, of the workers rather than "for" them, and who carries a union card, is running for president as candidate of the party of the workers, and the Labor World of Duluth keeps silence about it! There are only a few such labor papers left and the workers are getting on to their curves in good shape.

And so Helen Gouger is stumping for Bryan in Indiana, too! Come to think of it, though, Helen never did get any further into Socialism than to proclaim herself one. It is one thing to say "I am a Socialist" (a la Jones) and quite another to ignore the chance of plute campaign money by getting into line with the toilers when a battle against capitalism is on.

Any man who is satisfied with conditions as they are should vote Republican.

Any man who thinks the bad conditions for labor can be bettered by merely making ugly faces at the trusts should vote Democratic.

Any man who realizes that the present system is crushing the people, soul and body, and who sees the only hope in public ownership, will vote Social Democratic.

NOTES AND COMMENT

Working men all along the centuries have been asking for bread and meat. Capitalism has given them stones and scorpions, breakfast, dinner and supper. Some fell sick and died, some perished by starvation, some became tramps, footpads, burglars, or professional thieves. Some committed suicide; some were sent to the penitentiary, some were shot down by capitalistic troops for striking against conditions so full of horror as to defy exaggeration, some remain upon the earth, having escaped the calamities which befell the unfortunate, and now, capitalism asks the survivors to vote that its power may be perpetuated rather than for the Social Democratic Party, which proposes to put an end, an everlasting termination, to capitalistic rule and rapine.

It has become axiomatic in the politics of the two great parties contending for supremacy in the United States that "a lie adhered to is as good as the truth," which is itself a lie. The only support a lie has is another lie. Thus lies beget lies, and the work proceeds until the structure built of lies tumbles down a wreck which no amount of lying can reconstruct. Bryant sounded a keynote when he sang: "Truth crush'd to earth shall rise again, The eternal years of God are hers."

The old parties admit that the Social Democratic Party will poll a large vote at the November election and they are asking from which of them will it be chiefly drawn? The answer is easy: It will be drawn from the party having the greatest number of men who dare vote for the emancipation of wage-workers from the poverty and degradation which the capitalistic system imposes upon its victims.

Please don't forget that a vote for Debs and Harriman means breaking capitalistic fetters.

The devil remarked, when he sheared the hog, "Great cry and little wool!" Capitalism, which is the child of the devil, shears workingmen and piles up colossal fortunes, and the victims of its spoliation in voting for its perpetuation, say, practically: "We are your sheep, shear us as much as suits your inordinate greed; we like the operation."

We are told that though we suffer cruel wrongs in this world, when capitalism robs us, "improves and degrades us," there will be glorious compensation for wage slavery in the next world. May we hope so, but nevertheless, heaven will lose none of its attractions if Socialism makes this world a paradise.

To cast a vote on election day is the highest prerogative of a freeman. If the vote is cast as the result of purchase or intimidation, if it does not express the honest conviction of the man who casts it, it is the vote of a slave, the depth of whose degradation no plummet can sound.

Lives of free men all remind us

We, too, may be free,
If capitalism does not blind us,
Forge its fetters, and then bind us,
Build its mills and then grind us—
Yes, if, don't you see?

The poet caught the idea when he sang of the ballot:

"A weapon that comes down as still,
As snowflakes fall upon the sod,
Yet executes a freeman's will,
As lightning does the will of God."

If capitalism, under present conditions of our civilization, is unavoidable, the supreme demand is to radically change our civilization by voting for the Social Democratic Party, which is pledged to change conditions.

If capitalism can so hypnotize working men as to influence them to vote for its perpetuation, then it is possible to persuade them that the difference between shop and hell is only one of orthography.

When a rich man offers to buy a vote and a poor man is willing to sell his vote, the extremes of capitalism meet. The fang and the rattle coalesce and capitalistic-civilization reaches its reptilian perfection.

Once in awhile an anarchist kills a king or some other titled creature, in the hope of bettering conditions. As well kill occasionally a jack rabbit in the the hope of exterminating the rodents.

The Standard Oil trust (monopoly, corporation or what not), paid dividends last year amounting to $48,000,000. And every dollar of the vast sum of profits was filched from the earnings of labor.

The preacher who said to his audience: "I am your shepherd, and ye are my mutton," expressed the true capitalistic idea in industrial affairs—wage-workers are the mutton of capitalism.

Mark Hanna, making speeches in favor of good government, is like feeding troops on McKinley's embalmed beef—an article which, when thrown into the sea killed sharks.

J. Pierpont Morgan gave his daughter on her wedding day $1,000,000. But for labor Miss Morgan would have received possibly $10.

To be true to citizenship, to duty and to conscience, a man should vote his honest convictions.

It is easy to make figures lie, and still an easier task to make a ballot lie.

With a free ballot, workingmen may and ought to be freemen.

Don't make faces at the trusts—nationalize them!

They Do Not Dare.

The capitalist press, both Republican and Democratic, fought the Populist party. They have changed tactics so far as Socialism is concerned. The policy is to ignore the Socialists and by saying nothing of them keep the people from inquiring into the principles of Socialism.—Dr. Thurman, in Farmers' Review, Texas.

Bryan's Military Experience

"Experience," says W. J. Bryan, 'has taught me that the life of a soldier is a dangerous one.' In explanation of this statement it may be said that while Col. Bryan was camped in Florida he ate an unripe watermelon and suffered an attack of colic.—New York Mail and Express.

Rather tough on a "patriot" who rushes to the front to defend the "old flag." The military record of Colonel Bryan merits more serious treatment. Pity that Bill Nye is dead.

Look out for day-before-election "roorbacks." Any report that Debs has withdrawn is simply a bait of the old parties to get your vote by fraud.

NOW FOR THE HARVEST

Straws from the Various Strongholds of Revolutionary Socialism

After next Tuesday the Social Democratic party will have official standing in the majority of the states of the Union. This will be an immense gain and make future progress much easier than in the past.

Bonham, Tex., Oct. 30.—We expect forty or fifty thousand votes for Debs' in Texas. W. E. Farmer.

Cincinnati, Oct. 31.—From all indications we will double our vote in Ohio this fall. As a very conservative estimate I should say 15,000 votes for Debs'. Robt. J. Waite.

New York City, Nov. 1.—I predict 6,000 in New York State. Some think 7,000. Wm. B. Leaf.

Terre Haute, Ind., Nov. 1.—No one in that splendid field for propaganda, the gas belt, doubts that our vote in the state will go to 10,000. I believe it will be nearer 20,000. A. S. Edwards.

I predict the Pennsylvania vote for the S. D. P. (Socialist Party) will be from 4,000 to 5,000. Philadelphia will give 2,000. Last election the S. L. P. got 900 votes. M. Gillis.

Another prediction received as to Pennsylvania estimates the vote at 10,000.

Milwaukee, Nov. 1.—I should say the vote for our party in Milwaukee would be from 4,500 to 5,000.

E. H. Rooney.

A comrade writes from Oshkosh, Wis., that a traveling man who has been about the state, says Wisconsin will give us from 10,000 to 15,000 votes. There is strong sentiment for Debs' in Oshkosh.

Battle Creek, Mich., Oct. 31.—Our party vote in Michigan will range from 10,000 down to 7,500. City of Battle Creek, 1,000 to 1,200.

Chester G. Campbell.

Muscantine, Ia., Nov. 1.—Vote in this state will exceed our estimates based on reliable data at hand. Have made our campaign largely in about ten counties. In Dubuque county we will have about 100; in Clinton, 300; in Scott, 600; Muscatine, 200; Des Moines, 250; Wapello, 200; Monroe, 150; Appanoose, 100; Polk, 200; Boone, 100. This gives us a total 2,200 in the ten counties. There still remain 89 counties, which estimated at 20 votes each, will bring the total up to 4,200, which is a conservative estimate.

A. W. Ricker,

State Organizer.

It is merely a guess, but I should say our vote in Kentucky will reach 1,000.

J. H. Arnold.

I am sure that our candidates will receive 70 per cent of the Bohemian coal miners at Coal City, Braidwood, Godlepe and other Illinois towns.

F. J. Hlavacek, Organizer.

Comrade Edwards of Canton, Ill., will easily get 300 votes as S. D. P. candidate for congress.—Correspondent in Galesburg Labor News.

"The size of the Debs vote is going to surprise the country. I have been told that in one shop in this city 150 men who voted for McKinley in 1896 will vote for Debs."—From a letter written to the National Democratic Campaign Committee by L. A. Russell of Cleveland.

National Organizer W. J. McSweeney, who was in Chicago last week after a trip through Illinois, Missouri and Iowa, said to a Chicago Journal reporter: "We will poll at least 1,000,000 votes," he said. "I know of several men who will bet considerable sums of money on that proposition. In Cook county we will poll from 20,000 to 25,000 votes. In Illinois we will poll at least 50,000 votes. In Ohio we will poll at least 40,000 votes. In the coal regions of Illinois we are in splendid shape. I met the miners of Illinois at Coal Valley, Spring Valley, Pana and Virden. The miners at Pana told me they would carry that city without doubt."

In an article in the Chicago News of Oct. 23, entitled "Watch the Labor Vote," the claim is made that the Debs vote will cut heavily into the Democrats. "Debs will get a big vote," it quotes a trade union official as saying, "and what is left will be divided almost evenly between McKinley and Bryan." The article concluded with several interviews with union leaders. Thomas I. Kidd, general secretary of the Amalgamated Woodworkers' Union, said: "I will vote for Eugene V. Debs, and I know a large number of our members will do likewise." Otto Novak, business agent of the Metal Workers' Union, said a large percentage of the members of his organization had avowed their intention of voting for Debs. A talk with many members of the International Association of Machinists, one of the strongest labor organizations in the city, revealed the fact that Debs will receive strong support. In many of the other organizations the same conditions prevail, it is declared.

To say the least the Democrats think it is real mean of Mr. Debs.—Chicago Record.

"We must all be Socialists in a sense. It seems to be coming inevitably in Europe, and something will happen in this country."—F. Marion Crawford, Author.

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man. As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights; for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

Edwards' Tour of the Indiana Gas Belt

Marion, Ind., Oct. 26.—One week of campaigning in Indiana, including in my itinerary La Porte, Kokomo, Elwood, Alexandria, Marion and Anderson, enables me to say that the Social Democratic Party is strictly in it in this pivotal state of capitalist politics. More than that, in many of these manufacturing towns of the gas belt our growing young party is making extraordinary strides and greatly embarrassing both the parties committed to the perpetuation of the capitalistic regime. All sorts and conditions of men are attracted to our meetings and the conviction that we present the real solution, and are, therefore, dealing honestly with the people, is permeating the mass. Of opposition, the kind we invite and welcome, that is, intellectual combat for principle, there is none. More and more it filters through the democratic mind that, after all, the Democratic party is not democratic, that the party has no issues that Mr. Bryan, if elected, would be impotent to stem the tide of economic imperialism at home, which is the cause of military imperialism abroad.

New adherents to our cause, coming FROM BOTH OLD PARTIES, are found every day. The public meeting and fearless discussion of the real issues of the time, has the effect of strengthening the half-formed resolution to break away from the Egyptian darkness of the politics of their masters and of bringing them into line for the only movement that stands for true democracy. You may expect daily to see the old party managers resort to all sorts of untruthful reports to mislead the voters and, if possible, switch the wage-earners in the mills and factories of Indiana to the support of Bryanism or McKinleyism. But they will fail. A Social Democrat in Indiana is a Socialist, as elsewhere. He knows why he arrived, which is more than the average Bryan-olator knows.

Many incidents of my daily and nightly experiences would have an interest for Herald readers, had I the time to jot them down, and this I hope to do soon. At Anderson our meeting was held in the Superior Court room. In another room of the same building Hon. J. E. McCullough of Indianapolis, a Democrat and ex-member of Congress, had a rally of the "faithless." Thirty minutes before time for the two meetings to open, the local secretary of the Democrats proposed to our Comrade Macomber a joint meeting to be addressed by Mr. McCullough and myself. It was also suggested, as a matter of "courtesy," that I speak first. When the proposition came to me I readily assented, and, not to be outdone in "courteous" treatment, proposed that he speak first. Comrade Macomber went in search of the Democratic secretary, while I distributed leaflets among an audience scarcely less numerically than that assembled in the "lower court," and waited, "eager for the fray." The secretary, however, could not be found, and I did not have the pleasure of converting Mr. McCullough to Socialism or showing him the fallacy and utter inadequacy of his party's program of reactionism. But the Anderson meeting was better without the Democratic orator than it could possibly have been with him. Converts were made and a good branch organized and when it was all over, many of those present at the other meeting said they had got into the wrong room.

A. S. Edwards.

Come in Bunches

I have struck upon a group of men in my factory where there will probably be twenty-five votes for Debs where a month ago I wasn't sure of hardly one—it's a little landslide all my own. The Debs-Herron speeches turned the trick. It's a-coming, my boys! But let's be patient and modest, nevertheless, and not expect too much.—Edward Wenning, Ohio.

The Tactics of Mayor Jones' Party

Ed. Herald:—Although the secretary of state has refused to recognize the Social Democratic party in the coming election, still the votes are here, and we may get a hearing next time, when it will be our turn to "don't recognize."—New Orleans Comrade.

The Conspiracy of Silence.

Editor Herald: I had a casual conversation the other day (in Milwaukee) with the chairman of the local Democratic campaign committee, Mr. W. G. Bruce, and he asked me about the Social Democratic campaign. Among other things I happened to mention the conspiracy of silence with regard to the Socialist canvas on the part of the capitalist press to which he responded, substantially, if not in these exact words:

"Yes, you know, I suppose, that the two national committees in Chicago have an understanding with regard to the Socialists." I tried to get a little further light but he was on his guard. He is a man who is in close touch with the national Democratic headquarters, and is undoubtedly posted.—From a Wisconsin Comrade.

"You can best judge how Social Democracy is growing from the following: Six months ago we put up the first Socialist ticket in the field in Burlington and cast 165 votes. We have polled our city and find we have about 1,000 Socialists. The city polls about 4,800 votes."—F. C. M., Iowa.

The outlook is good here in Saratoga county for a good vote for our ticket. Enclosed find renewal for your valuable paper. I was not aware the time was out till the paper did not come—so busy working hard to keep the "wolf" from the door.—J. H. Bullard, New York.

Prospects are very good here and we expect to give the old parties a great surprise on election day.—Jacob Hunger, Milwaukee.

The future is full of promise for Socialism in western Canada, but, alas! the harvest is great and the laborers but few.—Ernest Burns, British Columbia.

The movement is going well here. The Democrats are getting crazy over our progress, and no wonder. Our cigar maker candidate for Congress makes a strong opposition to their banker and coal operator candidate.—Jos. C. Wullner, Seventeenth Illinois District.

If the tramps only carried dinner pails instead of tomato cans, how prosperous the country would be.

Notes of the Movement

Michigan.—The Alpena trades council has declared for Social Democracy and endorsed Debs and Harriman.

Colorado.—Comrade Eugene Engley, of Cripple Creek, Col., has written to the Pueblo Courier declining to allow the use of his name on any but a straight Social Democratic ticket, and giving the usual reasons therefor. He was nominated by our party for justice of the state supreme court, whereupon his name was placed on various "state labor" and "fusion party" tickets. He has no use for mongrel fusion tickets, and says that as a rule "manufactured goods are put on the market for sale."

Wisconsin.—The state officials attempted a sly game on us, but we have frustrated it. Because our party cast the required one per cent in certain localities, it was planned to give us an official column for the local candidates and to then put the presidential electors in an "individual nominations" column thus cutting our ticket in two and making it a dead certainty that many voters would get puzzled and miss putting in a full vote. Comrade Victor L. Berger, made a flying trip to Madison, armed with certain legal decisions and a well grounded threat of mandamus proceedings and finally brought the secretary of state to terms. We get a clear column with a voting square at the top only the name of the party does not

Of Dinner Pail Servitude

Four years more,
Whichever party'll win.
They call this the sum of man's ambition,
To eat cold chuck from out a can of tin.

Then vote right, boys,
And vote'er with a will!
We'll end this brutal slavery
Upon our lives we will!!

The capitalist class are forever referring to the "full dinner pail" of the work- ingmen, as if it were the height of their ambition—the sum of their aspirations. Capitalism looks upon workmen, as swine, as dumb driven cattle, who, if fairly well fed, are content, having no yearnings for mind-improvement, no ambition for culture, books, art, music and other things which make life beautiful and worth the living.

head it. New sets of sample ballots have been ordered printed all over the state and we feel better.—Comrade Tuttle, candidate for governor, has been having some fine meetings, together with Geo. Koop of Chicago. He has addressed noon-day crowds at the factories and met with gratifying receptions. He is about to make another flying tour of the state.

Kentucky.—The convention of the American Federation of Labor will be held at Louisville Dec. 6.

Iowa.—Charles L. Breckon, candidate for congress on the Social Democratic ticket in the Second district, was until a few months ago the managing editor of the Muscatine Daily Journal when his Socialistic principles got so strong that he was asked to recant in order to retain his position; this he refused to do, and giving up his desk, went back to his old work of setting type. Comrade Breckon is especially strong in the ranks of organized labor. He has been an active member of the International Typographical Union for twenty-four years, is president of the Iowa State Allied Printing Trades and a member of the executive board of the State Federation of Labor and of the Muscatine local labor body.

Ohio.—Cincinnati comrades had some amusement out of the Burke Cochran meeting. They passed round a large quantity of literature, and while the speaking was going on a large number of those present sat reading Social Democratic leaflets.

Washington.—Comrade H. S. Gen- evra Lake held a big meeting October 18 at Haquiam to a crowded opera house. Comrade Fenelason, nominee for representative, also spoke. A loyal branch of 30 members, who cannot be sidetracked, joined in a vigorous three cheers for Debs. A similar meeting was held at Elma. The Republican rally across the way closed its doors for lack of hearers. Comrade Rasmausen presided. Our vote in this state will be a surprise.

Michigan.—The first issue of the new Social Democratic paper in Battle Creek, The Social Democrat, is out, and it is a creditable production. It is of eight pages, four columns to the page, and is filled with good, live, pulsating, Socialistic reading. —A hard campaign is being fought in Michigan and many meetings are being held. Comrade J. Stitt Wilson and Comrade Wise are moving from town to town and getting fine results. Other speakers are at it in every county of the peninsular state. Michigan will give a good account of herself on election day.—The Social Democrat of Battle Creek republished Eugene V. Debs' letter to Mayor Jones in its issue of Oct. 13. The letter is relished on all sides and the general opinion is that the "silver rule" mayor put his fingers in a hornets' nest.

Indiana.—For the past two weeks Comrades Kelly and Edwards have been stumping Indiana together and have had big meetings. Comrade Blenko writes of Comrade Edwards' Kokomo meetings that they were very effective. They were held in the open air, and although on each occasion a challenge for a discussion was made to the old parties, no one responded. The meetings were the first avowedly Socialistic ones held on the streets of Kokomo. Messrs. Kelly and Edwards had big meetings at Brazil, Oct. 22; Clinton, Oct. 23, and in the court house at Terre Haute, Oct. 24.—Stephen M. Reynolds, a prominent lawyer, of Terre Haute, and a recent convert, made his first speech for Social Democracy at Maxville, Oct. 23, with fine results.

California.—The old parties are getting uneasy over the strength of the Social Democrats. They are beginning to issue papers edited by alleged Socialists who reiterate their belief in Socialism and their conviction that true Socialistic interest demands the election of whichever capitalistic candidate they happen to be "plugging" for. Especially amusing is a sheet of this sort issued from Los Angeles with Bryanite funds. It declares Bryan to be a Socialist and lauds Silver Rule Jones to the skies. Next we will hear the claim that multi-millionaire Stevenson is a Socialist!

Illinois.—Comrade Stedman had some big meetings last week at Elgin, Jacksonville and Pittsfield.—Chicago comrades of the town of Lake district held a procession Sunday, followed by speaking from a wagon on the open prairie, with a big crowd.—There will be a mass meeting Sunday, Nov. 4, at Koerbert's hall, Blue Island Avenue and 21st place, Chicago. Comrade Albert Stritzkowski (in German), Frank J. Hlavacek (in Bohemian) and John Collins (in English), will be the speakers.

Socialism is the ideal and hope of a new society founded on industrial peace and forethought, aiming at a new and higher life for all.—William Morris.

ENDS IN TRIUMPH!

The Social Democratic Candidate for President Closes his Remarkable Campaign

A Crush at Boston, New York, and Other Points, a Remarkable Wind-up—An Ovation at Terre Haute

Comrade Eugene V. Debs closed his tour last Monday evening by a monster meeting in his home city of Terre Haute. During his tour he visited eighteen states and made eighty speeches. The closing week of the trip witnessed great meetings in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Ohio and Indiana.

There was a packed house at Whitman, Mass., Comrade Debs speaking until nearly 10 o'clock, and then leaving for Brockton, Harriman filling out the balance of the evening. About a third of the audience insisted on accompanying Debs to Brockton, and the short trip across country was "noisy and enthusiastic."

At Brockton, the Social Democratic city, a monster audience was assembled. Comrade Debs spoke for an hour and the greatest of enthusiasm prevailed. Speeches were also made by Comrade F. O. McCartney and Job Harriman.

At Boston, Paine Memorial hall fairly swarmed with humanity. Meetings were held in both halls which were simultaneously packed and people crowded in the aisles, the staircases and on the street, the crowd being utterly regardless of the fire laws. Comrade Squire Putney introduced the speaker, and Comrade F. O. McCartney holding the crowd in one hall while the presidential candidate was speaking in the other. Speeches were also made by Comrade Gibbs, White, Chase and others spoke. It is estimated that nearly 5,000 people heard Comrade Debs.

At Rockland the opera house was packed, gallery, hall and stairways. Comrade McCartney presided and made a neat introductory speech. It was an intelligent, hard-headed Plymouth county audience, and while Debs was speaking the attention was marvelous.

Debs was in town on the evening of October 30, at New York, and Cooper Union was packed with an audience of 10,000, eager to see and hear the apostle of Socialism. The daily papers of Gotham which had any notice of the great demonstration were forced to admit that it was unparalleled in the history of the Socialist movement there.

Great crowds of people were on the streets unable to get in and at the close of the indoor meeting Comrade Debs spoke at two street meetings. He was carried from the hall amid the wild cheers of thousands of admirers and the pressure became so great that the interference of police became necessary to prevent the crowd from doing him or themselves bodily harm. It was with the utmost difficulty that the policemen rescued and escorted him to an elevated railway station when the speaking was over.

The meeting at Rockville, Conn., was of the usual sort, with people turned away.

The audience at Hartford, Conn., was a repetition of those at other places in the east, both in numbers and enthusiasm. It filled the biggest hall in the city to overflowing. When Comrade Debs arose to begin his speech he was greeted with continued applause. He spoke for two hours and at the close received the congratulations of many who had heard him for the first time that night.

Long before Comrade Debs made his appearance on the stage of Fitchburg hall at Rochester, the auditorium was packed to suffocation. Before the meeting there was a parade of the Social Democratic clubs in which the typographical union, the glassblowers, the united shoe workers, the garment makers, the iron molders and other labor bodies took part. The meeting was a big success.

The meeting at Toledo, Ohio, was one of the most satisfactory of the candidate's trip. For several hours before Comrade Debs appeared at the Memorial Hall he received at the hotel delegations from various organizations, including one of forty men from the Jones Acme Sucker Rod factory. The latter escorted him to the hall. On the stage were seated the ladies of the Social Democratic Club and the Golden Rule Club. Byron A. Case, Social Democratic candidate for congress, presided and in an admirable speech introduced Comrade Debs to an audience that packed the great hall. Then the people rose and gave him a reception exceeding in its sincerity and enthusiasm that accorded any presidential candidate by a Toledo audience.

Evansville, Ind., Nov. 5.—With a record of popular triumphs unprecedented in the Socialist movement, Comrade Debs arrived on Sunday, Nov. 4, at Evansville, where the comrades had made complete preparations for a great meeting and were not disappointed. The Evansville demonstration was a repetition of the popular interest in the nominee and the principles he stood for at every place he had visited. Germania Hall was "packed with humanity," says the Evansville Journal, "when the labor leader appeared, and as he walked along the aisle from the entrance to the stage the audience cheered and applauded in the most demonstrative manner, many mounting seats and waving hats, handkerchiefs and wraps. Even after the speaker was seated the demonstration continued and he was compelled to bow his acknowledgments."

"The stage was beautifully decorated in the national colors and plants and flowers, and as the speaker entered at the stage door he was showered with flowers by a number of girls, who afterwards sang a chorus 'Of Course We Are Socialists.'"

Terre Haute, Ind., Nov. 5.—Comrade Debs closed the first great Socialist campaign in this his home city, Monday evening, November 5th, in an address delivered at the Casino, to a crowd estimated at 1,700 or 2,000. Comrade Debs arrived from Linton at 4:10 p. m., and a delegation of over a hundred miners from the latter place with a brass band accompanied him. The local branch members, and many sympathizers greeted the presidential candidate at the depot with a band and escorted him to his home, after which the parade proceeded down the main thoroughfare and disbanded. The Linton delegation presented a neat appearance and excited much comment. A banner carried by one of them had inscribed on its folds the words: "We vote for Debs and the overthrow of the capitalist system." The parade was as large as any made by the Democrats and the Republicans. A feature of the meeting was the presentation of a silver smoking set to Comrade Debs by the German Lutheran church, who had voted it to the most popular presidential candidate. The vote was Debs 94, McKinley 62, and Bryan 60. Comrade Debs spoke over two hours and held the attention of the audience throughout the meeting which was frequently interrupted with applause. Comrade Debs' witty sallies at the "regenerated" democracy and logical thrusts at the party of centralized capitalism were easily grasped by those present who applauded long and frequent. The meeting was an epoch in the Socialist movement in this city and proved that the old adage: "A man is not a prophet," etc., has at least one exception. JAMES O'NEAL.

The Returns at Headquarters

There was a jolly crowd of the faithful at the Herald office and in the rooms of the national campaign committee on election night, discussing the returns as they came in, sharing in each other's hopes and fears, and singing and joking to enliven the moments. Comrades Jesse Cox, Seymour Stedman, A. S. Edwards, Elizabeth Thomas, Theodore Debs, Frederic Heath and others were present during the greater part of the evening. The Chicago returns were not as large as had been hoped for, and it looked as if an official standing would not be secured, but there were other advices of a more cheering nature, the chief of which was had from a telegram from Massachusetts announcing McCartney's re-election by an increased vote. This was greeted with an outburst of joy that shook the dingy old building. It was after midnight when the party broke up.

Well, who "threw his vote away," Mr. Bryanite? We didn't!

VICTORY AGAIN!!

McCartney and Cary Re-elected in Massachusetts With an Increased Vote

Wisconsin's Increase, 200 per cent.—Early Returns Indicate Gigantic Gains Everywhere—Official Standing in Many States

Massachusetts

Frederic O. McCartney was re-elected to the state legislature from the Plymouth district by an increased vote, receiving 826 and beating both the Republican and Democratic candidates. Comrade McCartney's vote in 1899 was 703.

Debs' vote in Rockland was 261; at Haverhill 1,200.

"McCartney's vote in Plymouth district is 826; Debs' 261. BILLINGS."

"McCartney and Carey re-elected. We estimate Debs' vote at 10,000 in state. MARGARET HAILE."

Wisconsin

At 10 o'clock Tuesday night I estimate the vote for Debs in Milwaukee county at 6,000.

VICTOR L. BERGER.

The Milwaukee Sentinel last Sunday, in a forecast from Republican headquarters, gave the Social Democrats 12,000 votes in the state. The official returns for the state in 1898 gave us 2,591.

Racine county, 400 (estimated). Rheinlander, 15; New Glarus, 6; Brodhead 12; Monticello, 3.

Calumet county, 75. First time. Pacific, 18; Democrats, 18; Woodruff, 20.

"Social Democratic vote in Two Rivers, Wis., is 63. Two years ago we had 17. The S. L. P. get 2."

"ARNOLD ZANDER."

Illinois

The official count will probably give Debs 7,500 votes in Cook county. Perry's vote for governor in Chicago will likely go to 5,000. First returns give Debs 5,022, not taking into account the vote in the Twelfth, Thirtieth and Thirty-fourth wards, where the total should be increased by 1,000.

The vote in the Thirty-fourth ward is reported later at 606; a similar vote in the other wards and country districts, followed by the official count, promises to give the Social Democratic party a legal standing in Cook county.

It is impossible at this time to give any accurate figures for the state at large, owing to the absorption of election officials in the capitalist parties' struggle for advantage. Debs' vote in the state may reach 15,000 or more.

Hiteam, 154; New Burnside, 20; first vote, Spring Valley, 189; S. L. P., 12; Westville, 54; Coal City, 52; Oglesby, 55; Democrats, 88; Coal City, 52; Kewaunee, 47.

Michigan

Only meagre returns from the state are obtainable. A special dispatch to the Herald from the Social Democrat gives Debs 192 votes in the city at Battle Creek and about 500 in the county. St. Clair, 31; S. L. P., 9.

Iowa

Hiteam, 161; last year 32. "Debs' vote in Burlington is 204; Avery, 43; Charlton, 17. F. Cox." Des Moines, 200; Eldon, 19; Keystone, 12; Norway, 10; Blairtown, 4; Newhall, 3; Van Horne, 13.

Maine

Lewiston.—This city gave 28 votes to Eugene V. Debs.

Bangor.—Debs received 10 votes. These returns represent the beginning of the movement for Socialism in Maine, where it has not before been manifested at the polls.

New York

Comrade William Leaf telegraphs from New York: "New York state gives Debs 10,000 votes, probably more." A later despatch says the vote for Debs in the state will reach 12,000.

Kentucky

The Social Democratic vote in Campbell county (Newport) is 204. ADAM L. NAGEL.

Ashton, Neb., 18. First time. Delaware, O., 13; S. L. P., 2. E. Palatine, O., 7.

Where there was organization under the standard of the Social Democratic party there were votes to count. The better the organization the more votes we had. Cleveland and Milwaukee furnish a good illustration. The latter rolled up 5,000 votes, while Cleveland lags behind with less than one thousand. It was organization and the absence of discordant elements that did it.

An Indiana Trick.

In Indiana some one of the capitalist parties posted up this notice all over the gas belt:

To the Members of the Social Democracy.

Comrades:—We want you to support Wm. J. Bryan, as our nominee for President, comrade Debs, is not a candidate.

By order of The Social Democratic Party of Indiana.

George Koop Arrested

On the evening of Thursday before election Comrade George Koop was arrested while making a street speech in Milwaukee, but was immediately bailed out. The cause of arrest was his refusal to move further back from Grand avenue, the police claiming that the big crowd interfered with the pedestrians. His case has been postponed until after election. Since his arrest he has held nightly meetings on the Milwaukee streets without being molested.

With Brutal Frankness.

On the day after election the Twenty-fifth Ward Republican Club of Chicago placed a placard on its walls bearing this significant legend: "McKinley elected President of the United States and Emperor of the Philippines."

First Individual—Ho! ho! he! he! Well that's rich. Say young fellow what you pasting up them there Debs stickers for? Don't you know the campaign is over!

Second Individual (licking a sticker between each word)—Never you mind, old fellow. I'm opening the campaign of 1904!

CAMPAIGN AFTERMATH

A Day at Headquarters

One day may serve as a sample of all the days of this rousing campaign which has so stirred us all and given us new hope and heart.

First of all comes the postman with his budget of letters from Maine and Washington and all the states between. How they thrill with the awakening life of a great movement! What promise they give that the giant Labor is stirring at last!

Here are letters from miners and ministers, farmers and railroad men, lawyers and shoemakers. Here are contributions collected by our faithful workers, and heaps of orders for leaflets, speeches, stickers, buttons, and portraits of Eugene V. Debs. This correspondent is a little boy who wants a button because "Papa is a Socialist," and this one is a veteran of seventy, who can boast of half a century of Socialist work. He orders a bunch of leaflets, for although he is worn and feeble, he wishes to spend his last days in laboring for the dear old cause. Here is a word of sympathy from a subject of Queen Victoria, and here a stirring report of Comrade Debs' tremendous meetings. Not a letter but tells of the work that is being done everywhere and the rapid progress of Socialism.

But answering these letters is not so easy with the steady stream of visitors that continually enliven headquarters. First comes a reporter who has heard that Mark Hanna has supplied us with an unlimited quantity of money and wants to know if the report is true. He has ocular proof that it is false in the general aspect of our dingy little office and our simply-dressed workers. Next, welcome sight! come a couple of volunteers to help us address and mail our orders. Then the genial campaign secretary rushes in for a few minutes between a difficult case and a Socialist committee meeting, or on his way to the railway station when he is starting out on a stumping tour. The assistant secretaries eagerly seize the few precious minutes to ask his advice on puzzling matters and read him important letters. Then follow a stream of purchasers of literature and other campaign materials. Those who are unattached Socialists are advised to join the party at once, while to the half-way Socialists our principles are explained as scientifically as the worker's limited time will permit. A campaign speaker comes in full of hope and enthusiasm, to bring as glorious news from a neighboring state, or one of our organizers reports with justifiable pride that he has organized fifteen branches in five weeks.

Last of all, just before the office closes at night, a jolly party of young folks make it a rendezvous for starting on a sticking party. They set out to paint the town white with thousands of Debs stickers.

And so the campaign draws to a close, more is the pity! And this is what I want to ask you, comrades, why need it close at all? Why not keep up a campaign of Socialism all the year round?

Napoleon once said that a victory meant to march ten leagues, to defeat the enemy, and chase him ten leagues more. We have capitalism on the run. Let us give it no breathing space.

No laying down of our arms now that the first fight is won! E. H. T.

The Quintessence of Impudence

The closing days of the campaign just ended witnessed one of the most disgusting tricks yet played against the cause of Socialism in any campaign on record. It consisted of an open letter sent out by the democrats, urging Debs to withdraw and signed by Eltwed Pomeroy, Prof. Frank Parsons, B. O. Flower and a Dr. Galvin, men who have more or less dabbled in "reform" waters and who had the impudence to write themselves "friends of Debs" while asking him to be a traitor to the Social Democratic party and to his well-known principles.

Now we have them nicely unmasked, these fellows who have been parading as Socialists only to attempt to sidetrack the movement for Bryanism. At the first opportunity for exposure their masks fall off and they stand forth self-confessed workers for capitalism. They serve a purpose in the economy of capitalistically ruled society, that of obstructing as far as possible the movement for the abolition of wage slavery. During the closing days of the campaign these gentry gave Comrade Debs no peace, tearfully pleading with him to desert the cause of the workers. The following from the Evansville Journal written the day after Debs' arrival in that city, shows how persistently these importunate fellows were:

"During the day he was bombarded by telegrams from all parts of the country asking him if it be true that he had decided to withdraw from the presidential race. While in Philadelphia last week, Mr. Debs was presented by Prof. Parsons of the Public Ownership League of Boston with a lengthy petition asking him on behalf of the league to withdraw from the presidential race in favor of Mr. Bryan. Mr. Debs refused most emphatically to withdraw on the ground that Mr. Bryan did not in any measure represent the principles of the Social Democratic Party, and that he could not conscientiously set aside the honor of himself and his party at a moment when socialism was becoming a factor in the politics of the nation."

A Snow-Storm of Stickers

That the stickers issued by the national campaign committee did their part in assuring the people that Debs was in the campaign, despite the studied silence of the press, may be seen from the following capitalistic testimony:

"The drollery of the charge that Bryan is the apostle of socialism or revolution," says the Springfield Republican, "is made somewhat apparent by the strenuous contest the Debs people are putting up against him in Chicago. The Chicago correspondent of the New York Evening Sun telegraphed yesterday this interesting information:

"A new and unexpected trouble for Jones and Johnson has developed. During the past 24 hours the city has been flooded with stickers and posters, urging workmen to vote for Debs. The Social Democrats had not made any active campaign in the city and the Bryan managers had not anticipated a vote for Debs that might affect the general result here. This sudden activity of the Debs followers has surprised and alarmed them. To thousands of workmen in Chicago the famous labor agitator is a hero and a martyr. Yesterday, small posters and smaller stickers, bearing the picture of Debs and urging all labor men to vote for him, were extensively posted throughout the city. No one seems to know where they came from or who posted them. No one supposed that Debs or his party had much money for campaign expenses. But over night a flood of the Debs stickers fell upon Chicago from somewhere. Today they are upon every blank wall, lamp post, letter box, bill board and elevated railway pillar. Many thousands of them were posted during the night, and it is evident that the friends of Mr. Debs are actively at work in his interest."

"If you want Socialism Debs is the real article. Debs wants this trust to grow so that in time the state may absorb them all and thus become the socialist commonwealth in which capital will be practically abolished. Bryan wants the trusts restrained in conformity with the competitive principles of the past. Debs is revolutionary. Bryan is old-fashioned."

The Elections

At the time of going to press it is impossible to give an estimate of the Debs vote cast throughout the country, although such information as has been hurried to us by the comrades would indicate great gains everywhere and an official standing in a majority of the states. Our representatives in Massachusetts have been returned with an increased vote with many other strongholds of the party to hear from. The total vote of the country will probably not be known for a week or so, owing to the manner in which the first count is reported. At every point we will gain by the official count, as reports are coming into this office showing that the earlier returns are below the number of votes cast.

While the vote of the country will prove satisfactory and up to our more conservative predictions, a certain deplorable phase of the campaign will leave with all of us the feeling that the returns might have been greater had the canvass been conducted on frictionless lines. The enforced political alliance with a faction which, having failed of its intention to capture the movement in this country, had set itself the task of usurping the party name and of crippling our organization at all possible points, setting up a rival national committee and duplicating our campaign organization in all possible detail; this, we say, could have but one result, a joint campaign which was not harmonious, and in which, in fact, there seem to be evidences of perhaps only surface earnestness for a large vote on the part of the usurping individuals in certain quarters. At important points, such as Massachusetts, Illinois and New York this miserable condition of things brought confusion and factional feeling into the canvass, and, notably in Illinois, the vote is such as to suggest the possibility of a more than accidental discrepancy between the logical result of a vigorous campaign and the actual vote. That the vote is not correctly reported will probably account for most of this, however. Throughout the entire national campaign there was manifested a spirit on the part of a certain element which perhaps cannot be better characterized than by the term "tactics." The sending of the vice presidential candidate out of the campaign for the purpose of fighting De Leon's representative at the Paris congress, the employment of certain ostensible campaigners for that faction to quietly disrupt our organization at various points, their undisguised eagerness to secure as much as possible of the campaign collections at our largest meetings for the purpose of strengthening the establishment at Springfield, Mass.—none of these things tended to contribute very much to a successful issue of the campaign, so that in spite of it the vote secured is surprising. By reason of this conflict of interests, also, an element of pettiness was injected into the campaign in the matter of arranging meetings. The old, out of date, small sighted lines were in many cases adhered to and campaigning material was woefully wasted and badly played. Notably was this so in Chicago, where both Comrade Debs and Prof. Herron, to hear whom tremendous crowds were gathered, were kept from giving the addresses they had prepared in order that speakers whom the public took no interest in might occupy the time, and this also for "tactical" reasons.

The fine growth in our vote and the play of the larger forces on the political stage of action can have but one result. The Bryanized Democracy is a thing of shreds and sticks, a remnant too battered and routed to come together again. Bryan is a political "dead duck," killed more than anything else by his frenzied demagoguery in the closing days of the campaign. His promise to uproot all monopolies and special privileges, fostered and made inevitable by the capitalistic system, stamped him an insincere hanger after votes, and he will go down to oblivion. McKinley and the Republicans, the natural monarchs under the competitive system, occupied a logical and consistent attitude, and won easily under the law of the survival of the "fittest." Capitalism's own party is now more all-powerful than ever, and from henceforth the lines will be drawn clearly between socialism and capitalism, with no middle class party shield interposed between them. It is well! On with the battle. The promised land of plenty for the now famishing toilers is already in sight!

A Socialist's Duty

The Socialist campaign is not over; we took a fresh hold on Nov. 7, and prepared for a four years' campaign against capitalism. Now, before we turn over the page in history of the first great national campaign of our party, let us learn the lesson and gather the inspiration it has for us. The vote is quite satisfactory; all that we could expect and more than our enemy was willing before the election to concede.

Every Socialist should, convert at least one old party man in three months, and keep up such a record for the next four years. Of course every faithful Socialist should belong to the party which has made such a splendid record during the past two and a half years.

Those who do belong to our party as dues-paying members, should be able to report one new Socialist every quarter besides their own quarterly dues. Make this your duty, comrades, to gain four votes every year for the next presidential campaign. Many of your new converts will do the same, and there are also those who will gain for us dozens of votes every month. But let us be sure that every Socialist voter at the polls Nov. 6, 1900; secures one new vote every quarter, sixteen in four years. Comrades, you can easily figure out for yourselves how long it will take us to elect a Socialist president. Will you do your duty?

Panics will come during the next four years; capitalism forces them. The harvest of Socialist votes will be even greater than during the past. International capitalism can not long withstand the advances of international Socialism. If every present Socialist does his duty it is a matter of only a very few years. Again, comrades, will you do your duty?

Class Legislation

Comrade Lipscombe, the candidate for governor of Missouri writes The Herald to deny having uttered the sentence we quoted from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat to the effect that if he were elected governor he would do all in his power to "prevent class legislation." He says that what he did say was that he did not join in the "demagogic cry of No Class Legislation," but that his party, if elected, would "go about it to enact legislation that would be in the interests of the working class." In our report of the St. Louis meeting we used the quotation objected to, under the impression that it was a correct quotation. All legislation today is class legislation and therefore unethical. It is legislation in favor of the ruling classes, and passes over the rights of the great mass of workers with contempt. That Socialists will abolish this state of things so soon as they have the power goes without saying. In place of it they will legislate for all the people and with a nice discrimination as to their value to society. As the workers are and will still be the only truly worthy members of society, the legislation will be in their interest. It will not be legislation in the spirit of retaliation, but in the spirit of the most exact and ethical social justice.

In a presidential election the Social Democratic vote is never fully expressed at the polls, the less resolute Socialists being more or less stampeded by the sharpness of the contest between the two leading candidates. Old habits are strong with the American citizen, and as the contest between the two capitalistic parties grows fiercer his feelings are played upon as by a horse race. Which will win? The excitement increases and becomes more seductive, and finally, like the good deacon at a chicken fight, he loses his head. Certainly no one will pretend that the vote cast this election, however large it may be, will accurately measure the great existing interest in socialism.

On with the carnival of commercialism! On with the riotous revelry of rapacity! Four years more of tin can prosperity for the toilers and four years more of milk and honey for capital. Business will be stimulated, more private yachts and palaces and castles and liveried coaches will be built, "so that the workers may have work."

Bryan's attitude toward the close of the campaign, when he showed himself to be anything for votes, will deprive him of the sympathy that might be his because of the almost wanton way in which the smaller brood of demagogues traded him off.

The Democratic party has fulfilled its mission, and now leaves the scene of national political conflict. Its place will be occupied, and more worthily, by the true democratic party, the Social Democratic party of America.

The article on Old Age in this issue of The Herald is a classic. It gives in graceful and pathetic words the plight of the human toiler, who, robbed of his surplus all along life's pathway, finds himself at last a mere dweller on the earth by permission, unhonored by society and denied the peace that should come with declining strength. Throughout the world the Socialists are contending for conditions that will make old age honorable and beautiful, no are they unkind of the aged for the time that must intervene before the co-operative commonwealth can be established, and as a shield against the rapacity of capitalism propose such measures as old age pensions and workmen's insurance.

It may sound conceited, but the truth is that the right was all on our side in the campaign just closed.

Teddy's capitalistic grin will now expand. Militarism triumphant and with it all the sordid ideals of commercialism!

I am still without a party.—Mayor Jones.

NOTES AND COMMENT

Capitalism has been singing its dinner pail refrain to American working men, as the spider once sang to the blue-tailed fly. The fool fly listened, was caught and barbecued for the cunning spider and its hungry companions. Capitalism sings:

"O my dear workingmen, please listen to my tale,
And smell the goodies I've stuffed into your dinner pail.
See, there's lasses on your dodger, and gravy for your meat,
'Tis the climax of your ambition to eat, eat, eat."

"I'm glad you do my bidding, your loyalty's immense;
Never mind the agitators, who doubt your common sense;
You have sense enough to know your happiness is complete,
When your trough is full of slop, and you can eat, eat, eat."

It may be well enough to think about the condition of the poor people in China, Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii, the Philippines and Sulu islands, but the vote on November 6 shows that some men thought of the wage workers of the United States. Let the work of emancipation begin at home.

The old parties are intensely concerned about the strength the Social Democratic party is developing. They have had a poor idea, in fact, little conception of the mind force Socialism has arrayed against capitalism. It is phenomenal.

We have read of men without a country, without a home, without a friend, but the man without a spine, a dish-rag creature, is vastly the most unfortunate. The chances are that that sort of fishworm voted some sort of a capitalistic ticket.

Do you want to see the dawn of a new era for toilers? Then come on with your broad swords and battle axes, and we will be pathfinders and hew out a way to highlands of vision and hail the coming of its rising sun.

Socialists are fortunate. They are fighting a good fight and things are coming their way, and the November vote has demonstrated that a new party has been born to work out the emancipation problem of labor.

Life is worth the living only as it affords opportunities to help our fellowmen. Socialism has that great mission in the earth and to support the Social Democratic party helps to fulfill that mission.

It requires no skeleton hand to write on the banquet hall: Capitalism, "Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting." The votes of working men are writing the doom of capitalism.

Right wrongs no one. Wrong rights no grievance. In the march of the right there are no muffled drums, no trailing emblem of mourning. Socialism wrongs no man.

John D. Rockefeller, Carnegie says, "is the richest man in the world," which reminds us that once upon a time, long ago, a "rich man lifted up his eyes in hell."

Workingmen, and only workingmen, create capital; but they did not create capitalism. Capitalism is an evolution from a bad egg.

Although Debs' warning against a possible attempt of the old parties to make it appear that he had withdrawn at the last moment before election was extensively printed in the Social Democratic press, the game was attempted at some points, but probably with small success.

A Sunday raid on milkmen in a western city by the health authorities, developed the fact that many of the wagons carried two grades of milk, one for influential and valued customers, the other for the poor. Oh, the glories of being poor! Will Mr. Kipling please write a few verses on the Poor Man's Burden?

A Few Observations

Mister workingman, you have a great chance these days to think. You have always had a chance, but nowadays you are getting lots of concentrated "food for thought." It is being shot into you and starved into you. If you don't "get wise" on the matter of "capital and labor" pretty soon—or, in other words, if you don't become what Socialists call "class-conscious"—you will have to be "bored for the simples." When you reach this class-conscious stage it means simply that you realize that there are just two classes—owners and non-owners. In which class do you belong? You ought to make it in one guess, but you have two guesses! May be it will help you if we again shake out our old friends, the government statistics, which say that in 1850 the "producers of our wealth owned 62½ per cent of that wealth and the non-producers owned 37½ per cent; but in 1890 the non-producers were in possession of 83 per cent and the producers 17 per cent. We have had Republican and Democratic administrations in all those years, but the balance against the producers has steadily grown. It is the system that is wrong. Then how will you help things by voting for a "change"—from one old party to another? Is it necessary that a house should fall on you? Socialists want to change the system!

One of our "great dailies"—and when we surround the words "great dailies" with quotation marks it means that we regard the "great dailies" with a certain sprightly derision—one of these papers had a serio-comic editorial this week in answer to a subscriber who wanted to know what we wanted a standing army of 100,000 men for and who thought such an army would be a menace to liberty. I quote the funniest part of the editorial: "When those 14,000,000 of voters have no further use for the army, or when the army grows obnoxious, they will promptly vote it out of existence." The fun is that there are lots of people who believe that! Why, our 14,000,000 voters don't have anything to do with it. What they DO do is to vote always with the old parties, for fear of "throwing their votes away." Then the old-party legislators, who are mostly controlled by the class who own that 83 per cent, increase the army to suit the traders who "follow the flag." The majority of our voters want postal savings banks; why don't they vote such banks into existence, then? Why, because under the present system their voting don't amount to much, and also, because postal savings banks interfere with the "vested rights" of the "grafters" who own that 83 per cent. Socialists want the initiative and referendum, so the PEOPLE could vote for or against laws. Switzerland has been doing that for 200 years. But WE can't do it, because we never have done it, nor is it provided for in the constitution. Socialists want to change our constitution so it will be of some use to people now on earth. The Socialist is no "back number."

Mr. Bryan at Nashville, Mich., suggested some queries for Republicans. Here is one: "If some trusts are good and some are bad, can you tell the difference between a good one and a bad one?" I ain't a Republican, but I can tell you, Mr. Bryan; a good trust is one that all the people are in. A bad trust is one like the sugar trust or the New York ice trust. Here is another of his queries: "Do you know of any good monopoly in private hands?" One would naturally think Mr. Bryan is against monopolies in private hands, but he is in favor of private ownership, for he has put himself squarely on record as being against the collective ownership of the means of production and distribution and in favor of continuing the competitive industrial system. I voted for Bryan in 1896, but I would just like to have somebody tell me when the Democratic party has been anything but a negation in the last forty years. Address me in care of this office.

And Mr. Churchman, I invite you to carefully and prayerfully consider Rev. Geo. D. Herron's statement that "It is only the densest, ethical ignorance that talks about a 'Christian business' life; for business is now intrinsically evil, what ever good may come out of it. The facts and forces which now organize industry and so-called justice violate the best instincts of mankind." Strong words, Mr. Churchman, but you're going to "fall down" if you try to refute them. Things are "getting no better very fast." Did you vote to make them worse?

Yours for industrial health,
Jack Potts.

An Editorial Idiot

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican calls attention to the dishonest treatment accorded Eugene V. Debs by the capitalist newspapers and takes a shot at one in particular as follows:

One would think from the misrepresentations that are made of the audiences and the speeches of Eugene V. Debs that the Socialist candidate for president was really an alarming factor in the present campaign. Neither Republican nor Democratic newspapers treat him honestly. When he crowded Cooper union in New York, the other night, and there was an overflow meeting of some 500, the affair was either spoken of contemptuously or ignored altogether by every paper in the city; he was described in one paper as "talking to the reds" and misreported besides. But the most foolish thing was reserved for the Hartford Times to say, as follows:

"Eugene Debs' speech at the Hartford Coliseum last night was a repetition of his previous addresses in this town and of other addresses that were made by so-called labor reformers before he was born. He would do away with machinery and have all manufacturing carried on 'by hand.' He is just a hundred years behind the times."

If this was honestly written, it displays an unhappy ignorance. The Socialist today does not repeat what labor reformers have said before he was born; he has new things to say, forward steps to propose. He does not desire to go back to hand labor and abolish machinery. On the contrary, his proposal is that every advantage in production that has been gained by machinery and every advantage in distribution which has followed shall be operated for the benefit of all the people. And Mr. Debs actually said this in Hartford; and going back in the history of labor struggles, he expressly declared that the Socialists would not destroy the machines, as British workingmen ignorantly did, 70 and 80 years ago. Nothing is gained in the long run by misunderstanding and misstating an antagonist's position.

"When the frost is on the pumpkin and the fodder's in the shock," and the last vote is counted—there's a rise in S. D. stock.

The Herald's contributors must bear with us if some of their articles bearing on the campaign did not appear before election. The editor's desk was almost covered with MSS. of this sort, and as they were of almost uniform excellence, the matter of making a choice was exceedingly difficult. In some instances the length of an article or the particular phase of the campaign of which it treated was the determining factor.

William E. Curtis wrote to the Chicago Record just before election that the result in Indiana would "depend on the floating vote—that is, the purchasable element in both parties." He says that for years Indiana has required more money than any other state except New York; that there are between 18,000 and 20,000 in the state who habitually demand pay for their votes, and that they are all personally known to the local leaders. The herculean job of cleaning out the Augean stables built up by capitalism will fall to the Socialists. Only by the crucial fire of social democracy can American manhood be redeemed from the debauch of capitalism.

Answers to Correspondents

X. X.—The Socialist congress of the German party in 1880, owing to the exemption law, was held by stealth in a ruined castle in Switzerland. It was called the congress of Schloss Weyden. To elude the vigilance of the authorities the delegates were directed to a certain near-by town, whence they were sent one by one to the castle some miles away. Dormitories were fitted up in it for the delegates to sleep in.

D. E. E.—We cannot recommend the magazine you refer to, and will not feel able to until it devotes itself to the movement throughout the world without reference to the tactics of a certain rule or ruin faction. Many of its articles are excellent, and under broader minded management it could be made a success.

C. T.—In the campaign, just passed the single taxers threw off all pretense and came out in their true light as reactionaries and upholders of the capitalistic regime. In Chicago, for instance, they formed single tax Bryan clubs with funds supplied by millionaire and multimillionaire Democrats, helping to obstruct the advance of the workers' demand for humane and just conditions. Give up the idea that they are revolutionists.

Editor Answers to Correspondents Column: Please give me a list of books dealing with the biological side of Socialism. I have Richie's "Darwinism and Politics," and think it answers most of the objections to Socialism on the ground of biology, but would like to read up more on the subject.

Yours fraternally, I. X. L.

Answer.—There is a close connection between socialism and sociology. In fact every student of socialism ought to study sociology. The biological side of socialism is, strictly speaking, anthropology, the science of mankind. We would recommend the study of the following books, reminding I. X. L., however, of the fact that they are not necessarily written by socialistically inclined authors:

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF AMERICA

THE NATIONAL PLATFORM

Adopted at the Indianapolis Convention, March, 1900

ATTITUDE TOWARD TRADE UNIONS

In accordance with our declaration of principles we declare that the trades union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the wage-working class. We recommend to the members of the Social Democratic party the following general rules:

- First—Join the union of your respective trade.
- Second—Assist in building up and strengthening the trade union movement.
- Third—Support the union labels of all crafts.
- Fourth—Educate your fellow-unionists on the question of Socialism and the labor movement, on economic and political lines.
- Fifth—It shall be your duty to work for the unity of the labor movement, thereby recognizing the fact that the emancipation of the working class can only be achieved by the united efforts of this class.
- Sixth—Educate the members of the unions in the principles of Socialism and induce them, individually, to affiliate with the Social Democratic party.
- Seventh—Trades unions are by historical necessity organized on neutral grounds, as far as political affiliation is concerned. The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for proletarian emancipation.

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

- First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.
- Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America. The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man. As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

- First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

National Organization

Section 1. This organization shall be known as the Social Democratic Party of America, and its headquarters shall be located at such place as the national conventions of the party may appoint, or as may be fixed by the National Executive Board subject to a referendum vote.

Sec. 2. The Social Democratic Party of America shall be organized as follows:

First—Local branches limited to five hundred members each.

Second—A National Executive Board of nine members, five of whom shall be chosen from territory convenient to the national headquarters, and shall be called "resident members," and the remaining four shall be chosen, so far as possible, from other parts of the country. All members of the Executive Board shall have equal rights and powers; but the resident members shall have power to act and a majority of said resident members shall constitute a quorum. The non-resident members shall not be required to be present at all meetings of the board, but shall be kept advised of all proceedings of the board. The Executive Board shall be elected by the national convention.

Third—The form of state organizations shall be left to the branches in the respective states.

NATIONAL PAPER OF THE PARTY:

The Social Democratic Herald

126 Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

HEADQUARTERS: 126 WASHINGTON ST., CHICAGO

From a Bohemian Miner

Comrade F. Svoboda of Chicago furnishes The Herald with the following translation of portions of a letter written to the Spravednost by a miner of Vanderbilt, Pa.:

"Like some others, the organ of the United Mine Workers remains politically independent because in their opinion the only salvation of the working people lies in unionism. I agree with unionism because it is the bulwark of the working class. But our working class has had for over 100 years its political liberty, and in spite of it the conditions are from year to year worse. The Social Democracy of Europe at first fought for political rights alone, but now the unions are also waging war against capitalism. They are more class conscious because they had to fight hard for the little they have. In America the working class was spared the struggle for political rights and could devote itself more to the industrial matters and sought to better conditions for the workers and families. To this end it organized trade unions. In Europe the best workers were imprisoned for doing no more than this, and decayed in their cells, prosecuted by laws, or driven from place to place like savage animals. The workmen in America became endowed with all these rights of progress and civilization 100 years ago, and therefore some think that their salvation does not lie in political parties, but in unionism. So long as our unions had to deal and confer with individual capitalists the mission of the unions was not so difficult. The conditions are now changing rapidly, and it will not be long before the unions will have to bow to the heads of trusts. The strike is a good weapon, but it often cuts both ways. We are only now in the beginning of the formation of trusts, but their field is constantly and rapidly spreading. Capital with its added power, its greed and intrigues will in all possible ways cut off the right of the workers to revolt, until nothing remains BUT THE RIGHT TO VOTE. And this must be used before it is too late. The capitalists even now are trying to diminish the power of the ballot in the worker's hands, they are trying to do so in the southern states.

The forcible overthrow of present conditions is not our purpose. We do not desire that a man should simply work for a piece of metal called money, and work for some one who by any means at all accumulated the same. We want that every man should work because upon it depend prosperity, progress and the civilization of the people. That is our goal, to which we urge all workingmen. It is the road of the industrial and political field, with unionism and independent working class political organization. Therefore it is indispensable to organize in every branch of industry, and also politically, so we shall be prepared to repel an attack on us or to advance in a body to brush aside our capitalist adversaries from office and to place in their seats men of our own class, who know our needs and will serve our interests. For the same reason that the Social Democratic party acknowledges the necessity of trade unions, so the trade organizations will sooner or later have to support independent political action. The man who does not want to stand on the side of capitalism, corporations, combinations, trusts and the militarism of Democratic-Republican swindlers, is morally compelled to enlist in the ranks of the party of the workingman and vote the Social Democratic ticket at all times.

Notes of the Movement

Germany—Recently the Socialists have scored a number of successes, a fact that is beginning to cause the government grave dismay. Herr Ledebour the Socialist who was elected by an enormous majority in Herr Liebknecht's old Berlin district, is an extremist, and a very forcible speaker. Herr Pens, another Socialist, was victorious in the very heart of the rural Brandenburg district. In the Thuringian states and Wurtemberg a number of Socialists have been elected to the local legislatures. At Coburg the Socialists have won a seat in the diet. This is the first time they have been represented in that body.

Indiana.—Comrades O'Neal and Evinger of Terre Haute have been among the hardest workers in the campaign; always at it, day and night, they have done an incalculable amount of work in that district. The Federation of Labor has adopted the following resolution: "The emancipation of the working class can only be accomplished by the overthrow of the capitalist system and the establishment of the collective ownership of the means of production and distribution." Fifty Ft. Wayne boys organized a Social Democratic marching club and turned out one night with a drum corps shouting for Debs and Socialism.

Chicago—The local campaign practically closed with a notable flood of oratory on Friday night. Permission was had of the authorities to use State street for as many street meetings as there was a speaker at work about every quarter of a block. The crowds about them were large and enthusiastic. Our comrades in other cities who read dispatches about there being a police interference are assured that no comrade was jailed or rendered hors de combat with a broken head. The facts are as follows: About a week before the Democrats were given State street, and some Socialists injudiciously attempted to also speak. This was resented and remembered and the result was Friday night that an attempt was made to break up some of our speakers, as a retaliatory measure. The police showed their usual willingness to act as "peacemakers" and this gave the correspondents a foundation on which to build some lurid dispatches.

The story about insulting the flag was all gammon. The fact was that a party flag was torn down by the mob and destroyed. One comrade, James Maloney, received a knife wound, in the melee, and had to go to a hospital. Two tardy arrests were made by the police.

Missouri—Comrade Caleb Lipscomb closed a vigorous canvass of the state at Lamar with a fine audience and lots of enthusiasm. A big vote is predicted in this state.

Milwaukee—A local firm of photographers, Klein & Guttenstein, give up their show window to three large framed photographs of the presidential candidates, respectfully. McKinley was in the center with Bryan on his right and Debs on his left. The Debs photo was a fine one, and the entire exhibit, being on a prominent street attracted great attention. So that the voter might make no mistake in marking their ballots, small posters were issued by our party, giving the needed instructions in bold face type, and posted up all over the city. Photographic copies were also made of the secretary of state's instruction that a cross at the head of the Debs column would vote the whole column, and given to our challengers to present to the election judges if occasion warranted. A vote of 4,500 is looked for in Milwaukee county.

Illinois, two.

The portrait of comrade Debs in the last issue of The Herald was from his most recent picture, which was taken by Klein & Guttenstein of Milwaukee. It is an excellent likeness.

Several branches which have become hopelessly delinquent have been taken from The Herald's mailing list.

The middle class radical of the Bryan stripe fights the results of a bad system. The Social Democrat fights the system that produces the results. See the difference?

Subscribers whose term of subscription has expired will please note the number of this issue. A prompt renewal will facilitate work at headquarters.

The Debs-Herron pamphlet is positively the finest propaganda literature ever gotten out in this country. They are 5 cents each, or $2 by the hundred. They will be just as good after election as before.

Being a man of simple tastes, Mr. Debs is not disturbed by the report that the White House is not in good repair.

—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.
This is intended as a joke. If the Globe-Democrat knew how soon a Socialist president will enter the White House it would be seized with vertigo and the G. O. P. would have an attack of St. Vitus dance.

Socialists willing to assist in forming new branches of the Social Democratic party are requested to communicate with the secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

What a campaign we made considering our drawbacks! Think of the money the old parties had to lavish, think of the literature and the speakers they furnished the people free of expense! Our speakers had to be given bread while they were in service, and our literature had to be paid for. But then, being paid for, it was used, without waste, which is more than can be said of old party leaflets.

THE VOTES COMING IN

Show that the Socialist Movement Has Taken a Distinct Advance in a Presidential Election Year

Partial Returns from Twenty-Six States—The Party is Robbed of Many Votes in State of Illinois

The returns from the various states are coming in very slow, and are so scattered that it is impossible at this time to venture with any degree of accuracy a statement as to what the total vote is. Sufficient is known, however, to justify a prediction that the vote for Debs will largely exceed the vote of 1898 in the state elections and be three times as great as the presidential vote of 1896. In such a contest as the country passed through this year the result must be highly gratifying to Social Democrats. It was the first national campaign of the party. The fund at the disposal of the national campaign committee amounted to no larger a sum than was expended by both the old parties in a single Chicago precinct. Yet we come out of the battle as the third party in the country and in several states become a legal party under the election laws.

As soon as practicable the Herald will tabulate the vote in all the states. In the meantime we give below the returns so far received:

Alabama

Adger—Debs, 9; McKinley, 4. New Decatur, 126.

California

Stockton—80 for Debs; Maloney, 8; San Francisco, 1,965. Estimated vote in the state, 10,000. Socialist vote for governor in 1898, 5,143.

Colorado

Leadville, 30.

Connecticut

Debs' vote at Bristol, 29; New Haven, 435; Hartford, 339; Waterbury, 173; Bridgeport, 103; Vernon, 479.

Georgia

Eleven votes cast for Debs' electors at Columbus; Atlanta, 66.

Iowa

The vote for Debs at Dubuque is 75; the comrades, however, claim that not less than 200 were polled and are considering ways and means to secure a recount.

Van Horne, 33.

Illinois

Chicago—The official count of the ballots cast in Chicago and Cook county began Friday morning of last week and will continue until the job is completed. Comrade Philip Brown represents the Social Democratic party.

The recount so far has shown a much larger vote for Debs than the first returns indicated. In the first ward the earlier returns gave Debs 23 votes. This is increased by the official count to 42. Many wards in the city will be found to have given much larger votes than they were credited with in the police returns, and the prospect strongly favors the gaining of a legal status by the party in the city and county.

Later returns from Chicago from three additional wards maintain the increase discovered in the first ward. The Second ward gave Debs 34 votes; Third, 38; Fourth, 65. The total for four wards is within a few votes of doubling the police count.

Winnetka gave 7 votes for the national ticket; 3 for university trustees.

Chicago Heights—The Bloom township vote was as follows: Second precinct, 28; Third precinct, 7; total, 35. S. L. P. vote, 1.

Carlinville, Macoupin county—The Social Democratic national ticket received 152 votes.

Galesburg, 109; Nashville, 39; Bloomington, 95; Pana, 40.

Bureau County—The official returns give Debs 226 votes in this county; 187 in Spring Valley.

Kewanee—The returns give Debs 47 votes. The election as it went in the whole county is what we expected. The democratic mob that assaulted us in Chicago is not fit for office.

Olof Engman.

Danville—The Socialist vote here was 95; for Debs, 91; for Maloney, 4.

Elgin—The vote of Elgin for Debs is 32. Good cheer prevails.

Fond du Lac Township, Tazewell County—Ten votes for presidential electors of the S. D. P.

Warren County—For Debs, 42 votes. Decatur, 20.

McLean county, 95; Jacksonville, 57; Lincoln, 23.

Indiana

Franklin—Six votes were cast here for the Social Democratic ticket, the first of the kind ever cast in the county.

Cardonia—The first vote cast for Socialism at this place was 32 for Eugene V. Debs and the Social Democratic ticket.

Sullivan, 19; Terre Haute, 350; Diamond, 39; Cardonia, 32; La Porte, 34; Fort Wayne, 184; Evansville, 330. Muncie, 200; Columbus, 17.

Kansas

Abilene—Debs, 66; Clemens, 50; Anthony, 13.

Massachusetts

State vote for Debs will certainly reach 10,000. Fifteen cities reported give him 4,204. Will more likely reach 12,000. Vote in Merrimac valley (Haverhill district) has fallen off considerably, while that of Plymouth county has increased remarkably. MacCartney is re-elected with a plurality of 218; Carey's plurality is 51. MacCartney's plurality last year was 102 in a total vote of 1,100. This year with a total of 1,800, his plurality has more than doubled. This was not done without good hard work. The campaign was opened by Prof. Herron, prosecuted by Comrade MacCartney, punctuated by Eugene V. Debs and closed by Dr. Gibbs.

Margaret Haile.

Carey's majority in the fall of 1899, 361.

Following is the vote for the national ticket in the Massachusetts towns from which the Herald has received returns: Arlington, 138; Avon, 46; Bridgewater, 39; Easton, 23; East-Bridgewater, 54; Halifax, 6; Hanover, 34; Hanson, 11; Holbrook, 79; Kingston, 4; Plymouth, 53; Plympton, 6; Randolph, 24; Rockland, 216; Stoughton, 23; West Bridgewater, 23; Whitman, 206; Wareham, 12; Natick, 74; New Bedford, 139; Elmwood, 85; Holliston, 25; Milford, 45; New Bedford, 139; Dartmouth, 4; Brockton, 1,246; Kingston, 4; Lakeville, 1; Stoughton, 23; Lynn, 345; Lawrence, 255; Beverly, 102; Chelsea, 147.

Maine

Madison gave Debs 69 votes, a gain of 17.

Anson cast 24, a gain of 5.

Skowhegan, 138; gain, 28.

Mercer, 14; gain, 2.

Stark, 12.

New Portland, 7; gain, 7.

Maryland

The city of Baltimore gives Debs 597 votes, a gain over 1899 of 286. Maloney received 198, a loss for the S. L. P. of 69. Clear gain to Socialism, 217.

Michigan

At St. Joseph the vote for Debs stood in the First ward, 3; Second, 9; Third, 11; Fourth, 8; total, 31.

Alpena County—Debs' electors received 88 votes. Six months ago it would have been hard to find six Socialists.

Sawyer, 2; Ann Arbor, 25; Saginaw, 400.

Minnesota

Northcote, 8; Hallock, 11; Crookston, 112.

Missouri

St. Louis—The vote in the city for the national ticket was 3,024. Maloney (S. L. P.) received 725.

Liberal—The home town of Caleb Lipscomb, candidate for governor, cast 49 votes for Debs.

Pleasant Hill—This place gave 25 votes for Debs. Three for the S. L. P. ticket.

Stone county gave 12 votes for Debs. Barton County—In this county the national ticket received 90 votes, an increase of 85 over 1896.

Poplar Bluff comrades report 106 votes for representative; this gives them the legal 3 per cent.

Milan—Our vote in this county is only 17, but that is 17 more votes for Socialism than we had four years ago. R. D. Morrison.

Sedalia—The vote in Pettis county for Debs is 103. Lipscomb for governor has 74.

Nebraska

Ashton, 18; Grand Island, 21.

New Hampshire

Exeter gave 62 votes for the Social Democratic electors. Sumner F. Clafin, candidate for governor, received the same number. The vote exceeds estimate before election.

Nashua, 191; Rockingham, 150; Strafford, 14; Belnap, 11; Canal, 8; Merrimack, 10; Hillsborough, 298; Chishim, 9; Sullivan, 19; Grafton, 24; Coos, 12.

New Jersey

Plainfield—The vote for Debs at this place was 57; S. L. P., 4. Trenton, 210; Elizabeth, 312; Hoboken, 135; Jersey City, 802; Essex county (Newark), 1,100.

New York

Rochester, 998; Sea Cliff, 110; Oneida, 65; New Rochelle, 43; Peekskill, 63; Utica, 70; Johnstown, 69; Troy, 56; Salina, 26; Port Chester, 35; Ticonderoga, 31; Corfu, 25; Catskill, 23; Brooklyn, 2,942; Watertown, 129.

Oregon

Shelburn, 27 (McKinley, 28). Returns from Baker county give Debs 49 votes.

Ohio

Debs' vote in Cleveland, 952. Delaware, 13.

The Debs vote in Zanesville and Muskegon county is 60.

Pennsylvania

Philadelphia, 1,400; Erie, 300; Cambria, 25; Clearfield, 120; Jefferson, 26; Lawrence, 201; Lebanon, 13; Lehigh, 12; Pike, 9; Potter, 46; Washington, 15; Wayne, 25; Westmoreland, 102; York, 115; Erie, 300; Allegheny, 240; Warren, 8; Taylor, 52.

Vote of the state is estimated at 4,000. Cokeville, 50.

Texas

I think this county (Kerr) will poll from 75 to 100 votes. D. C. Crider. Big Springs, 17.

Virginia

Norfolk, 22; Norfolk District, 103.

Washington

Hoquiam, 42; Lynden, 49.

Wisconsin

The Social Democrats at Pacific, a township of farmers, tied the democrats with Socialist votes and lacked only four of tying with the republicans. Number of votes cast is not reported.

Brodhead gave 15 votes for the national ticket. Chicon, 75; Sheboygan, 795; Eau Claire, 63.

The Campaign of Misrepresentation

The following from the Springfield Republican shows how a miserable feature of the campaign looked to at least one capitalist newspaper:

"One would think from the misrepresentations that are made of the audiences and the speeches of Eugene V. Debs, that the Socialist candidate for president was really an alarming factor in the present campaign. Neither Republican nor Democratic newspapers TREAT HIM HONESTLY. When he crowded Cooper Union in New York, the other night, and there was an overflow meeting of some 500, the affair was either spoken of contemptuously or ignored altogether by every paper in the city; he was described in one paper as 'talking to the Reds' and misrepresented besides. But the most foolish thing was reserved for the Hartford Times to say, as follows:

"Eugene Debs' speech at the Hartford Coliseum last night was a repetition of his previous addresses in this town and of other addresses that were made by so-called labor reformers before he was born. He would do away with machinery and have all manufacturing carried on by hand. He is just a hundred years behind the times."

If this was honestly written, it displays an unhappy ignorance. The Socialist today does not repeat what labor reformers have said before he was born; he has new things to say, forward steps to propose. He does not desire to go back to hand labor and abolish machinery. On the contrary, his proposal is that every advantage in production that has been gained by machinery and every advantage in distribution which has followed, shall be operated for the benefit of all the people. And Mr. Debs actually said this at Hartford; and going back in the history of labor struggles, he expressly declared that the Socialists would not destroy the machines, as British workmen ignorantly did 70 or 80 years ago. Nothing is gained in the long run by misunderstanding and misstating an antagonist's position.

In the Sixteenth assembly district the vote for Socialism was more than 1,000. A Tammany hall man said after election that the democrats and republicans would unite, if necessary, to prevent a Socialist victory in the district. The election has served to make it more clear than ever before that the real battle is between capitalism and Socialism. The sooner they unite the better.

PASSION FOR SOCIALISM

Many Thoughts from Many Minds on Various Aspects of a World-Wide Movement for Freedom

Collected and Edited by Frederick Irons Bamford, of Oakland, California, for the Social Democratic Herald

"A man who has once become a Socialist knows but one more object in life—to devote himself to the noble work of liberating the working people. And then comes the second part of his duty—to show to those whom he has converted by what the old system is to be replaced. This is the new enthusiasm of humanity."—Quoted in The Coming Religion.

"Blessed is even now our privilege. We have our choice, to live as individualists, and on our death-bed look back in despair on a dreary, hateful life of play-acting, or, as Socialists, fill our existences with those serious moods that make the grand tone of life, and in the hour of death stand on the mountaintop, as it were, and see with entranced eyes the rays of the sun that will soon illuminate the dark valleys below."—Gronlund.

"The issue between Socialism and Individualism is, I believe, the leading issue of this age-weary modern world. The men to come will envy us, as sharers in a battle greater than the anti-slavery struggle; greater than any phase in the eternal battle of the race for liberty since the convulsion of the Protestant reformation set man free in the sphere of religion, as Socialism promises to set him free in the sphere of economics."—Prof. Vida Scudder.

"In spite of our criticisms and its own errors and uncertainties, Socialism has spread so rapidly, it means that within its very nature lies a great moral force, which we may indeed refuse to acknowledge, but cannot suppress. The morality it teaches is by far superior to that of its adversaries."—Prof. Francesco S. Nitti—University of Naples—Catholic Socialism.

"A twofold ideal has been before me since my youth—a free and united Germany and the emancipation of the working people, that is, the destruction of class rule, which is synonymous with the freeing of humanity. For this double ideal I have fought with my best powers, and for this double ideal I shall fight as long as there is breath in my body. Das will die Pflicht! (That will duty!)"—Wilhelm Liebknecht.

Come, then, since all things call us, the living and the dead And o'er the weltering tangle a glimmering light is shed;

Come, then, let us cast off fooling, and put by ease and rest For the Cause alone is worthy till the good days bring the best.

Come, join in the only battle wherein no man can fail, Where whoso fadeth and dieth, yet his deed shall still prevail.

Ah! come, cast off all fooling, for this, at least we know: That the Dawn and the Day is coming, and forth the Banners go.

—William Morris—Chants for Socialists.

"The object of the state is to bring man to positive expansion and progressive development; in other words, to bring the destiny of man—that is, the culture of which the human race is capable—into actual existence; it is the training and development of the human race to freedom. This is the true moral nature of the state, gentlemen, its true and high mission.

"But the working class, gentlemen, the lower classes of the community in general, through the helpless condition in which its members find themselves placed as individuals, have always acquired the deep instinct, that this is and must be the duty of the state, to help the individual by means of the union of all to such a development as he would be incapable of attaining as an individual."—Ferdinand Lasalle.

"Socialism is a contemporary manifestation of social grievance which has through untold generations been borne by the sweating millions of labor, that have endured patiently and died in silent misery, leaving no record of their awful burden of sorrow. It is the cause of wretched multitudes of men and women and children that has at last found utterance and organization, the protest of workers that still suffer from excessive hour of monotonous drudgery in mine and factory in many lands, who live in economic insecurity and degradation, surrounded by the superabundant wealth which their toil has created.  From time immemorial the working classes have been sunk in drudgery and ignorance, bearing the burden of society without sharing its happiness."—Prof. Thomas Kirkup.

"The ethical ideals of Socialism have attracted to it generous souls and have enlisted in its ranks its best adherents. It is these ethical ideals which have inspired the rank and file of the Socialistic army with fiery zeal and religious devotion. It may be said, indeed, that nothing in the present day is so likely to awaken the conscience of the ordinary man or woman, or to increase the sense of individual responsibility, as a thorough course in Socialism. The study of Socialism has proved the turning point in thousands of lives, and converted self-seeking men and women into self-sacrificing toilers for the masses. The impartial observer can scarcely claim that the Bible produces so marked an effect upon the daily habitual life of the average man and woman, who profess to guide their conduct by it, as Socialism does upon its adherents. The strength of Socialism in this respect is more like that of early Christianity as described in the New Testament."—Prof. Richard T. Ely.

"Very commonly we hear men say, 'Yes, it is a pity that things are so bad; but it is no fault of ours, and nothing we can do will mend them.'

"Now, John, this is a cowardly and dishonest excuse. It is the old plea of Cain, 'Am I my brother's keeper?' No one can shirk his responsibility. We are none of us guiltless when wrong is done. We are all responsible, in some degree, for every crime and sin; and for every grief and shame for which or by which our fellow-creatures suffer.

"Do your duty, John. Do not lie to your soul any more. Long have you known that injustice and misery are rife amongst the people. If you have not acted upon the knowledge, it is not because you knew it to be useless so to act, but because you were lazy and preferred your ease, or because you were selfish and feared to lose your own advantage, or because you were heartless and did not really feel any pang at sight of the sufferings of others.

"These common sights of the common streets, John, are very terrible to me. To a man of a nervous temperament, at once thoughtful and imaginative, those sights must be terrible. The prostitute under the lamps, the baby beggar in the gutter, the broken pauper in his livery of shame, the weary worker stifling in his filthy slums, the wage slave toiling at his task, the sweater's victim, 'sewing at once, with a double thread, a shroud as well as the shirt'—these things are dreadful, ghastly, shameful facts which long since scared themselves upon my heart.

"All this sin, all this wretchedness, all this pain, in spite of the smiling fields and the laughing waters, under the awful and unsullied sky. And no remedy!

"These things I saw, and I knew that I was responsible as a man. Then I tried to find out the causes of the wrong and the remedy therefor. It has taken me some years, John. But I think I understand it now, and I want you to understand it (Socialism), and to help in your turn to teach the truth to others."—Blatchford.

"The true end of Socialism, then is in the first place ethical. It is not the subordination of man to the machine of state, but the use of the state for ethical, that is to say human, ends. Politics, it seems necessary to repeat, are rightfully subordinate to ethics. They exist for the sake of human life, and in the modern world human life is richer and wider than state life."—L. T. Hobhouse (Socialist), Corpus Christi College, Oxford.

"The Socialist demands the greatest possible organization of the material basis of life that he may leave the greatest possible freedom to the life of the spirit, and maintains that the absence of freedom and variation in the one direction follows from the absence of organization in the other."—Sidney Ball (Socialist), St. John's College, Oxford.

At two recent meetings Branch 14 of Fitchburg, Mass., admitted eighteen new members.

CHICAGO, SATURDAY, NOV. 17, 1900.

All non-attached Socialists who voted the Social Democratic ticket November 6 are requested to send their names and addresses without delay to Theodore Debs, national secretary, at the headquarters of the party, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

The Chicago Vote

The election commissioners of Cook county, Illinois, are now engaged on the official count of the vote of this city and county. The first three days revealed a state of affairs that discredits the entire work of the judges and clerks of election. That the vote of the Social Democratic party was juggled with in the interest of one or both of the old parties there is no doubt whatever. The commissioners cannot go behind the tally sheets as returned by the precinct judges, and the prospect at this time is for endless litigation between the parties whose hirelings have sought to disfranchise the voters of all the minor parties. Before it is ended it may be necessary for Social Democrats to demand a recount and assume the burden of expense incident thereto. That our party has been robbed, mainly in the interest of the "regenerated" Democracy, no doubt remains.

Scores of complaints have come to the Herald office from persons in all parts of the city who voted in precincts from which no returns were made. There is little doubt, notwithstanding these discrepancies, that Debs' total vote in the city and county will run from 6,000 to 8,000. This claim is justified by the returns so far made on the recount. The following shows Debs' vote according to the police returns and the official count from six wards:

	Police Count.	Official Count.
First Ward.....	23	42
Second ".....	16	34
Third ".....	9	38
Fourth ".....	46	95
Fifth ".....	72	106
Sixth ".....	68	101

Our Great Encouragement

The true source of encouragement that comes to every Social Democrat, in contemplating the results of the election, is in the sense of duty well done. "It is better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all," may be changed to read: It is better to have served the cause of freedom and met with failure than to have remained indifferent to its claims and its needs. But in the lexicon of our youthful party, as in that of every true Social Democrat, there is no such word as failure. Others, ignorant of the imperishable truths of Socialism and unacquainted with our aims and purposes, may affect to see failure written in the figures which will stand, in their estimation, as the sum total of our achievement in the campaign of 1900; but the active and observant propagandist in our movement has been close to the public heart and conscience, has measured the undercurrent of thought and knows better than before the potency of all the industrial and intellectual factors that make for the ultimate realization of his highest hopes. The opportunity was given him to learn how much of Socialism is "in the air" and how much of it is penetrating the minds of the people, soon to manifest itself in the concrete at the ballot box. Wherever this opportunity has been improved there is no cause for gloom, no reason to fear that the early triumph looked for before a vote was counted will fail of accomplishment.

The campaign has given our cause a distinct and irresistible advance; we have gained ground from which there will be no retreat; we have carried our principles right into the forefront in the political arena and in the realm of intellect have compelled attention to the inevitability of the Socialist solution of all the "great issues" which have their origin in the capitalist system of production and distribution.

The future is ours as certainly as that capitalism approaches the climax of its mission. The forces that work with us and for Socialism are not to be measured solely by the counting of heads or ballots. Inherent in the capitalist system tem itself, energizing and directing all human activities, are the elemental rights and wrongs which co-operate with us and compel all alike, consciously or unconsciously to ourselves, to see through the mirage of competitive strife the outlines of the co-operative commonwealth. Let all who have served serve on.

The Appeal of Bryan's Aids

No incident of the campaign reflects greater credit upon our candidate for president than his silent rebuke of those who, when his canvass was nearly ended, addressed to him an urgent appeal to "withdraw in favor of Mr. Bryan." That appeal was wholly discreditable to the men who wrote it. Mr. Debs was nominated last March. For eight months his candidacy as the nominee of the Social Democratic party was known. The writers of the request that he stultify himself by abandoning his party on the eve of election knew this, and had they been his friends and "believers in Socialism" they would, if only to prove their sincerity, have addressed their "friendly" appeal to him immediately after his nomination. As it was, restraining themselves until the campaign was nearly closed, they laid themselves open to the charge of resorting to a paltry political trick, not in the interest of Socialism, but in that of a declared anti-Socialist and a believer in competitive warfare. More than that, the "appeal" carried with it the assumption that Mr. Debs' candidacy was something to be trifled with by "believers in the co-operative commonwealth" to get votes for an insidious enemy of Socialism and that Mr. Debs himself was a demagogue. The "appeal" was thoroughly Democratic in conception and language. Bryan and his place-hunting followers were quite as capable of judging whether a vote for him was "a vote in aid of the Co-operative Commonwealth" as were Pomeroy & Co., and the Bryanites never dreamed of such a thing. That some of them have talked Socialism (without understanding it) is quite true. But that was done with the same motive and for the same purpose that has always and everywhere actuated the Democratic party in its onslaughts and slaughter of new political movements. The "Socialists" who merely mouth Socialism but do not vote for it, may as well understand that Democratic trickery and trading will not prevail against the Social Democratic party.

How "plausibly" they appealed to voters to support Bryan because he was a "Socialist," knowing that the statement was wholly false! They voted. And where are they now? Who lost his vote? The Socialist who voted for Socialism or the poor duped slave who wanted to "save his vote" by (as the returns show) throwing it away? That appeal, too, was based upon a false assumption that a vote for Bryan was a vote for "public ownership of industry," and the men who wrote it were well aware that Mr. Bryan and the Democratic party stood absolutely opposed to that principle. The appeal was dishonest. But they voted for "part of what they wanted" and didn't get it. Let us hope that time will cure them of their small vanities. Social Democrats will go on voting for all they want.

Capitalists are capitalists, but there are divisions and sub-divisions of them if you wish to engage in the idle sport of analyzing their varied outward appearance. There is the strenuous capitalist, for instance, whom Teddy Roosevelt is enamored of, the capitalist that exploits rough shod. But the strenuous capitalist is a sort of bell-wether for the rest, and through his strenuousness they are saved the necessity of being themselves strenuous, and can travel, play golf and loll about country clubs and be professional gentlemen. So long as the workers do the work and yield up the increase to the spinning process of profit, interest and rent they are satisfied to furnish the article called respectability. And for fear Teddy's "strenuous life" might prove too seductive to this class, their interests are now conserved and guarded by a book just issued by a member of the upper leisure class, one Hobart Chatfield-Taylor. He calls it "The Idle Born," and of course it means the idle born in the upper class, and has nothing to do with those idly born into poverty. I venture to hope that the days of the idly born are numbered and that before many more years they may be all set to work at useful production, and we are sure that they as well as the rest of the world will be the better for it.

The Social Democratic party headquarters is still at 126 Washington street, Chicago, and no combination seems able to drive us out. The other night the theatre in the building was burned out, and with only a brick wall between the fire and the office we came out unscathed. Even fire and flood can not prevail against us. Address communications about organization to Theodore Debs, national secretary, 126 Washington street.

Next week's Herald will contain the list of nominations for the new executive board and a date fixed upon for the election.

NOTES AND COMMENT

Prosperity! Now we have it in black and white. In a special bulletin just issued the United States department of labor presents a table showing the yearly fluctuation in the rate of wages paid in this country from 1891 to 1900. The average of the wages paid in 1891 is taken as a basis for comparison and is considered as representing 100. Thus the wages for 1892 are placed at 100.30, an increase of one-third of one per cent. The following year the number was 99.32, or a falling off of about 1 per cent. In 1895 it was down to 97.88. In 1897 there was a slight increase, only to be followed by a decrease the year following. In 1899 the number rose to 101.54, an increase of 2 1/2 per cent. This year there was an increase over the number for 1891 of 3.43 per cent. And this is the great prosperity they are yelling about!

There have been times when people were starving in New York and out in Kansas corn was being burned for fuel. Every day there are people dying because of poverty, while all about them are others who have a superabundance. This is civilization under the capitalist system. Down in Mexico they are burning rosewood and mahogany for fuel, while in this part of the land those woods are considered too expensive to put into the furniture used by the people. It's a bad system.

The vote cast for the candidates of the democratic party in the Arlington (Mass.) district ran about 175 for each, except that cast for state representative. The Social Democrats had nominated for that office Comrade Gillespie. He had two opponents, representing the old parties. Only thirty-seven democrats voted for the candidate of their party, the rest supporting the republican to beat Gillespie, who polled 302 votes. In a square battle Gillespie would have been elected.

Comrade F. O. McCartney has challenged A. H. Washburn, the anti-Socialist of Massachusetts, to a joint debate on Socialism to take place as soon after election as possible. By-the-by, it may not be generally known that McCartney has the honor to have made the first Japanese convert to Socialism. This was when they were fellow students at a New England institution. Since that time great gains have been made in the spread of Socialism in Japan.

A bright, new star in the galaxy of Social Democratic publications is the Utah Socialist, issued from Salt Lake City. It is published weekly at $1 a year, subscriptions to be sent to P. O. Box 816. The growth of the party press is an evidence of a sure foundation for our coming victories. Already the Socialist papers are supplanting those of the old populist party.

The Hearstian American has been showing its hand in great style since the election. The strike of the building trades was a blunder. Pullman was the friend of the laboring man, the platform it supported in three colors and a thousand shrieks was no good, and the only thing left for the working class to do is to "save." The American is a huge and howling fraud.

We have just received a copy of Dr. Herron's address delivered in September under the auspices of the comrades at Rockland, Mass. It was his first speech under the auspices of our party. It is neatly printed on excellent paper and can be had for 5 cents by writing Comrade C. W. White, Roxbury, Mass.

Ignorance is not bliss, though a hog may grunt approvingly as it wallows in the mud.

What Debs Sees

Capitalism Approaches Its Last Convulsions and Will Be Swept Out of Existence.

The St. Louis Chronicle of Nov. 7 printed the following telegram from Comrade Debs:

"Editor Chronicle: From all indications the republican party continues in power four years more. During this period capitalism will reach the climax of its development, and before the next McKinley administration closes the most disastrous panic the country has ever known will paralyze industry in every department of activity.

"Overproduction, based upon underconsumption, will glut the markets and make the crisis inevitable. McKinley and prosperity will be swept over the precipice of commercial and industrial ruin, and the republican party cannot shirk the responsibility for it.

"This will be one of the last convulsions of capitalism before the social revolution sweeps it out of existence.

"The personal friends of Mr. Bryan should congratulate him upon his defeat. Had he been elected his administration would have been overwhelmed with disappointment and disaster. The next four years will witness the development of Socialism to continental power and proportions.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL STUDIES BY FOLKMAR

A New Book of Great Interest to the Student of Sociology—Critical Observations

By Isador Ladoff

Lesson in Anthropological Philosophy, Its Application to Positive Morality: Daniel Folkmar, Doctor of Social Sciences, Professor of Anthropology at the University of Rennes, formerly lecturer at University of Chicago. Paris, Librairie C. Reinwald, Schleicher freres, editeurs, 15 Rue des Saints-Peres, 15, 1900, tous droits reserves.

Every builder needs building material, and it is certainly a useful occupation to make bricks, shape stones, prepare mortar, etc. But the work of the architect in combining the bricks, stones, etc., into the shape of a noble edifice is of a higher degree of usefulness than mere brick making, stone cutting, etc.

In the dominion of science there are hosts of useful workers who diligently engage themselves in collecting and stating facts, observing phenomena, experimenting—in short, in preparing the raw materials, the bricks, stones and mortar, of the noble edifice of science. These minute pieces of detail work are usually scattered chaotically in booklets which are destined to oblivion and in different periodicals. But now and then a scientist with an architectonic intellect arises who collects, shifts and combines this raw material into a grand artistic whole and creates an epoch in science.

Dr. D. Folkmar's book belongs to that class of architectonic structural work, the facts, the observations—in short, the raw material, does not represent anything new. But their combination and the light in which they are put in the "Lessons" is new and original. The idea to combine all the branches of science about men into one general science is undoubtedly a great and fruitful one. Men of science are as a rule too apt to short-sightedness, to exaggerations of the universal importance of some small branch of science, while minds able to grasp a general, broad and deep, truly philosophic conception of life are rare. It would be beyond the scope of this letter to enter into detailed philosophic methods of the fruitfulness of broad generalizations and philosophic methods of thought in social sciences. Suffice it to note here the lamentable divorce between economics and general sociology. What would we think, for instance, about an astronomer who would refuse to recognize mathematics? What would be our opinion of an osteologist who would insist that the skeleton is all there is to be studied in the human body and refuse to recognize as a science anatomy and physiology? Economics form the skeleton of the organized human society, while sociology is to the science of economics what mathematics is to astronomy. Meanwhile we must meet many a sociologist who considers it beyond his dignity to study economics and so-called economists for whom sociology is a terra incognita. It is just as preposterous to maintain that society is founded solely on economic principles as to ignore the economic element in human society altogether. Sociology or philosophical anthropology (it was always my conception of sociology that it ought to cover the whole field of knowledge about mankind) needs a Darwin, and I sincerely hope that Dr. D. Folkmar will prove to be this Darwin.

The table of contents of the book will show the scope of the subjects treated by the author. "The necessity of a positive system of morality. The new anthropology as a basis. Classifications of sciences and arts. Contributions of non-anthropological sciences. Division of anthropology. Classifications of human activities. Method and materials. Criticism of anthropological and social sciences. The soul. The individual. The primary activities. The secondary activities. Syntheses and hypotheses. Applied anthropology. System of positive morality." As the reader will readily conclude from the mere table of contents, the book comprises a wide range of ideas and facts related to each other as ideas and facts of human life and strife. The central thought of the book is the unification of all sciences about mankind in one great mother science—anthropological philosophy. The cardinal principle of the work of Dr. D. Folkmar is the application of the results in the entire philosophical system to practical life. In other words, the author insists on the moral aspect of sciences about men. He does not recognize the principle of science for science's sake, but considers the aim and purpose of social sciences to serve humanity by improving the material condition, a moral and mental elevation of the masses. Examining the final purpose of individual life, he considers it only as a means of attaining the higher purposes of the race and universe.

Dr. D. Folkmar is a materialist in philosophy, and recognizes only a national basis for conduct. He coined a new term for the science of human conduct—the science of praeology. The author's conception of social science is quite original and new. It is a conception leading to Socialism, if not Socialistic in itself. Socialism, if not Socialistic in itself, is nothing else but the art of sociology, as we said elsewhere, the application of the results of social science to the practical needs of human life. The ethical or moral element on which the author insists is likewise favorable to the Socialistic trend of mind. Socialism demands justice first and above all. The capitalistic system is criticised and condemned by Socialistic thinkers chiefly on account of its crying injustice and immorality. We hope that the valuable book of Dr. D. Folkmar will soon appear in English, and in this way be put within the reach of the English-reading public.

As to critical remarks, I must limit myself to two points. It seems to me that the book would only gain if the material could be better digested. There are quite a few unnecessary repetitions in the book. Another that struck me was the too literal, I am almost tempted to say vulgar, conception of the so-called principle of the survival of the fittest, as it appears in some places in the book. The so-called principle of the survival of the fittest is the stumbling block for many, while others attribute to it a meaning which is not only not Darwinian, but directly anti-Darwinian. Darwin meant to say, in a somewhat unguarded manner, that living organisms depend for their existence on the environment. Even animals, however, are able to a limited extent to modify their environment favorably for their existence. The adaptation to the environment does not always mean a step forward. There are quite a number of cases on record where adaptation meant degeneration. Applying the principle of survival to human society, we have to keep in mind that if anything distinguishes man from animals, it is his ability to change his environment to suit his progress. The survival of the fittest in human society means, therefore, in many cases degeneration. Jesus Christ was not the fittest for his time in the vulgar sense of the word, but Judas was. Can there be any question as to which represents the highest type of humanity? The so-called races are exterminated by the higher Christian, civilized nations in the name of Christianity, civilization and Darwinism. Christianity and civilization are empty sounds in the lips of practical politicians, and Darwin would repudiate the construction of his generalization in a sense so deeply unethical and grossly unphilosophical. Even if we admit for a moment, for the sake of argument, that brutal force and cunning, as displayed by the first colonists of the United States, for instance, were justified when applied to the extinction of the Indian, because he was of a lower race, who is to judge impartially, who would decide the question about which is the lower and which is the higher type? The Indian certainly does not consider himself lower in any way than the pale-faced intruder. But the colonist was judge and executor, and he did what other animals do—killed the weaker. There is enough of zoology in human society. But why justify it by insulting great human geniuses like Darwin by attributing to them mean and unscientific views? What we have to care about and work for is to change our social institutions in such a way as to make men more human and less zoological, so to speak.

Capitalist Slave Labor

Since all people in common depend upon the sources and tools of production, there can be no individual liberty save these sources and tools belong to the people in common. There can be no social peace and sanity, no full liberty of the human soul, so long as some people own that upon which all people depend. All that can be said against slavery can also be said against the private ownership of economic sources and tools; for the private ownership of the common sources and machinery of life is nothing less than a substantial ownership of human beings. No man is free so long as he is dependent upon some other man for the chance to earn his livelihood. If a man owns my bread, or owns that which I must have in order to get my bread, he owns my moral being, unless I choose to revolt and starve. Private ownership of the earth and its productive machinery means private ownership of the people who live on the earth. He who sells his labor power for wages sells himself; for his labor power is his life. The wages system is merely an advance in the slave system, but it is no fit system for free men; and there can be no true freedom for all men until there is not another hiring left under the sun. The labor of the world is still essentially slave-labor. There is not a wage earner on the earth, tonight, who is not in some degree debauched in soul, even in spite of himself, by his dependence upon the private buyer of his labor. So long as some men own that upon which all men depend, the owners and the dependents are alike corrupted, enslaved and robbed. Yet our whole industrial system rests upon this power of private capital to legally appropriate the fruits of the labor of society.—Herron.

OUTLINE OF THE CLAIMS OF SOCIALISM

Would Widen the Principle of Combination to Take in All Industries and All the People

By Frederick O. McCarty

The Social Democratic Party, viewed from the ethical standpoint, is the political expression of the attempt to realize in the realm of industry the principle of human brotherhood. Socialism would replace the method of competition by the method of co-operation, and substitute the principle of private ownership in the means of production and distribution by the principle of collective ownership.

Viewed from a scientific standpoint, Socialism is the result of careful and profound study of the growth of industrial and social institutions and methods. These studies were made primarily by such men as Marx, La Salle and Engels and have been verified as to their results by leading minds of both England and America. Progress is the law of all life. Men were first savages, little above the brutes. They lived in a state of continual warfare. The victors devoured the vanquished. Slavery was the next era in which the conquered served the conquerors. Feudalism replaced slavery, the serfs being granted more liberties than the slaves, though they were tied to the soil. Feudalism was replaced by capitalism, and capitalism will be succeeded by Socialism. Capitalism was introduced by the invention of machinery and the consequent perfecting of the factory system. Under the capitalistic system the few own the tools of production and the many are dependent upon them for the right to work. The workers applying their energies to the machines which were invented by society, or to the land which should be the common heritage of all men, receive only a portion of the values which they produce, in the shape of wages. Wages tend downward to the point where the workers receive the bare means of subsistence. This downward trend in wages brought about by the invention of machinery, the perfecting of the factory system and the maturing of the trust system. The machine and the trust are both labor-saving devices. They displace laborers. The displaced laborers compete with those who are employed and wages go down. On the other hand, the class which owns the tools of production, land and machinery, appropriates to itself all the values created by labor above the cost of the subsistence of the toilers. This value is appropriated by means of rent, profit and interest. The first period of capitalism was marked by the competition of the small capitalists among themselves. The stronger or more cunning survived. Now in the second and last period of capitalism the strong ones, having found the method of competition to be wasteful and unscientific, not based on common sense nor utility, have combined. The principle of combination is an advance on the method of competition. It means the increase in capital which can build great machines, wonderful in their power of producing commodities. The trust system means centralization, the organization of labor, and economy in the expenditure of labor power.

But the trust system also means that a few men finally own all the wealth of this nation. The concentration of wealth in the hands of the few, means the destruction of democracy and the rule of plutocracy. It means a far-reaching and unendurable tyranny. It means that all of the institutions of the nation will come under the control of the wealthy few. It means, on the other hand, that the millions of the people will sink into poverty, increased dependence, ignorance, vice, crime, despair and death.

We cannot as a nation return to competition, nor can the nation endure the trust system under private ownership. We cannot as a nation go backward to the first period, we cannot stay where we are, we must therefore go forward. Socialism would maintain the principle of combination used by the trusts, but would widen its application until it takes in all industries and embraces all the people. We advocate, therefore, a universal trust system in which every man, woman and child in the nation shall have equal ownership. The invention of machinery will reduce the hours of labor, but it will not reduce the income of the laborer, for the increased productive power of the machine will balance the reduction in the hours of work.

The True Road to Leisure

Free Society, an anarchist paper says: "The great error of Socialists as well as of bourgeois political economy, lies in assuming that man is always to spend his life in the cellar. It forgets that man is man and merely regards him in one of his relations, that of an economic factor."

The great error of the anarchists is that they see the wonderful productivity of modern society, a productivity the fruits of which are monopolized or legally hogged by a possessing class by reason of its ownership of the forces of production, and they imagine that with the absence of all social regulation, this same productivity would keep giving man a chance to cultivate the finer graces of life. Being extreme individualists the anarchists overlook the fact that the abundance produced today is produced by associated labor and under certain social restraints which could never be entirely abolished even under socialism. For the very nature of associated machine production itself indicates why it must demand certain yieldings of personal freedom and social irresponsibility from the individual. Our wonderful productivity has not come about by chance or by design. It has come through an industrial evolution or unfoldment leading up to the present associated labor. To abandon this association would be to throw over entirely the present great productivity. The anarchist looks at the bird and the wild beast and knowing there is a natural plenty on the earth wonders why man, too, cannot be free from all care and be sure of his food and shelter. He might, but through civilization and culture his natural wants have been multiplied a thousand fold. These satisfactions he does not want to forego. He likes his books, his opera, his factories, his automobiles and his railroads. To make every man a law unto himself would bring a chaos, no matter how much the anarchist might dream that it would not. And if every man was a law unto himself present day production would cease, for the individual could not build the mighty and ponderous machines of production, much less individually own them. And if such were possible, he would have to devote all of his waking hours to work.

Social Democrats want freedom too, but they are not foolish enough to think that it can be had by an anarchist's fiat, or by setting aside our present organization of machinery.

Free society, cites William Morris' story of "News From Nowhere" as a picture of the future society. "News From Nowhere," beautiful and inspiring as it is, pictures a medieval like society, in which machine production has no apparent place. This was due largely to Morris' passion as an artist for hand wrought things and his Ruskin-like feeling against "machine made art" as expressed in even the most insignificant of household articles. Only an anarchist dreamer would take "News From Nowhere" literally.

All great civilizations have been based on slavery, that is, the favored ones have had leisure to become cultured by reason of the enforced and abject toil of the many. Wage slavery, the latest form, came as the successor to chattel slavery. Now, the Socialists want to abolish wage slavery and to substitute the slavery of the machine in its place. To do this, so that all can benefit from it, the machines must be owned by the people collectively and managed and operated with an avoidance of the wastes and interferences of the competitive warfare due to conflicting private interests. So long as the forces of production are privately owned and the more the machines assume the drudgery of production the greater the hardship of the workers, who are thus crowded from the factories. Even an anarchist ought to be able to see this. With the burden of toil placed upon organized machinery, man could be, truly, something more than a mere economic factor.

The Patient Donkey

The laboring man may be likened unto a donkey. He is patient, much enduring, and a bearer of burdens.

Let us notice this donkey as he goes on his way with drooping head and slow and wearied step. There is a heavy burden on his back. It is composed of capitalists. They are of large stomachs and much fatness.

It seems as if he can hardly go. He staggers under his heavy load and sometimes he does halt and causes a great commotion. But he is always persuaded to begin his journey anew.

He draws the attention of the democratic and republican politicians. They pass lengthy resolutions of sympathy, and express their undying love for him. They gather around him and amid a great deal of confusion and discussion endeavor to arrange his burden so that it will ride easier. Some say it is placed too high and others say too low. Some say too far this way or too far that. The republicans say that the capitalists ought to sit close together. The democrats, being opposed to trusts, say they should sit far apart.

Still the donkey staggers on the same as before.

A group of Socialists meet him and are filled with compassion. They say, "Let us take these fellows off his back." The republicans and democrats begin to clamor and shriek: "Do you want to ruin him? Don't you know he can't live without somebody to ride on his back?"

But the Socialists proceed to kick the capitalists off, and the donkey gallops lightly away with the most cheerful countenance he has ever exhibited.

Jeffersonian Democracy

A comrade writes to express the opinion that this "fetich of 'Jeffersonian democracy'" that people are so prone to prate about ought to be vigorously met by the Social Democrats, as it misleads a good many people who would otherwise take their places with the actual democrats. Right you are, comrade. Jeffersonian democracy is a sham and should be exposed on all possible occasions. That sort of democracy would leave the exploitation of labor, the monster crime of the ages, just where it is today. The character of some of the men who howl for Jeffersonian democracy throws a flood of light on the subject and should in itself be sufficient warning to the laboring class. Jefferson believed that all that was necessary to bring happiness and abundance to the people was to leave them free to fight each other under the system of competition—the dog-eat-dog system. Jefferson was wise in his generation, but today, in the light of later developments, he is a musty back number. His admirers regard the following quotation from his first inaugural address as embodying the essence of Jeffersonian democracy:

"A wise and frugal government, which shall restrain men from injuring one another, shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned. This is the sum of good government; and this is necessary to close the circle of our felicity."

Careful examination of the above will show how pitifully inadequate it is.

How much clearer is this subjoined quotation from John Adams:

"When the working poor are paid in return for their labor only as much money as will buy them the necessities of life their condition is identical with that of the slave who receives those necessities first hand; the former we call could be arranged, and the result was the difference is imaginary only."

And yet we hear nothing about Adams' democracy. If we are to worship the gropings of the past, let us give Adams a little credit, also.

A Capitalistic Spellbinder

Conscious capitalism is in a perpetual hornet's nest of criticism and inspection these days and to meet the situation has put forth a horde of sophistry-mouthers in the hope of checking the advance of the universal interest and sympathy in the labor cause. Thus one Frederick P. Bagley recently appeared before a Woman's club in a western city and delivered himself of this piece of wisdom:

"The cold, hard facts of a natural development of the competitive system are here to be met by society with cool, clear thinking, in order to solve the problems that have arisen. There is a striking similarity between organized capital and organized labor—the question which naturally arises is this: Are their aims similar? The trusts of capital are working for themselves, not humanity, but are the labor trusts trying to better conditions for mankind or themselves? The policy of the labor unions themselves has been not of forcing in, but of keeping out, others, thus seeking to benefit the labor market, not for toiling humanity, but for the few who are their members."

But Mr. Bagley didn't have things all his own way. There was at least one woman present who could not be fooled. She said:

"Capital is organized to increase the wealth of those having more than plenty; the workingman organizes because his is a fight for bread—for life. For instance, the striking miners were compelled to strike."

Good for the woman! C. G. C.

The Father of Trusts

Charles R. Flint of New York, who is said to be the "father of the trusts," whatever that may mean, spoke at a manufacturers' dinner the other day on the use and abuse of trusts. And right glibly he rattled on about the woes of the rich and the blessings of the poor. For instance just listen to this:

"The wage-earners are today enjoying a higher standard of living and a larger measure of well-being than ever before in the history of the world. The railroad managers have rails and rolling stock; the miner has mines; the manufacturer has bricks, mortar and machinery, and most of them have debts, and many are mortgaged to the banks for savings; but the wage-earners in the United States have on deposit in cash in the savings banks, subject to call, $2,500,000,000."

Of course it doesn't matter as to the truth of this last statement, so long as it serves its purpose. Mr. Flint doesn't care. But listen further:

"One of the unfavorable features of our industrial situation is that the men of great constructive ability are passing away, and instead of there being a lack of opportunity, it will be difficult to find men to assume the arduous responsibilities of industrial leadership who have the knowledge, the judgment, the ability, and the integrity of Carnegie and Huntington, of Rockefeller and Field, of Armour and Vanderbilt—the thinkers, the doers, the organizers—men whose creations are the great landmarks in our industrial history."

Aren't it a pity!

The Lines are Drawn

Close students of the trend of events in this country in recent years, those who have not allowed their vision to be distracted by the little things of everyday life, but who have been able to look at the social and industrial situation in the mass, so to speak, have seen for some time that the inevitable issue of the near future in politics would be Socialism. The Democratic party has long ceased to have an historical mission and is doomed to disappear. The field will be left to the Socialists on the one hand and to the ultra-capitalist (Republican) party on the other hand. Just as the rapid disappearance of the middle class has left the possessors of wealth and those who are dispossessed standing squarely face to face, just so the Democratic party will cease to be a shield between the army of Social Democracy and the army of Capitalism.

And it will be Social Democracy that will drive the Democratic party from the field. It will thus clear the field for the battle royal with capitalism. That this is so can be easily seen from fairly recent events. In two cities in Massachusetts the Republicans and Democrats (yes, and the Prohibitionists) united to fight Socialism. In several places in the west they have done the same thing, where they thought our party was in danger of winning in a three-cornered fight. And we are not at all distressed by this. On the contrary, the more of it the better. The sooner we can force capitalism to draw together for a defensive fight, the sooner the big battle for the relief and the salvation of humanity can be fought. It is an unpleasant duty and it will call for heroes. But we do not shrink from it.

I know that some of you are indulging in the popular saying that Socialism might answer for a society of angels, but not for a society of human beings such as we are; that we must wait till we have a better brand of human beings before we can have Socialism. All of which is very much like the saying that it is not safe to cure a man of his disease until he gets well; or like saying that we will not come in out of the rain until we first get dry; or like refusing to abolish the devil in order that we may preserve the job of saving the people from him. It is a strange superstition that makes men regard what they know to be elementally good as dangerous in practice, and what they know to be elementally wrong as practically safe. Socialism strikes at the root of the chief cause of our unangelic conduct, and proposes to abolish that slavery and competition and capitalism which sends all its forces in the direction of making men brutal and dishonest.—Herron.

Answers to Correspondents

Editor Herald: Prof. Herron's utterances in the campaign just closed were wonderfully powerful. They help to establish the movement on the higher ground and will make our advance irresistible. We can all take new hope, all be inspired. Before such logic the fabrications and mythical morality of the prevailing rulers must fall to decay and obloquy. All hail to the Social Democratic party! Keep it on the true path. Temporarily with neither Pomeroy or Parsons capitalists, nor with the fellows who seek to capture the movement to re-inaugurate the hierarchical propaganda that has disgraced and obstructed Socialism in America in the past. Three cheers for the new Socialism! —B.

Your letter voices the right and the conquering spirit, but do not let us weaken our cause by speaking of "new" Socialism. Socialism or Social Democracy has not changed, although the auspices under which it is presented have become more wholesome.

"We live in the most favored land beneath the bending sky. We have all the raw materials and the most marvelous machinery; millions of eager workers seeking employment. Nothing is so easily produced as wealth; and no man should suffer for the need of it; and in a rational economic system poverty will be a horror of the past; the penitentiaries will be depopulated, and the shadow of the gallows will no longer fall upon the land. Co-operative industry carried forward in the interest of all the people, that is the foundation of the new social order; economic freedom for every human being on earth; no man compelled to depend on the arbitrary will of another for the right or opportunity to supply his material wants. There will still be competition among men; but it will not be for bread, it will be to excel in good works."—Debs.

Let dead hearts tarry and trade and marry, And trembling nurse their dreams of mirth, While we the living our lives are giving To bring the bright new world to birth. —Wm. Morris—Chants for Socialists.

The centralization of the wealth of the people in the hands of the few has been the poison of history, and has brought the decline or destruction of every nation; every civilization, every religion that has come to its end or decline. The pages of history are blood-red with the retribution that comes to the whole people through the centralization of wealth in the hands of a few; for centralized wealth is not prosperity but disease, congestion, and destruction.—Herron.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF AMERICA

THE NATIONAL PLATFORM

Adopted at the Indianapolis Convention, March, 1900

ATTITUDE TOWARD TRADE UNIONS

In accordance with our declaration of principles we declare that the trades union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the wage-working class. We recommend to the members of the Social Democratic party the following general rules:

- First—Join the union of your respective trade.
- Second—Assist in building up and strengthening the trade union movement.
- Third—Support the union labels of all crafts.
- Fourth—Educate your fellow-unionists on the question of Socialism and the labor movement, on economic and political lines.
- Fifth—It shall be your duty to work for the unity of the labor movement, thereby recognizing the fact that the emancipation of the working class can only be achieved by the united efforts of this class.
- Sixth—Educate the members of the unions in the principles of Socialism and induce them, individually, to affiliate with the Social Democratic party.
- Seventh—Trades unions are by historical necessity organized on neutral grounds, as far as political affiliation is concerned. The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for proletarian emancipation.

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

- First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.
- Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.
- The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.
- The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.
- The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.
- As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:
- First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

National Organization

Section 1. This organization shall be known as the Social Democratic Party of America, and its headquarters shall be located at such place as the national conventions of the party may appoint, or as may be fixed by the National Executive Board subject to a referendum vote.

Sec. 2. The Social Democratic Party of America shall be organized as follows:

- First—Local branches limited to five hundred members each.
- Second—A National Executive Board of nine members, five of whom shall be chosen from territory convenient to the national headquarters, and shall be called "resident members," and the remaining four shall be chosen, so far as possible, from other parts of the country. All members of the Executive Board shall have equal rights and powers; but the resident members shall have power to act and a majority of said resident members shall constitute a quorum. The non-resident members shall not be required to be present at all meetings of the board, but shall be kept advised of all proceedings of the board. The Executive Board shall be elected by the national convention.
- Third—The form of state organizations shall be left to the branches in the respective states.

FROM THE WORKERS

The Vote in Massachusetts

In all probability the Social Democratic party in Massachusetts becomes an official party this year. The candidate for governor will poll, I estimate, 12,000 votes, and 11,000 is the necessary 3 per cent this year. Whether this is to prove a misfortune or a blessing remains to be seen. Were we in Massachusetts a united, harmonious, thoroughly organized body, able to hold our own and anxious to keep the party high above the level of American ward politics, we could calmly face the dangers ahead. But I know a politician now, who knows nothing about Socialism beyond the way to pronounce the name, who declares that he is going to run on the Social Democratic ticket next year, and as he is backed by one of the largest corporations in the state I presume he can do it if he wants to.

Comrade MacCartney was re-elected by a largely increased plurality. Last year his plurality was 102 in a total vote of 1,100. This year the total vote was 1,800 and his plurality 218. But the Rockland comrades worked hard for it. We were somewhat disappointed over our failure to elect Comrade Gillespie of Whitman, but the boys have nothing to reproach themselves with. They worked like beavers. Gillespie carried two towns in the district, but in the third the Democrats voted for the Republican and Gillespie lost by 140 votes. Though we failed to elect, the result has demonstrated that the fourth and fifth Plymouth districts can be relied upon as strongholds for Socialism.

The vote for Debs will certainly reach 10,000, probably 11,000. With Boston and 50 towns still to hear from it amounts to over 8,000. There are many interesting things about this vote. For instance, Plymouth county, with 27,600 voters, gives 2,090 of it; Essex county, with 77,300 voters; gives 2,600; Worcester county, with 51,000 voters, gives 914; Norfolk county gives 684, and Suffolk, that is Boston, will probably give 2,000. Again, in many places the candidate for governor runs ahead of Debs. Almost invariably, in those places where we have only loyal branches or which have been reached by loyal branches the vote for Debs is equal to or a little ahead of that for governor. Your clean cut, straight Socialist will always vote a straight Socialist ticket, so I take it the above fact proves that a great many among the anti's and the unionists, while they voted the state ticket all right, were not class-conscious enough to resist the temptation of casting their votes for Bryan. Here is the way some of them stand:

Lyons	358	445
Worcester	283	305
Cambridge	114	146
Haverhill	1,281	1,720
Lawrence	219	318
Brockton	1,249	1,180
Rockland	216	109
Whitman	206	104
Fitchburg	250	202

Among the cities Boston has made the greatest gain, having jumped from 664 for governor last year to 1,600 this year. A good deal of this increase is, no doubt, because the people have at last learned our name.

While the total vote in the state has increased about 50 per cent, it has fallen off in certain districts. Great gains have been made, however, in all those places where the campaign has been carried on by the organizing committee of the loyal branches, in the same earnest, systematic and business-like way in which the whole campaign was carried on last year, and which has been proved to be the right way to reach the people of this part of the country at least.

Boston. MARGARET HAILE.

Trade Union Ingrates

To the shame of Terre Haute, Eugene Debs only received about 350 votes in this county, which has over fifty trades unions, many of which owe their existence entirely to his efforts. Pardon me while I give you a little ancient history of the trades union movement of this county.

When Eugene Debs was elected secretary of the then all but defunct B. of L. F., there were, I believe, three trades unions in this city—the typos, cigar-makers and the Sons of Vulcan, now the A. A. of L., S. & T. W. He not only built up the organization which he represented, but assisted in organizing various crafts in his home city. In 1890 he and a few others saw the necessity of a central body, and the Central Labor Union was organized with ten charter organizations. This body now has thirty-two affiliated organizations, and has the best quarters of any central body in the west. It occupies three floors of one of the principal business blocks, has a good library and reading room, which is open all the time, and is generally considered one of the most progressive labor organizations in the country. No little credit for this state of affairs is due to Comrade Debs. His time has always been at the disposal of the unions of his home, and the writer has frequently accompanied him through rain and snow to assist unions in trouble with his always timely advice, which was the result of his large experience in such matters. Next to him there is a little handful of workers who have made sacrifices for the cause of their brother toilers, and who have in this campaign devoted all their time and means to build up a Socialist movement in this county, and yet less than 400 of the workers of this county voted for the man who has been their champion in season and out of season for over twenty years. It is enough to make an old warhorse in the labor movement "lay down," but I am glad to say that the 400 who had the courage of their convictions are made of the kind of stuff that does not know how to run, and intend to stay right in the field until the battle is won. At least two of us have had offers to move to more promising fields, but we have decided to stay with the ship in Vigo county until we see the triumph of Socialism. While we expected better results, we take the matter philosophically, and the campaign for 1904 is already on. Ed. H. Evinger.

A Trader Expelled

At a meeting of the Denver Branch of the Social Democratic party, held Friday, Nov. 2, it was unanimously voted to strike from our membership list the name of Chas. M. Davis, congressional candidate for First district, on charges of violating the constitution of the organization by accepting nominations from other non-Socialist parties. The secretary was also instructed to publish the notice of the expulsion of C. M. Davis in the Denver daily papers and in the Social Democratic Herald.

Alfred Hick,

Vigo County Vote

The official count gives Debs 331 votes in Vigo county; 27 votes were given to the S. L. P., 20 of which I am confident were intended for our ticket, as there are not over five or six De Leontines in this county, who are located at Fontanett, a small mining camp, where a section of the S. L. P. existed some years ago. These votes intended for us will make the vote 350 at the lowest. The average vote cast at the last election was 220, making a gain of 130 votes. The union(?) men in this county cannot be found.

Fraternally, JAS. ONEAL.

We have received a copy of a new song written by Thomas H. West, entitled: "Stick to Your Union," and which was adopted as the official song of the American Federation of Labor. The music is spirited and the words voice the solidarity of labor.

The Debs-Herron pamphlet is positively the finest propaganda literature ever gotten out in this country. They are 5 cents each, or $2 by the hundred. They will be just as good after election as before.

About 4 o'clock one of the judges left his office, saying he had no more blanks to swear in unregistered citizens with. So we lost a number of votes.—J. P. Malcor, Spring Valley.

Socialists willing to assist in forming new branches of the Social Democratic party are requested to communicate with the secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

We are about to start a class in sociology, and you will hear from this county in the near future.—A. L. Roecker, Chilton, Wis.

Among the five-cent books, Debs' great speech on "Liberty," his address on "Prison Labor," and Hyndman's Socialism and Slavery, can be used effectively in propaganda. This office.

Get your friend that you are trying to convert to read The Co-Operative Commonwealth, by Lawrence Grovland. You can have it for fifty cents by sending to this office.

The existing system is unspeakably cruel; the life currents of old age and childhood are the tributaries of the bottomless reservoir of private profit. The face of capitalist society is blotched with the effects of its diseased organism.—Debs.

DEMOCRATS AGAIN GIVE THEIR VOTE TO CAPITALISM

A Democratic Candidate Urges His Friends to Vote for a Republican to Beat MacCartney for the Massachusetts Legislature

THE LATEST ELECTION RETURNS

Notes From Massachusetts

It will be several weeks before the official count in many states is completed. In the meantime the returns so far received enable us to give approximately what the national vote will be. The estimate given herewith is based upon authentic returns from several of the states casting the largest vote, together with reports from many localities in other states. With the understanding that the table is subject to revision, and that more complete returns may in a few states show either small losses or great gains, The Herald gives the following as the nearly correct Social Democratic vote of 1900:

Alabama	500
Arkansas	300
California	10,000
Colorado	3,000
Connecticut	1,500
Florida	500
Georgia	300
Iowa	2,500
Indiana	3,000
Illinois	9,600
Idaho	1,000
Kansas	3,500
Kentucky	1,200

Although we failed to elect Comrade Gillespie of Whitman to the legislature from the Fifth Plymouth district as we had expected, we do not feel very much disappointed after all, when we come to examine the figures and understand the circumstances. Later returns show that he fell short only 112 votes, instead of 140, as at first reported. His total vote was 842, just four less than the number which gave MacCartney a plurality of 218 in his district, and 53 less than Carey. His vote is 91 more than that which elected Carey two years ago; 168 more than that which elected Scates at the same time, and 140 more than that which elected MacCartney last year. He carried two of the three towns in his district easily, but lost in the third, Center Abington, as he did last year, although his vote in that town was quadrupled by the earnest, wisely directed work of the boys. Then why was he defeated? Well, the greatly increased total vote of a presidential year had something to do with it. The total vote, polled for representatives in his district was 1,905; in MacCartney's, 1,781, and in Carey's, 1,739. Then, too, Gillespie had practically only one antagonist: THE DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE HIMSELF STOOD AT THE FOOT OF THE STAIRS ALL DAY UNTIL THE POLLS CLOSED, URGING HIS FRIENDS AS THEY CAME IN TO VOTE FOR THE REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE IN ORDER TO DEFEAT THE SOCIALISTS. The result was that he, the democrat, received only 109 votes out of the 1,905. You see, it is becoming harder all the time to elect Socialists. The capitalist parties are wide awake to the fact that Socialists are hard to beat, and they govern themselves accordingly.

But perhaps a better idea of our real strength in the Fifth Plymouth district can be gathered from a glance at some other districts where good work was put in and hopes were high. The second column gives the number received by the man who was elected.

In Brockton:
Real.....476 Highest vote.. 847
Laird.....448 Highest vote.. 1,232
Bosworth...561 Highest vote.. 889

In Haverhill:
Scates.....707 Highest vote.. 1,255

In Newburyport:
Porter.....236 Highest vote.. 907
Johnson...276 Highest vote.. 631
Binley.....130 Highest vote.. 265

In Boston:
McCarthy...719 Highest vote.. 1,509
Dolf.....185 Highest vote.. 1,825
Ramin.....163 Highest vote.. 1,792

Carey's vote was 895, and his opponent's 844. MacCartney's was 840, and his nearest opponent's 628.

It is plain, therefore, that, although Comrade Gillespie was not landed this time, the Whitman-Abington district is entitled to rank as one of the staunchest strongholds of Socialism in this state. I see that the capitalist parties have taken note of the fact already. A recent lecturer in Boston "deplored the spread of Socialism as shown in such places as Haverhill, Rockland and Whitman." Whitman is in it, all right!

The record of Comrade McCarthy in Brighton (ward 25 of Boston) of 719 votes is remarkable, and shows that there is at least one corner of this conservative old city that is awake and keeping up with the procession. Brighton ought to have special attention during the coming year, and get the best that is going.

The Tenth Worcester district also did remarkably well, for a first time, as we expected it would. Eight months ago there was not a branch in the district. Now there are three, and a fourth in process. It is a double district, large and scattered, and therefore difficult to work up—yet with all these drawbacks, one of the candidates polled some 350 votes, I have not the figures by me. At any rate, such a good start has been made that the boys will work on throughout the coming year with an enlightened enthusiasm and, having a better knowledge of the field, will work with better effect.

The organizing committee met last Sunday in Boston. Several other comrades from out of town, who are not members of the committee, showed their interest in its work by attending the meeting. The organizer reported having spoken at forty-two meetings since the middle of September—that is, EVERY EVENING for six weeks—and that six new branches have been organized and several others under way. The secretary reported that during the campaign speakers had been sent to seventy-nine different meetings, under the auspices of loyal branches, and three under the auspices of Springfield branches. An encouraging and very welcome feature is that the loyal branches in Connecticut are co-operating with those in Massachusetts. The secretary also reported having written and sent upwards of 200 letters and telegrams on business of the committee, in regard to organizing, speakers, etc., during the campaign.

Ten thousand votes for Debs out of 400,000 cast for presidential candidates is all that Massachusetts gave. There are S. D. branches in some sixty odd cities and towns, out of the 353 in the state. We have as yet only scratched the surface of Massachusetts. The organizing committee realizes this fact, and has under consideration a comprehensive and business-like plan for getting at the large proportion of it that has not yet been touched. Such a plan in general outline, was evolved at the meeting on Sunday, and careful consideration is now being given to its details. By next meeting we hope to have the plan perfected, and to be in a position to call upon all the loyal branches in the state to aid us in carrying it out. Even though we do become an official party, the work of education and organization must go on throughout the whole year just the same—and more so. Nay, there is infinitely more need for education, and for intelligent and wisely directed effort now than ever before. The harvest is ripening fast—is ready for the sickle. Faint not, nor fail in courage, comrades. The task is great, but so is our united strength. "Give and it shall be given to you." The more you do, the more you are able to do. "It's the storm that makes the sailor, and the battle the soldier," and both that make the Socialist.

To All Socialists

Comrades: We are about to enter upon a municipal campaign in Brockton which will be your fight as well as ours. The eyes of the world are upon Massachusetts today; our loss is your loss, and our gain is a gain for "Socialism."

Our magnificent showing in the state campaign just passed has drained our treasury completely, and funds are absolutely necessary. All comrades who are in a position to help us, are requested to donate to our fund, at once, what you can. All donations must be forwarded to

THE CLAMOR FOR PEACE IN CAPITALIST SOCIETY

The Necessity of a Struggle Between Man and Man Has Practically Disappeared and With it the Moral Justification for Strife

PHILISTINE MORALITY OF CAPITALISM

By Isador Ladoff

Let us imagine a grain of dust whirling through endless space and inhabited by ridiculously small living atoms. If these tiny creatures would realize the colossal dance they participate in, they might lose their senses out of mere terror. Their fragile dwelling rushing through emptiness is kept together only by the mutual attraction of its parts on one side and of similar grains of dust, in company with which it is rapidly moving toward an unknown goal on the other side.

This grain of dust called the earth, together with its inhabitants, is rotating around its own axis and at the same time moves around the sun with the astounding rapidity of 600,000 miles in twenty-four hours. Finally the entire system of the visible starry world is rushing into space with the hardly imaginable rapidity of sixty million miles in a year. We move every single second two miles without any moment of rest, the earth is eternally moving on and on, as if in search of some unreachable but irresistible attraction. The earth can never get at the bottom of the awful abyss called space, and millions of years of constant motion does not make a difference of a hair's breadth in the position of the earth from the point of view of eternity. These infinitesimal living atoms—human beings clinging tenaciously to the rotating grain of dust—the earth. O how small and insignificant are they from the point of view of eternity! Significant as the human race is from this point of view, it is a giant in one respect, being attributed with the divine gift of reason. Human reason is capable of grasping the whole world, to measure the distances between stars and to determine the velocity of their motion.

Ought not these reasoning beings realize their role in nature and bend all their energies in the direction of mutual helpfulness, good will and fellow-feeling?

Ought not they devote the small space of time allotted to them as a gift of life in the most rational manner to acts of fraternal love, peace and co-operation? Ought not the consciousness of the stern and unchangeable laws of the inanimate world weld them together in emulation, in spiritual achievements, noble aspirations, scientific research and fine arts for the general benefit of the race?

Ought not Justice, Freedom and Peace be the dearest treasures of humanity?

The past and present of the human race once represented, however, the very opposite picture of struggle, strife and war between men and man; tribe and tribe, cast and cast, class and class. All the ingenuity of men is bent towards the invention of new methods and tools of annihilation and murder. Arrows are dipped in poison, swords sharpened, fire and iron put into the service of death, armies drilled and organized, national, race and class hatreds cultivated artificially. Even science and fine arts are turned into subservience to the moloch of war and strife.

The most sacred feelings are profaned in the interests of cold-blooded murder on a grand scale called war. Civilization, culture, Christianity are often claimed as demanding bloodshed. The grain of cosmic dust called the earth is soaked with the blood of the living atoms called national human beings. Nations boasting to represent the highest type of humanity are constantly engaged in the so-called art of war. We kill off the so-called lower races in order to civilize them, to Christianize them, to raise the level of their culture. We kill off the lower races just because we love them so dearly and want them to be just as good (if not any better than) we are ourselves. We feel deeply our obligation towards our younger brothers in humanity and if we trash the life out of them in our unselfish effort to raise them to our level of culture and civilization it is of course not our fault. The fittest always survive and we are fortunately the fittest.

Let us, however, for a moment pause and reflect in the endeavor to find the clue to the fatal incongruity between the ideals of peace and fraternity so deeply woven into human nature and the sordid zoological self-destruction practiced by the human race from time immemorial till the twentieth century—the age we so childishly boast about.

The strongest instinct in human nature is the instinct of self-preservation. We want to live and all the efforts of our body and mind are devoted to the creation of conditions favorable to the preservation of our life. These conditions are modifications of our environment. Our environment consists of the sub-human and human world. On the lowest stages of civilization the work of creating an artificial environment out of the elements found in nature was quite frequently a very hard task. The primitive tools and undeveloped skill of the primeval man were unequal to that task, and it was quite natural that killing off a fellow-being was considered as quite legitimate when done for the purpose of preserving one's life. This was the epoch of cannibalism, pure and simple. The strong was considered as the fittest, as in our time; but in a more narrow sense. With the advance of civilization this double struggle with the sub-human and human environment was changing gradually in intensity. The more perfected tools and skill enable men to master nature with great ease. As far as the conquest of natural forces is concerned, the creation of the artificial environment—necessary for the existence of men—is almost a solved problem. The necessity for a struggle between man and man has practically disappeared and with it the moral justification of such a strife. The ideals of eternal peace and brotherhood, as all human ideals, are the outgrowth of actual material conditions. They are, however, always the advance agents of a higher stage of culture and civilization. The ideals of a preceding age form the fabric of actual conditions of the following age.

Our present social status represents a chaotic conglomeration of archaic and germs of future institutions. The archaic institutions, institutions which outlived their utility, prevail. Chief among these archaic institutions is the economic basis of society, the basis of a struggle between man and man in contrast to the future co-operation of men against nature. As long as the principle of so-called competition and, consequently, exploitation, the mercantile ideas about profit and gain—the industrial individualism and subjugation of the producer to the drones of society will prevail—eternal peace has of necessity to remain a beautiful dream. Indeed, it is futile to expect the cessation of war in a society founded on struggle and strife. To talk about abolition of war in our present mercantile and capitalistic society means to indulge in cant. The realization of the beautiful dream of eternal peace is left (as many other beautiful dreams) to a higher stage of culture and civilization, when men will leave behind them forever the inheritance of barbaric ages—the so-called struggle for existence between men and men; when commodities will be manufactured, not for profit and speculation, but for use and enjoyment; when man's power will not be degraded into a purchasable commodity; when the soil and all its bounty will be considered the legitimate inheritance of all human beings, irrespective of race, class or sex distinctions; when reason and the best instincts of human nature will be the sole guides of conduct.

Eternal peace is possible only in a society founded on the principle of brotherly co-operation. Philistine morality, preaching and exhortation, are as little likely to bring about eternal peace as conjuring. Without a revolution of economic conditions we may clamor till doomsday; peace, peace, but there will be no peace.

National Lecture Fund

The following resolution has been received from Branch 32 at Webb City, Mo.:

"Resolved, That the Social Democratic Herald be requested to start a national lecture fund for the purpose of keeping good lecturers in the field for the next four years and request all those favorable to Socialism to contribute one dollar each for that purpose."

Comrade Roney, secretary of the branch, writes that the resolution was passed unanimously. The suggestion is a good one and the Herald will gladly assist in every way possible to carry it out. It is well, however, to direct attention to the fact that, aside from recording of the uncompromising Socialist vote in the late election, the best work done during the campaign was that of organizing new branches. An energetic continuation of this work is of the highest importance to the future of Socialism in the country. In order that it may be successfully done a national fund for organization is necessary. The Herald, therefore, suggests that as the needs of the movement extend to both education and organization, any fund that may be raised would better be applied to maintaining both organizers and lecturers in the field. We welcome suggestions from the comrades on this important matter and in the meantime acknowledgment of contributions for the purpose in view will be made in The Herald.

Mendicant Clerks

The daily newspapers of Chicago were careful not to say anything previous to election that would disturb the serenity of the voters in their belief in prosperity. No sooner had the election passed, however, than daily revelations were made of the fact that thousands of wage earners in the city were in the coils of money-lending sharks, and that for these thousands at least prosperity meant they had been forced to borrow money to live and that for the use of it they were paying exorbitant rates of interest.

It now appears that large numbers of clerks in some of the leading business houses of the city are not paid sufficient by their employers to enable them to get along without calling upon money lenders for help. Over a year ago the firm of Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Co. found it necessary to warn the employees against borrowing money, and the other day John V. Farwell & Co. notified each employee that "any legitimate case of need should be laid before the manager, who will give it attention." The first-named firm also set aside "a fund for the purpose of meeting the immediate needs of the employees."

Here is a strange condition of affairs. The people employed by two of the most distinctively representative business concerns of the city are, by the indirect admission of the managers, not paid enough to enable them to maintain the standard of living and respectability which their particular avocation requires and are compelled to become the victims of conscienceless money sharks. If times are so wonderfully prosperous, why should those employed as clerks in first-class houses be in danger of immediate need? If their compensation was equal to their deserving and their hard work, if it comported with the claims made by the class which profits most from prosperity, there should be no hardship among them. But we are assured only a few days after the election in which "prosperity" and a "full dinner pail" were the principal catch phrases, that "thousands of young men" are next to mendicants—while the profits of the employers go on accumulating.

A member of one of the firms gave the following as the experience of one of his "young men" with the money lender:

"We had one case where a young man borrowed $33 and gave his notes. He secured actually on the loan, $22. For the use of the money he paid $3.50 a month, which payments were kept up long after the notes were matured, or any part of it remained unpaid. In this instance, he paid all but $11 of his indebtedness at maturity, but still, for four months afterward, he kept on paying $3.50 for the use of the remaining $11. I personally settled that up for the young man."

debtedness at maturity, but still, for four months afterward, he kept on paying $3.50 for the use of the remaining $11. I personally settled that up for the young man."

Trades Union Traitors

"O for a tongue to curse the slave,
Whose treason, like a deadly blight,
Comes o'er the councils of the brave
And blasts them in their hour of might."

The curse of labor has been the treason of self-constituted or chosen leaders—who for pelf lead astray men who repose confidence in their integrity.

The history of organized labor has been blotched on almost its every page by the duplicity of its leaders, who, watching their opportunities, and on the alert for bribes, put themselves in communication with labor's enemies to betray a cause which, with loud professions of loyalty, they held to be dear to them. In the entire vocabulary of invection the right word has not been coined to express deserved detestation of such abnormal scoundrels. Their methods involve every shade of hypocrisy. In league with capitalism and potential in the councils of labor, they are in a position to exert an influence which capitalism is quick to acknowledge and remunerate, and while labor realizes that its plans are frustrated and that demoralization has usurped the place of order, and defeat is the penalty for misplaced confidence in men whom it trusted but to be betrayed, the victims of treason, resolve, like courageous men, to repair their fortifications, renounce and denounce their false and bribed leaders, enlist in the war for the right, bury their dead and fight their battles over again.

It is the old, old story. Capitalism fully comprehends the value of a traitor to the cause of labor. This policy is—divide and conquer. To accomplish this they transform labor leaders into traitors, as the British transformed Benedict Arnold, by the omnipotent power of money, and once hypnotized and under the spell of capitalistic intrigue, the one ambition of the traitorous labor leader is to deliver his "cattle" dehorned and powerless into the hands of those who want their votes that the fetters of wage slavery may be the more securely riveted upon them.

Never, perhaps, in the history of labor, has an opportunity been offered to wage war more resplendent with hope for better conditions than was offered by the recent election, and never were the enemies of labor more active to blast such hopes. But alone, capitalism, however powerful it may be, is not sufficiently potential to arrest the advancing force of labor. To call out troops with shotguns, and the issuing of injunctions with prisons looming up in the distance, no longer frighten working men. On the contrary, they seem to arouse exasperation and make labor more courageous and defiant. As a result labor leaders must be purchased and transformed into traitors. This done, the miscreants begin their nefarious work of demoralization. The springs where labor slaked its thirst are poisoned; aspirations for high attainments are checked and hopes are blasted; hypocrisy and dissimulation confuse the minds of working men, until they are persuaded to vote for their enemies and accomplish their own ruin. This sort of treason to labor is now rampant throughout the country, while the traitors, pocketing the price of their treachery, witness the degradation of their victims with serene satisfaction.

But, however much such scoundrelism may be deplored, it is not without its compensations.

Labor, now the battle is over, will proceed to reconstruct its forces. It will choose new leaders. Its principles, giving it a firm and indestructible foundation, it will rebuild its citadels and forts and making new resolves for future campaigns, will fight on until capitalism disappears to be remembered only as a fossil monstrosity that once afflicted the earth.

The vacancy in Berlin, due to the death of Liebknecht, has resulted in the victory of the Socialist candidate, Ledebour, who received 53,896 votes out of a total of 65,832. This is remarkable, as it was feared that there might be an increase in the opposition, but the bourgeois parties received 27,905 votes in 1898, and only 11,618 this time. The constituency is a large one, and there has been no change since 1871. In any fair system of redistribution the Socialists would increase largely, but as it is, there is a probability of their electing 100 members next time.

It would be a difficult undertaking to keep tab on the fellows who are out with plans for new political parties. One of the latest reported is from George Fred Williams, who is to form a new "silver" party with Bryan as leader. Will "Socialists" who voted for Bryan—and threw away their votes—stand for that?

The cashier of the Newport (Ky.) bank who has just started out for a much-needed vacation made a clean sweep of everything, taking along with him a sum greater than the capital, surplus and reserve of the institution combined.

LESSONS IN ECONOMY FOR MEN WHO WORK

The Triumph of the Working Class in the Struggle to Live is the Abolition of the Dependence of All Classes

SURPLUS VALUE AND MARKETS

Production Can Only be Sustained by Consumption and Consumption is Limited by Wages

By Charles H. Vail

Socialism is the only economic salvation for humanity. It means a nobler and truer civilization. It thus represents the real interests of every person. But it does not stand for the economic interests of either division of the proprietary class, for their CLASS INTERESTS signify those measures which make for the perpetuity of their class. Socialism means the destruction of all classes. But the initiative must be taken by the proletariat, the workers; it is the mission of this class to inaugurate the new order. All advance has been made by class struggles, a class below overthrowing a class above. But the triumph of the working class is necessarily the abolition of all dependence, for it can only emancipate itself by socializing the means of production and distribution. There are thousands, however, of the other classes who are realizing the hopeless struggle and are joining the cause of progress.

The Socialist party, then, as representing the interests of the working class, calls their attention to the fact that the surplus product, which the capitalists are trying to sell abroad, is wealth which they have produced and which has been exploited from them through the wage system. Every dollar's worth of goods shipped abroad represents surplus value which has been appropriated from the product of the workers. How long will laborers rejoice at the opportunity of capitalists to sell foreign nations the things they themselves need?

The cry for foreign markets is the cry of a vicious system. Foreign markets only add to the profits of the profit seekers. Think of the absurdity of workmen pointing to the long list of exports and rejoicing because the products of their own toil, which have been fleeced from them, are being sold abroad to enrich the coffers of the capitalist class.

I protest, in behalf of the thousands of unfed, half-clothed and homeless workmen, against such a policy. What Socialists want is that these goods produced by labor should go to labor. IF EVERY MAN RECEIVED THE FULL PRODUCT OF HIS TOIL THERE WOULD BE NO NEED OF FOREIGN MARKETS.

Socialism would secure to the laboring class this wealth and so do away with the need for foreign markets, and it would also do away with the crises and industrial depressions which result from the accumulation of a surplus in the hands of the capitalist class.

As production is carried on for profit, it ceases as soon as profits are threatened. Production can only be sustained by consumption and consumption is limited by wages. The wages paid will not buy the product created, consequently a glut takes place and depression results. We are then confronted by a condition of overproduction, or rather under-consumption (for there can be no such thing as the former as long as men are in need). If laborers received the full product of their labor they would quickly dispose of the surplus. Until society is reorganized on a co-operative basis we shall experience the same fortunes that have befallen us for the last century—periods of so-called prosperity, followed by periods of depression and business stagnation.

The competitive system leads to disaster, not by a straight road, to be sure, but by a wave-like path—comparative prosperity alternating with industrial depression. These crises are of periodical occurrence. Industry runs in what is called the vicious circle of from seven to ten years. Beginning with the crisis of 1815, nine such catastrophes have afflicted this country; they are worldwide and nearly contemporaneous in all the great nations. The causes are inherent in the present system—the anarchy of private enterprise and the exploitation of labor.

It must be evident to every student of the economic question that the better times we now enjoy will be followed by harder times that we have yet experienced.

"Splendid Bayonet Work"

Every Sunday 20,000 parsons preach that "God hath made of one flesh all the nations of the earth." Then nearly every member of that army of whited incongruities proceeds to stimulate the worst and most brutal instincts of their hearers against every nation except that to which they belong. The morning placards announce "Splendid bayonet work," and the artisan sees and puffs his pipe, and the smug clerk sees it and jogs on, and the parson reads it over his breakfast, and the dainty miss hears of it and feels proud, and they are all pleased. And the workman and the clerk and the parson and the miss, because they may be completely dressed, and walk through paved streets and past plate-glass windows, consider themselves civilized; while the fact of their being pleased at "splendid bayonet work" proves them to be in their hearts the blackest and most vicious savages. —London Clarion.

MacCartney's Great Victory

The election was one of the most exciting for many years. The vote was unusually large even for a presidential year. The principal interest here was over the election of a representative to the next general court from the Fourth Plymouth district, which includes the towns of Rockland, Hanover and Hanson. The fight was conceded between J. B. White, the Republican candidate, and Frederic O. MacCartney, the candidate of the Social Democrats, who was elected here last year. Mr. MacCartney was re-elected again yesterday and carried the district by 218 plurality. His plurality last year was 102, and he shows a gain this year of 116 votes. His total vote in the district was 832. White received 612, while Perry, the Democratic candidate, polled over 300.

The result is a surprise, for while it was conceded that MacCartney would win out, it was expected that the vote would be very close. In Hanover MacCartney got 136 votes as against 93 last year, and in Hanson he got 102 votes, to 68 for White. White was severely knifed all over the district and especially so in his own town, Hanson. In Rockland MacCartney received 594 votes, as against 585 last year.

It was a notable victory for the Social Democrats, and they celebrated last evening in grand style. About 200 of them paraded the streets with brooms over their shoulders and headed by a drum corps. Colored fire was burned along the line of march, and there was lots of cheering and enthusiasm. The excitement kept up pretty near all night and it was well towards morning before the cheering died away. The Social Democrats and their friends were served free all night with hot coffee, sandwiches, pie and tonic at William Lawless' lunch room, and about 400 were dined. —Brockton (Mass.) Enterprise.

Revolution

The word "revolution," which we Socialists are so often forced to use, has a terrible sound in most people's ears, even when we have explained to them that it does not necessarily mean a change accompanied by riot and all kinds of violence, and cannot mean a change made mechanically and in the teeth of opinion by a group of men who have somehow managed to seize on the executive power for the moment. Even when we explain that we use the word revolution in its etymological sense, and mean by it a change in the basis of society, people are scared at the idea of such a vast change, and beg that you will speak of "reform," and not revolution.

As, however, we Socialists do not at all mean by our word revolution what these worthy people mean by their word reform, I can't help thinking that it would be a mistake to use it, whatever projects we might conceal beneath its harmless envelope. So we will stick to our word, which means a change of the basis of society; it may frighten people, but it will at least warn them that there is something to be frightened about, which will be no less dangerous for being ignored; and also it may encourage some people, and will mean to them not fear, but a hope.

Fear and hope—those are the names of the two great passions which rule the race of man, and with which revolutionists have to deal; to give hope to the many oppressed and fear to the few oppressors, that is our business. It is not revenge we want for poor people, but happiness; indeed, what revenge can be taken for all the thousands of years of suffering of the poor?—William Morris.

"Evolution by Atrophy"

Editor The Herald: In your list of books treating of sociology you have not mentioned one of the newest and most valuable books on this subject recently translated into English and published by Appleton & Co., New York. It is "Evolution by Atrophy," by Jean Demoor, Jean Massart and Emile Vandervelde, the last one being the young and talented millionaire leader of the Belgian Socialists. It might be well to mention this book in addition to the list you give. C. BOTKER.

In the issue of The Herald for Nov. 3 a contribution to the campaign fund was acknowledged from the "Eleventh congressional district of Massachusetts," and in the following week's paper from "Picnic Eleventh congressional district, Massachusetts." Both of these contributions should have been credited to the "Picnic." The total amount sent was $18.33.

A SOCIALIST

Respectfully Inscribed to Eugene V. Debs

A Socialist, once scorned of men,
Revealed by caustic tongue and pen;
A prophet of true brotherhood,
Oit by his own misunderstanding,
Yet will he gleam a guiding star,
When time, the gates of truth unbar
And light the way, as yet untried,
To make the toiler satisfied.

A Socialist, whose only plan
Is to uplift his fellow man,
And set his feet to tread the road
Of life, unburdened by the load
Which other men, with selfish drift
On his bent back contrive to shift,
Uncaring end or consequence,
Much though their mouthings make pretense.

A Socialist, a dreamer, yet
Above the realm of vain regret
That haunts the sordid selfish kind
Who seek for wealth, yet never find
Enough of it, or its increase,
To buy their souls a moment's peace.
No greed of gold has touched his heart;
Of life unfettered by the pain
Of soulless strife and greed of gain.

J. W. BRYCE.

A Socialist, yes, more than that,
An earnest Social Democrat,
Who's manhood never has been sold
For wealth, or fame, or yellow gold,
His soul chimes with a grander theme,
Than ever stirred a poet's dream
Of life unfettered by the pain
Of soulless strife and greed of gain.

ON WITH THE BATTLE

As the din and confusion of the battlefield subsides, amid the shouts of the ostensibly victorious, we can occasionally catch an echo of results that promise so much to suffering humanity. A general summary of the situation as it appears to us in this week of words may be epitomized as follows:

First, as to our friends, the enemy, the republican party is right up against it. It has the offices, it is true, but what is more, and most serious, too, it has the responsibility of the immediate future, and therein lurks a score of texts pregnant with thought for the advanced economist and dazlingly tempting to his pen.

Next come our friends in mourning, the nondescript Croker-Hill-Olney-Bryan-anti-trust crowd, with its now defunct satellites, the fusion populists and the silver reps, and anti-expansion muggwumps, all of whom, with flags of distress flying, show such unmistakable signs of acute suffering that the instinct of humanity suggests a pause at the mere mention. Nevertheless, I feel it incumbent to say that not only has the pie-counter combination gone down to irretrievable defeat, but that it has passed into that state of innocuous desuetude that leaves a fair field with no favors to give or take to the earnest, uncompromising Socialist. They lost not only the pie-counter incentive, to fusion, the offices, but their organization as well. We have gained an organization. Their forces have dwindled away—absorbed by more powerful organizations. Ours has increased a thousand per centum in numbers and efficiency, and we come out of the fight invigorated and strengthened and ready as a strong man to run a race.

And now, close the ranks, comrades! Only the weak, the vacillating, the undeveloped, have fallen out, and we are not only stronger for this weeding out, but, by reason of the noble accessions of the earnest, the true and the devoted that have joined our ranks. Had our vote been way up in the phenomenal there is every reason to fear that our movement would have been seriously handicapped, if not overwhelmed, with a slump of the pie-counter crowd seeking shelter. As it is, the two old parties will absorb that element, and the issue from now on is a clear-cut one of corporate versus collective ownership and administration of natural resources and public utilities.

Our banners in Kansas are still flying. Our men were holding street meetings just as persistently the day after election as before, and we shall never falter until it is ushered in the co-operative commonwealth. F. E. MILLER.

Answers to Correspondents

T. H., Washington.—Harriman at no time accepted the nomination of the Social Democratic party; he did accept that of the faction claiming to be the Social Democratic party. The claim was based on the fact that a section of the old S. L. P. and a few bolters from the S. D. P., who defied the decision of the majority, appropriated the name without any honorable title to it.

A. G., Rockville, Conn.—"How old must a man be to be eligible as a candidate for president?"
Forty-five years.

The vote of the city of Brockton, Mass., for president was as follows: Debs, 1,246; Bryan, 2,038; McKinley, 3,655.

Comrades at El Paso, Texas, are convinced that the vote there for Debs was 500; but the official returns give us only 113. The same condition prevailed throughout the country.

THROUGH WITH POPULISM

Dr. Henry B. Fay of Minnesota, General Organizer for the People's Party, Comes out Straight for Social Democracy

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 6, 1900.

Hon. Jo A. Parker, Louisville, Ky.,
Chairman People's Party National Committee.

My Dear Sir:

I herewith tender you my resignation as division organizer for the People's party of the Sixth Grand Division, forwarding herewith my records for Minnesota to National Committeeman C. J. Arntzen, Wegdahl, Minn. Immediately, in the Jordan, shall I wash from myself all old party and Populist "tactics" and their patchwork of "reform." With faithful stubbornness up to the present moment (7 p. m.) of the closing of the polls have I fought to save the People's party. Only very gradually has the uselessness of such a fight been forced upon me. Not until the last of July this year, in conversation with Father Haire, Aberdeen, S. D., did I finally, completely and clearly see that Socialism is already here, so far as production is concerned; that civilization does not do a la Bryan, backwards; that because the lowest stratum of society has been degraded by "laissez faire" is no reason for keeping it degraded by legally continuing to rob it of five-sixths of what it produces; that the highest grade of wealth producers, equally with the lowest, needs for itself the full product of its labor in continually decreasing hours of work and growing material comforts, so that all may attain an increasing, not decreasing, standard of living; that the only logical position for the destruction of all old compromising parties, consists now in emancipation of all wage slaves from the thralldom of private capital, even at Lincoln, living before the present complete development of industrial capitalism, saw similar justice in freeing black chattel slaves.

I send you my resignation before the results of the election are declared, so as to emphasize that one's choice should be made from principle, not by the number of votes given any party. Had I been free, and not an officer of the party, I should have immediately, on my return from South Dakota, disentangled myself from the entanglements of a "midroad party," unconsciously muddled between capitalism and labor.

To stand "in-the-middle-of-the-road" with usurpers on one side and usurped on the other, is to be despised by both classes, whom no amount of philanthropy or misapplied "Christianity" can unite, because their interests are diametrically opposed. But as an officer of the party on the eve of election, it was proper that I should then agree with such Populists as Capt. J. R. Lowe (who did not yet seem fully to realize how political without industrial freedom is mockery) and make no public declaration of this kind, until after election. I even wrote on my ballot the names of Barker and Donnelly electors.

Finally, let me urge you to remember that (1 Kings, 1: 1), "When King David was old, they covered him with clothes, but he got no heat," so now, my dear Mr. Parker, I can see innumerable old clothes, patched reforms, young virgin political parties, being brought forward in useless, expensive conventions from all parts of this Israel, these next four years, to vainly try to put new life into the already dead competitive system.

The competitive system is rusty with rent, interest, profit.

It is a self-destructive system, breeding an unnecessary class of 8 per cent that owns practically all the wealth, and leaves the valuable producing class of 60 per cent of our people mere wage slaves. I have seen new light. There is no "paramount issue" but that of city and farm labor against private capital.

Henceforth I shall contribute my humble share towards the social revolution and the final, not long distant, victory of the Socialist Party.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. FAY, M. D.

Labor and the Modern Trust

The modern trust development has for the first time in the history of the world placed in our hands the opportunity of freeing ourselves from all forms of class rule and oppression. Through its development it is concentrating the wealth in the hands of a class that is growing smaller every day, and at the same time decreasing the wealth of the working class while its ranks are increasing in numbers and discontent, so that we are gradually getting the numbers that are necessary to accomplish our ends, while at the same time the motive (discontent) is developing with the development of capitalism, and it is only a question of time until that motive becomes strong enough to accomplish the end sought for.

Do not be misled by middle-class appeals for legislation against trusts. Society cannot act like a crawfish and go backward at will. No. The law of progress is on and on, and not back. There is not an instance in history where human society has reached a certain stage in social development and then gone back to the stage that preceded it. We can no more go back to the stage of society that existed prior to the trusts than a frog can go back into the tadpole out of which it developed.

All that is necessary is for the working class to inaugurate a flank movement by placing clear-cut Socialist representatives in the municipal, state and national governments and proceed in a peaceable manner to return to the people the tools of production, abolish all class distinctions, and inaugurate a collective administration of these social utilities for the common good and welfare of every man, woman and child.

Fellow workmen, this is the only way we can emancipate ourselves. There is no half-way measure. We must either stand for our class or stand for the capitalist class. By doing this we can strip the trusts of their capitalistic garment (private ownership), and by making all the resources and tools of wealth production common property everybody can have employment and receive the full product of his labor. No one will have the power then to rob you of four-fifths of the product of your toil as is the case now. This is the historical mission that our class is destined to accomplish, and the very development of capitalism will force us to take this step whether we want to or not.

—James Oncal.

KARL KAUTSKY ON PROFIT

Industrial Capital Hatches its Profits by Exploiting the Propertyless Wage Workers

Whence does the capitalist class derive its income? The gains of merchants and usurers' capital consisted originally of the portions which they withheld from the property of those who needed them, either to satisfy a craving for luxuries, or for aid in distress. It is otherwise with industrial capital.

The capitalist class performs no manner of productive work. This is done by the wage worker. But the wage worker does not produce for himself; he cannot. All the things, which together are today indispensable for production—land and capital—are the private property of a comparatively small number of people. The proletarian, the person who has none of these, must either starve or sell the only thing left to him, his labor power, to the person who will buy it. That person is the capitalist. When the capitalist buys the labor power of a proletarian, and thereby turns the latter into a wage worker, he does so only because the wage worker will produce more than he is paid for. If he produces only as much as he is paid for—and worse yet, if he produces less—the capitalist would have no use for him, and would not buy his labor power, would not have him for a wage worker.

The proletarian, the wage worker, employed by the capitalist, is the wealth producer. Out of the heap of wealth brought into life by the wage worker himself, the capitalist takes a part, not more than one-quarter, if as much, and returns that to the wage worker in payment for his labor power, as his wages. The rest of the wealth produced by the wage worker, the remaining three-quarters, if not more, is the surplus, that is to say, the quantity of wealth produced by the worker over and above what was necessary to enable him to restore the forces he expended in production. That surplus the capitalist keeps to himself; he calls it profits; it constitutes his income. Industrial capital, accordingly, hatches its profits by exploiting the propertyless wage workers.

It so happens, however, that in proportion as the capitalist system of production develops, the industrial form of capital overshadows all others, and forces them into its service; and, furthermore, that this evolution cannot go on without the capitalists returning to the wage workers, in some manner or another—by the employment of an increase of personal-service men, such as lackeys, waiters, etc.; by institutions styled "benevolent," and so forth—a part of the surplus which they withheld from him. As a result of all these causes, the surplus produced by the proletarians becomes evermore the only source from which the whole capitalist class draws its income.

As the small industrialist and small farmer are disappearing and their influence upon modern society is felt ever less, so also are disappearing the old forms of merchants, and usurers' capital, both of which made their gains by exploiting the non-capitalist classes. Already there are nations without artisans and small farmers. England is an instance in point. But no one can conceive of a single modern state without large production. Whoever desires to understand the modern forms of capital must, today, proceed from the industrial form that capital has assumed. The real and most prominent of the sources from which all capitalist gains flow is to be found in the surplus which capitalist industry hatches out.

The proletarian produces the surplus which industrial capital appropriates. This surplus is on a steady increase through the increased burden of toil thrown upon the workers, through the introduction of labor-saving machines, through the cheapening of labor power, etc., etc. Side by side with the development of the capitalist system of production grows the number of the exploiting proletarians, and, as an inevitable consequence of this, the quantity of the surplus that flows into the hands of the capitalist class becomes ever larger and larger.

Unfortunately, however, "life's unalloyed enjoyment is not the lot of mortal man." However hateful the operation may be to him, the capitalist is compelled to "divide." The landlord and the state or government both come in for their shares; and the capitalist class is compelled to divide with them the surplus that it scoops in.

Socialism in Winnetka

Winnetka, a village seventeen miles north of Chicago, is one of the loveliest of Chicago's suburbs. And it is one of the most progressive; consequently it grows steadily more socialistic. The growth of this idea has been so natural and logical that the majority of the villagers are quite unconscious that they are committing themselves to anything heterodox. However, a rose by any other name will smell as sweet; as we go blithely on.

Besides Mr. Lloyd's work, a little handful of us have done what we could. But a large number of citizens of all beliefs are always about some undertaking to help the village. As a result we have a fine new public school building, and a very fine high school building is going up; we have a village hall, lighted by our own electric lights; a very good free library, a very successful water system, and now a new electric light service for both public and private houses and for the streets. The water pressure is so good that a stream can be thrown over the top of the highest house in the village, making fire engines unneeded, and the electric light may be had all night.

All these we absolutely own and operate. We have a most devoted village president, who is an electrician. While our plant was being installed he gave a great deal of his time and his expert knowledge gratuitously to see that all was right about it.

We have many beautiful old shade trees, and he was especially solicitous to see that the placing of poles and stringing of wires did not injure them. About the time we desired to get up the electric lighting system the telephone company received permission to enter here, but not without making some return to the village for the chance to profit by us. We required and they paid $8,000, the cost of the poles for our electric light wires. The telephone wires also are strung upon these.

For our generous water service we have been paying eighteen cents per 1,000 gallons; now comes a notice that this rate is reduced to fifteen cents. The notice adds that there is likely to be a further reduction soon and a prospect that we may "still maintain a sufficient surplus fund for emergencies."

This may be called an aristocratic suburb, yet even we had a little share in the campaign of the S. D. P. We followed the example of the old parties and held our political Debs meeting in the village hall and had a well-filled house. A much interested audience came out on a very bad night to hear Seymour Steadman. We polled several votes for Debs, and three of the four women voting voted the S. D. P. ticket for university trustees.

The annual report of the village is just out. The president closes his communication thus:

"Let the people of Winnetka continue to take that deep interest in its affairs and protect our municipal plants and see that they are well managed. Remember that the profits of these plants belong to us, and the greater they become the greater the benefits to our village, either in reduced rates or other benefits, while if owned by private capital the greater the profits—well, we would always be given to understand that there were no profits. We certainly would never appreciate any benefit from them."

"There are those who cry that 'municipal ownership' is a failure and the basis of their arguments is the dishonesty or incapacity of those who have been entrusted with such plants."

"That argument is as inconsistent as to claim any line of business a failure because some individual's business in that line has been ruined due to mismanagement or to a thief having had charge of it. Any such arguments are not against municipal ownership, but against the rottenness and degradation which we permit to get into our public offices. Such a condition is as ruinous to any portion of our government as it is to that which comes under 'municipal ownership.' Such arguments should rather act to shame us to our duty at the primaries and at the polls, and by the performance of this duty we relieve all branches of our government of this blight; and all branches benefit thereby as much as 'municipal ownership.'"

THE MONKEY AND THE BEES

A Chapter in the Natural History of Economics

By F. I. Wheat

A shrewd old monkey found some bees storing up honey in a hollow tree in the forest. He liked honey, and many a time in former days had helped to rob the bees. But wisdom had come at last into his simian skull. He boldly demanded of the bees by what right they had taken possession of a part of his domain. The trees he claimed for his own, and he frowned very darkly and stood up very haughtily.

It was impossible for bees to face such reasoning as this, and they waited in silence.

The monkey seized the psychological moment to become gracious, and with apparent benevolence proposed to compromise the matter and fix it up so they need not move out. If they would every day give him one-half of their product he would let them occupy the place in the tree, he said, for the present, at any rate, and perhaps he could arrange his affairs so as to keep them permanently. He would see. For he wanted to do what he could for them and wished it might be more, so he said.

The bees were relieved from their anxiety and felt quite grateful in the reaction from their fright. They thanked him and hurried off to gather the needed honey. For bees are too industrious to think about things, and now they must be busier than ever.

The shrewd old monkey thought very well of himself. Indeed he soon began to speak of himself as special providence to the bees; came to give them employment and save them from want, and he had this idea taught early to the young. For this special favor the bees learned to be humbly grateful, and their providence found out several ingenious ways to keep them employed.

One day another monkey found old Shrewdness' good fortune and quarreled with him for a share in it, but without success. The next day, however, he came back with some more honey-hungry fellows, and they made things pretty warm for the old monkey. He certainly would have been driven out, or more likely killed, had he not suddenly thought to order the bees to fall upon the attacking party, which they did to such effect that the young rascals were soon howling in full retreat.

On the next morning the monkey told the bees that they would have to turn over to him one hundred thousand of the best young workers, whom he would organize into a standing army to protect his tree from all other monkeys.

And it was done just as he said, for now the busy bees must waste no time in parleying, for this army must be fed.

But as only monkeys could be thought of as qualified to be officers in the army several were called in and given places. Then clerks were needed, and heads of departments, and, moreover, personal servants to mark the dignity of the great organizer of this commonwealth.

Now it began to be very hard for the workers to provide for all the community. Moreover, the officers became insolent when some luxuries were missing. So the king monkey ordered that all the honey should be given into his possession, and more officers were appointed to take charge of it. Then it was ruled that the purest honey should be given only to the monkeys, and the next best to the army. Whatever remained might be eaten by the workers.

And it was done so.

Then ever faster and faster flew the bees in their quest for honey, till the very limit of their strength was reached and there was no spirit left in them.

And the monkeys in other trees did as this monkey had done. Then often one kingdom attacked another to get its store or to destroy its power to gather honey from the flowers for the supply was limited, and so workers perished. Those left must toil the harder and give up more and more of their gatherings.

It is likely that the end of that history would have come speedily in utter destitution and the extinction of all bees, but there swept through that forest a conflagration that destroyed everyone of these tyrannies and drove the surviving monkeys and bees into distant parts.

The old order, of idle monkeys over busy bees, was never revived.

But this is how it came to pass that the bee is habitually so busy, and does not know when to rest; but ever piles up more and more of common store; and this, too, is the reason why the monkey is—well, why the monkey is a monkey.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF AMERICA

THE NATIONAL PLATFORM

Adopted at the Indianapolis Convention, March, 1900

ATTITUDE TOWARD TRADE UNIONS

In accordance with our declaration of principles we declare that the trades union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the wage-working class. We recommend to the members of the Social Democratic party the following general rules:

- First—Join the union of your respective trade.
- Second—Assist in building up and strengthening the trade union movement.
- Third—Support the union labels of all crafts.
- Fourth—Educate your fellow-unionists on the question of Socialism and the labor movement, on economic and political lines.
- Fifth—It shall be your duty to work for the unity of the labor movement, thereby recognizing the fact that the emancipation of the working class can only be achieved by the united efforts of this class.
- Sixth—Educate the members of the unions in the principles of Socialism and induce them, individually, to affiliate with the Social Democratic party.
- Seventh—Trades unions are by historical necessity organized on neutral grounds, as far as political affiliation is concerned. The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for proletarian emancipation.

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

- First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.
- Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.
- Third—The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.
- Fourth—The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will, be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.
- Fifth—The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.
- Sixth—As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:
 - First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combinations.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

National Organization

Section 1: This organization shall be known as the Social Democratic Party of America, and its headquarters shall be located at such place as the national conventions of the party may appoint, or as may be fixed by the National Executive Board subject to a referendum vote.

Sec. 2: The Social Democratic Party of America shall be organized as follows:

- First—Local branches limited to five hundred members each.
- Second—A National Executive Board of nine members, five of whom shall be chosen from territory convenient to the national headquarters, and shall be called "resident members," and the remaining four shall be chosen, so far as possible, from other parts of the country. All members of the Executive Board shall have equal rights and powers; but the resident members shall have power to act and a majority of said resident members shall constitute a quorum. The non-resident members shall not be required to be present at all meetings of the board, but shall be kept advised of all proceedings of the board. The Executive Board shall be elected by the national convention.
- Third—The form of state organizations shall be left to the branches in the respective states.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS... ATTENTION

A meeting of all Members of Branches of the Social Democratic Party in Chicago is called for

SUNDAY AFTERNOON
NOVEMBER 25, 1900
(2 O'CLOCK)

Lauterbach's Hall, 55 N. Clark St.

The object of the meeting is to consider the political situation and decide on a plan of action for the Spring Campaign. A full attendance is desired. By order of City Central Committee, S. D. P.

FROM THE WORKERS

Texas—I take pleasure in letting you know how the election went at Rancho. McKinley received 5 votes; Bryan, 43; Debs, 43. People's party, 15. Hurrah for Debs and Social Democracy!

G. F. SIKES.

Missouri—Among the remarkable increases of the Socialist vote in localities that of Webb City and county is among the most prominent. Four years ago the county had but five Socialist votes; this year, 326.

J. RONEY.

California—Mr. Bryan or any other Democrat has had his last call on the Populists in this neck of the woods (Los Angeles) and they are going to fall in line with the Social Democrats. The vote for Debs in this county is about 1,000. We expect to poll 1,500 votes in the city election next month.

ARTHUR VINETTE.

Pennsylvania—The official vote of this (New Castle) county is 333, giving us official standing on ballot. We have opened the campaign of 1904 and intend to keep them on the jump.

W. J. WHITE.

New York—After considerable trouble I have succeeded in getting our vote in Buffalo and find that we polled 371.

TOM FILTON.

Kentucky—One result of the election at Covington was that we secured the necessary two-thirds majority to establish a municipal electric lighting plant.

F. E. SEEDS.

Illinois—In the eleventh district (Jacksonville) we know positively of seven votes that did not show up on the tally sheet. But we have done well to get as many counted as is shown. I firmly believe that we cast 25 more votes than were counted.

AL. PIERSON.

Pennsylvania—At the next borough election in Cokeville we expect to elect a complete Socialist ticket.

J. S. BRUBAKER.

Indiana—We increased the Socialist vote in Bartholomew county 1,600 per cent, as there was but one in the county in '98.

A. H. ROWLEY.

Montana—Our vote in the state may be 1,200, but nothing reliable can be obtained until the official count is published or our comrades send in their figures from the different counties.

GUSTAV FRANKEL.

Indiana—We believe that at least 400 votes were cast for Socialism in Vanderburg county, but that we have been outrageously counted out.

E. H. MEYER.

Indiana—We understand from the best sources that many of our ballots were mutilated and destroyed. We are in the fight to stay in spite of all obstacles.

M. H. WEFEL.

Oklahoma—In this county (Grant) we polled 2 per cent of the entire vote for E. T. Tucker, candidate for congress. He received 58 votes. In the entire territory he received 780.

J. W. McFall.

Illinois—The official vote in this (Marion) county for Comrade Debs was 13. Four years ago the S. L. P. cast four votes.

J. C. Wibel.

The Socialist Woman's club meets every second and fourth Wednesday at 8 p. m. in Hull house. The last meeting was held on the 14th of November, and was addressed by Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman and Miss Corinne Brown. A fine program has been prepared for the coming winter, and all women interested in Socialism are cordially invited.

Are you the only Socialist in your town or in your factory? The Social Democratic Herald will furnish you with the best arguments for Socialism to fire at your neighbors and friends and the members of your union. The Herald will give you Socialism up-to-date and supply you with the most telling ammunition for your arguments.

The Debs-Herron pamphlet is positively the finest propaganda literature ever gotten out in this country. They are 5 cents each, or $2 by the hundred. They will be just as good after election as before.

No Social Democrat's library, however small, is complete without a copy of the Social Democracy Red Book. Order it while the edition still lasts. It contains information you can get nowhere else. Price 15 cents, this office.

Twenty-four towns in Massachusetts in 1896 gave Matchett for president 681 votes. The same places this year gave Debs 4,078.

Business—Past and Present

In the old days a man could start in business with a few hundred dollars. That time is past. Competition is too sharp. It is not merely sharp competition between small business undertakings, but it is a cut-throat fight between large consolidations of capital, organized on lines of economy in rents and "help" that the small business cannot possibly resort to. The failures of the small business men come thick and fast. They go down as helplessly as ten-pins in a bowling alley. The majority of them are even unaware of the changed conditions and heedlessly plunge into business where their doom is foreordained.

Illinois State Vote

Below is given the vote received by the various candidates on the Social Democratic party ticket for state officers. The Cook county vote, not yet completed, will raise the totals about 1,000 for each:

Pierson, lieutenant-governor... 6,012
Kerwin, secretary... 6,966
Winnin, treasurer... 7,006
Wright, auditor... 6,974
Soelke, attorney-general... 7,069

PROGRESS OF THE SOCIAL REVOLUTION

We Press Forward With Renewed Energy, Vitalized by the First Encounter with the Enemy in the Political Arena

APPROACHING CONVENTION

Time and Circumstances Call Upon Every Social Democrat to Reconsecrate His Talents to the Propaganda

The returns of the national election are still indefinite and incomplete. It seems certain, however, that our vote is over 100,000 and it may reach 150,000. The figures are smaller than most of us expected, but we are satisfied. Under all the circumstances the party did all that could have been reasonably expected and the showing, if not inspiring, has at least nothing discouraging in it.

From private advices received I am convinced that a large percentage of our vote was counted against us, or cast out upon technical grounds. We were not represented upon the election boards and it was an easy matter to discredit our vote. In some of the southern states the Social Democratic vote was counted in the Democratic vote and there was none present to object. We must expect all such difficulties until we are strong enough as a party to protect our interests and have our votes fairly counted.

If all the votes cast and meant to be cast for our party had been counted in our favor it is safe to assume that the Social Democratic party would stand credited with 200,000 votes.

But we accept the logic of facts and prepare for the next battle. We are too busy getting ready for what is to be to waste any time over what might have been. The vote cast for our ticket measures the progress of the social revolution, and taking note of this we press forward with renewed energy, vitalized by the first encounter with the enemy upon the national battlefield.

The old parties, with whom a campaign is simply a contest for spoils, have folded their flags and stored away their torches for four years more.

The Republican party has triumphed and the trusts will riot in the spoils of conquest. With such an overwhelming endorsement the dominant capitalist class will throw off all restraint and trustify everything in sight. The centralization of large capital and expropriation of small capital will proceed as never before. The development of capitalism will reach its greatest momentum. Consumption will not be able to keep pace with production, and before McKinley's "prosperity" administration closes the crash will come and then the working class will get in full measure what they voted for.

Overproduction, glutted markets, paralyzed factories, silent mills, deserted mines, enforced idleness, reduced wages, strikes, lockouts, injunctions, soldiers and the funerals of workmen will follow in rapid succession. There will be no work for the hands and the brain will have a chance. Workingmen will have ample time for reflection. When their ambition for this sort of thing is fully satisfied, they will cease voting robes to their masters and rags to themselves; they will stand with their class for the abolition of the capitalist system. Meantime the country will dance to the music of capitalist prosperity.

The Democratic party presents a picture never before exhibited in the political gallery. Its platform looks as if a cyclone had revised it and its demoralization is complete. Its reactionary, cowardly and dishonest policy has been spurned with merited contempt and repudiation. There is no longer room for a party that seeks to ride into office by straddling the class issue and engaging, or pretending to engage, on both sides of the class struggle. It is one side or the other, and with the double dealing Democratic party doomed, the political atmosphere will clear up and the working class will be able to see the class contest, and they will then rally with the Social Democratic party, the party of the working class in the struggle for emancipation.

Disintegration is already preying upon the Democratic party. Its leaders are unable to "point with pride" to a single thing. They have not yet recovered sufficiently to even "view with alarm" or "deplore," or "condemn as un-American" anything, not even the "paramount issue" of "throwing away" their votes. The eastern leaders, who are Republicans in fact, are scrutinizing the wreck but they can hardly make up their minds that it is worth raising. And yet the capitalist class can not afford to allow the Democratic party to retire from business. It must be used to arrest the progress of Socialism and so it is entirely probable that the "radical" element will be given full permission to galvanize the corpse with an injection of "public ownership."

A great many of the rank and file, however, know when they have enough. This is shown by the fact that the tide is already setting in the direction of the Social Democratic party. A week at headquarters enables me to perceive the drift. Never since we have been a party have the inquiries for party literature, for organizers and speakers equaled the present demand. Never have the branches increased in number and in membership as now. The party has entered upon an era of development hitherto unequaled and unknown, and it is spreading over the entire country.

MERLIN'S MIXTURE

Charles W. Canon & J. J. Revere, Miam.

The battle of ballots is over;
The day of the voter is past;
The voice of the people has spoken,
And destiny's die has been cast.

Another campaign has been opened;
A new duty faces us now—
To brush every cobweb of error
Away from the laborer's brow.

Where eloquent rhetoric dazzled
We need sober logic instead;
Where the heart of the worker was wanted,
We must now try to capture his head.

'Tis ours, then, to break every fetter
Of falsehood that tyrants have wrought,
Till Love shall be re-incarnated
By Labor's omnipotent thought.

Then cursed be the one who sits idle,
And passively helps falsehood win
Our idleness now is foul treason;
Our silence is socialist sin.

Greeting!
Hence, unless I wish to be a self-proven liar, on the one hand, or a trait-

But cursed be the fellow who retains hold of the rope, only that he might have opportunity to hack at the strands with his traitor's knife!

A plea for unity.
If we cannot have union, we can at least have unity. We have it. The time has not yet come, as has been amply proven during the last six months, when the socialist forces of America are so free from the elements of personal ambition and autocratic leadership as to render a sane and workable union possible.

We need, at this period, not so much the force of numbers, as the force of effective organization. Just now brotherhood is infinitely more important than bulk, sincerity is more essential than size.

So if there are balky mules on our tow-line, we had better cut them loose, than let them drag us backward.

If we must use our pen-points as daggers, let us direct them against our enemies, and not against our comrades in a common belief.

LOSSES THROUGH THE COMPETITIVE SYSTEM

A Chaotic System of Competitive Production Involves a War of Producer and Distributors—
The Wisest not Secure

RISK IS THE SECRET OF GAIN

Everybody is in the Dark, Planning, Guessing, Chancing; there is Tremendous Effort and Prodigious Waste

Jack London in the Cosmopolitan

At one time our forefathers, ignorant of hygiene, sanitation and quarantine, were powerless before the plagues which swept across the earth; yet we, their enlightened descendants, find ourselves impotent in the face of the great social cataclysms known as trade and commercial crises. The crises are peculiarly a modern product—made possible by the specialization of industry and the immense strides which have been taken in the invention of labor-saving machinery, but due, and directly so, to the antagonism of the units which compose society. A competent co-operative management could so operate all the implements and institutions of the present industrial civilization that there need never be a fear of a trade or commercial crisis. Boards or departments, scientifically conducted, could ascertain, first, the consuming power of the community; second, its producing power; and then, by an orderly arrangement, arrange these two, one to the other. These boards or departments would have to study all the causes which go to make the community's producing power inconstant—such as failure of crops, droughts, et cetera—and so to direct the energy of the community that equilibrium between its production and consumption might still be maintained. And to do this is certainly within the reach of man's achievement.

But instead of this logical arrangement of industry the community today possesses the chaotic system of competitive production. It is a war of producers, also of distributors. Success depends on individual knowledge of just how much and at what cost all others are producing and at just how much and at what prices they are selling. All the factors which decide the fluctuations of the world's markets or the purchasing power of its peoples must be taken into account. A war cloud in the Balkans, a failure of crops in the Argentine, the thoughtless word of a kaiser, or a strike of organized labor, and the success or failure depends on how closely the results of this event have been foreseen. And even then, because of a thousand and one fortuitous happenings, chance plays an important part. Even the footing of the wisest and the surest is precarious. Risk is the secret of gain. Lessen the risk, the gain is lessened; abolish it, and there can be no gain. Individual strives against individual, buying for himself, and keeping his transactions secret. Everybody is in the dark. Each is planning, guessing, chancing; and because of this, the competitive system of industry, as a whole, may be justly characterized as planless. The effort lost is tremendous, the waste prodigious. A favorable season arrives. Increased orders accelerate production. Times are prosperous. All industries are stimulated. Little heed is taken of the overstocking of the markets, till at last they are flooded with commodities. This is the danger point. The collapse of a land boom in Oregon, the failure of a building association in Austria—anything may start the chain of destruction. Speculations begin to burst, credits to be called in, there is a rush to realize on commodities produced, prices fall, wages come down, factories close up, and consumption is correspondingly reduced. The interdependence of all forms of industry asserts itself. One branch of trade stops, and those branches dependent upon it, or allied with it, cannot continue. This spreads. Depression grows, failures increase, industry is paralyzed. The crisis has come! And then may be observed the paradoxical spectacle of glutted warehouses and starving multitudes. Then comes the slow and painful recovery of years, then an acceleration of planless production, and then another crisis. This is friction, the inevitable correlative of a disorderly system of production and distribution. And the losses incurred by such friction are incalculable.

SPECIAL CONVENTION

OFFICIAL CALL

To Members and Branches of the Social Democratic Party, Comrades:

RESPONDING to suggestions from all parts of the country and a demand from many branches, a special National Convention of the Social Democratic party is hereby called, to take place at the national headquarters, 126 Washington street, Chicago, Ill., beginning Tuesday, January 15, 1901, and continuing in session until the work of the convention shall have been completed.

The purpose of this convention will be to make such changes in the laws of the party and to make such other provisions as may be deemed necessary to meet the growing demands of the organization. It is our purpose to enter at once upon a vigorous campaign of agitation, education and organization, so that the party shall be fully equipped to meet the capitalist enemy on the political battle-fields of the future. Now that the presidential campaign is over, our work is fairly begun and must be carried forward with all possible energy without the loss of a single hour.

The basis and other conditions of representation will be the same as at the Indianapolis Convention, and are here incorporated as follows:

First—Each branch shall be entitled to as many representatives as the individual members thereof in good standing may select for that purpose; provided, that each representative shall be entitled to one (1) vote for each member whose signature is attached to his credential; and provided further, that no member shall have his signature attached to more than one credential.

Second—Branches not sending their own representatives may select those of other branches of the same state to represent them; provided, that in each such case the representative shall hold the proper credential with the signatures of members attached as herein provided.

Third—No member shall be qualified to serve as representative or entitled to representation who has not been a member of the party at least thirty (30) days prior to the opening day of the convention.

Fourth—All signatures of members attached to credentials shall be certified to by the chairman or secretary of their respective branches.

Fifth—The national secretary shall furnish each branch with a sufficient number of blank credentials for the purpose herein specified.

Unaffiliated Socialist clubs or societies whose members may desire to connect themselves with the Social Democratic party, are cordially invited to communicate through their proper officials with the Secretary of the National Executive Board, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

This call is issued to all branches of the Social Democratic party in good standing, as shown by the records at 126 Washington street, Chicago, and organized prior to December 15, 1900. The time and place of meeting and other details will be given in the Herald as soon as arrangements are completed.

SEYMOUR STEDMAN, Secretary.

including the southern states, and I feel not only confident but absolutely certain that within twelve months our party will have an effective organization in every state in the union.

We are not discussing the "cause" of the recent Republican victory and Democratic defeat. We have no time for that. Ours is a party of the future and not of the past; we are looking forward and not backward; let others linger with the slain on yesterday's field of action, we must gird afresh our armor and move on the enemy again and again, and yet again, until he is overthrown and routed and driven from the field.

The approaching convention of our party will be an event of special interest and importance. The representatives who will assemble at Chicago will be familiar with the trials of the past and equal to the demands of the future, and we can confidently look forward to the most progressive and prosperous year in the history of the party.

I can not close without reference to the loyal support of comrades in the recent presidential contest. Other candidates may boast a larger vote, but not one dare claim more steadfast devotion. It was born of fidelity to principle and was and will be faithful even unto death.

In the name of the Social Democratic party which honored me, I thank all comrades for their loyal support.

Eugene V. Debs.

Chicago, November 26.

The old party politicians in charge of the election machinery of Indiana saw to it that the big Socialist vote in the state which everybody expected did not materialize.

orous sinner on the other, I must needs break my six months' silence, and again add my quota to the common cause of socialist propaganda.

It will be little at the best, but perchance in the chaff of my Mixture there may be a stray grain of truth that shall find lodgment in some mind and develop into the full ear of socialist activity.

Now that we have recovered from the disintegrating effects of unity, and are following the dictates of sense, rather than those of sentiment, in our party polity, we are ready for educational work.

Before it was well nigh useless. It was like a man asking a friend to dinner, when he and his wife spent the entire dinner hour in a pitched battle, using the dishes as weapons.

But now there is need, and good, in inviting the public to our socialist dinner of digestible truths.

The present duty.

Now that the tangles in our party rope have been unsnarled and straightened out, there is need, not to "pull for unity," but to unite to pull.

We have a strong party rope running through the various states, with its end hitched to the foundations of monopoly, and loyal, energetic comrades along the line.

It matters little what we call the rope; it matters little what the words we use for the united heave; it matters little what the professional cut of coat of the fellow next us; it matters little whether the end of the rope be tied with a scientific knot by some old navigator of the Socialist sea; it matters all, if we do not pull!

So long as the rope is intact and strong, there is need of but two things: either to pull, or get out of the way.

If we cannot work side by side, the field is amply large enough to lose sight of each other, and yet all engage in socialistic effort. When we near the center we shall have learned lessons in the school of oppression and shall be able to unite.

"Pull, or part!"

So pass the word down the line, comrades, and let every man hear and heed—"Pull, or part!"

If you can't pull on the common cable go tie your own little thread to some snag of injustice and try and pull it out.

As I write these words a gang of workmen in front of my window are dragging a huge rail in the relaying of the street railway. One man gives the word; all pull together; the thing is done.

We are constructing the road along which the Co-operative Commonwealth shall ultimately advance. Many heavy rails will have to be lifted into place.

Personally, I have confidence in the ability of our overseer, Eugene V. Debs, to give the word for a united pull, and shall myself respond in the common heave.

When we have lost confidence and courage let us stand aside, not hindering, if we cannot help. So pass the word along, "Pull, or part!"

The showman in Indiana who found that his cotton advertising signs were taken by a poor woman, whose husband, working for 75 cents for ten hours a day in a factory, could not provide her children with clothing, has since been wondering with the rest of us what more untruthful device than that of prosperity the politicians have to spring on a confiding public.

CHICAGO, SATURDAY, DEC. 1, 1900.

The Social Democratic Party

Defeat on the one side in a battle does not always mean victory for the other side in the contest. Notably such was the case in the historic battle of Bunker Hill. Nominally the British were victorious, but in a sense more inspiring the champions of liberty and independence, behind their rude intrenchments, hurriedly constructed, with little ammunition and arms of diverse caliber, untrained in the art of war, were the victors. Proud, boastful and defiant England was taught a lesson, the first in a bloody series she nor the world has forgotten, the last of which, at Yorktown, brought down the English flag to float no more in triumph over her American colonies.

The Social Democratic party, in the ever memorable campaign of 1900, has nominally been defeated, and yet, like the old continentals who measured arms against the British on Bunker Hill, it won a victory. The contest has inspired hopes more animating and faith more intensified of ultimate victory over every opposing force than ignorance and prejudice and bigotry can array against it. The Social Democratic party comes out of the contest with convictions strengthened. The great truths it advocated are more firmly entrenched in the minds of the people, and everywhere throughout the broad land the banners of the party float defiantly, and invite all who have faith in the onward march of human progress in which men enlightened and grasping the essential ideas of reform in conditions find in Socialism the true solution of the problems relating to just government and human happiness.

In such regards the campaign of 1900 has responded to the expectations of the Social Democratic party, and without a taint of demoralization in its ranks and with its organization intact, it is better than ever equipped for its mission.

The future of the Social Democratic party is not to be one of repose. It is not to furl its battle flags nor cease the beat of its war drums. The battle is still on. Not only are the watch fires in every branch of the party to be kept burning, but new branches are to be organized, and new signal fires lighted. Other parties may cry "peace," but the battle cry of the Social Democratic party will be agitation, discussion, action and a forward movement all along its lines.

The republican party, the beneficiary of capitalistic favors, swollen with the pride of victory, will proceed with its imperialistic policy. With the sword and purse of the nation at its command, it will increase the standing army to crush "insurgents" who fight for liberty in foreign lands, and to crush labor insurgents who rebel against the edicts of capitalism at home.

The democratic party, dazed and bewildered by its defeat, and factionized beyond the hope of redemption, is scarcely to be considered a factor in future campaigns. The coming party, with abounding virility and energy to do, to dare and to achieve, is the Social Democratic party. It alone of all the parties has a mission in the world sharply and vividly defined. It brushes aside all the wranglings over issues born of venality and warmed into life in the vulture nests of duplicity and hypocrisy, and proclaims its purpose to unbar and throw wide open the doors, that the million of men now enslaved by conditions which horrify the thoughtful, shall achieve their liberty and independence.

The Idea of Classes

It is hard for a certain brand of American patriotic philistines and jingo degenerates to reconcile themselves to the undeniable fact that in this country we are confronted by the existence of classes, and, therefore, that this is a class-ruled country, notwithstanding that the people, or the male portion, at least, enjoy the great privilege of giving to candidates for office votes that are not always counted. One of the latest to try and persuade people to believe that we have no classes is Gen. J. C. Black, who himself belongs to a class which lives upon other classes.

The development of capitalism necessarily produces classes—the propertied and the propertyless. We have a class in possession of the modern facilities of production and another class dependent upon the first for the opportunity to earn a living. It is worse than idle, it is dishonest to say that where the workers are no longer the owners of their tools of production, which are monopolized and exploited for the sole purpose of extracting profits from labor, there is not a distinct and dependent class. Gen. Black says that the "only real class America has ever produced was the slave-holding class." But it is certain that the slaves who were held were also no less a class than their masters. There were two classes. So there are now two classes: The capitalist class which holds the means of life and operates them for profit alone, and the class which is wholly dependent upon the will of capitalists for a chance to live. Between these two classes there is a conflict which will end only in the abolition of private property in the means of life. The class struggle is a potent fact in the United States.

Comfort in Prison Cell

Many of our old party friends believe, or at least say, that "the government is run all right, and everybody can work that wants to." What would they think of William Van Velsom, who entered the Cook county jail a few days ago and asked Jailer Whitman to send him back to state prison. "I'm cold and haven't any home," said Van Velsom to the clerk as he entered the room. "It's warm here. It makes me think of my warm cell in Joliet."

The fact that Van Velsom had been in Joliet is no proof that he was any worse than thousands of respectable citizens living on the boulevards, or over the line in Canada.

If he was a thief he did not steal enough to protect himself, hire corporation attorneys, bribe jurors and make a flash with his money, or take a trip to Brazil or Italy.

If he murdered a single man with a knife or gun he made a mistake; he should have sold adulterated foods, and thereby murdered ten thousand men every year.

If he got drunk and beat some woman, he should have waited until prosperity brought him wealth enough to own a harem on Fifth avenue.

If he gambled at poker and got in a fight, he made a very serious blunder; he should have gambled on some poor widow's money in mining stocks, or cornered a market.

Anyway, Van Velsom was cold, and wanted a warm place to stay. Having no cheerful home to go to, and no work, he was willing to be taken back to a warm cell in the county jail. He begged the jailer not to turn him out.

A Campaign Contribution

It is probable that one of the largest contributions to the national campaign fund of the Republican party in the recent election was received from the Western Union Telegraph Company. It was given, not in the form of money but of free service, which saved to Mark Hanna's committee the expenditure of a large sum. The following circular, issued by the company and sent to all "managers" in its employ, explains how it was done:

"All Managers, Western Union Telegraph Co.: This will be your authority to accept messages relating to the business of the National Republican Committee, 'Checked Paid,' when signed by the following named persons: M. A. Hanna, Perry S. Heath, Henry C. Payne, R. C. Kerens, Harry S. New, Graeme Stewart, H. H. Rand, R. C. Buckland, and deliver to them like messages checked 'Collect,' without requiring payment in either case."

This circular was furnished to the Appeal to Reason by an employee of the company. Names and dates are omitted for obvious reasons. The republican party managers and the managers of the Western Union are thus hooked up together in the control of the government for the next four years.

Duty of the Hour

The election is over. The Social Democratic party has come forth with flying colors. From now on we propose to make things hum. Our program is one of action. We have no time to waste in quarreling with anybody. All the states must be organized for Socialism. We propose to invade them, not one at a time, but all at once. The coming convention will provide the equipment. Organizers are already in the field. The number must be increased. We propose to have a thousand branches and more in operation before 1901 closes its eyes. We want the help of each and every comrade. We want it in deeds and not in words. We want it now.

The contention that the people are the shareholders in great corporations is not proven by the fact that at the annual election of the Big Four railroad recently four men voted 260,000 shares of stock and elected all the directors for three years.

NOTES AND COMMENT

Workingmen: This is the year of prosperity. Workingmen are rich. They build great palaces in every city, go to the mountains and seashore and erect "country seats"; put up great office buildings of marble; furnish them in costliest carpets, paintings, chairs and tapestry, and then these wealthy workers depart through the basement door, and very soon an automobile stops in front and the man to whom the workingman gave the property enters, and the workingman is seen around there no more.

Then they build great roads and lay steel rails, on which run elegant moving palaces at thirty miles an hour. But the workingman prefers to see the country when he travels, so he walks slowly and painfully over the road.

And when police protection is needed at home, or a foreign foe insults the men in the palaces, these same wealth makers cheerfully put on a blue coat or take up the sword. They would rather work than eat, these prosperous workingmen.

From not less than 100 precincts in the city of Chicago, several towns in the county of Cook, and also from many states in the union, complaints have been received at The Herald office that votes cast for Eugene V. Debs for president were not counted. In many localities the rights of citizenship have been outraged by election clerks and judges, both through prejudice and gross incompetency, and the probabilities strongly favor the opinion held by Socialists who have written us that for every vote credited to Debs he actually received one more, making the grand total of votes cast for Socialism this year not less than 225,000. Bye and bye, in the next national election, if present prospects mean anything, we will be too strong to be counted out. Educate and organize for 1904.

There is a large class of people in this country that the Socialists have not reached. In fact several, but just now comes to mind the men who are disgusted with the mockery of "voting kings," who know that something is wrong, but are too busy to find out just what it is. This is the professional class of doctors, artists, musicians, etc.; who know that capitalism is dragging their profession down to its own level; and yet are so busy in their work and dissatisfied with all the rest of the world outside of their profession that they do not care to investigate. These men are ready for Socialism; with us it is only a question of getting after them with the facts.

Any great daily newspaper will furnish conclusive evidence that the capitalist system is all wrong. They don't intend to give the facts, but it all comes out in the news items, cable dispatches and special telegrams. Cut out such items and classify them. You will be surprised in a week at the way things go wrong in this world. Then study the principles of Socialism for another week and report to The Herald what you think of the situation. This is only two weeks' work. Try it.

The big corporations and trusts are already putting themselves in line for the legitimate result of the election. The Illinois state legislature will be asked to pass more liberal laws for the benefit of the predatory gang. They argue that corporate interests do not get a fair deal in Illinois. Government protection of the economically powerful is in order. That is what the election meant. The corporations are entitled to all they can get, and the people have said so.

Can you get five Socialists together and organize a branch? You are the man or woman we are looking for. Can you add a new member to your branch? Can you send us a subscriber, or a dozen to The Herald? Can and will you come to the front and do a comrade's share to make our party a continental power? We shall rely upon the emphatic affirmative of thousands and we shall not be disappointed.

The present's no time for creeping.

Up, comrades, and at 'em!

It is no time for sleeping.

Up, comrades, and at 'em!

Capitalists are defiant—

Now is the time to spat 'em;

On yourselves reliant,

Up, comrades, and at 'em!

After banqueting the Irish nationalists who went over to Africa and fought for the Boers, their Chicago friends have turned every effort to secure for these men a chance to make a living. Every man was a wage-earner—and earned very much more than his wages amounted to.

The laundry sign, "Shirts, 4 cents," which has been as common as beer signs in Chicago, has disappeared, and that indispensable garment is now "done up" for 6 cents. Yet thousands of wage-earners are compelled to borrow money from interest sharks to live.

A backwoods philosopher said: "A hog mought whistle, but he has an on-likely mouth for such a performance." Mark Hanna's mouth, engaged in helping workingmen out of their troubles, is very much like the unaccommodating mouth of the hog.

Public opinion is a manufactured article in which too often there is a preponderance of shoddy. It is the purpose of Socialists to eliminate the shoddy and produce an article "all wool and a yard wide."

That the mortgage debt of Indiana has increased during McKinley's administration over $55,000,000 is another proof of prosperity—for the holders of the mortgages.

Socialism a "Portentous" Fact

The Socialists cast about 5 per cent of the total vote of Massachusetts last week. In other states they broke all previous records easily, as far as national elections go. Here is an interesting and portentous fact in American politics.

If the anti-Bryan and conservative democrats, such as Whitney, Cleveland, Fairchild, Dickinson and Carlisle, could carry out their reported plans for a re-organization of the democratic party on the lines which they must insist upon if they are to take part in its management and support its candidates, the immediate outcome would probably be the transfer of a large radical element in the democratic organization to the Socialists. The Socialist vote would increase at once so fast that it might have to be reckoned with as a great force in politics.

Then we should have exciting campaigns, indeed. If Bryan has hinted at grave changes in the structure of the government, the Socialists are frankly revolutionary. If Bryan has been guilty of inciting envy and class enmity, the Socialists openly advocate the virtual confiscation of a great share of the productive private property in the United States. It is often forgotten that the acquisition by the government of the railroads, telegraph lines, telephone property, the mines, and the municipal street railways, gas works, electric lighting plants, etc., all of which changes are urged by the Socialist platforms and leaders, would imply such a narrowing of the field for the employment of capital that the interest obtainable on money would be cut down far and fast, and many great investments would be wiped out.

Perhaps it will be just as well if the democrats go the road they have been following for the past five years. It does not lead to any important changes in practical conditions of government, and it keeps Socialism from coming to the front in American politics.—Cleveland Leader (Rep.), Nov. 12.

"Dividin' Up"

Here's a funny thing. A cadaverous-looking oyster wandered into a second-hand clothing store the other day to buy himself a second-hand pair of shoes.

It was cold, but he had no overcoat. The poor devil's jacket was worn threadbare, and his pants hardly hid his hide. His hat was like Ben Harrison's—looked as though it might have been his grandfather's.

A couple of men in the store were talking about the number of political parties represented in the recent election, and the various tickets to be had at the polls.

The oyster spoke. "I durned near made a fool blunder in votin'," he said.

"How was that?" was asked.

"I got a ticket readin' 'Social Democrat' and thought it was what I wanted ter vote."

The oyster grinned—oysters do, sometimes.

"Wasn't it what you wanted?" asked one of the men present, who was a Socialist himself.

"What I wanted?" gasped the oyster, "not by a gol darn sight. I wanted ter vote the straight old democrat ticket, begosh. Think I'd vote fer a lot of fools that want ter divide everythin' up?"

The oyster didn't buy any shoes. The cheapest pair he could find were 35 cents and he only had two bits.—New Dispensation.

Prof. Ely on Prosperity

What do we mean by prosperity? I have heard a great deal of the prosperity of the south. It is said to be growing rich. Does this mean the prosperity of the many or the few? Not long since a friend on returning from Richmond told me that the people were making so much that they could not spend it. I had not heard of any rise in wages. When walking on Charles street in Baltimore the other day I saw a huge poster setting forth the growing wealth of a newly developed region in Virginia, and among other attractions for capital, I noticed this: "Cheap Labor." I have been turning that over in my mind ever since.—Richard T. Ely.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY NATIONAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE

To the Comrades of the Social Democratic Party, Greeting:

The labors of your campaign committee are now concluded, with the exception of reporting to you their work in our first struggle to place before the American people the Social Democratic party, its principles and purposes.

Your committee has been greatly assisted by the comrades in our organization and at the headquarters especially. Comrade Elizabeth H. Thomas not only contributed financially to the success of the campaign, but gave her services gratuitously for a period of nearly three months. She was in constant attendance, undiring and active, and while Comrade Stedman was ostensibly the secretary, the greater part of the work of that office was performed by Comrade Thomas, and your committee believe our comrades join them in expressing their gratitude to her.

Your committee was further assisted by Comrades Mesdames Corinne Brown, Gertrude Debs and Irene Stedman and by Misses Corinne Brown, Ethel James and others, who assisted in answering the letters, addressing mail orders, adjusting meetings, etc. Comrade Ray Edwards served the committee, for which he was paid eight dollars ($8.00) per week.

We have been careful to publish in each succeeding issue of The Herald the sums donated to your committee, the total amount of which is set forth in the following financial statement, to-wit:

Contributions received $2,176.25
Received from the sale of literature... 1,361.63

Total receipts $3,537.88

$ 55.25

Balance (after all bills are paid) $ 52.25
There was $100 voted for eastern campaign purposes, $50 of which was sent to Massachusetts, there being $50 due, as per report.

The campaign speakers and organizers from this committee have visited over 200 different cities and towns, and we have mailed and distributed in all 50,000 German leaflets, 25,000 Polish leaflets, 30,000 Bohemian leaflets, 250,000 stickers, 12,000 lithographs, 16,500 buttons, 12,000 extra Social Democratic Heralds, 16,000 leaflets No. 1, 285,000 leaflets No. 2, 75,000 Leaflets No. 4, 75,000 leaflets No. 5, 9,000 leaflets No. 6, 145,000 leaflets with epigrams and platform, 20,000 Debs-Herron speeches. We have still on hand 3,000 of the latter, and about 900 German Merrie Englands. The total amount of literature distributed amounts to 1,196,500 different pieces.

The committee ordered the balance of cash on hand to be turned over to the national organization for propaganda purposes.

In many instances localities paid the expenses of speakers; where this has occurred they have asked nothing of this committee. Respectfully submitted, Seymour Stedman.

Bebel, the German Social Democrat, says a Berlin correspondent of a St. Petersburg newspaper, has made a fortune by his little book entitled "Woman."

Machines are all right and Socialists are determined to own and operate them.

MEETING OF CHICAGO SOCIAL DEMOCRATS

The Demand for a National Convention from Other Sections of the Country Receives Strong Support

A large and representative meeting of the local branches of the Social Democratic party in Chicago was held last Sunday, Nov. 25, at Lauterbach's hall, North Clark street. There were present over 250 members, representing seventeen branches of the organization, with a total membership of 400. In its final outcome it was one of the most satisfactory meetings of the party members ever held in the city, and this for the reason that it cleared the way for a return at an early day to the sane methods and effective propaganda of the party, unhampered by the hysterical and dishonest practices of intriguing "unionists."

Comrade Philip Brown was chosen as chairman, and Comrades Elizabeth H. Thomas and M. Holsinger acted as secretaries. After a discussion of several hours in committee of the whole, during which a large number, including Comrade E. V. Debs, took part, the following resolutions were almost unanimously adopted, the very few dissentients being led by F. G. Strickland:

Whereas, At a mass meeting of some of the Socialists of Chicago, held Nov. 18, 1900, a resolution of which the following is a part, was passed: "That all Socialists, irrespective of any past affiliation, are hereby called upon to assemble in their respective wards in response to the call of the joint campaign committee, for the purpose of electing five (5) delegates to the city convention and two (2) delegates to a provisional central committee"; and

Whereas, Such a method of nominating candidates and electing delegates would produce great confusion and would weaken the Socialist movement in this city, and would leave it a prey to politicians of all parties; and

Whereas, The best work for Socialism can be done by and through an organized and dues-paying constituency of Socialists affiliated and recognizing a national organization; and

Whereas, All other Socialists of this city, both organized and unorganized, do not owe sufficient fealty to a national organization; and

Whereas, The continuation of independent local organizations will soon place the Socialist movement in a state of chaos; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Chicago members of the Social Democratic party of America, having national headquarters at 126 Washington street, Chicago, call upon, urge and invite all Socialists of this city to join our organization, either singly or in clubs or branches, and with us make a determined fight for our principles in this city in the spring campaign of 1901, and to build up an American Socialist movement which shall be strong enough to resist any attacks from the old parties and politicians, and present a united front to the capitalist press of the country.

That copies of this resolution be sent to The Social Democratic Herald, the Spravellmost, the Workers' Call, the Appeal to Reason and all other Socialist publications of this city.

Other resolutions adopted, were as follows:

Resolved, That this meeting of Social Democrats favors the holding of a national convention of members of the local branches affiliated with 126 Washington street, and requests the national executive board to call such convention for the third Tuesday in January, 1901.

Resolved, That the members of the Social Democratic party acting on the state and county joint campaign committees be withdrawn, and the thanks of this meeting tendered them for their services.

Gillespie's Big Vote

I have seen the accounts of our election in The Herald, and I think a full account is desirable at this time. The Fifth Plymouth district is composed of the towns of Whitman and Abington. The town of Abington is divided into two villages called North Abington and Abington Center. Our vote for representative last year (1899) was as follows:

	Whitman.	N. Abington.	Abington Center.	Total.
O'Brien, rep.	324	113	154	591
Gillespie, S. D.	335	112	28	475
Nash, dem.	112	40	156	308
O'Fihelley, s. l. p.	36	13	30	79

The vote this year is as follows:

	Whitman.	N. Abington.	Abington Center.	Total.
O'Brien, rep.	484	188	312	984
Gillespie, S. D.	540	207	95	842
Nash, dem.	73	20	14	107
Fihelley, s. l. p.	10	2	6	18

You see, we nearly doubled our vote over last year, and had reason for expecting to elect our man, but the democratic nominee personally worked for the republican nominee, standing outside of the polling place in Abington and asking all democrats to vote for O'Brien and thus kill the Socialists, and the trick was done. There was a deal between the Fourth and Fifth Plymouth districts, the republicans in the Fourth agreeing to vote for Perry, democrat, and beat MacCartney, if the democrats in the Fifth would vote for O'Brien, republican, and thus beat Gillespie, and that in their minds would settle the Socialists for all time. The democrats are driven in with the republicans where they belong. Gillespie's vote, 842, would elect MacCartney or Carey or any republican in the state. No man ever elected in this district ever received as many votes as he. We spent about $150 in this district, and you see it has come pretty hard on our small branches, but we will come up soon.

Chas. E. Lowell.

Our Growth in Milwaukee

Every tenth voter in this city is a Social Democrat. Moreover, from now on we are an official party in the state. The official count for the city of Milwaukee has just been completed and shows that with the vote of the towns, Milwaukee county will give us over 5,000. An interesting fact, and one that we are justly proud of, is that the vote for Debs even runs a trifle higher than that for Tuttle, our candidate for governor. This shows that our Milwaukee Social Democrats stood pat. None of them voted the state and local tickets and then put in a capitalistic ballot for president. The vote by wards with the increase over 1898 is as follows:

	1900.	1898.	Gain.
1	52	35	17
2	251	135	116
3	9	3	6
4	50	30	20
5	112	46	66
6	228	121	107
7	43	39	4
8	223	73	150
9	438	247	191
10	414	215	199
11	391	182	209
12	217	105	112
13	280	143	137
14	136	50	86
15	198	99	99
16	31	13	18
17	113	86	27
18	60	36	24
19	547	282	265
20	522	284	238
21	347	216	131
	4,662	2,440	2,222

The vote from the state comes in very slowly. One return that has given us a good deal of gratification is that from Racine county, where 144 votes were cast. This is a surprising gain, as Socialism has heretofore scarcely had a foothold in that section of the state. Racine is a manufacturing city par excellence and is therefore peopled with wage workers. It will now go forward in Socialism and may prove a western Brockton ere long.

A Day at Headquarters

Since the election applications for new branches are coming in and new members are being enrolled with a rush. In a single day last week six applications for new branches were received. On the same day new members were reported as follows:

- Branch 3 of Arkansas, 2.
- Branch 10 of Colorado, 5.
- Branch 1 of Connecticut, 3.
- Branch 8 of Illinois, 3.
- Branch 16 of Illinois, 11.
- Branch 37 of Illinois, 10.
- Branch 43 of Illinois, 5.
- Branch 44 of Illinois, 6.
- Branch 1 of Indiana, 12.
- Branch 5 of Indiana, 1.
- Branch 9 of Indiana, 8.
- Branch 21 of Indiana, 5.
- Branch 5 of Kentucky, 8.
- Branch 12 of Kansas, 7.
- Branch 13 of Kansas, 9.
- Branch 45 of Massachusetts, 1.
- Branch 22 of Missouri, 1.
- Branch 1 of New York, 2.
- Branch 4 of Ohio, 1.
- Branch 2 of South Dakota, 8.
- Branch 1 of West Virginia, 1.
- Branch 1 of Wisconsin, 4.
- Branch 6 of Wisconsin, 1.
- Branch 42 of Wisconsin, 1.
- Total, 115.

On the same day 48 annual and 28 semi-annual subscriptions to The Herald were recorded. The general office bristles with activity, and the hours have to be extended nightly beyond midnight, and all the seven days of the week are necessary to prevent the office from being flooded.

The party has outgrown its office capacity, and one of the duties of the coming convention will be to provide larger quarters and greater facilities for the transaction of the rapidly increasing volume of business. We are on the main track and bound to get there.

Comrade T. C. Sullivan, secretary of the city committee at Brockton, Mass., writes acknowledging the receipt of $5 to help the local campaign, and says: "The fight here is to wipe Socialism from the city hall. We are to have a big meeting with Comrades Coulter and MacCartney, Nov. 28. The republicans challenged us to a debate, we accepted, but now they are backing out. I hope to have good news for you Dec. 5."

SHOULD COLLEGES ACCEPT ILL-GOTTEN GIFTS?

Christian Institutions Gratefully Accept Tainted Wealth and Rise to Chant the Praises of Democracy Triumphant

A PROTEST FROM A WOMAN

Considerable interest was aroused in the press a few months ago by circumstances connected with Mr. John D. Rockefeller's donation of $100,000 to Wellesley College. At the time this gift was offered, a memorial signed by Miss Vida D. Scudder, professor of English literature at Wellesley, and by seventeen other members of the faculty, was addressed to the trustees of the college, requesting that inquiry be made into the business methods of the Standard Oil Company; in order that assurance might be obtained of the propriety of accepting such a gift. The trustees accepted the donation, and there is no evidence that their decision was influenced by the memorial. Miss Scudder offered to resign her professorship if the acceptance of the gift should in any way hamper her freedom of expression, but she was assured by the president of the college that she should have perfect liberty in that respect. A conference which was held in an obscure parish house in Boston, while the matter was still pending, but which had no direct connection with the Wellesley incident, was attended by President Eliot, Prof. John Graham Brooks, and other representatives of several New England colleges. Bishop Potter presided, and the question of the acceptance of "tainted wealth" by colleges was discussed, but no resolutions were adopted. These facts cast some light upon an article in the current issue of The Atlantic Monthly, written by Miss Scudder, regarding the problems involved in this experience at Wellesley. She says:

"No one questions that the mammoth fortunes which are coming to be a distinctive feature of American life are sometimes made by methods which are cruel if not technically dishonest, methods pushed perilously near the limits of what even the crude conscience expressed in common law considers legitimate—pushed some way, though the fact can rarely be proved, beyond those limits. Wealth exists which has been piled together by means unscrupulous and unchristian. It stands in the public mind as a symbol of unrestrained self-seeking and greed; it has to the knowledge of many left behind its shining heaps a ravaged desert track of despair. There is a growing tendency on the part of owners of money of this kind to spend lavishly on works of public utility, on the endowment of churches, charities, universities. It is a paradoxical situation. With the one hand the owner of such wealth thrusts his competitors into the abyss of commercial ruin, or grinds the faces of the poor; with the other, he hands the resultant gain to the Christian institutions of the land, which gratefully accept it, and rise to chant the psalm of democracy triumphant."

The view is sometimes taken that ethical scrutiny of the sources of wealth is wholly uncalled for, on the ground that the use sanctifies the gift, and that the endowment of churches and colleges is so important that money should be accepted without question from any source. On the other hand, some contend that even an inconsiderable degree of popular odium attached to money should make a Christian institution shrink from accepting it. Miss Scudder attempts to find middle ground between these two extreme conclusions. She declares:

"There are two broad, positive reasons why churches and colleges should at least exercise far more caution than they have been doing of late in the acceptance of proffered gifts."

"First, to ignore a scruple is to help suppress it. Every institution which accepts without explanation money under suspicion or indictment weakens the awakening demand for ethical scrutiny of the sources of wealth. The church and the university, standing as they do for the subjugation of the gross automatic instincts of the race by conscience and reason, are our most safe and natural guides; and ill betides the country where they hold the rear rather than the van. The attitude of self-justification in which certain institutions find themselves to-day is in itself a grave public misfortune. For a college or church which accepts questionable money as a matter of course injures far more than itself. It stifles the breath of new life in our civilization, and the higher its standing and the stronger its influence the more fatally does it effect this end."

"Another reason, equally practical, equally cogent, should impose caution in the acceptance of money, the danger lest our colleges forfeit the respect of the people. No one can move among working people in an informal and intimate fashion without realizing how entirely they lack confidence in the integrity of our academic life, how honest and sincere is the scorn with which they view it. It is said by the head worker of one of the largest settlements in New York that economic argument with the clever young Socialists of the East Side is rendered useless by their contempt for the traditions she represents and the authorities she cites. 'Of course Professor This and Professor That hold such views; they have salaries to draw,' is the constant rejoinder."

If the great throng of the unprivileged come to distrust the centers whence these unifying forces should proceed, and to view them as class institutions, where is our hope for the future? Better than this, let poverty be the portion of our colleges, as it has been the portion of some of the strongest centers of intellectual life that the world has known."

Miss Scudder ventures the hope that the college which sets the example of rigid honesty may benefit thereby even pecuniarily. "It is conceivable," she says, "that the first institution to refuse an offer of ill-gotten money might draw to itself students from the length and breadth of the land. Countless eager contributions from the modest means of many might flow in upon it, and bring within its reach those riches which it had shown itself strong to do without." She concludes:

"There is no duty before the academic and religious world in America more pressing than the duty of strengthening the demand that methods of acquiring wealth come wholly under the dominion of the moral sense. There is no opportunity more significant, more in danger of closing forever, than the opportunity of convincing the public at large, by definite sacrifice of worldly advantage, if need be, that the intellectual life of the country, as represented by its organized centers, is disinterested, honest, and free."

It is interesting to recall in this connection the report that Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago, declined a gift to that institution not long ago from Mr. John D. Rockefeller, but requested that the donation be made to some hospital or other public institution, whose function was other than that of imparting education and molding public opinion.

New Life at Terre Haute

The Socialists met in C. L. U. hall last Sunday and the hall was crowded, every seat being taken. E. V. Debs was present and delivered a splendid address, which was received with frequent applause. Fifteen new members were admitted, making a total membership of fifty-seven for the local branch, and more are expected to join at the next meeting. Plans were discussed for the organization of ward clubs throughout

What New Jersey Socialists Think

The following resolutions have been forwarded to The Herald by the state campaign committee of New Jersey:

"The state campaign committee of the New Jersey Social Democratic party herewith denounces the action of Prof. Frank Parsons, B. O. Flower and Elwood Pomeroy in requesting E. V. Debs to withdraw in favor of Bryan as a trick worthy of ward politicians, but not of honorable men, and especially men calling themselves Socialists. The request was sent out, knowing that Comrade Debs under no circumstances would withdraw, and purposely was sent only a few days previous to election to aid the capitalist press in spreading the thought that Comrade Debs had withdrawn and thus deceive voters. We would point out that none of the men whose names are appended to this request have ever done anything to prove themselves class conscious Socialists, nor in fact ever stood for any popular, righteous cause; even Elwood Pomeroy only going with the populist party when its vote reached 2,000,000, and then apparently only for the purpose of helping to betray the populist cause to the democratic party."

"We therefore feel justified in warning all honest reformers, and especially Social Democrats, against the men who would resort to such tricks. These men have simply unconsciously been true to their class interests, not one of them belonging to the producing class. In their action we see new proof that the only hope of the working class is in the working class itself."

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF AMERICA

THE NATIONAL PLATFORM

Adopted at the Indianapolis Convention, March, 1900

ATTITUDE TOWARD TRADE UNIONS

In accordance with our declaration of principles we declare that the trades union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the wage-working class. We recommend to the members of the Social Democratic party the following general rules:

- First—Join the union of your respective trade.
- Second—Assist in building up and strengthening the trade union movement.
- Third—Support the union labels of all crafts.
- Fourth—Educate your fellow-unionists on the question of Socialism and the labor movement, on economic and political lines.
- Fifth—It shall be your duty to work for the unity of the labor movement, thereby recognizing the fact that the emancipation of the working class can only be achieved by the united efforts of this class.
- Sixth—Educate the members of the unions in the principles of Socialism and induce them, individually, to affiliate with the Social Democratic party.
- Seventh—Trades unions are by historical necessity organized on neutral grounds, as far as political affiliation is concerned. The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for proletarian emancipation.

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

- First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.
- Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.
- The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.
- The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.
- The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man. As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:
- First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment, and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

National Organization

Section 1. This organization shall be known as the Social Democratic Party of America, and its headquarters shall be located at such place as the national conventions of the party may appoint, or as may be fixed by the National Executive Board subject to a referendum vote.

Sec. 2. The Social Democratic Party of America shall be organized as follows:

First—Local branches limited to five hundred members each.

Second—A National Executive Board of nine members, five of whom shall be chosen from territory convenient to the national headquarters, and shall be called "resident members," and the remaining four shall be chosen, so far as possible, from other parts of the country. All members of the Executive Board shall have equal rights and powers; but the resident members shall have power to act and a majority of said resident members shall constitute a quorum. The non-resident members shall not be required to be present at all meetings of the board, but shall be kept advised of all proceedings of the board. The Executive Board shall be elected by the national convention.

Third—The form of state organizations shall be left to the branches in the respective states.

Campaign Committee's Report

The Herald prints with pride the work done by the national campaign committee, a full report of which is given in this week's paper. It was work done under great difficulties, for the most part, but always with the cheerful co-operation of comrades all over the country, without which nothing could have been accomplished. No such constant flood of Socialist literature has ever been printed and distributed as by this committee in 1900.

Dues and the Herald

Members of the party who expect to receive The Herald must keep their dues paid up. The amount is a mere trifle, and is often overlooked or neglected on that account. We receive numerous complaints that The Herald fails to reach comrades and in almost every case it is due to the fact that the dues of the complaining comrade are unpaid.

Each comrade should see to it that his dues are paid; and the treasurer of each branch should see to it that they are promptly forwarded to headquarters.

We are obliged to keep the records properly and the names of all members who fail to pay up their dues will hereafter be promptly stricken from the mailing list.

To Comrades

Do you know of five Socialists in any city, town, village or hamlet who have no branch? If so, let us hear from you at once and we will take prompt steps to have them organized. A branch must be set in operation at every possible point. No place is too small to overlook. We are bristling with determination. We mean business. Every comrade is expected to give us a hand in the work we have laid out for the coming year. Not a single day must be lost. We want more branches; we want more orders for literature; we want more activity north, south, east and west, and finally we want it understood that the Social Democratic party is on the main track and has the right of way to the co-operative commonwealth.

Snap Shots

If the dues of your branch are behind, see that they are paid up and that the branch is set in motion.

The most wonderful activity prevails in our party since the election. Our comrades everywhere are up and doing.

Good morning! Have you secured that subscriber to the Social Democratic Herald?

FROM THE WORKERS

Montana—The official returns for Montana, so far as known at this time, are as follows: Butler, 240; Anaconda, 121; Bozeman, 22; Cascade county, 47; Kalispell, 24; Dillon, 5; Billings, 19; Red Lodge, 45. There are some votes in every county and it is safe to say that the total vote in the state for the presidential ticket will be between 700 and 800. Gustav Frankel.

Tennessee—My former advice to you that Debs received only 28 votes in Shelby county was an error. Official returns give him 45 in the city (Memphis) and 32 in the county; total, 77. Wm. P. Mason.

Illinois—We are grinding away still and hope to put a full ticket in the field for the spring election. Harry W. Nelson.

Indiana—The official vote for state officers are considerably larger than our first figures. Kelly for governor has 2,238; Backus, lieutenant-governor, 2,238; Evinger, secretary, 2,235; Croke, auditor, 2,231; Halsman, treasurer, 2,220; Thornton, attorney-general, 2,224; Fieser, court reporter, 2,152; Thorndyke, public instructor, 2,218; Ehrenhardt, 2,220. C. A. Thornton.

Kentucky—We claim that Bellevue is the banner town in Kentucky in one respect; we have gained legal standing as a party in town elections. We intend to nominate a full ticket at the municipal election next spring. H. Listerman.

Colorado.—In Teller county the highest vote for presidential electors of the S. D. P. was 104. The candidate for governor (D. C. Copley) received 223. Delta county gave 30 votes for president and 26 for governor. M.

Texas.—We received 51 votes in this (Parker) county and 60 in Palo Pinto county, which joins us on the west. We know we polled over 100 votes in this county, yet the guardians of our liberties give us only 51. D. C. Bruce.

Texas.—The electoral vote of San Antonio is 101. You can add 50 to 60 per cent to this. Our votes were not counted. Where we had men at the polls they almost had to resort to blows to get any counted, but most of them were ruled out. Wm. Tullos.

Massachusetts.—At a meeting of the branches in the Eleventh aldermanic district, Boston, held Nov. 17, the following nominations were made by acclamation: Alderman, Eleventh district, Richard D. Schmidt; councilmen, Ward 22, Alphonse Andel, Chas. S. Chipman, Wm. F. Fahey. Fred S. Schmidt.

Make yours the banner branch. In these bristling times pluck and perseverance win the victory.

Shake the moss from your back, comrade, and stand up in the sunlight and be counted among the soldiers of Socialism.

Debs' Lecture Course

In answer to numerous inquiries we have to say that Comrade E. V. Debs will deliver a limited number of lectures during the present season. Applications should be sent in as soon as possible as the available dates will be booked in advance.

Labor unions, central bodies, clubs and societies can obtain terms by addressing Comrade Debs at Terre Haute, Ind.

Cook County Ticket

The official canvass of the returns shows that the candidates for different offices in Cook county, Illinois, on the Social Democratic ticket received votes as follows:

States Attorney (Morgan).....	6,227
Recorder (Petersen).....	6,432
Clerk Circuit Court (Ballard).....	6,515
Clerk Superior Court (Lindgren).....	6,378

Martin Irons

When Martin Irons died the other day organized labor lost a devoted, helpful and courageous adherent; the struggling masses, chained to the juggernaut of capitalism, lost a man who for many years labored with all his powers, entirely oblivious to personal interests or advantage, to show them the way out of slavery. Comrade Irons' metal was tested in the Iron Mountain railway strike, which he led with great credit to himself. He died at Bruceville, Texas, Nov. 17.

GROUND WORK OF SCIENTIFIC SOCIALISM

Various Distinct Eras in the March of Human Progress Noted—The Development of Capitalist System of Production

THE COMMUNIST MANIFESTO

Evolution of Capitalism and the Goal to
Which It Inevitably Tends—Unerring
Forecasts of Marx and Engels

By James Oneal

In March, 1899, in the city of Chicago, Prof. Albion W. Small, in an address delivered before a body of Methodist ministers, used the following words: "In this age of so-called democracy we are getting into the thralls of the most relentless system of economic oligarchy that history has thus far recorded. The march of human progress is getting reduced to marking time in the lockstep of capital's chain gang."

This pessimistic cry is re-echoed by thousands who realize that something is out of gear in our industrial and social machinery, but who see no solution of the complex problems with which society is afflicted. To assert, as the Socialist does, that these evils which have become so intense are merely the pangs of child-birth incident to the transition from one stage of civilization to another, is to invite from the "learned" such phrases as "impracticable," "dreamer," etc. To such as these capitalist society presents itself as a solid crystal no longer subject to those great changes which have characterized its development in the past, and that while changes may take place, they will not be of such a magnitude as to burst the integument in which it is incased, and stand forth as a distinct stage in the evolution of society. Happily, however, the tendency and direction in which society is evolving cannot be made to move in the groove mapped out for it in the brain of some great man or thinker; and if it can be proved that the laws of social evolution inevitably point to the decay and dissolution of capitalism and as a consequence the dawn of a new era, then the ridicule of the "learned" will avail them naught.

I am well aware that Socialism is denied the name of science by those who hold the power to confer it. This is not difficult to account for when we recall to mind the opposition that Darwin met with in the publication of his "Origin of Species." As Marx has well said: "In the domain of political economy, free scientific inquiry meets not merely the same enemies as in all other domains. The peculiar nature of the material it deals with, summons as foes into the field of battle the most violent, mean and malignant passions of the human breast—the furies of private interest." When it is also remembered that those in possession of class privileges control the great educational institutions through endowments and other means, it is not surprising that Socialism should be denied, by this class, the mantle of science that one of their "professors" should declare John D. Rockefeller a greater man than Shakespeare. Nevertheless, the accuracy of the Socialist's analysis of industrial forces and social phenomena, is of more value than the questionable indorsement of these "professors." The first is essential, the second is not.

Modern Socialism as a science dates with the issuance by Karl Marx and Frederick Engels of the "Communist Manifesto" in 1848, which was published as the platform of the "Communist League," a workingmen's association, and which at a later period became international. This little booklet has become one of three classics in Socialist literature and has been translated into the language of every capitalist nation on the globe. In this little work no detailed plan of some ideal society is presented. It is simply an industrial history of the origin of capitalist society out of the womb of feudalism which preceded it, and an analysis of the industrial forces that brought it into being. In his later work, "Das Capital," published in 1867, Marx presents in detail a scientific analysis of capitalist society, explaining the method by which the working class is deprived of the surplus values of its labor, and with a logic and accuracy remarkable for its accordance with subsequent facts, sketched each successive stage in the development of capitalism up to the present trust era which he hardly lived to see, having died in 1883. This achievement by him alone should be of sufficient importance to raise Marx's system of political economy to the plane of one of the exact sciences, for there is no better method of determining the merits of a science than the ability of its exponent to predict in advance the results of his observations. Thus astronomy is considered one of the most perfect branches of human knowledge because it enables the investigator to predict the occurrence of heavenly phenomena at a designated time and place in the future, marvelous for its accuracy. Just why Socialism has not been accorded the same privilege with other branches of human knowledge is easily perceived by those who recognize its evolutionary character and the opposition it must contend with.

As a science it presents three aspects, past, present and future. The first two (past and present) may be discussed under the head of the "Evolution of Capitalism." The third (the future) under the head of the "Goal that Evolution Points To."

Evolution of Capitalism

The results of such patient investigators as Sir John Lubbock, Mr. Taylor, Herbert Spencer, Lewis Morgan and others, have proven that communism was the "cradle of the human race." This is the first form of human society presented to man at the dawn of history, survival of which may yet be seen among the Australian aborigines and various tribes in South Africa. This society had as its basis communal ownership of land, herds and flocks and in many instances of wives. Such an organization was necessarily very crude, yet it lasted for centuries. After the dissolution of this primitive social organization, due to various causes, land began to be appropriated by military chieftains as private property and captives were enslaved for the purpose of tilling the soil for the benefit of the owners. Agriculture came to be the most prominent feature during this period and historians have appropriately designated it as the "Agricultural Stage."

With the fall of the Roman Empire a system, founded on private property in land and human beings, a period commonly known as the Dark Ages prevailed for hundreds of years. Feudalism was its successor. A system wherein the serf was attached to the soil and was sold with it. Under this system, simple manufactures developed and played a prominent role in production. The towns began to grow and expand as manufacturing developed. Simple machines were invented, which replaced the simple and crude tools formerly used, and later on as industry developed through the application of water power and steam, the class in possession of these things obtained political supremacy, feudalism fell and capitalism made its entrance on the stage of history.

Thus in looking backward we find that the human race in its gradual ascendancy to civilization has reached certain marked stages and each and every stage presented advantages which were seized upon, improved and handed on to its successor. The most important factor in this development was the progressive improvement in the productive forces of society. As the productive forces in any given age develop a corresponding change takes place in the whole superstructure. New social classes and social factors hitherto unknown, develop and expand with the changes in the methods of wealth production, and slowly but surely push their way to the front and gain the ascendancy over the old. When this development reaches maturity the old society is burst asunder and the new starts on the path of progress and undergoes the same process. Thus in the march of human progress various distinct eras have been evolved only to pass away and make room for more vigorous ones and to assume that we have attained the highest and that capitalism is ordained to an eternal existence, is to presuppose a suspension of those laws that brought it into being. Capitalism itself presents abundant evidence of its decline and fall and in its old age presents such marvelous changes that it is hard to believe that this is the same lusty infant born a few hundred years ago. Like the other systems that have passed away capitalist society rests on the exploitation of the producing class, the only difference being in the methods and the intensity of the process. Beginning with private ownership of land and the instruments of labor, it has developed its own negation, corporate or trust ownership.

Let us trace the process. The entrance of the United States into the sisterhood of nations after the termination of the American Revolution, presented a system of small petty industry adapted to the domestic needs of the times. This crude method was based on personal ownership of the small shops and the simple tools then in vogue, and of

MERLIN'S MIXTURE

Charles W. Cannon of Revere, Mass.

"Today is the day of salvation"
By Socialist science and sway;
From mammon's swift-coming damnation
And anarchy's awful array.

With Hanna our national leader,
And congress monopoly's slave,
With Roosevelt, the strenuous pleader
For guns to make labor behave;

With a prostitute administration,
Selling laws to protect evil gain;
With a people, in strange aberration
Once more giving tyrants the rein;

Soon, soon, spite of fear and of shirking,
The crisis shall bloodlessly come;
Evolution is quickly outworking—
Hear you not the low, ominous hum?

"Today is the day of salvation,"
By Socialist speech and song,
To guard our American nation
From the hell of unexpressed wrong!

NOW

The election is over. The political crisis has come and gone. The event on which we had concentrated our whole interest is a thing of the past.

Naturally our interest wavers. We slacken our pace now that the election milestone has gone by. Or even we stop running and gaze back at the path we have trod, with backs turned to the future.

We make a grand mistake. Today is of more value than tomorrow. All investment of Socialist effort bears compound interest. Truth given to the mass is like leaven in the lump.

A Socialist made now may mean ten votes more in 1904 than if he be made a month hence. Turn loose a Socialist thought upon the world now, and it shall be like a grain of wheat in a plowed field.

The last election means little to us. The road leads straight on. We are bound for the co-operative commonwealth. The day after election is just as vital to us as the day before.

A PROPHECY

The recent election has removed all possible barriers to the swift culmination of economic evolution. The conditions for complete capitalistic consolidation are ideal. The party of the trusts has been given entire control, and the trust magnates will not lose their opportunity to buy up the earth and enslave its inhabitants.

Had Bryan succeeded in the contest he would have been in duty bound compelled to ameliorate the pain caused the people by tyranny's grasp and hence postponed the inevitable climax.

But McKinley, poor, pliable McKinley, has again been placed in his high chair by Hanna and given the presidential seal to play with, while the men who hold mortgages on the white house proceed to get back what they patriotically paid for campaign expenses.

Roosevelt—and here's the prophecy—goes into the strenuous training that shall make him, in less than a decade, the capitalistic leader who shall ride rough-shod over the people's liberties, and shall lead the army of mammon against the army of labor.

TWO SOCIALIST FORCES

Hitherto there have been two forces in the creation of the co-operative commonwealth.

On the one hand there has been the consolidating capitalist, who in blind pursuit of his own self-interest has been the chief factor in industrial evolution. By his combines and trusts and department stores he has been unwittingly de-

THREE WARNINGS TO THE RICH OF NEW YORK

"If you want to find the dangerous classes in this city, do not go into the East Side, among the ignorant, the criminal and the poor. * * * If you had stood in front of Delmonico's last night, as the members of the Chamber of Commerce filed in to sit down to the annual dinner of that organization * * * you would have found them, guilelessly innocent that they were."—Ernest Crosby, speaking in All Souls' Church, Nov. 21.

"What is needed as our next step in civilization is to break a hole and make a window that the public may see into the great corporations and trusts."—Bishop Lawrence, of Massachusetts, at the Chamber of Commerce dinner, Nov. 21.

"If the majority, through neglect of education and means of advancement, lapse into barbarism, spoliation and robbery, extinction of property would be the sure result."—Abram S. Hewitt.

stroying the old system of competition. On the other hand has been the Socialist educator, who has studied the science of social evolution, and who proclaims his principles to the world.

The one predicted, the other performed. The one studied the direction along which society should advance; the other, in clearing a way for himself, has helped to make the path.

Rockefeller has done more to prepare the way for Socialism than have any score of curbstone orators, who have stamped on soap boxes and blown soap bubbles of idealism before the blind eyes of the passing crowd.

"All things work together for"—Socialism.

SILENCE IS CRIME

But now times have changed. The consolidating stage of evolution has almost reached its end. Competition has gone; combination has come.

The time has almost come when the capitalist will use his power, not to pave the way for Socialism, but to prevent the people from using the way created.

Then comes the need of labor combination to overthrow the power and utilize the results of capital's combination. Then comes the need of proclamation of the new principles of Socialist co-operation.

Now, therefore, the silent Socialist becomes the social criminal. Having the mental key that would admit labor through the doors of co-operative liberty, he indolently keeps it to himself, while the growing mob hammers in blind and increasing fury at the gates.

Men near you on the street, beside you at the bench, are wondering what shall be done with the tyrant trusts. You know. How shall you dare, then, lock the truth up in your brain and let them drift in thought past the docks of Socialism into the whirlpools of anarchy and force?

ENTHUSIASM

There is one thing, which, after having chosen right principles, conduces more than anything else to the success of an individual, a society or a political party, and that thing is enthusiasm.

The Social Democratic party has commenced its campaign for 1904 and it behooves every member of every branch of the party in every state to work with enthusiasm. You can often win a convert to Socialism by showing a man the platform, explaining to him the need for the changes we advocate, and then with all of the enthusiasm you can muster tell him what record we have already made and what we expect to do in the next four years.

You will be surprised at the effect you can produce. If you find a man who does not agree with you and is constrained to combat the principles you stand for, do not be too quick to use the same tactics. Let him have a chance to state his objections, and then, with perfect control of your own mind, quietly expound the principles of the organization. Let him see that you are thoroughly in earnest and that you have confidence in the final success of the principles you advocate and whether you win him or not, you will have gained his respect; for there is nothing humanity prizes more than earnestness and confidence in one's own plans and principles.

Let every member of the Social Democratic party do his duty, keeping the fires of a noble enthusiasm burning brightly within him, and in four years we will have the balance of power, even if we should not elect the next president. W. A. Ross.

Getting a Line On Us

Just as Socialists hail the development of trusts with joy, so do they take satisfaction in the election of McKinley. They claim the logic of events, unhindered, will make them recruits with increasing rapidity.

If Bryan had been elected the radicals in the capitalistic ranks would have had a temporary success. That success would delay the development of many people who would otherwise soon be ripe for Socialism.

But Bryan has not been elected. Populist democracy has been severely sat down upon. The old party managers will probably now get the reins, and democracy will go back to respectable conservatism. Those opportunist reformers who want to make progress by choosing the lesser of two evils, will not be able to detect much difference between democrats and republicans.

The real malcontents of the party, however, cannot go backwards. They must go into a third party of some sort. Why will they not go into the Socialist party? Look at the relative and absolute progress being made by Socialism! At the next presidential election, the Socialists, who now outnumber the Prohibitionists, will be the third party.—North American Review.

A WORD ABOUT THE "INDEPENDENT"

The Real Struggle of Socialism is to Develop the Political Party that Shall Establish the Co-operative Commonwealth

DEVELOPMENT IN GERMANY

"Independents" May Become Socialists but They are Not Such in Their Present Capacity

A great many men and women who call themselves Socialists do not affiliate with the national party. They hold aloof while the struggle is progressing and the party is evolving. They watch the struggle instead of being in it, with the result that the struggle is prolonged and the development of the party delayed. These "independents" may understand Socialism, but whatever they may conceive themselves to be, they are not Socialists.

The real struggle of Socialism is to establish the co-operative commonwealth. Once the party is perfected, the rest follows as a natural sequence, and is comparatively easy.

Note the struggle in Germany, for example, for over a third of a century to build up a national party. Who shall tell of the patience, self-denial, anxiety, suffering, the strife and turmoil, the jealousy, suspicion, anger and hate, the factional discord, friendships made and broken, the period of temporary harmony shattered by dissension and disruption entailed by the herculean task? But out of it all came the magnificent Social Democratic Party, the wonder and admiration of the Socialist world. Such a party could only have been forged and tempered and molded and fashioned in the flame of passion, the lightning of treachery, the tempest of hate, the sunshine of hope, the tide of economic necessity, the torrent of determination. This is evolution. Did the Titans who were its instruments sit on the fence and "wait" until the party was "made" and presented to them on a silver platter? No, they plunged into the struggle and "made" the party. They did not wait for it to "be made."

Suppose Liebknecht had been one of the "waiters" who are so numerous in this country. Would he have become the social colossus of his day? Would his funeral procession have shaken all Europe? Would the millions of the earth build monuments of flowers, watered by their tears, where the old warrior sleeps? No! If Liebknecht had been an "independent," if he had spent his time on the fence instead of in the fray, if remembered at all it would be as a time-server and a coward, of whom there has been an overproduction ever since man began his tramp from savagery to civilization.

Marx, Engels and Lassalle were not "independent" factors in the social struggle. They shared in all the trials and privations incident to, and inseparable from, the building of a great political movement, and the world will forever remember them with gratitude and love.

Those who become members of clubs and leagues and those who are connected with "independent" and "unattached" bodies for fear that their sensitive organisms may be shocked in the clash of the party struggle, may become Socialists, but they are not such in their present capacity.

Only those are Socialists who are in the national and international party; and if the national party has not yet fully developed, only those have correct conception of Socialist duties who are in and of the struggle, however fierce, of which the party is born, and from which it derives its strength and power. Eugene V. Debs.

The dispatches say that the Hocking Valley railroad had a net income for the year ending June, 30, 1900, of $1,168,547. This, we are further informed is an increase over the earnings of the previous years of $861,545, or only 94 per cent. The rich like the capitalist system, for under it, prosperity lands all the plutes their way. Socialism will bring a different sort of prosperity. Under it there will be no lean wages for the toiler and fat salaries for stockholding head officials. And the dividends will be short hours of work, high and just wages and added security to life in the service—and these dividends will go to the workers themselves.

The Logic of Capitalism

The contention of spokesmen of modern commercialism in the United States is that prosperity is proven by the fact that we have to go abroad for foreign markets in order to dispose of our surplus products. We produce so much, say they, that we are unable to consume a large portion of the product, so we are compelled to look abroad for purchasers. And the bare fact that we have to send products out of the country and are able because of our overproduction to sell these products to others, is a demonstration of our great prosperity!

The range of view of the economists of trade does not take in the obvious fact that products exported for profit, which profit goes to augment private fortunes, are products representing the surplus values created by labor at home; that by reason of the appropriation of the values through the wage system the producing class at home is robbed, and that, therefore, large foreign trade does not mean prosperity for the workers, but rather underconsumption and poverty, enforced upon them by the capitalist system.

Nevertheless, the contention is maintained that the more we send out of the country, the more we enjoy and the greater the measure of prosperity. Since, then, the gauge of the prosperity of a nation is in the amount of goods and commodities shipped out of the country, what is to be said of the claim just made that the prosperity which Germany is now enjoying is due to an entirely opposite cause—viz., that Germany is prosperous because compelled to "buy food products raised abroad"? Americans ship products out and are "prosperous"; Germans ship products in and are "prosperous"; Americans are "prosperous" because they produce "more than they can consume"; Germans are "prosperous" because they do not produce enough to consume; Americans have a big surplus and consequent good times; Germans have a big deficit and the result is the same. This is the logic of capitalism. What do the producers think of it?

"Am I My Brother's Keeper?"

There is in this writing no purpose to engage in homiletical dissertation or enter the realm of sentiment. Cain had killed his brother, and when the Lord asked the murderer, "Where is Abel, thy brother?" Cain replied, "I know not," and then asked, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

The inquiry addressed by the Lord to Cain has lost not a jot of its primeval importance. To use a sophomoric figure, it has come "ringing down the centuries" in all the vitality and vigor of youth.

It has divided the human family into two distinct classes, and the line of demarcation is as vivid as if traced by lightning.

One class replies affirmatively to the query, "Am I my brother's keeper?" It is sympathetic. It feels for the woes of others. It helps, it lifts, it enlightens. It hews out new pathways of progress. It is the class that seeks to redeem from grossness and disenthral from the fetters and entanglements of ignorance, prejudice and bigotry all the low and base depravities of animalism. What there is good in the world it has accomplished, and what there is wrong in the world it has fought since the day when Cain asked the Lord, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Cain represents the other class—the class that does not believe that man is his brother's keeper; the class that has no sympathy for the woes of its fellow men—distinguished for selfishness, unkindness, cruelty, venom, savagery.

The Lord put some sort of a mark upon Cain—a myth has it that the Lord changed Cain into a black man. Possibly, but that matters little. When a man is found without sympathy for his fellow man, unjust in his dealings, cruel in his practices, robbing toil of its earnings to increase his wealth, he wears the Cain mark as certainly and as irretrievably as if his skin were as black as ebony. It is the class that has desolated the earth. It has reaped the fields where others sowed and lived luxuriously amidst the wails of famine. It is the class which, surveying its world-wide field of vision, felicitates itself that by the laws of procreation will forever supply it with toilers, who, satisfied with a "full dinner pail," and having no aspirations above mere animal wants, will add to the list of beatitudes, "Blessed are they who, forgetful of themselves, toil to add to the wealth and enjoyment of those who do not toil."

But, fortunately a new era has dawned with a new program and a new policy. Socialism proclaims, "I am my brother's keeper," and a new party has been launched—the Social Democratic party—to proclaim the divine right of man's ownership of himself. They are the rallying cries of the new century—the avant couriers of victory—the tocsins of battle and the shibboleths of the advancing armies of Socialism.

Bryan Socialists Once More

How many Socialists who voted for Bryan to "save" their votes have since then carefully reviewed the ground they occupied and scrutinized the reasons they gave for supporting an anti-Socialist for-president? We do not mean to say they knew Bryan to be an anti-Socialist. On the contrary, we are satisfied that many of them really believed his election would be a "step" toward it. How they could arrive at such a conclusion remains as much a mystery to us after the election as before. It is notorious that while thousands of men, with intentions more or less good and calling themselves Socialists, were doing yeoman service for the democratic candidate, the three most influential newspapers in the country that supported Bryan—the New York Journal, Chicago American and San Francisco Examiner—did so on the ground, thoroughly understood by the managers of these newspapers, that he was antagonistic to Socialist doctrines. True, the newspapers in question favored national control and ownership of railroads, but that is not Socialism, and it is interesting to note that the Hearst syndicate understood Socialism better than many calling themselves Socialists and giving support to Bryan because of this advocacy of public railroads. This is clear from what Bryan journals had to say before election; the sentimentalists who thought Bryan was a Socialist, too, and that public railroads was a "step" toward Socialism, will do well to ponder a little over what they did say and for their special benefit we quote the newspapers before mentioned:

"The railroad system ought to belong to the public. Under national control, with discriminations abolished and a fair field open to all, IT WOULD HELP TO DELAY THE ADVANCE OF SOCIALISM IN OTHER DIRECTIONS." And so it would. Imagine the democratic party, which, as the Hearst papers declared, "is the only guardian of the COMPETITIVE system," in power with control over the railroads of the country, and you will be able to picture to the mind an extraordinary condition of affairs. The management of the transportation facilities of the country by the democratic party, judged by that party's management in other directions to date, would be the most flagrant and discreditable in the history of human government.

But let us take another sample from the democratic organs. "It should not be forgotten," they said, "that the only party THAT CAN LOGICALLY OPPOSE THE GENERAL ADOPTION OF SOCIALISM IS THE DEMOCRACY." If the Bryan Socialists understand the true meaning of these declarations, they can no longer honestly support the party which "is the only guardian of the competitive system." Either they are for Socialism or against it. The democratic party, its leaders and its principal newspapers are against it; they are opposed to the advance of Socialism both from party tradition and policy. The late leader of the party is instinctively individualistic, anti-Socialist and a firm believer in the competitive system.

A Union Which Unites

The city of Fitchburg, Mass., has recently furnished an example of Socialist unity which for completeness and success is well worthy of emulation.

At the opening of the campaign there was in Fitchburg a branch of the S. D. P. unflinchingly loyal to the Chicago N. E. B. There was also an S. L. P. "Kangaroo" branch. Each branch had almost twenty members and both contained excellent material. They had previously worked together in local elections harmoniously.

In addition to these there was a large body of unattached Socialists comprising some of the very best men and women in the city. All these three elements had united in carrying on a series of meetings during the winter of 1899-1900, with the result that the city had become permeated through and through with Socialist doctrine.

This was the situation at the beginning of the campaign. The conditions were ripe for a model Socialist union, and it has been brought about.

The S. L. P. "Kangaroo" branch voted to disband and has practically gone over in a body to loyal Branch No. 14 of the S. D. P. In addition no less than twenty-four of the unattached Socialists have joined in the last three meetings, making its total membership fifty-six up to date. It has become one of the most vigorous and progressive branches in the state.

Fitchburg gave 250 votes for Debs at the last election, and a municipal ticket has just been put in the field. It is a straight Socialist ticket without deals or indorsements. Comrade Henry L. Rice, who had previously been a candidate on a citizens' ticket, has been nominated for mayor.

Comrades Bartlett, Davidson and Peabody are candidates for aldermen, together with nine councilmen and two members of the school board.

The movement in Fitchburg has thus been put on a permanent and growing basis. The comrades of the S. L. P. and S. D. P. are to be congratulated—the former for their breadth of vision and wisdom of action, the latter for their loyalty, which has gained its own just reward, and both for the genuine Socialist spirit which has prevailed and for the success which is now assured through this union which unites.

NOTES AND COMMENT

It is reported of a charcoal burner down in the Jerseys, the spawning ground of trusts, that, having got "religion," he was, on one occasion, called upon to lead in public prayer. The poor fellow was illiterate, but fond of high-sounding words, the meaning of which he had no comprehension, and began his invocation as follows: "O thou great diabolical God!" The Jerseyman's prayer might be adopted by the Filipinos after a battle for liberty and their native land, or by a family evicted from a capitalist's tenement in New York, while suffering the combined pangs of freezing and starvation.

Having run short or tired of the stock arguments against Socialism, which they are beginning to see are losing their efficacy with the people, some of the capitalist newspapers are keeping up a reputation for lying by publishing a statement that Eugene V. Debs has predicted that before the end of McKinley's administration the streets of the cities "will be saturated with blood." It is needless to say that Debs said nothing of the kind. The saying of things like that nowadays is the special privilege of Christian bishops and ministers.

President McKinley talks of the tremendous weight of responsibility Providence has laid upon him and the republican party, nothing less than civilizing and Christianizing ten million Filipinos with shotguns. As to what becomes of the "niggers" little heed may be taken, but it is exceedingly expensive for Mr. McKinley to go a-gunning in the Philippines, and as labor pays everything, including the Philippine sport now going on in our oriental possessions, labor has a right to complain, the game not being worth the powder.

During the late campaign the papers reported that great throngs of the people attended the meetings of Eugene V. Debs, the standard bearer of the Social Democratic party. If our comrades in all of the branches of the party will exert their energies to send The Herald new subscribers, it will address every week larger meetings than greeted Teddy the Terrible, Billy the Boxer or both combined. Send us at least 20,000 by Christmas. It will be an acceptable Christmas gift.

The Social Democratic party is no longer an experiment, but an acknowledged power. It has found its place. The people waited for it and it came. Those who were present at its christening are astonished in contemplating its development. Those who would increase its power should establish new branches. The people, as the late campaign demonstrated, want to know more of the party, its principles, policy and program.

The growing Socialist sentiment in the country, as evinced by the late election, has started a big batch of lackadaisical intellectualities who get a living from educational institutions where education is "limited" to lecturing on liberty. The man least qualified to talk about liberty is the college professor, who has no scruple about the source of his income, and whose individual freedom is hampered by the limit-lines fixed by his rich patron.

In India they have the banyan tree, a sort of a miracle of the forest. Its branches send out roots which, descending into the soil, produce more banyan trees, and this goes on until the parent tree becomes itself a forest of mighty trees capable of sheltering thousands of people. Let every member of the Social Democratic party plant a banyan branch of the party. It will pay.

The Herald is the organ of the Social Democratic party, and in a broader sense the organ of the great Socialistic movement in the United States.

The more subscribers it enlists the more good it will be able to accomplish for the cause it advocates.

The following is the latest reported make-up of McKinley's next cabinet; Secretary of state, Hon. M. A. Hanna; secretary of treasury, Mr. Mark Hanna; secretary of war, Marcus Aurelius Hanna; attorney-general, Mr. Hanna; postmaster-general, Hanna; secretary of the navy, M. Aurelius Hanna; secretary of the interior, M. Hanna; secretary of agriculture, Senator Hanna.

Andrew Carnegie says John D. Rockefeller is the richest man in the world, having an income of $16,000,000 a year. A little arithmetic will show that every time the clock ticks off a second, during the round year, night and day, including Sundays and all holidays, something more than $5.00 drops into John D. Rockefeller's money box.

If without hypocrisy
You would help Social Democracy,
And down capitalist aristocracy,
Then decide
To proclaim God's fatherhood,
Man's brotherhood,
Your own manhood,
And subscribe
For The Herald.

At a conference meeting of Bible readers reference was made to the five "foolish virgins who went to meet the bridegroom without oil in their lamps," when one of the party remarked that "evidently some John D. Rockefeller of the time had advanced the price of oil or closed down on the retail shop of the village."

Mr. I. W. Morton of the Simmons Hardware company, St. Louis, says his firm is paying the same salaries for the same services that it did twenty-five years ago. This is doubtless quite true, for Mr. Morton knows; but it reads funny, doesn't it? So does his argument that commercial ethics today are higher than ever before.

Socialists, members of the Social Democratic party, may forget several things without inflicting upon themselves or the party special damage, but forgetting to subscribe for The Herald is not of the list. To forget that duty is as if a soldier going into battle should forget to take along his gun.

Is there to be another attempt to force upon us another "honorable union"? A press report now has it that the populists and other reformers have a movement afoot for a new party to "include the Social Democrats." Please count us out, friends; we want ten years' relief from fusionism.

A French scientist, by imprisoning a lot of ants, discovered the insects could talk, and as near as he could understand the language it amounted to about this: "Capitalism has come and destroyed our co-operative commonwealth."

The duke of Manchester, the white elephant caught by Miss Zimmerman in the jungles of London and is now in America for exhibition, has several trunks—which he expects his father-in-law will fill with cash.

The latest estimate is that McKinley wants 60,000 new recruits for his standing army. Evidently Mark Hanna proposes to be ready for the next great strike of the dinner pail brigade.

Capitalism is occasionally exploited in boneyards, as, for instance, John W. Mackay built in Greenwood cemetery, New York, a family mausoleum, costing $400,000.

It is reported that William Jennings Bryan will continue to fight for "free silver." The Social Democratic party will continue its fight for free men.

When Byron wrote that "Freedom's battle once begun,
Bequeath'd by bleeding sire to son,
Tho' baffled oft, is ever won,"
He sounded a keynote and blended fancy and fact in a way to inspire unflinching courage in the breasts of those who are willing to battle for freedom.

"Freedom's battle" suggests freedom's army, and army suggests soldiers.

The Social Democratic party is freedom's army. It needs soldiers.

Our campaign has been fought. Another is on. No member of the army or party is required to blush for the results of the first campaign. Its banners were not trailed in the dust. There was no bugle call for retreat. No muffled drum beat a funeral march. Every soldier can secure a recruit, and the new recruit still another, and thus "freedom's battle" will proceed on its conquering march to victory.

The Herron Lectures

Announcement is made that, beginning Sunday, Jan. 6, 1901, and thereafter every Sunday afternoon until March 24, Prof. George D. Herron will lecture at Central Music hall, Chicago. Admission will be free, and lectures begin at 3:30 p. m. Readers of The Herald desiring to aid in furthering the cause of which these lectures will be an expression will communicate with Franklin H. Wentworth, 609 Ashland block, Chicago.

MR. DOOLITTLE'S LATEST OBJECTIONS TO SOCIALISM

Bob Workman met his friend, Mr. Doolittle, on the avenue yesterday and the conversation drifted upon political subjects.

"Bob," remarked his friend, "the more I think of your remarks on Socialism, the more convinced I am that you are laboring under a delusion—a sort of fantasy."

"I'm not at all surprised," remarked Bob, smiling. "Have you ever read 'Looking Backward,' 'Merrie England,' 'Equality,' or any of the numerous books and pamphlets on the subject?"

"N-no," admitted Mr. Doolittle.

"Then, of course, you have not read any of the more scientific works of Marx, Engels and others, in which case you remind me of a school boy who, before he has mastered addition, subtraction, multiplication and division, complains that he can see nothing in the problems of algebra."

"That's putting it rather strong," remarked Mr. Doolittle.

"But it is true, however. I find that of ten persons who oppose Socialism, nine have never studied the subject at all, while the tenth man is prevented by circumstances from acknowledging what he knows to be true."

"Socialism," continued Bob, as he warmed to the subject, "is unlike all other political systems—it proposes absolute and equal justice to all alike. Socialism does not mean that because I am physically your superior that I should rob you. Neither does it uphold a system which gives to the strong mentally the right to rob the weak minded."

"The system you believe in has abandoned the first idea, but still clings to the second, which gives you the privilege of taking advantage of your neighbor's weakness to take his goods, by a system of profits, rent and interest. The end sought is the same and the result is the same as far as the man who is deprived of his belongings is concerned."

"For instance, take the recent section hand strike in this section. Two years ago the section men were getting $1.10 per day. Today they are getting the same wages—but with this difference: Today he pays on an average one-fourth more for the things he needs to live on. The result is that one-fourth of his wages are taken from him."

"Suppose I should hold you up tonight and demand one-fourth of your wealth at the point of a gun, would not the result be the same as in the case of the section man?"

Mr. Doolittle scratched his chin reflectively and attempted to reply.

"Well, er—you see, the one is business and the other is robbery."

"True," replied Bob, "you've struck it exactly. One is robbery and the other business—but is not the result the same in both cases?"

"Well, yes," admitted the other.

"Then in order to justify our present system of business you must admit that highway robbery is right. If you disagree with this statement you place our present commercial system in the category as robbery."

"Well, it does look that way," admitted Mr. Doolittle.

"Socialism proposes to abolish entirely the present system of business just as feudalism was abolished and chattel slavery was abolished, and introduce a system nearer perfect, which will guarantee to the laborer the product of his toil. To understand why this should be done, I would prescribe a course of reading beginning with 'Looking Backward,' 'Merrie England,' 'Equality,' to be followed by Marx, Engels and the masters of the subject."—The Critic.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

S. N.—The claim that the executive board "costs from $6,000 to $8,000" annually is an absurd and untrue claim. Those who advance the ridiculous proposition know better. As a member of the national organization you pay dues of 25 cents per quarter; in consideration of these payments you receive fifty-two weeks in the year The Social Democratic Herald. If we had no organization and no Herald, you as a Socialist would subscribe for a Socialist paper, say 50 cents per year, and 19,999 others like you would do the same. The amount of money that would go annually into private publication would thus be $10,000. We are glad to note that you are clear minded enough to see that it would be the product supplied in the form of a weekly newspaper and not the owner or owners of the paper that would "cost" $10,000. As a matter of cold fact, the executive board costs the party nothing. On the contrary, the party is a constant source of expense to members of the board. The Herald costs money; the party is responsible for its existence. Service of those persons engaged wholly in the work of the organization and the paper costs money. The party is responsible for their employment. The executive board costs nothing. We have an organization and the members made it. The Herald is the property of the party and not of the executive board. It stands for the party and for Socialism and costs no more than any other Socialist paper. And, we may add, now is the time to subscribe.

SOCIALISM AND PRACTICAL POLITICS

Social Democrats in Germany Will Begin the New Century with the Exercise of Real Power. Will Take Active Part in Legislation

GRÉAT QUESTION OF THE DAY

Many people will watch with interest to see what the Social Democratic party will do during the next session of the German reichstag. That it will attack the Chinese policy of the government is certain. At the Mayence party congress a resolution was adopted which reads to the following effect:

The war in China is a capitalist war, and its sole object is the subjugation and exploitation of the Chinese people. Such a policy demoralizes the conquerors and provokes continual rebellion among the subjugated. Moreover, it causes jealousies among the powers, and sows the seeds of international conflict which must needs arrest the march of progress and civilization. As the enemy of all oppression, the Social Democratic party protests against the policy of pillage and conquest, for we believe that no one has the right to spread modern civilization except by precept and example.

It is not likely that the Socialists will be able seriously to affect the foreign policy of the government; but they will doubtless begin the new century with the exercise of real power, as they intend to take an active part in legislation. Prof. Hans Delbrück, in his "Preussische Jahrbücher," expresses himself in the main as follows:

The Socialist party, considering the number of votes it controls, is the strongest party, and it is the only one capable of further development. The other parties have become petrified. The conservatives have long since ceased to gather in congress, and the national-liberals followed suit. The gatherings of the Centrists are as inane as parliamentary sittings. The only congresses worth noticing are those of the Socialists. The latter have made up their minds to nominate candidates even for the Prussian landtag, despite the unfavorable conditions under which the elections for that body take place. There can be no harm in the presence of a few Socialists in the Prussian parliament. Radicalism is necessary in the body politic, and it will do less harm in parliament than out of it.

Of course the Socialists continue to attack the foreign policy of the government. That is the way the parliamentarism. The opposition follows the principle that everything the government does must be reviled. Gladstone, who was a master of this sort of thing, demanded in the eighties that England should evacuate Egypt. He never dreamed of acting in accordance with his anti-election speeches when he came into power. At Mayence, Herr Singer calmly said the Socialists would tell the whole world, when they came into power what foreign policy they meant to adopt. As regards economic and commercial questions, they mean to drop their policy of uncompromising opposition, and this is a matter of great importance. If the government is able to obtain a majority for its commercial treaties, then it will be a matter of small importance how the Socialists vote. But it is quite possible that their assistance will be needed. The anti-patriotic attitude of the Socialist need not worry any one. History teaches us that in war time the patriotic party is always strongest. We see this again in England. The Transvaal war undoubtedly is not free from condemnation on moral grounds, yet the British people gathered around the flag. Can any one suppose that Germans, who do not make use of hirelings, but to take the rifles themselves, would be less patriotic if necessary? To talk against militarism in times of peace may serve the purposes of the political agitator. If war is really upon us, such agitation vanishes. The Socialists have been forced to admit that, "under certain circumstances," they would fulfill their patriotic duties. What good can their anti-militarist agitation do if they are forced to abandon their uncompromising internationalism for a kind of relative patriotism?

The time when a confirmed radical can hope to become a member of the German cabinet is probably very distant; but Socialists must be given places in parliamentary committees if they take an active part in parliamentary work, and even the speakership would not be beyond their reach. Theoretically, the question will be raised in the party whether a revolutionist may share in the work which tends to strengthen the complete form of government. Theoretically, M. Millerand, the Socialist French minister of commerce, is attacked for holding a position under the government. But these attacks seem to have little practical value. "In France, as in Germany, the Socialists represent too large a number of voters to abstain from practical politics," remarks the Journal des Debats (Paris); "their constituencies wish to see practical results." But in England, where Socialism is still in its infancy, the revolutionary character of the party is emphasized more strongly. Justice (London) is opposed to any alliance with other radical parties. It says:

"Our ultimate object is the consummation of Social Democracy, the achievement of the social revolution; and in the meantime our work is the organization of a definite revolutionary Social Democratic party inside and outside of the house of commons as an instrument for the advancement of our ultimate aim. We do not wish to form an advanced, semi-Socialist-cum-Radical-cum-Labor party, but a Social Democratic party. We have joined with radicals, Irish nationalists, and social and political reformers of all kinds in defense of the right of public meeting, for the extension of the franchise, in resisting coercion in Ireland, and for many other objects. In the recent election we have shown our readiness to co-operate with others for an object which we thought to be right. . . . But the election is over now; and we have to remember that the imperialism which we engaged to fight in that contest is only one of the many forms of capitalist domination, and there is no immediate issue before us upon which we are called upon to combine with anybody. Those who agree with us will join our ranks; and an attempt to form a permanent alliance with those who do not agree with us would be useless. Our work now is mainly that of agitation, education and organization; and we may as well agitate, educate and organize for Social Democracy as for anything else."—The Literary Digest.

The Woman Vote

Special interest attaches to the election results in the four states of Utah, Colorado, Wyoming and Idaho from the fact that in these states the women are entitled to vote. The newspaper editors have been scanning the returns from these states to find some striking or picturesque feature due to woman's ballot; but the only striking fact that appears in the returns is the absence of any such feature. The women seem to have voted about as men would under similar circumstances. In Wyoming, for example, John C. Thompson, the Democratic candidate for Congress, was reported early in the campaign as saying that the woman vote was "the easiest to get, the easiest to keep and the easiest to manipulate of all elements in politics." The candidate denied that he ever made the unfortunate remark, but without avail; he was not only defeated, but ran 800 votes behind the rest of the ticket. His opponent had the largest majority ever given a candidate in the state. Elnora Monroe Babcock, a woman-suffrage candidate, writes triumphantly to the Detroit Journal: "As to whether Mr. Thompson ever made this statement or not we do not know; but, if he did, he is undoubtedly a wiser man than he was when he made it." In Colorado the woman vote increased from 46,720 in 1896 to 86,943 this year, "owing, possibly," says the Chicago Times-Herald, "to the greater interest taken in the election because of the marked subsidence of free-silver sentiment, but more directly, however, to their wish to effect the defeat of Senator E. O. Wolcott, whose recent divorce had provoked the opposition of the women of Colorado."

Wives of Servant Girls

A meeting held recently at the Friendly Aid society's rooms, New York, was addressed by Mrs. St. Justin Beale, who has made a study of the servant girl question. Mrs. Beale has been for six years interesting herself in the servant girl problem, and has at different times hired out to service to find out for herself what the conditions are which are to be met. She served as a nurse to an infant in a family that had a cottage at Ocean Grove, and was obliged to sleep on a three-legged lounge in a hall between her mistress' bedroom and some others, to arise in the night to attend the infant, who slept in its mother's room, and to be up and out of the house at 5 a. m., taking the infant out with her and keeping it out until 8:30, when she was permitted to come in and have breakfast. For this she received $2 a week and board, and the assurance that she ought to be thankful to get it, as many girls would be glad to go to the seashore for nothing.

She also served as a waitress with thirteen black and white girls at a mountain resort, where they all had to sleep in one room, ill-ventilated and without proper accommodations of any kind. Then they were cursed by the chef and the proprietor in turn until some of them fainted in their places and had to be sent home.

Another place Mrs. Beale had was in a young woman's school in Harlem, where she was to attend an elderly woman. She had to sleep in the engine-room and eat in the icehouse, she said, and was asked to do the heavy work of a man.

The Church and War

At the congress of the Episcopal Church of the United States Ernest H. Crosby of New York spoke upon "War from the Christian Point of View." After citing recent reports of battles and setting forth the horrors of war in connection with Gen. Sherman's historical declaration, Mr. Crosby said:

"War is hate. Christianity is love. On which side is the church of Christ to be ranged?"

"War is hell: the church should be the kingdom of heaven. What truce can there be between them?"

"And yet the fact is that the church favors war. Can you recall a single sermon criticizing warfare? In England among the recent leading opponents of war have been Harrison, the positivist; Spencer, the agnostic, and Morley, the atheist, while the whole influence of the bench of bishops has been thrown on the side of bloodshed.

"In our country what has she done to stay the arm of violence? In the vigorous movement to prevent war she has been almost silent. Has a single religious journal been found on the side of peace?"

"I have had some experience during the past two years in addressing various audiences on behalf of peace, and I can testify that as a rule the 'common people' hear the message gladly.

"It is only in gatherings of professedly Christian people that it fails to find a responsive chord. I am constrained to assert as the result of my observations that the churches are the chief strongholds of the spirit of war."

Opportunities for Millionaires

A capitalistic exchange has an editorial about the field for young millionaires, just as if there hadn't been a field for them right along. I recently got into conversation with a well-known and old-established New York architect and he told me that the business of the old firms was being ruined by competition with millionaires' sons who go into architecture as a fad and a preventive of ennui. These young men, not being pressed by the bread and butter problem, cast about for something that will serve to take up their spare moments in a genteel way. They find this in architecture and like callings. They serve an apprenticeship, polish off what they have learned by a tour through Europe, then fit up lavish offices, which they are content to run at a loss so long as they can indulge their desire to plan attractive buildings. Their station in life gives them the influence necessary to get big contracts away from the old and less favored houses, and the old houses, one after the other, have to succumb.

This, like other things that come to our notice every day, help to expose the utter hopelessness of the capitalistic system as a thing of permanency. It is eating itself up, it is destroying itself, and making a sorry joke of the old law of the survival of the fittest.

Tried the Gatling Gun

The naval reserves went to Stroudwater yesterday for their annual qualification shoot. Considering the little opportunity these men have had for practice this season their shooting was very good. The interesting feature of the day was the trial of the Gatling gun which is used by the naval reserves. This gun was used at 200, 300 and 500 yards. It fires 1,500 shots a minute and this shower of lead will bore a hole through almost anything. The targets were simply riddled with bullets and the rattle of the gun was heard for several miles. The reserves have drilled a good deal with this piece and feel that if they should be called out for riot duty they could put a mob out of the game with it in short order.—Portland (Me.) THE GROUNDWORK OF SCIENTIFIC SOCIALISM course personal ownership in the products. It was a period of independence for the producer, as the capital required was small and enabled others, if they so desired, to save enough in time to go in business for themselves. This form of production was essentially individual and anti-social. Meantime as the tools of production began to grow and the small shop expanded and new inventions were introduced the factory system slowly evolved and practically annihilated the petty industry. With the development of the factory system class distinctions became apparent. "Self-earned private property, that is, based, so to say, on the fusing together of the isolated, independent laboring individual with the conditions of his labor, is supplanted by capitalistic private property, which rests on exploitation of the nominally free labor of others, on wage labor." (Marx.) Formerly the producer and the appropriator of products were one and the same person; now two distinct classes are vested with these two functions; one class produces, another absorbs the products. Division produces the modern class struggle, the intensity of which increases with the development of capitalism.

THE SOWER

By Edwin Markham

(Written after seeing Millet's painting with this title.)

Soon will the lonesome cricket by the stone
Begin to hush the night; and lightly blown
Field fragrances will fill the fading blue—
Old furrow scents that ancient Eden knew.
Soon in the upper twilight will be heard
The winging whisper of a homing bird.

Who is it coming on the slant brown slope,
Touched by the twilight and her mournful hope—
Coming with hero step, with rhythmic swing,
Where all the bodily motions weave and sing?
The grief of the ground is in him, yet the power
Of the earth to hide the furrow with the flower.

He is the stone rejected, yet the stone
Whereon is built metropolis and throne.
Out of his toil come all their pompous shows,
Their purple luxury and plush repose!
The grime of this bruised hand keeps tender white
The hands that never labor, day or night.
His feet that know only the field's rough floors
Send lordly steps down echoing corridors.

Yea, this vicarious toiler at the plow
Gives that fine pallor to my lady's brow.
And idle armies with their boom and blare,
Flinging their foolish glory on the air—
He hides their nakedness, he gives them bed,
And by his alms their hungry mouths are fed.

Not his the lurching of an aimless clod,
For with the august gesture of a god—
A gesture that is question and command—
He hurls the bread of nations from his hand;
And in the passion of the gesture flings
His fierce resentment in the face of kings.

This is the earth-god of the latter day,
Treading with solemn joy the upward way;
Strong to make kind the grudging ground, and strong
To pluck the beard of some world-honored wrong—
A lusty god that in some crowning hour
Will hurl Grey Privilege from the place of power.

These are the inevitable steps that make Unreason tremble and tradition shake—
This is the world-will climbing to its goal,
The climb of the uncurable sure soul—
Democracy whose sure insurgent stride
Jars kingdoms to their ultimate stone of pride.

FROM THE WORKERS

Indiana—I am pleased to tell you that we are starting a propaganda club. We have nearly concluded arrangements for meeting place. Our branch will be connected with it. W. Blenko.

Colorado—A few of us living at Ouray got together ten days before election and put a ticket in the field. We did not get much of a vote, but enough to encourage us to organize for the next battle. R. B. Frye.

Oregon—Official returns give the Social Democracy electors in Oregon the following vote: N. P. J. Folen, 1,464; Joseph Meindl, 1,494; J. Frank Porter, 1,466; C. P. Rutherford, 1,455—an average of 1,470, or nearly 2 per cent of the state vote. This is the first S. D. P. ticket put in the field in the state. We are now getting in on the campaign for 1902. The "first step" and "half loaf" Socialists who voted for Bryan wish now they hadn't, but will do yeoman service from this on for Socialism. Many Socialists voted for McKinley to give him, as they expressed it, rope enough to hang himself, which I have no doubt he will do. We will proceed to organize the state now and have a party that is a party—one that every member will feel proud of. J. D. Stevens.

Comrade Vaclav Mudra was nominated by the Social Democrats for Alderman in the Ninth Ward of Chicago, Saturday night, December 1st.

A meeting of the Social Democrats in the Tenth ward will be held Saturday, Dec. 8, 8 p. m., at Jankovsky's hall, 894 West Twenty-first street, between Leavitt street and Oakley avenue, for nominating candidates for the spring election. R. Pusch.

Branch 5 of Philadelphia had a conference with sympathizers since the election and added thirteen new members to the roll. The branch will have a ball and concert Friday evening, Dec. 28, with "Mother" Jones as speaker.

The first of a series of mass-meetings, to be continued during the winter under the auspices of Branch 5 of Philadelphia, was addressed Nov. 25 by Abraham Cahan of New York. Nearly 700 persons paid 5 cents admission.

Notice to Social Democrats

The "official notice" of meetings to be held in the various wards of the city of Chicago, under the name of Social Democratic party, and signed by F. G. Strickland and J. B. Smiley, is not issued by the Social Democratic party in Chicago or the city central committee, and carries with it no sanction from branches of the party in this city. Neither the city, county or state committees of the S. D. P. is represented on the so-called "joint committee" in any way. Branches and members will, therefore, treat the matter accordingly. Stand by your branches and Socialism. By order City Central Committee of the Social Democratic Party.

The National Vote

Official returns are in from only a few States. It will not be possible to give the entire vote in the country until after January 1, 1901, the figures in some States not being obtainable before. The vote in the States that is either official or known to be authentic follows:—

Have One Where You Live

Every new branch of the Social Democratic Party is something more than a Friendly Inn—where a weary wanderer may rest. It is something more than a fort, where ammunition is stored to vanquish the armies of error. It is a common school with academic, collegiate and university attachments, where pupils may enter, advance, receive diplomas, and go forth equipped to carry forward socialistic reform. The curriculum is brief but comprehensive. The great fundamental bed-rock fact is taught that capitalism, whether on the land or the sea, is the pirate chief of the world. It matters little or nothing at all how high or

OFFICIAL CALL

To Members and Branches of the Social Democratic Party, Comrades:

RESPONDING to suggestions from all parts of the country and a demand from many branches, a special National Convention of the Social Democratic party is hereby called, to take place at the national headquarters, 126 Washington street, Chicago, Ill., beginning Tuesday, January 15, 1901, and continuing in session until the work of the convention shall have been completed.

The purpose of this convention will be to make such changes in the laws of the party and to make such other provisions as may be deemed necessary to meet the growing demands of the organization. It is our purpose to enter at once upon a vigorous campaign of agitation, education and organization, so that the party shall be fully equipped to meet the capitalist enemy on the political battle-fields of the future. Now that the presidential campaign is over, our work is fairly begun and must be carried forward with all possible energy without the loss of a single hour.

The basis and other conditions of representation will be the same as at the Indianapolis Convention, and are here incorporated as follows:

First—Each branch shall be entitled to as many representatives as the individual members thereof in good standing may select for that purpose; provided, that each representative shall be entitled to one (1) vote for each member whose signature is attached to his credential; and provided further, that no member shall have his signature attached to more than one credential.

Second—Branches not sending their own representatives may select those of other branches of the same state to represent them; provided, that in each such case the representative shall hold the proper credential with the signatures of members attached as herein provided.

Third—No member shall be qualified to serve as representative or entitled to representation who has not been a member of the party at least thirty (30) days prior to the opening day of the convention.

Fourth—All signatures of members attached to credentials shall be certified to by the chairman or secretary of their respective branches.

Fifth—The national secretary shall furnish each branch with a sufficient number of blank credentials for the purpose herein specified.

Unaffiliated Socialist clubs or societies whose members may desire to connect themselves with the Social Democratic party, are cordially invited to communicate through their proper officials with the Secretary of the National Executive Board, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

This call is issued to all branches of the Social Democratic party in good standing, as shown by the records at 126 Washington street, Chicago, and organized prior to December 15, 1900. The time and place of meeting and other details will be given in the Herald as soon as arrangements are completed.

SEYMOUR STEDMAN, Secretary.

wide may be the flights of the imagination or how profound the depths of logical exploration, the inevitable verdict is the same—capitalism is the curse of mankind. Every branch of the Social Democratic Party is commissioned to teach the great truth and expose the antiquated wrong.

Congressional and Legislative Vote

Following is the vote received by the Socialist candidates in the late election for congress and the state legislature:

For congress:

City Central Committee

A regular meeting of the city central committee of the Social Democratic party was held at 52 Dearborn street Wednesday evening, Nov. 28. A good representation of branch delegates was present. The resolutions at the meeting of Sunday, Nov. 25, were approved and adopted unanimously.

A committee was appointed to draw up a circular addressed to all Chicago branches warning them against attempts being made by interlopers under the guise of unionism to disrupt the branch organizations and breed disaffection among the members. Chicago branches should be on their guard against these persons, who are merely seeking notoriety by loudly clamoring for union. They have never succeeded in building up an organization or even starting a single branch of the party. There may be a place for them somewhere in the movement, but it is not in the branches of the Social Democratic party.

The approaching national convention, called for Jan. 15, was discussed and the following committee of reception and entertainment, with the power to add to their number, was chosen: Comrades Edwards, Winnen, Tyl, Foss, Ellen Edwards, Ethel James and Dr. Hawley.

The National Movement

Last week's Herald contained the report of the national campaign committee with its gratifying result showing all bills paid and a small balance left over. The report showed the total receipts of the committee to have been $3,537.88. Since its publication another report, that of the Springfield committee, has come to hand. The differences between the two are so striking that, for the information of Herald readers, we cannot refrain from making a brief comparison for the purpose of showing, from a purely financial point of view, the utterly flimsy character of the "unionist" claims. Both reports being published, it appears that the national campaign was made from 126 Washington street, Chicago, and by the forces that co-operated with the national campaign committee at this point. The total amount contributed to the Springfield committee was $819.90. The Chicago committee printed and sold literature, lithographs and buttons amounting to $1,140.39; the Springfield expenditure in the same line was $397.60. The total amount received at Chicago was $3,537.88, at Springfield, $1,217.50. The Chicago committee received nearly three times as much money and did ten times as much work as that at Springfield. On with the work for Socialism.

WORK FOR SOCIAL DEMOCRATS IN INDIANA

The Social Democratic members of the city council of Marion, Ind., Comrades Kelley and Croke, are keeping up with great vigor their systematic agitation for public ownership of municipal utilities, and in the limited circle of their opportunities meeting with good success. The last move started by them is one that should be supported by Social Democrats in Indiana wherever there is a local branch. And this they can do by calling the attention of their state representatives to the appended resolution, introduced at a meeting of the Marion city council by Comrade Kelley Nov. 20, and urging favorable consideration for the proposition at the next session of the legislature:

"Whereas, The machinery of production, the products of industry and all the means of life are being rapidly monopolized in the hands of the manufacturers, merchants and members of trusts and trade agreements of various kinds, which are fast reducing the masses to industrial serfdom; and

"Whereas, The welfare of society demands that an avenue of escape from the power of these monopolies should be provided, and that the cost of the necessities of life should not be increased by any element of either monopoly or private profit, or by any such unnecessary waste of labor as results from the present planless method of production and distribution; therefore, be it

"Resolved, By the mayor and common council of the city of Marion, that the legislature of the state of Indiana be, and is hereby petitioned, to make such amendments or pass such laws as will authorize and enable any municipality within this state whose people shall decide by majority vote that they so desire, to issue such bonds as may be necessary to enable them to construct, equip and operate such water, electric, telephone, gas or street railway plants, or such hospitals, bakeries, dairies, laundries or factories of any kind, as they may deem wise and necessary for the production of, and also for the erection, stocking and operating of such stores or systems of distribution as in their judgment are necessary to the most economical production and distribution of such things as they may deem necessary for their comfort."

The above was adopted by a vote of 6 to 1, two republicans and two democrats supporting it.

CIVILIZATION OF THE SHOTGUN

The Standing-Army Civilization of Capitalist Christendom is Doomed before the Onward March of Socialism

By Max Mehnard

Socialists demand a new civilization, or a better civilization. The civilization we now have may be good enough in spots, like a desert; here and there may be found an oasis, but generally, it is a conspicuous failure. The fact is universally recognized, and all sorts of remedies are proposed for glaring and humiliating defects. The church thunders its anathemas; the schools, from the kindergarten to the university, wrestle with the subject; the press, in a thousand ways, confirms the allegation. This has been going on until our civilization resembles a beggar's clothing—an unsightly mass of patch work.

The nations of the world have been classified as savage, barbarous, semi-civilized and civilized, the climax being "enlightened" or "Christianized." Hence the term, "Christian civilization," the best, the ultima thule of civilization. General Sherman is on record as saying: "War is hell." In our vocabulary there is no word more shuddering than "hell." It stands for all that is horrible in the imagination; and yet, our civilization is conspicuously a civilization of war, represented by standing armies—war machines constructed for slaughter and for the inauguration of hell upon earth.

The peculiar feature of this phase of the subject is that these standing armies, these human slaughtering machines, are constructed, perfected and equipped for the inauguration of hell upon earth by the most enlightened Christian nations in the world. The nations of Europe, excepting the Turks, claim to have achieved the most advanced position attainable in Christian civilization, and yet, beyond all controversy, it is a civilization which rests for security upon standing armies, numbering 5,000,000 officers and men, ready at the word of command to inaugurate hell in Europe or elsewhere, as emergencies may require.

Whatever may be the boast of European nations, in the way of advanced civilization, we of the United States entertain the idea that American civilization is superior to anything in that line the world has known. Nevertheless, we are confronted with the fact that the United States has caught the European contagious craze for standing armies as a means of achieving largest results in Christian civilization, and we are to have more soldiers and more guns and a more perfect and better equipped war machine. Notwithstanding this, Socialists maintain that a civilization dependent upon guns for support is beyond all the power of hyperbole the most satanic conceivable.

The grand old poet prophet, Isaiah, from his mount of vision, saw a time when "the nations would beat their swords into ploughshares, their spears into pruning hooks and learn war no more." It is not required to eulogize God's most renowned prophet. He was not a crank, nor a victim of delusion. With him it was "thus saith the Lord." He sounded the keynote of Socialism—a civilization without a standing army to support it. His vision was clear. In due time Jesus Christ came and laid the foundations of a new and a better civilization, preached it and fell a martyr to his mission. It was a good thing. The devil saw it at a glance, adopted and corrupted it, and has got it where, aided by standing armies and other satanic devices, he controls it for his own glory. But the devil, with all the assistance he can command from his collaborators and colporteurs, has not been able to destroy man's faith in himself, his faith in God, nor God's faith in man. The foundation which Christ laid of a new and a better civilization remains intact.

Socialism sees and grasps its opportunity. It comprehends conditions and possibilities. It believes that all things right and just, and of good report are attainable. The obstacle in the way of success is error. To tear it up by the roots and destroy it, Socialists know is a herculean task, which they do not underestimate. It is a work they have undertaken and its magnitude creates neither dismay nor demoralization. Wherever they find a upas tree, spreading poison, they will hew it down. They will accept all the responsibilities of their sphere of influence. They will send forth a never ending army of iconoclastic ideas, commissioned to tear down the idols of error, regardless of who erected them or who worships them. They believe that Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise panoplied for ceaseless war, and that the "eternal years of God" are pledged for his victory. When the Czar of Russia, the most powerful autocrat in the world, called a convention of the nations to discuss arbitration instead of war; for the settlement of controversies between nations and the disbandment of standing armies, he heralded a colossal stride in the advancement of the principles of Socialism. Such was not the czar's intention. He simply yielded, without knowing why, to Socialistic ideas abroad in the world, more potent than all the autocracies, aristocracies and plutocracies in all the earth combined. The convention of the nations called by the czar, is conclusive to men who have the presence to see coming events, that the standing army civilization of the present and the past is doomed. That Isaiah saw it with Godlike vision, and that Christ laid the foundations of a better civilization deep and strong in the minds of men is conceded. Upon this foundation Socialists are now building a new and a better civilization than the world has hitherto known—a civilization from which standing armies, human slaughtering machines, shall be eliminated, and the nations "learning war no more" shall be redeemed from the multiplied curses of the past and the present civilization to enjoy the fruitions of universal peace and happiness.

Sincere, They Say, But Erratic

The Indianapolis Journal (Rep.) has the following reference to Eugene V. Debs. It is well that the Journal has Comrade Debs' words on record in its own office, as it will thus be able readily to recall them when they come true: "Eugene V. Debs, Social Democratic candidate for president, received about 100,000 votes. This does not count much in a popular vote of 15,000,000, but it represents a phase of current thought. In 1824 Andrew Jackson was elected president by a popular vote of 155,872, and even with that small vote had a plurality of 50,551 over John Q. Adams, the next highest candidate. Mr. Debs need not be ashamed of his vote numerically. As for his principles, the Journal believes he is a sincere but erratic man. He says that the Republican party having triumphed, the 'trusts will run riot in the spoils of conquest,' and he predicts that when the development of capitalism reaches its greatest momentum in the second McKinley administration consumption will not keep pace with production and a crash will come. 'Then,' says he, 'the working class will get in full measure what they voted for.' There will be glutted markets, paralyzed factories, silent mills, deserted mines, enforced idleness, reduced wages, strikes, lockouts, injunctions, soldiers and the funerals of workmen in rapid succession. There will be no work for the hand, and the brain will have a chance." This is a dark view and the Journal thinks a very erroneous one. The general opinion among the most sagacious business men of the country is that it has taken a new lease of prosperity and is entering on a longer period of good times than usual. Mr. Debs is too bright a man to become a chronic croaker. He should join the procession of prosperity."

Millerand's Bill on Strikes

The bill on strikes, which M. Millerand, the French Minister of Commerce, has been preparing, has just been presented to the Chamber of Deputies. It provides that in every factory employing fifty or more men a printed notice shall be posted which shall state whether or not arbitration is one of the conditions of employment. In case of the affirmative—and all state contracts will require this—the men are to elect delegates, who will submit any complaints or demands to the employer, and, failing an agreement, both sides may nominate arbitrators.

If, on the other hand, the employer should refuse to do this, the men may resolve by secret ballot on a strike, but the votes of a majority of those present and one-third of the men employed are necessary. There must also be a weekly vote to decide on the continuance or cessation of the strike.

Here comes the New York Times with a reference to the "new" Socialism and the Chicago Chronicle declaring Socialism is not "new." These capitalist pressmen should be given a lay-off with an injunction to post up.

MERLIN'S MIXTURE

Charles W. Cannon of J. J. Revere, Mass.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MAN

Our humanity's expanding
Into truer, higher life,
Causes now mankind's demanding
Freedom from the slavish strife.

It is not by idle chancing
That the present path is trod,
But the steady, sure advancing
Of the fact against the fraud.

'Tis the gradual fulfilling
Of life's highest wish and aim,
And by mighty Labor's willing
To be free in more than name.

For the sequel to life's pages
Is a nobler human plan;
The fruition of the ages
Is the Commonwealth of Man.

SOCIALISM IS INEVITABLE

So many learned fools are constantly referring to Socialism as though it were a quack medicine or a political invention or a fool fad.

Albert H. Washburn, in debating a few nights ago in Brockton, said: "The kernel of historical and modern Socialism is the leveling down of the whole social area." In other words, Socialism is simply a great social steam-roller, crushing down all jutting ambitions and reducing everything to a dead level.

Instead, Socialism is the scientific sequel to present conditions. It is the full-formed fruit of the leaf of competition and the blossom of commercial combination. It is the inevitable outcome of industrial evolution.

All that Socialists can do is to prepare the people for its incoming. We seek to warn the blind conservatives who stand on the track of progress when the train is coming. We don't bring the train. We only try to keep the track clear.

ALLIED FOES

Tonight's report of the opening of congress bears the headlines: "Political Foes Meet as Friends," "Hanna and Jones Shake Hands."

The outer form in this case was symbolic of the inner fact. That handshake was a true emblem of the class alliance of party foes. Hanna and Jones fight for the spoils, but unite in their kindred capacity as spoilsmen.

The republican and democratic parties are but the two mouths of the hydra-headed serpent of capitalism. One has gold teeth and the other silver, but the same stomach and after-election tail.

INTERNATIONAL NOTES

Austria.—At Gratz at an election for the municipal council seven Socialists received a large number of votes, but as they did not receive half the number of votes given, plus one, a second ballot is necessary.

At Mariburg all the Socialist candidates for the municipal council were elected.

Germany.—Three Socialists have been re-elected by an increased majority to the municipal council at Magdeburg.

The Socialists have gained seats in the municipal councils of Dessau, Frankfurt and Frankhausen.

The Socialists called attention in the Reichstag to the circular issued by the ministry of the interior, asking manufacturers for subscriptions in order to create an agitation in favor of the bill which proposed to prohibit workmen from agitating in favor of strikes. The chancellor was good enough to admit that this circularizing was not the thing, but he declined to punish those who had so acted; in fact, they were "not guilty," but they must not do it again.

Switzerland.—The Radicals and Socialists had a joint list of candidates for the election which has just taken place in the Canton of Geneva, and they have been able to secure their return. A Socialist is also a member of the governing body in that canton.

The Socialist Congress which has just been held at Olten, has just reorganized the party. The town of Zurich has been fixed on as the headquarters of the party. The following have been elected as representatives on the International Committee: Feuerholz, Fauquez and Reimann.

The Feudal Barons of To-Day

In his preface to the "Capital," Marx describes England as the classic land of capital. When he wrote his great work that was undoubtedly true, and it was for that reason that for his masterly analysis of the capitalist system of production he took the conditions existing in this country, where that system had reached its highest development. But the balance has shifted somewhat since Marx wrote; the ideal of the old Free Traders, that England would always be the workshop or factory of You lose your senses and take your choice.

The republican gander and the democratic goose, "in convention assembled," create and hatch out the foul bird of conspiracy against labor's rights.

Hanna and Jones have been shaking the political dice. Whichever had won in the recent election, we would have lost. To us it was a choice of masters.

POCKETING THE PRIZE

And now that the game has been played, the winner forthwith proceeds to pocket the pot.

In the pre-election days the republican leaders were engaged in prizing the pockets of the poor, and suggesting that they should be lined with 100-cent gold pieces. But now these gamblers are engaged in pocketing the prize of the poor and levying tribute on them for the strenuous expenditure of campaign talk.

Prices are going up everywhere. On scores of articles prices have risen. The republicans promised to solve the bread and butter question. They have already solved the butter question by lifting the price out of sight.

And on the other hand, wages are going down. In a Brookfield shoe factory wages were this week cut 25 per cent.

As MacCartney said last Sunday, the full dinner pail has been put on the shelf for four years more.

THE LABOR DONKEY

So long as an American workingman is an ass, he may expect to be ridden. Let him prune his ears, so that they may not be tickled by every capitalistic compliment on election week.

Let him cease his braying about liberty, so that every passing spellbinder may not detect his breed and buckle his harness on tighter. Let him refuse to eat the thistles of wage slavery, so that he may deserve and receive his rightful clover.

Let him remember, at least, that his father was a revolutionary mule, and had the courage to kick himself free from royalist traces when the tax whip bit too hard.

But better, let us evolve from the donkeyhood of old-party allegiance into the manhood of Socialist independence. Then, if McKinley wants his presidential donkey chariot, let him go to Sulu and borrow that of his fellow potentate there.

the world with all the other nations supplying her with raw material and taking her manufactured goods, has long been exploded. To-day all nations appear to be aspiring to make their countries into workshops and factories, and our customers have become our competitors. No longer can England be called the classic land of capital, for that proud name now belongs to the great Republic across the Atlantic, that glorious and triumphant democracy of the west, where all men are free and equal, where there is neither monarch, nor peer, nor prelate, but gold is god, and the almighty dollar rules the roost. In America to-day we see the development of capitalism at a higher point and progressing at a greater rate of progress than in any other country in the world. There we find the last stage of capitalist evolution rapidly being attained and free and unfettered competition working out its logical end and inevitable destruction in universal monopoly. In a recent article in these pages our comrade Hyndman pointed out some of the striking facts of industrialism in the United States, showing how every industry there is coming under the control of the trusts, and how through these mammoth combinations of capital a mere handful of individuals practically hold the whole wealth and wealth-producing power of the states in their hands and under their control. These men are the feudal lords of our time; they are the robber barons of to-day.—Justice (London, Eng.).

Socialism and Trades Unions

The attitude of the Social Democratic Federation of Great Britain towards trades unions is the same as that of the Social Democratic party. The following resolution was adopted by the English comrades at the annual conference of 1897:

"This conference counsels all members of the S. D. F., as far as possible, to become members of their respective trade unions, and to work harmoniously with trade unionists and co-operators as representing organizations having for their object the improvement of the status of the workers, whilst nevertheless insisting upon the fact that in the socialization of the means of production, distribution and exchange, lies the only hope of permanently bettering the condition of the wage-earners, and therefore claims the political support of all trade unionists and co-operators as a means towards this end."

TASK OF SOCIAL DEMOCRACY

The Modern Proletarian Magdalene is Driven to Her Fate by the Conditions Prevailing in Capitalist Society

By Isador Ladoff

It is not easy to cure a deep-rooted organic disease, even when the patient is fully aware of his ailment and patiently submits to any treatment prescribed by the expert physician or surgeon. The task is indisputably harder, however, when the patient is happily, or rather unfortunately, unconscious of his own precarious condition and does not consider himself sick at all, and scorns the idea of any necessity for him to undergo a systematic course of medical treatment.

It is not easy to free slaves, conscious of their slavery; it is, however, an indisputably harder task to free slaves who were born, raised and live in the illusion of being free men.

And this is exactly the case with the American proletariat. An European workingman knows that he cannot always get or retain his "job"; that even if he is fortunate enough to have a steady job, he is compelled to consume margarine instead of butter, and consider himself happy to have meat on his holiday table. The average American workingman, however, is still imagining that the "jobs" are ready for him as soon as "prosperity" sets in, and that prosperity may be brought about by professional politicians of one or another of the old parties. He scorns the idea of being a slave because he does not see and feel his chains with his eyes and hands, like Thomas, the doubter, the wounds on the body of Jesus Christ. The American proletariat is still living in the illusion that he may by dint of perseverance and a turn of good luck become a capitalist himself and then treat his fellow workers just in the same way as he is treated by his master. He is himself a capitalist in spirit, his ethics and philosophy of life are those of his masters. If he objects to capitalistic rule at all; he does it on narrow, personal grounds. He would like to be the exploiter himself, and has little if any objection to exploitation itself. We know these are hard assertions. But truth is more important than the friendship of Plato.

The task of Social Democracy is to open the eyes of the blind proletariat of the United States to its actual condition, to make it feel and realize the weight of its chains and to replace its capitalistic philosophy of life and code of ethics. Until this is accomplished, the Social Democratic movement cannot expect to be a power in the land. The best means to accomplish it is to prove that Social Democracy is not a theory but a condition, to use the hard facts of actual life as an illustration of the real condition of the proletariat, to allow the modern Thomas the doubter to touch with his hands the bleeding wounds of his own class, of his own brothers, sisters, wives and children.

If the male proletarian is a slave, the female proletarian is a slave of slaves. If the male proletarian is compelled to sell his working power, his muscles, nerves and blood to the capitalist or starve; if he is degraded to a simple machine producing wealth for somebody else, nay, to a mere appendage of a dead machine—his mother, sister, sweetheart or wife, under similar conditions, is frequently compelled to drop lower even than that, to lose even all the dignity of an animal and sell her affections for the privilege of leading the miserable vegetation (it cannot be called life) of a sexual slave, of a prostitute. Prostitution is the direct consequence of mercantilism, of a state of society in which human beings are considered as a mere commodity, salable and purchasable for money, like any other commodity. Prostitutes are proletarians in the first instance and prostitution is a phenomenon of social pathology due to the same causes that produce the proletarian class.

Let us now throw a retrospective glance at the development of the so-called social evil. At the period of decadence of Greece and Rome, the institution of slavery was shaken and mer-

Subsidizing the Rich

The complete subservience of the American congress to capitalistic influence and domination is illustrated in the proposed subsidy bill for the benefit of mine-owners and ship-builders now before the senate. True to their class interest and that of their masters, the advocates of this enormity propose to mulct the people of the United States in the sum of $9,000,000 annually for twenty years. The total amount of this colossal steal will be $180,000,000. Not a single man could be named among the prospective beneficiaries who is not rich; not one of them but is an exploiter in some form sanctified by law, of the labor power of this country; not one whose patriotism is not of the highest and whose commercialism is not of the basest sort. Patriotism pays, especially when the patriot is in on the ground floor with plunder of $9,000,000 a year. Patriotism for revenue, filched from the pockets of the producers of the land, is virtue of a high order.

One of the arguments constantly reiterated against Socialism is that the state should not do for the individual anything the individual can do for himself. Here we have an instance where the rich, able to build ships if they want them, with one hand throttle justice in the highest legislative body of the land and with the other rifle the public treasury for individual profit under the patriotic cry of "an American merchant marine."

Class distinctions and the class struggle, upon which Socialists insist as a necessary and inevitable condition of the capitalist system, are denied. Yet here we have legislation solely in the interest of a class; a proposal to give that class added facilities and power to what it already enjoys to exploit a people overburdened with the effects of infamous class legislation.

Subsidize the rich—the people will pay. After all, why shouldn't they pay? They believe in the rich and don't know how they could get along without them. The people have voted for state aid for the rich. Therefore, gentlemen of the senate, subsidize private interests, "the people be —!"

Socialism and the "Democracy"

Again returning to the subject of Socialism and the democratic party, because it is at this time one of paramount importance, engaging the attention of large numbers of people and forcing itself into discussion by Democratic editors throughout the country, we desire to call the attention of our readers and through them that of so-called Socialists, who supported Mr. Bryan, to an editorial article in this paper which appeared in the Chronicle of Chicago, December 2. The Chronicle is a representative Democratic newspaper. The article will be found under the caption "Democracy and Socialism."

A careful perusal of this article must satisfy every Socialist, whether his support was given to the Social Democratic ticket in the late election or to Mr. Bryan, that all that has been said in the columns of the Herald in criticism of Bryan and his "socialistic" friends was entirely justified. Now that the alliance which, as the Chronicle editorial points out, was dishonest, between the place-seeking Democracy and those claiming to be Socialists is vanishing and there are signs everywhere of great acquisitions to Socialism, it is to be hoped that such frank confession as the leading Democratic organs are making will have proper and due effect where there is now much confusion.

Two passages in the Chronicle article call for special notice. "If the Kansas City ticket," it says, "had swept the country and carried with it a two-thirds majority in both houses of congress there would have been no 16 to 1 silver legislation. THERE WOULD HAVE BEEN NO STATE OWNERSHIP OF PUBLIC UTILITIES." There would have been no initiative and referendum. There would have been NOTHING AT ALL IN THE LINE OF RADICAL OR SOCIALISTIC LEGISLATION, for the real Democrats would have been sufficiently numerous to defeat it."

To the real Socialist who gave a vote to Bryan—if such is conceivable—this declaration of a leading Democratic organ must come as a severe shock. To be told that the mild reform of transferring a few public utilities from private to state ownership would have been prevented by "real Democrats," reveals the utter insincerity of campaign claims and promises and stamps the journalists and politicians who made them as dishonest. When the Kansas City platform appeared containing quite an inconsequential and absurd provision for the initiative and referendum, everybody with a grain of political acumen and very slight knowledge of the capacity for deceit and trickery inherent in the Democratic party, understood that it was put there solely for the purpose of catching the votes of reform gudgeons.

It is well for an honest and uncompromising Socialism that the mantle of deception has dropped. There is no longer excuse for a Socialist to isolate himself from the Socialist movement by dallying with a capitalist party that holds out false and alluring promises of taking "first steps" towards Socialism.

The second point worthy of brief notice is the assertion by the Chronicle that Socialism is not new, has been tried by many people under varying conditions and has everywhere failed. All this is, of course, the veriest nonsense, quite worthy, however, of an organ of capitalism. There are some writers for daily newspapers who understand Socialism, but the Chronicle writer is not one of them. The latter shows an almost complete ignorance of the subject when he essays to predicate the failure of Socialism upon the disastrous outcome of isolated co-operative and communistic enterprises. None of these were examples of Socialism, few of them ever claimed to be. Socialism is inconceivable except as the evolutionary successor of capitalist production. It has never at any time existed anywhere in the world. It can not exist in a capitalist state.

The Massachusetts Elections

A year ago, with unity in the ranks of the Social Democratic party at Haverhill, Mass., with the moral and financial support of comrades throughout the country, including the national executive board and the Herald, John C. Chase was re-elected mayor of that city, receiving a total vote of 3,543, or 1,250 more than at the election the year before and a clear majority of 215. The combination against the Social Democratic party a year ago was quite as strong as this year; that is to say, as Republicans, Democrats and Prohibitionists were united against the Socialists last year, so were they in 1900; the local conditions imposed upon the campaign and election by the old parties were nearly identical. There was no large increase in the general vote either. In 1899 the grand total was 6,930; this year, 7,073, only 143 more. Yet Chase is defeated. And this is not all. A year ago the united Social Democrats of Haverhill elected Comrades Flanders, Bean and Scates from their respective wards as members of the aldermanic board, the two former having then served one year in that body. This year not only is Chase defeated by 1,077 votes, but all the aldermanic candidates are beaten as well, and the fine representation our party had in the city council of Haverhill has been reduced to two councilmen. When it is remembered that the material conditions and old-party opposition influencing the election were practically identical in both years, that there was only a paltry increase of 143 in the total vote cast, the causes for defeat at Haverhill this year can be found only in the injection into the movement of a discordant and destructive element since a year ago.

There is nothing in the Haverhill defeat to discourage loyal Social Democrats. There is a cause the existence of which is to be deplored in this instance and avoided in the future elsewhere.

At Brockton a year ago Charles H. Coulter, candidate of the party for mayor, received 3,394 votes in a total of 7,111, and was elected. This year, with the same opposition and practically the same support, Coulter was given 2,922 votes in a total of 7,944 and is re-elected. In Brockton there was a large increase in the total vote over 1899, amounting to 833, and despite this and the additional fact that the Democrats gave considerable support to the Republican candidate, Coulter is again mayor of Brockton, much to the satisfaction of Social Democrats everywhere.

A Correction

In the make-up of The Herald last week a line was dropped from the article by Comrade Eugene V. Debs on "Independent Socialists". The error occurred in the second paragraph. The paragraph should have read as follows: "The real struggle of Socialism is to DEVELOP THE POLITICAL PARTY THAT SHALL establish the co-operative Commonwealth". The words in capitals were omitted.

An employment agency sign in Chicago reads: "Wanted, two hundred men to go into the woods." And thousands of men in Chicago, as elsewhere, are struggling to get out of the woods.

NOTES AND COMMENT

It is stated that when the census figures are compiled, it will be seen that the wealth of the United States aggregates ninety billions ($90,000,000,000). If this wealth were equally distributed upon the basis of 75,000,000 population, each individual would have on an average of $1,200. But the distribution is about as follows: Five per cent of the population, 3,750,000, representing the upper crust of capitalism, gets $50,000,000,000, or an average of $13,000 each; 10 per cent of the population, 7,500,000, representing the second degree of capitalism, gets $30,000,000,000, or an average of $4,000 each. The remaining 85 per cent of population, 63,750,000, gets $10,000,000,000 of the wealth of the country, averaging $150 each. Socialism contends for a more equitable distribution of wealth, and the time is near at hand when its mission of justice and fair play will be universally recognized.

Henry Clews, capitalist and the keenest stock gambler in Wall street, who has a mansion in New York and a chateau at Newport, says a college training is not likely to make a good business man, and that the "sons of independent gentlemen who have expectations make poor clerks." Stock gambling requires nerve. It is a game played by sharks and sharpers, in which loaded dice, marked cards and other cheating devices are introduced. Clews is the recognized leader of the gang in Wall street.

We have just received from the International Publishing Co. of New York, three more of the always well chosen booklets of that company. These latest are "Red Socialism" and "The Living Wage," by Blatchford, and "A Socialist's View of Religion and the Churches," by Tom Mann. The address of the publishing house is 23 Duane Street, New York.

An old dehorned ram, pleading the cause of sheep, before a syndicate of hungry wolves, fairly illustrates the folly of modern methods for abating the ravenous greed of capitalism in its pursuit of wage-earners. Socialism is the only power under heaven that can extract the fangs of capitalism or give the beast the lockjaw.

Socialists, more than any other party, sect or order, delves, explores and investigates the welfare of man. They do not "presume God to scan," but they scrutinize the devil, capitalism and other one-rules of man, particularly those who rob workmen of their tools, and then rob them of one-half of their earnings.

There was never suggested a lower or more swinish estimate of workmen than the "full dinner pail." It may be true that a man must eat to live, but the capitalistic idea is that a working-man lives to eat. Their motto is, "Feed him and fleece him."

James Bryce, the noted English writer, author of "The American Commonwealth," includes in his selection of the ten greatest books of the century Karl Marx's "Das Kapital," and places it fifth in his list. Hegel's "History of Philosophy" is third.

For a country like the United States, in which according to figures, prosperity is overflowing in all directions, strikes are in the nature of rebutting testimony. The reason is that the boasted prosperity does not benefit those who create it.

Arrangements are being perfected in Washington to dedicate the new century to God at midnight, December 31, 1900. God may object to the dedication if the devil is to run the new century as those of the past have been managed.

Just think of it! For the sum of 50 cents a subscriber receives fifty-two numbers of the Social Democratic Herald, less than one cent a number. Socialists demand ideas, and the Herald keeps them in stock for its readers.

The Union, the organ of organized labor in Indiana, under the management of Ed. Gould, is of the opinion that the retirement of several of the officers of the American Federation of Labor would help the cause immensely.

Socialists contemplate men as having brains, intellect, ambitions and aspirations, for the gratification of which something more than a "full dinner pail" is required.

Just now, as an evidence of national prosperity, capitalists refer to workmen as having "full dinner pails," as if that were sufficient compensation for a life of toil.

A "War Song Concert" in Chicago, a few nights ago was given under the auspices of a Church of Christ.

Capitalism killed chivalry. Example: The treatment of the Boers by the "civilized" British.

Tribute to Martin Irons

By Eugene V. Debs

It was in the year 1886 that Martin Irons, as the chairman of the executive board of the Knights of Labor of the Gould southwest railway system, defied capitalist tyranny, and from that hour he was doomed. All the power of capitalism combined to crush him, and when at last he succumbed to overwhelming odds, he was hounded from place to place until he was ragged and footsore and the pangs of hunger gnawed at his vitals.

For fourteen long years he fought single-handed the battle of persecution. He tramped far, and among strangers, under an assumed name, sought to earn enough to get bread. But he was tracked like a beast and driven from shelter. For this "poor wanderer of a stormy day," there was no pity. He had stood between his class and their oppressors—he was brave and would not flinch; he was honest and would not sell; this was his crime and he must die.

Martin Irons came to this country from Scotland a child. He was friendless, penniless, alone. At an early age he became a machinist. For years he worked at his trade. He had a clear head and a warm heart. He saw and felt the injustice suffered by his class. Three reductions in wages in rapid succession fired his blood. He resolved to resist. He appealed to his fellow-workers. When the great strike came Martin Irons was its central figure. The men knew they could trust him. They were not mistaken.

When at the darkest hour Jay Gould sent word to Martin Irons that he wished to see him, the answer came, "I am in Kansas City." Gould did not have gold enough to buy Irons. This was his greatest crime. The press united in fiercest denunciation. Every lie that malignity could conceive was coined and circulated. In the popular mind Martin Irons was the blackest-hearted villain that ever went unhung. Pinkerton blood hounds were on his track night and day. But through it all this honest, fearless, high-minded workman stood immovable.

The courts and soldiers responded to the command of their masters, the railroads, the strike was crushed and the workmen beaten.

Martin Irons had served, suffered for and honored his class. But he had lost. His class turned against him and joined in the execration of the enemy. This pained him more than all else. But he bore even this without a murmur, and if ever a despairing sigh was wrung from him it was when he was alone.

And thus it has been all along—the highway of the centuries, from Jesus Christ to Martin Irons.

Let it not be said that Irons was not crucified. For fourteen years he was nailed to the cross and no martyr to humanity ever bore his crucifixion with manlier fortitude.

He stood the taunts and jeers and all the bitter mockery of fate with patient heroism, and even when the poor, dumb brutes whose wounds and bruises he would have swathed with his heartstrings, turned upon and rent him, pity sealed his lips and silent suffering wrought for him a martyr's crown.

Martin Irons was hated by all who were too ignorant or base to understand him. He died despised, yet will he live beloved.

No president of the United States gave or tendered him a public office in testimony of his service to the working class. The kind of service he rendered was too honest to be respectable, too human to be popular.

The blow he struck for his class will preserve his memory. In the great struggle for emancipation he nobly did his share, and the history of labor cannot be written without his name.

He was an agitator and as such shared the common fate of all. Jesus Christ, Joan of Arc, Elijah Lovejoy, John Brown, Albert Parsons and many others set the same example and paid the same penalty.

For the reason that he was a despised agitator and shunned of men too mean and sordid to conceive the lofty motive that inspired him, he will be remembered with tenderness and love long after the last of his detractors shall have mouldered in a forgotten grave.

It was in April, 1899, in Waco, Texas, that I last pressed this comrade's hand. He bore the traces of poverty and broken health, but his spirit was intrepid as when he struck the shield of Hoxie thirteen years before; and when he spoke of Socialism he seemed transformed and all the smouldering fires within him blazed once more from his sunken eyes.

I was pained but not surprised when I read that he had "died penniless in an obscure Texas town." It is his glory and society's shame that he died that way.

His weary body has found rest and the grand-children of the men and women he struggled, suffered and died for will weave chaplets where he sleeps.

His epitaph might read: "For standing bravely in defense of the working class, he was put to death by slow torture."

Martin Irons was an honest, courageous, manly man. The world numbers one less since he has left it. Brave comrade, love and farewell!

DEMOCRACY AND SOCIALISM

[From Chicago Chronicle]

The various factions of radicals and extremists which were affiliated more or less closely with the Democratic party during the late campaign are preparing to hold conferences for the purpose of arranging for independent action.

The sign is an exceedingly wholesome one. If it be accompanied by similar indications in the right quarter that the Democrats also appreciate the importance of appearing before the people in their true colors there will be a distinct gain for honesty and candor in politics.

It is an instructive fact that the leaders of the radical factions who have called these meetings express themselves without reserve as quite as hostile to the Democratic party as they are to the Republican party. The Socialists of the West, the new radical party of Boston and the middle-of-the-road Populists have spoken already, and there are others yet to be heard from.

All of these organizations, by whatever name designated, are socialistic and, therefore, naturally antagonistic to the Democratic theory of government. In matters of principle they are much more in harmony with Republicanism than they are with Democracy. Their quarrel with Republicanism is not as to principles, but as to their application.

The Republican party is Socialistic in its protectionism. The true Socialists would extend the same idea to many other classes of society, particularly to the poor and the idle. The Republican party declares it to be a proper function of government to stimulate and encourage manufacturers. The true Socialists hold it to be equally the province of government to relieve the people of the management of most of their activities, to conduct them in their name and to do for the individual many of the things which he has been in the habit of doing for himself.

While there is some resemblance between the economics of the Republicans and those of the Socialists, there is absolutely no common ground on which Socialists and well-trained Democrats can stand. They are at the two extremes. Their differences are irreconcilable. If one conquers the other must go down, whether they chance to be acting together for the moment or not.

The recent alliance between these parties was dishonest, because even if the fusion had been successful at the polls it would have fallen to pieces as soon as it attempted to legislate. If the Kansas City ticket had swept the country and carried with it a two-thirds majority in both houses of congress there would have been no 16 to 1 silver legislation. There would have been no state ownership of "public utilities." There would have been no initiative and referendum. There would have been nothing at all in the line of radical and socialistic legislation, for the real Democrats would have been sufficiently numerous to defeat it.

Probably it is the recognition of this fact which is causing the present movement on the part of the radicals. They know that oil and water will not mix. It is not due to any fault on the part of the Populists or to any fault on the part of the Democrats that they are not cohesive. They are going in different directions. The fault is on the part of their leaders, who for purposes of success merely brought together elements which by all the laws of God and man are destined to remain apart forever.

There are enough Socialists and other radicals in this country to form a political party. They may find it difficult to agree as to any well-defined line of action, for they embrace men whose views are benevolent and men whose views are destructive, but the necessities of political action should enable them to come together in a common cause much more easily than they can arrange fusions with parties which agree with them in nothing.

It does not seem to be the law of Socialism to grow. If it were we should have had a Socialistic world long ago. The doctrine is as old as civilization. It has not been improved upon. It has been put into practice in many places and by many widely different people and classes of people, but everywhere and always it has been abandoned as a failure. It has constructed nothing which has endured. It has exalted government. It has debased the individual. It is, therefore, at war with a principle which is almost axiomatic that the elevation of the race cannot be accomplished as a result of legislation by wholesale, but must come about through the toilsome processes of individual improvement acting upon the body of the people and through them upon the state.

If it were not for this record of failure—failure which of late years has been confined chiefly to attempts to effect political and other organizations—it would be supposed that a Socialistic party of some magnitude might be a possibility in this country. Perhaps there may be such a party for a campaign or two, and it may for a time be able to make a respectable contest for supremacy. If such a party should appear it is to the Democratic party that the people must look for its overthrow.

Most of the Socialistic elements now in evidence here are offshoots of Republicanism. This is emphatically true of the Populists, 99 per cent of whom never voted a Democratic ticket. It is very largely true of the Socialistic forces in the great cities. If the movement is to grow it must draw its strength from the Republicans, whose excesses in the line of governmental favoritism are well calculated to make Democrats out of some of their followers and Socialists out of others whose Americanism is not so well grounded.

Judged by its history Socialism is not likely to become formidable. If it should develop strength and purpose sufficient to make it a serious menace to our institutions the Democracy should be the organization to give it battle. It carries the banners of personal liberty and individualism. It has the principles which, if honestly and bravely set forth, must triumph over the delusions of Socialism as they have triumphed over the power of tyranny.

The separation of these radicals from the Democrats, which has been so well begun, should continue to the end. It was inevitable from the beginning.

Weylerism in Cuba helped to bring about the war with Spain. Weyler corralled Cubans, men women and children, and starved them to death, and with his army tried to kill Cuban patriots who wanted to be free and independent. Weylerism is now popular in South Africa with the British, and is suggested as a good thing to civilize and Christianize Filipinos. Christian civilization in time may hope to equal that of the Chinese boxers, or the Apache Indians.

Evolution of Capitalism and the Goal to
Which It Inevitably Tends—Unerring
Forecasts of Marx and Engels

By James O'Neal

When the subjection of the formerly independent producer to the position of a wage laborer is accomplished, the surplus value wrung from the laborer is capitalized for the purpose of crushing other capitalists. To quote Marx: "As soon as this process of transformation has sufficiently decomposed the old society from top to bottom; as soon as the laborers are turned into proletarians, their means of labor into capital; as soon as the capitalist mode of production stands on its own feet; then the further socialization of labor and further transformation of the land and other means of production into socially exploited and, therefore, common means of production, as well as the further expropriation of private proprietors, take a new form. That which is now to be expropriated is no longer the laborer working for himself, but the capitalist exploiting many laborers. This expropriation is accomplished by the action of the imminent laws of capitalistic production itself, by the centralization of capital." These "imminent laws" are inseparable from capitalist society. The capitalist, like all others in modern society, is engaged in the struggle for existence and endeavors to secure for himself and family wealth for their enjoyment. No limits are set to the amount he may accumulate, for to do so would be to strike at the very root of the system—that is, private monopoly. Allow the state to interfere, and it ceases to be PRIVATE property. Hence they are engaged in the struggle for control of the markets, and the weaker ones go to the wall and fall into the ranks of the laborers. Competition forces them to combine and gives those in the combination added strength and, by reducing expenses to a minimum, enables them to produce cheaper and to undertake enterprises which would be impossible prior to the combination. This combination renders the subjection of the laborers complete. Their labor power is reduced to the plane of merchandise, whose value is determined like the value of any other commodity, its cost of production and reproduction.

At this stage of development the classes are very sharply defined. On the one hand the capitalist class with the means of production (raw materials, machinery, etc.) in their possession; on the other hand the laborers with their vital force for sale. One buys it, the other sells it. Owners of tools and users of tools. Exploiters and exploited. Rulers and ruled. With this quantitative increase of capital at this stage came also a qualitative change in its form. The former independent, isolated and individual method of production is supplanted by social production and co-operative labor in the factory. The centralization process continues. To quote Marx again: "Hand in hand with this centralization, or this expropriation of many capitalists by few, develop, on an ever-extending scale, the co-operative form of the labor process, the conscious technical application of science, the methodical cultivation of the soil, the transformation of the instruments of labor into instruments of labor only usable in common, the economizing of all means of production by their use as the means of production of combined, socialized labor, the entanglement of all peoples in the net of the world market, and with this, the international character of the capitalist regime." These words, written in 1867, sound more like a prophecy than the deductions of a man engaged in analyzing the development of capitalist society. As this centralization of the wealth productive forces of society continues the condition of the laborers grows worse. They have but one commodity for sale, their labor power, which is sold in advance by the day, week or month, and as it is inseparable from themselves they are sold with it. Its price fluctuates around the subsistence point and is held there by competition for jobs. The sale is not a voluntary one, but a forced one, due to their position in society. Unlike other commodities, they cannot send other commodities, they cannot send samples of it to the prospective buyer for his inspection, nor can they hold it from the market and await a raise in price; they are "free men" (?) who MUST sell, for on its sale depends the life of themselves, wives and little ones. As Prof. Davidson well said:

"The laborer must sell today; the employer need not buy until tomorrow. To the master it is only a question of profits; to the laborer it is a question of LIFE."

As capitalism develops, the small capitalist is gradually forced into bankruptcy by a more powerful opponent, and these gradually swell the ranks of the workers, and the introduction of more improved machinery, the further division and subdivision of labor play their part in increasing their numbers and consequently the ranks of the unemployed. Thus the number of those of whom capitalist MUST BUY labor power is decreased, while the number of the laborers who MUST SELL AND NO MARKET FOR ITS SALE INCREASES. This competition between the unemployed for jobs, between those who MUST sell and NO BUYERS, drives wages to the subsistence point. The assertion that they should save up something for a rainy day and go into business is mockery when thousands with years of experience constantly fail. How, then (granting that they could save), could they hope to succeed with no experience at all? The constant introduction of machinery transfers the skill of the workers to the machine and reduces them to a common level. This reduction and the massing of them in the large factories promotes a fraternal bond of solidarity among them. A spirit of class consciousness is developed, a consciousness of their subservience to the class who own the means by which wealth is produced and by which the surplus values of their toil is wrung from them. Meantime the development of industry produces periodical crises and the workers are thrown aside like squeezed lemons. They are told by the "learned" that they have produced too much, and they go home to see if it is true. They find the larder empty and are at a loss to determine which is correct, their failure to save or the production of too much. Some ascribe it to the absence of white metal instead of yellow, as a means of exchange, while Prof. Jevons in England had to leave the domain of earthly things to seek an explanation of the paradox of want and misery amid abundance, and thought he found it in the spots on the sun. Yet none of these could answer the simple problem propounded to them by the Socialist, which is, how can industrial crises be avoided when the purchasing power of the greatest class in society, the laborers, is less than 17 per cent of the products on the market? Wealth is centralized at one pole of society and population at the other. This centralization revolutionizes the industrial basis of capitalism and contains within it the elements for the solution of the problem. Industry has been socialized through capitalist organization, but its benefits are appropriated by a class. The instruments are of such a magnitude and character that they are only capable of being used in common by great masses of laborers co-operatively arranged. In other words, the industrial basis necessary for the Socialist society—that is, socialized production and co-operative labor—have been developed by the warring forces in the bosom of the capitalist society, and the new order is struggling to burst the capitalistic garment in which it is enveloped.

The old order is no longer adapted to the productive forces which it has evolved. It must be annihilated, it will be annihilated. Marx describes this period in the following passage: "Along with the constantly diminishing number of the magnates of capital, who usurp and monopolize all advantages of this process of transformation, grows the mass of misery, oppression, slavery, degradation, exploitation; but with this, too, grows the revolt of the working class, a class always increasing in numbers and disciplined, united, organized by the very mechanism of the process of capitalistic production itself. The monopoly of capital becomes a fetter upon the mode of production, which has sprung up and flourished along and under it. Centralization of the means of production and socialization of labor at last reach a point where they become incompatible with their capitalist integument. This integument is burst asunder. The knell of capitalist private property sounds. The expropriators are expropriated." In other words, capitalism is pregnant with a new social order. It has entered the stage of decay and dissolution, which always presages the destruction of an old and the birth of a new society.

The Herald, in proportion as its subscribers increase in numbers, will be able to do more and better work in promoting the cause dear to every Socialist. Think of it, comrades, and send along the names.

Every new branch of the Social Democratic party indicates the growth of the cause of Socialism. It is a landmark in the march of new ideas, a monumental expression of faith in man.

A new subscriber for the Herald is a new force in the battle for better conditions.

The Taproot of Crime

Bishop Potter of the Episcopal church spoke at a meeting in New Haven, Conn., Dec. 6, his subject being "Wealth and Commonwealth." "I choose this subject because of its paramount importance," he said. "Divorce, crime, corruption in all our cities have one root, the lust of money. The one eager, dominant hunger which salutes us from one end to another of our broad land is the passion, the hunger, the greed of gain."

"Go where you may, talk with whom you will—with clergymen estimating the promise of field for spiritual labor, with women rating the claims of other women upon their social recognition, with the heads of great universities paralyzed with fright lest the indiscretions of some plain-spoken professor who tells his age the truth in an hour when it sorely needs to hear it shall cut down the revenues of the college—it is no matter, the commercial question is at the bottom of it and decides usually all the others."

"We read the other day of a woman at the horse show whose attire was a dress made of the skins of unborn lambs. What do you think of such a thing? Is not this a relic of barbarism?"

"What would be the effect of a company of men and women of recognized leadership should bind themselves together to illustrate in their habit of life simplicity of attire, inexpensiveness in their dwellings, and should further bind themselves to discourage the habit of excessive accumulation? For myself, I believe that such a suggestion would attract far greater numbers than most of us believe."

A Guiding Hand Needed

While a man so able and impartial as James Bryce of England includes in the ten greatest works of the century Karl Marx's "Capital," the importance of Socialist literature in general calls out the following from the New York Times:

"There is need for a competent examination of the teachings of the new Socialism. Most of those who teach it fail to carry out their theories logically to their consequences. Perhaps they lack the gift of scientific imagination to picture forth what would happen if their doctrines should come to be controlling. Students of the science, however, would be grateful for the help of a strong hand to guide them in the maze of new and untried theories that confront them at every turn."

The school of writers who have been happily described as professional friends of man have taught the world some truths that it could ill afford to ignore. One of them is that human labor can no longer be considered as a mere commodity to be governed by the ruthless law of demand and supply. But along with the truths there is much matter that we do not know to be true. Many thinkers hold it to be quite untrue. The body of this economic literature is now sufficiently great to repay a systematic examination and review.

SOME REFLECTIONS ON THE SOCIAL EVIL

cantilism first in the history of the west raised its head. Indigenous women appeared who were dependent for their existence on their sexual nature. The first professional prostitutes were "freed slaves." Prostitution or sexual slavery was at once recognized as a social institution. In the middle ages the class of prostitutes was organized into a guild or trade union, and enjoyed legal recognition in the person of a yearly elected "queen" of prostitutes. This queen was duly sworn in by the government and empowered to prosecute all "scab" prostitutes. At that period the rule of the male over the female in human society was in full sway, and even the fathers, brothers and sons of proletarian women looked with complacency on such institutions as jus primae noctes. The alleged infidelity of a wife was punished by compulsory prostitution for life. Municipalities engaged in the business of running houses of ill fame. Even some of the popes of Rome kept houses of ill fame, from which they derived a part of their princely income (Sixtus IV., for instance). Rome never was especially scrupulous about the source of the money flowing to it, as may be best illustrated by the proverb, "non olet" ("it does not smell")—that means the ill-gotten money.

The rapid spread of protestantism and syphilis put an end to the, so to speak, institutional period of sexual slavery. The discovery of America and the general development of international commerce ushered in the most typical and perfect form of commercialism—our modern industrial or capitalistic era. More perfect methods were applied to the trade with human flesh called prostitution. Sexual slavery turned into a regular branch of international trade. Hundreds of thousands of "free proletarian women" are enticed by professional agents into dismal abodes of vice, standing under the official or secret protection of the police, and kept there in order to eke out a miserable existence for themselves and create fortunes for their "employers." These professional agents travel from one end of the globe to the other in search for fresh sexual slaves, destined to take the place of the rapidly used up old ones. The demand for additional bands of slaves in some localities where there is a prospect of an increased influx, even if temporarily only, of people is eagerly watched by these agents and met by them promptly, as in the case of army manoeuvres or fairs.

Where do all the professional prostitutes come from? This is a highly interesting question. Any one knowing the nature of women, not from the point of view of a man whose mind is poisoned with ideas belonging to the pestilential atmosphere of sexual profligacy, but from the point of view of a son, brother or husband, will admit that no innocent woman will take refuge in professional prostitution, even under the pressure of the direst need; that an honest woman, brought up in the pure atmosphere of love and devotion, will prefer suicide to sexual slavery. Actually, the professional prostitute has fallen gradually on the inclined plane of professional vice till she reached a stage where there is no hope for her to a decent life. Economic conditions compel the proletarian to send his own daughters, mostly before they reach maturity, into the industrial field, where she competes with him. She succeeds in lowering his earnings, but gets herself wages that are ridiculously insufficient to cover her most urgent needs. The young girl knows little of the perfdy of life, nothing of the beastly meanness of the male animal lurking in almost every man. She is young and beautiful. She wants to live and enjoy life as her more fortunate sisters do. Her earnings do not allow her even to dress herself decently. Her cousin proletarian, with whom she works, cannot afford to marry her, although he loves her dearly. Suppose she works in some of the mammoth department stores. The manager notices that she is poorly dressed and thinks that this may hurt his trade. He tells her that she must dress better or quit the job. "But I do not earn enough to pay even my board," answers the girl in despair. "Have you no man friend who will help you?" is the cynical suggestion of the manager, who is maybe himself not disinclined to be for awhile this friend in need. But then, there is a whole class of professional and unprofessional young men who want to live and enjoy life, but cannot afford to keep up a family on a standard corresponding to their ideal of living decently. The proletarian girl has no trouble to find a friend, and get along for a while in the bliss of the "first love," at least on her part. The friend betrays her. She loses faith in human nature, turns cynical, and after a few such experiences engages in prostitution as a "side line." Then, little by little, the "side line" turns into a regular profession, and she is lost.

Who will dare to throw a stone at the modern proletarian Magdalene? Did we not, as members of the present society, deliberately drive her to her fate? Is the prostitute not punished enough by her fate to need our phariseic compassion and charity? This unfortunate daughter of the proletariat wants justice, not charity! Is the capitalistic class any more moral than the class of proletarians? Is not commercialism permeating all the philosophy of life of the middle class? Does not the matrimonial market of the "higher classes" bear a purely commercial aspect? Do not young men or women of the so-called "respectable families" look chiefly for pecuniary advantages in their matrimonial affairs? Are not many matrimonial unions sanctified by law and church more than prostitution, because there is no element of dire need as an excuse, eliminated?

Proletarians! Is your sister, daughter and sweetheart in danger under the present economic system? Save them from sexual slavery by abolishing the system enslaving your own class.

During the past ten years the United States has coined 122,783,050 standard silver dollars, making a clear profit of about $61,000,000, and on the face of every dollar stamped the motto: "In God we trust." Rockefeller's motto engraved upon his tanks and pipes is similar.

A PRIMER OF SOCIALISM

A 32-page pamphlet which contains in addition to the "Primer of Socialism," by G. C. Clemens, "Socializing a State," by the late Laurence Gronlund, and "Economic Terms and Phrases," by A. P. Haze.

One of the strongest pamphlets for propaganda yet issued. A splendid vote-maker, and thousands should be circulated before election.

The Haverhill Defeat

Nothing so plainly betrays the secret fear which preys on the capitalistic politician as the eagerness with which he seizes on any apparent defeat of the Socialists. Hence the satisfaction with which the capitalistic press announces the election of a republican mayor of Haverhill. As if a few aldermen and a mayor could retard the steady march of our vote, increasing as it does on an average 50 per cent every year. Or, as if one small provincial town bore any larger proportion to the cause of international Socialism than a ripple on the Merrimac bears to the Atlantic ocean.

However, since in the near future we are likely to have many Haverhills in different parts of the country, it may be useful to analyze the causes which led to the loss of this first American town, except Sheboygan, Wis., that ever elected Socialist officials. The writer enjoyed the privilege of taking some part in the stirring municipal campaign of 1899 in Haverhill. At that time the republicans and democrats put up a united ticket against the Social Democrats. Money was freely used. A railway corporation sent the anti-Socialist campaign committee a contribution of $30,000. Yet, in spite of all their efforts, the S. D. P. won the day and Mayor Chase was re-elected by a majority of 215.

This year the two old parties did not combine, but the republicans and democrats ran separate tickets. The conditions apparently were more favorable, than ever for a Socialist victory. The Socialists of Haverhill, no doubt, worked as earnestly as in last year's campaign. Yet Mayor Chase is defeated by a plurality of 1,077, and not one single Socialist is returned to the board of aldermen.

How, then, can we account for such a sudden change? There seems to be but one explanation.

The most flourishing branch, it it is cut from the parent tree, withers in a few hours: The sturdiest arm, if amputated from the body, loses its strength forever.

One year ago the whole Social Democratic party stood behind the comrades of Haverhill. From Wisconsin, from New York, from the most widely scattered places, contributions poured in to the campaign fund, till it reached over $1,200. This is a large sum to be expended in a small town upon a Socialist campaign, in which all the work is voluntary, and therefore the total proceeds can be used for literature and to defray the expenses of public meetings.

But, the mere value in dollars and cents was a small part of the benefit derived from this fund. Its moral effect was a thousandfold greater. Never can I forget the thrill of comradeship and brotherhood which these contributions carried with them, coming some from the tenements of the east side of New York, some from the labor unions of Milwaukee, and all freighted with the spirit of loving self-sacrifice.

In other ways the members of the S. D. P. testified their sympathy. Eugene V. Debs, with one of his thrilling speeches, turned the whole course of the campaign and changed it from a defensive to an aggressive one. The whole party was watching Haverhill. Who could not work well and hopefully with such comrades behind?

But in 1900 Haverhill saw fit to cut herself off from all these sources of moral and material aid. By severing her connection with the Social Democratic party she asserted her ability to rely on her own resources, with such little assistance as she might receive from the small body at Springfield, with which she allied herself. The result has been disastrous to her and needs no comment.

We say this in no spirit of criticism of the Haverhill comrades, who, we may concede, acted according to their best judgment. But there are other localities which stand aloof from the national organization, and for their sakes the warning and the lesson should not pass unnoticed. For if Haverhill, which had twice elected Social Democratic mayor, aldermen and councilmen, proved so weak as soon as she discovered herself from the central organization, how can younger and smaller branches expect to flourish without the support of the parent stem?

In selfish isolation, or in affiliation with a small faction, can never come the strength the magnetism and the courage which belong to a large and enthusiastic organization. Those Socialists who persist in standing apart will surely see their efforts fail and their little organizations pine away or perish in an enemy's country when they have lagged behind the rest of the army.

Come, comrades! Come, brothers! Join hands with us. Singly we are the laughing-stock of the world. Singly we are the sport of the politician and the fools of an idle dream.

But welded together in the bonds of comradeship, we shall feel the vital impulses, the energy and the confidence emanating from our national center and from each other; and our true and tried organization will march on conquering and to conquer.

SPECIAL CONVENTION

OFFICIAL CALL

To Members and Branches of the Social Democratic Party, Comrades:

RESPONDING to suggestions from all parts of the country and a demand from many branches, a special National Convention of the Social Democratic party is hereby called, to take place at the national headquarters, 126 Washington street, Chicago, Ill., beginning Tuesday, January 15, 1901, and continuing in session until the work of the convention shall have been completed.

The purpose of this convention will be to make such changes in the laws of the party and to make such other provisions as may be deemed necessary to meet the growing demands of the organization. It is our purpose to enter at once upon a vigorous campaign of agitation, education and organization, so that the party shall be fully equipped to meet the capitalist enemy on the political battle-fields of the future. Now that the presidential campaign is over, our work is fairly begun and must be carried forward with all possible energy without the loss of a single hour.

The basis and other conditions of representation will be the same as at the Indianapolis Convention, and are here incorporated as follows:

First—Each branch shall be entitled to as many representatives as the individual members thereof in good standing may select for that purpose; provided, that each representative shall be entitled to one (1) vote for each member whose signature is attached to his credential; and provided further, that no member shall have his signature attached to more than one credential.

Second—Branches not sending their own representatives may select those of other branches of the same state to represent them; provided, that in each such case the representative shall hold the proper credential with the signatures of members attached as herein provided.

Third—No member shall be qualified to serve as representative or entitled to representation who has not been a member of the party at least thirty (30) days prior to the opening day of the convention.

Fourth—All signatures of members attached to credentials shall be certified to by the chairman or secretary of their respective branches.

Fifth—The national secretary shall furnish each branch with a sufficient number of blank credentials for the purpose herein specified.

Unaffiliated Socialist clubs or societies whose members may desire to connect themselves with the Social Democratic party, are cordially invited to communicate through their proper officials with the Secretary of the National Executive Board, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

This call is issued to all branches of the Social Democratic party in good standing, as shown by the records at 126 Washington street, Chicago, and organized prior to December 15, 1900: The time and place of meeting and other details will be given in the Herald as soon as arrangements are completed.

SEYMOUR STEDMAN, Secretary.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Two new branches of the S. D. P. were organized in New Hampshire in November.

Branch 4 of Utah is arranging for a masquerade ball on Christmas eve, the proceeds to go to the lecture fund.

A new Socialist paper comes to our table from Evansville, Ind. It is named Justice and is bright and attractive.

A delegate convention of the Socialist party of Oklahoma has been called to assemble December 26th at the City of Guthrie.

Comrade Guy H. Lockwood is planning to take the road next spring for Socialism with an automobile. We wish him success.

The official vote credited to the Socialists of Oklahoma is 815. That is the nucleus of what will develop into a conquering army in a few years.

Comrade Krieger, Rockville, Conn., writes that the vote at the city election was 171, distributed in wards as follows: Second, 22; Third, 29; Fourth, 120.

Branch 4, Cincinnati, at a meeting held November 25, adopted a resolution favoring the calling of a national convention and encouraging an effort for "union."

Hyde Park, Mass., showed an active interest in the Socialist cause by polling 73 straight votes for presidential electors, 86 for congressman and 146 for state senate.

A contribution of 25 cents to the campaign fund has been received from Comrade Center, New York, which added to the amount already reported, makes a total of $2,176.50.

In the Tenth ward last Saturday night, branches 3, 6 and 19 of the Social Democratic party nominated Comrade Rudolph Pusch for alderman. Comrade Pusch has been a faithful worker in the movement.

Branch 12 (German) of San Francisco is in a flourishing condition and doing effective work. At every meeting new members are enrolled. The comrades are grathly at the interest shown in meetings since the election.

Tuesday evening, Dec. 18, at the Bohemian hall, corner Twelfth and Vine streets, the Bohemian Social Democrats of Milwaukee will hold a meeting to be addressed by Comrade Jaroslav Fousek, a member of the Racine branch.

The city elections in Washington have served again to accentuate the growth of Socialism. At Fairhaven John Cloak, Social Democratic candidate for Mayor, received 267 votes against 302 for his Republican opponent supported by Democrats. At New Whatcom, E. Lux (S. D.) polled for mayor 441 votes against 560 for the Republican, who also got Democratic support.

The regular Social Democrats in the Eight ward, Chicago, nominated Comrade Nerad for alderman Monday night. The nominee is well known and highly respected, and the comrades have done themselves credit in the selection.

The growth in membership of our branches since the election is remarkable and significant. A number of large increases have been reported, and all tend to show the healthy state of the party and to insure its rapid development. Among the late reports is that of one branch at Burlington, Iowa, where forty-one new members were admitted in two weeks. The year about to begin is to be a record-breaker for our party.

Fitchburg Forges Ahead

Branches all over the country are active and adding to their membership rolls. Since the 5th of November the loyal branch at Fitchburg, Mass., has taken in 34 new members. The comrades are greatly encouraged; they are united and harmonious, conditions which are manifest in the splendid vote, 547, cast in favor of Comrade Rice for mayor.

Correction

Referring to the item in the campaign committees report "for advertising, etc., in the Appeal and Herald," it should be noted that the campaign committee had exclusive control of the entire fourth page of the Herald. It should also be mentioned that the total bill contracted with the Appeal to Reason was $258, of which the Appeal threw off $213.50, receiving from this committee $64.50 in full payment.

I wish also to acknowledge omitting the valuable services to the committee of Mrs. A. S. Edwards, which were gratuitously furnished it during the campaign.

Seymour Stedman.

Action of "Unionists" Repudiated

The course now being pursued by regular branches of the Social Democratic party shows resolution and a clear understanding of present conditions in the movement in Chicago. Last Sunday afternoon a meeting of Branch 4, Illinois, was held at Comrade Conrad's, West Ohio street, and the following resolution unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this meeting of Branch 4 of the Social Democratic party takes cognizance of a call for a meeting in the Thirteenth ward under the name "Social Democratic party," for the purpose of nominating an alderman; said call appeared in the Chicago Evening News and the Workers' Call, was issued and signed by F. G. Strickland and J. B. Smiley and claimed to represent the Social Democratic party; it was not issued by the Social Democratic party and the persons who attached their names to it had no authority or right to use the name; we, therefore, repudiate, in the name of the Social Democratic party, any and all action taken at said meeting and order this resolution printed in the Social Democratic Herald.

The next business meeting of Branch 4 will be held at the same place in the afternoon of the first Sunday in January, when a full attendance of all members is desired.

NEW BRANCHES

Illinois, three.
Missouri, one.
Montana, one.
Total, five.

The Social Democratic party, with 100,000 men good and true, is invincible.

In the lexicon of socialism the cowardly words "fear" and "fail" do not appear.

Nothing succeeds like success. The way to have a new branch of the Social Democratic party is to go out and organize it.

The Social Democratic party has a flag. It is the "Flag of the free heart's hope and home By angel hands to valor given."

Now is the time for soldiers of the Social Democratic party and army to plant it on highlands and lowlands and the plains of the country, in city, town and village, rally around it, fling it to the breeze and standing by it, ask: "Who shall haul it down?"

A good place to get the Herald is in your barber shop. It will be seen and read. It is just what Socialists want and non-Socialists will subscribe for. Give them a chance to see it.

C. L. Shamp, secretary of the International Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen has come out for Socialism. He has had his ear to the ground and is through with old party politics.

A branch of the Social Democratic party is something in the nature of a dynamo to light and keep burning the lamp of Socialism. Increase their size and you add to the illuminating power of the lamps.

The Herald wants 20,000 subscribers as a Christmas gift.

Are You a Crusader

A subscriber to the Social Democratic Herald becomes at once an active soldier in an army of crusaders pledged to remedy the deplorable conditions which our civilization has planted and cultivated. Unlike the crusaders who organized armies to rescue the Holy Land from the grasp of Mohammedans, he does not enlist to rescue a tomb, a shrine nor a temple, but men, women and children from present and impending misfortune.

The Socialist who subscribes for the Herald will not be dazed by the spectacular exhibitors of wealth nor will he be cajoled by its siren song.

He is not to be classed with cynics of the Diogenes school of philosophy, with pessimists nor with optimists, holding that some higher power than man orders things. He believes that Socialists can order things by the overmastering genius of truth and the commanding power of reason.

He believes the Social Democratic Herald is helping the cause of emancipation from degrading environments. He is right. We hail every subscriber to the Herald as a helper in a cause which calls into action the noblest attributes of human nature.

IMPERIAL MESSAGE OF BILLY THE FIRST

Girth, Weight, Length and Other Dimensions of Twenty-Six Working Days on Wind, Water and Gas

THE GREAT IMPERIAL RAGTAG

How the Revenues Created by Labor Are Expended in Policies of Imperialism by the "Man Who Did It."

By Max Melnard

Emperor Billy's first communication to the republican imperial ragtag contained 21,000 words.

It measures 4 yards and 10 inches in length, and is chuck full of wind, water and gas.

If it took Billy, as reported, twenty-six working days to construct it, it cost the taxpayers of the empire $160.25 a day, or $4,166.50.

There are no standards by which Billy's document, except its length, can be measured or weighed.

In these regards there is a wide diversity of opinion.

As to bulk, estimates range all the way from a mole hill to a meeting-house; in weight, from a grain to a grindstone.

If regarded as simply wind, there is enough to blow all the brass bands of creation; if gas, enough to drive Vesuvius out of business; if water, enough to drive all the machinery of capitalistic grist mills in the country.

If it could be metamorphosed into a man, Mark Hanna, for instance, it would have the head of a peacock, the neck of a bulldog, a balloon-shaped abdomen, the legs of a kangaroo and feet requiring No. 25 boots.

In all regards, Billy's message is a wonder. In politics, a horse fiddle; in statesmanship, a jewsharp; in government, a bagpipe, and in imperialism, a whole brass band.

Emperor Billy has got the power and sword—the army and navy—military governor, flags, fustian and feathers, red tape and gold braid, and is as happy as a long-neck clam at high tide.

With his ships and soldiers he untangled the Chinese snarl.

Under his imperial sway Boxers ceased to box. The almond-eyed dowager empress and the pig-tailed emperor of the Celestial empire ran away from Peking in a handcart. The tsung-li-yamen disbanded, and the empire of the United States forged to the front, a "world power"—all of which Emperor Billy tells his Ragtag in his wonderful message.

Under the empire, Billy points out that prosperity is everywhere knee-deep and the tide still rising.

Exports and imports mount up to billions; the balance of trade in favor of our empire is near a billion. Customs and internal revenue receipts show that Emperor Billy's subjects paid taxes last year of more than half a billion, and that of this vast sum labor paid (since only labor creates revenue and pays debts) to support the army and the navy and carry on the imperial war in the Philippine islands, about $200,000,000.

In this Cheops pyramid of money, represented by imports, exports, balance of trade, customs and internal revenue taxes, with expenditures for army and navy to maintain the empire, millions are piled upon thousands and billions are piled upon millions until the narration of the colossal prosperity reads like a description of an Alpine scenery, when "hills peep o'er hills and Alps on Alps arise." This tickles Emperor Billy. He's the feller what's done it all. He titters like a sparrow and smiles like a forty pounder while shooting Christian civilization into heathen. He laughs like a Niagara and roars like a cyclone as he tells his Ragtag and the world, "I did it."

Moreover, Emperor Billy tells his Ragtag that he's got an army of 100,000, officers and men; with big and small guns to match, besides a navy of big and little ships, with still more in the course of construction.

Of his army he tells his Ragtag he has 60,000 in his Philippine possessions, 6,000 in Cuba, about 2,000 in Porto Rico, the remainder being distributed at home in 58 military posts, to see that capitalism is protected, while filling the dinner pails of its wage slaves with plum pudding and pound cake to make them contented with their lot.

Emperor Billy gives his Ragtag to understand that the war in the Philippine islands will go on until the "niggers" in that colony are all dead or converted by the gospel of the gun.

He does not state how many "niggers" have been slaughtered by his missionary bullets, or have died under the auspices of Christian famine; nor does he tell how many American soldiers have perished while laying the foundations of his empire in the Philippines. That would be small talk for a conquering emperor, decorated in war paint and peacock feathers.

It has been customary from away back to the days of Alexander and Caesar, in great emergencies, to consult the gods and ask for divine guidance. Not so with Emperor Billy. He invokes no assistance in that direction. He waves his scepter under the nose of his Ragtag and shouts:

"I'm the hero the world's-been looking for."

"I'm on top; I'm the whole thing."

"Look at me."

"I have dragged the United States out of a hole."

"I have made it a world power."

"I have established the empire."

"I have placed it in the van of the nations."

"I can straddle a continent."

"I can ride a cyclone."

"I am Emperor Billy!"

"I have established a dynasty."

"I will name my successor—"

"Mark Hanna's the fortunate coon."

"What I want is—"

"More ships, more money and more men—"

"And my Ragtag will give till I holler 'enough'—"

"And say 'Amen!' "

Rah for Billy I!

CHILD LABOR IN THE SOUTH

A bill has been defeated by the Georgia legislature for the protection of children in the factories of that state. This is what might have been expected to occur in a state that is entirely controlled by the bourbon democracy, which believes as much in industrial slavery now as it used to believe in chattel slavery. The sentiments of the democratic leaders have never changed.

One paper asserts that some of the members of the Georgia legislature actually fought the law on the ground that such a law would be injurious to capitalism, and that it is necessary to allow little children to be enslaved that there may be profits made on invested capital. The oppression and robbery of childhood, the degradation of womanhood and the enslavement of manhood are mere incidents in the eyes of those who support the present system.

The cotton factories in the state of Georgia have been paying from 25 per cent to 90 per cent on the invested capital, and under these circumstances the helpless children of the state are to be enslaved by a brutal system of capitalism for the benefit of those who are sucking the lifeblood and grinding their bodies into profits. This is the social hell that affects society which is supported at the ballot box by the fathers of helpless and innocent children. Most church members support the infernal system and place the rights of property above morals, virtue and human souls. No state deserves to be called civilized that does not possess a sufficient amount of virtue to protect helpless children against the brutality of capitalism, and as one newspaper published in Georgia asserts: "The state is disgraced in the eyes of the whole world."

The action of the Georgia legislature in defeating a measure to protect helpless children in the slave pens of that state should convince every workingman and every friend of humanity in the south that the southern bourbons are as much under the influence of capitalism as the republicans are, led by Mark Hanna. There is no difference between them, except the democrats are worse in their actions. There are child labor laws in most of the republican states, which, of course, are poorly executed, while the democrats of Georgia refuse to place a child labor law upon the statute.

All this shows the powerful influence capitalism has over legislation and that the capitalist class own the old parties, boots and breeches. And that there is no hope of a better civilization as long as the working class are fools enough to vote for capitalist parties.

The democrats have been saying much about republican friendship for trusts; while it is notorious that in the south, where the democrats hold the supreme power, there is no protection comparatively to the working class, and so far as I know there has never been a law placed upon the statute books by the democrats of the south protecting children from the greed of capitalism.

This is a sad commentary on the rule of the bourbon democracy, but it is true. —W. E. Farmer in Farmers' Review.

War taxes to the amount of $40,000,000 are to be reduced by discarding stamps from bank checks and patent medicines. Men of the "dinner pail" will hear the glad tidings with joy unexpressible, particularly that which relates to stamps on bank checks.

MERLIN'S MIXTURE

Charles W. Casson, 401 N. Revere, Minn.

THE MAINSPRING OF FORTUNE

Some ten years ago I was a jeweler and made a living by watching the public. One day a man came in and, producing a watch, placed it on the counter. "It won't go," he said. "I have shaken it, examined it, started it, growled at it, cursed it, but all to no purpose. It won't go."

I took the watch, and after a glance at it, wound it up and gave it to him, going: "He took his departure without any unnecessary delay."

And the great majority of workingmen are like unto him. They find that in the modern times their wheels of fortune have stopped. Loud have been the complaints of "run down" finances, and not without ample excuse.

They have shaken the machine of fortune with strikes, they have denounced it with curb-stone curses. They have done all but one thing: They have forgotten to wind it up by the key of legislative action.

The mainspring of fortune is not broken—it is simply unwound. The machine is intact and capable of producing and keeping good times. But it shall do so only when labor, by using the key, utilizes the machine.

FIXING THE LABOR MOVEMENT

I was in a fellow watchmaker's shop engaged in conversation, when a man walked in. Putting his watch on the showcase, he said it wouldn't go. My friend looked at it and exclaimed: "What! have you been in a railway accident?" "No," said the fellow, surprised. "Well," said the jeweler, "it's a pretty tough case, but if you leave it for a week, I'll try to make something out of it."

He did. After the man left he wound up the watch, marked $2.75 on the tag and hung it up, ready for delivery.

It was clear robbery, of course. But not a bit more rascally than the methods pursued by the political shops of the period.

Labor, ignorant and credulous, entrusts its case to the hands of the republican political watchmakers. The latter reward the trust displayed by the promise of better times, and then proceed to collect robbery rates.

The labor movement, like that watch movement, depends; for sure and prosperous action, not upon political tinkering from without, but on the right use of industrial power within. Too long have these political knaves "fixed" us to their own advantage. It is high time that we do it ourselves, and to our own advantage.

So long as workingmen permit themselves to be wound up by capitalistic keys, just before election, they may expect to pay the winder afterward.

A CURRENT FALLACY

A third and last illustration culled from the same source. A young woman walked into my store one day, her appearance and manner betraying the fact that she lived in Mosstown, Waybackville. After considerable fumbling, she produced an old English timepiece about the size and value of a small turnip.

Hesitatingly she explained her errand. "This is my dad's old watch. He don't want it any more. So me and sister—we thought, perhaps—we want you to make it into two little ones—for me and her!"

And yet, in these later days, I have found men, and scores of them, who expect that the old political party's clocks can be remade into the new Socialist movement that shall strike the hour of freedom and justice.

Even men like Jones and Parsons and Pomeroy show that, with all their chances of mental improvement, they have still been living on the outskirts of knowledge by asserting the same thing of the democratic party. They have found that they got into too deep water by trusting to the Bryan-deep.

Just as the old silver turnip was worthless in the remaking of a new watch, so the old parties must be discarded in the construction of a just system. For this reason the Social Democratic party has started to make, of new materials and of new design, an organization adapted for its ultimate purpose.

Won't you be a screw, a pinion or a cog in our new machine?

The Democratic Go-Between

In a recent issue of the Inquirer-Sun of this city I find an interview with Hon. Hoke Smith which shows to some extent, at least, that the old parties are beginning to recognize that the real fight in the future will be between the plutocrats and the Socialists.

In this interview he expresses his regrets that Col. Bryan should still stick to the Chicago platform and, at the same time, he disapproves the suggested reorganization of the Democratic party.

Continuing, he says: "The democratic party should stand between the plutocrat and the Socialist as the party of the constitution and for the people. It has defended the appeals of persons and of property, and should not be led into attack upon either."

Indeed, the powers that be are beginning to see that they must count on Socialism as a governing factor in politics. We are recognized as the enemy of the present industrial system and, if we keep the irons hot for the next four years, we will make the plutocrats, democrats and the whole band of fanning sycophants that follow their wake get a hump on themselves. Yes, we are in it to win; not for the mere sake of winning, as the democrats plainly showed they were in the last campaign, but because we stand for those principles which, when adopted by our government, will make of us a truly happy nation. God speed the day when the truths of Socialism will be thoroughly understood and put into effective operation. W. A. Ross.

Poverty's Declaration to Labor

Labor—the heritage of man, the payment for his creation.

Labor—the mortgage that burdens human existence, the yoke that encircled the birth of humanity and mocks the tottering form of age to the grave.

Labor—the grim master that beckons on beneath the whip of hunger, starvation and death; the skeleton that rises with the breath of life and flaunts its mocking fingers till earth receives its prey.

Labor—the captive chains that bind the ages of life, the merciless bondsman that shackles nature and defies the hand of time.

Labor—the contract that rocks the cradle and cancels its claim only at the grave; O, the endless play of human strength with oblivion as its climax!

Labor—the uncompromising dictator of toil, the indictor of humanity to manual suffering without justice.

Labor—the relentless tribunal that canopys the haven of the poor and makes poverty their worldly shrine.

Labor—the producer of joy, the dispenser of woe, the sword of the mighty; a yoke for the weak, a plum for the rich, a brand for the poor.

Labor—the prop of the crowned monarch on his throne, meager provider for the peasant's table.

And yet, Labor is essential as the light of day; as the waters kiss and nourish the brookside moss, so Labor lights and nourishes the path of life. Labor is the goddess of the rich, the tyrant of the poor.

The equalization of labor is the fountain of hope; the unjust distribution of wealth is the climax of despair.

Geo. H. Clark.

Evolution Through Organization

Man in his lowest estate is an egotist pure and simple. He acts for himself and for those in whom he feels a selfish and personal interest. As he grows toward a higher degree of intelligence he forms co-partnerships and organizes associations of individuals in order to have the co-operation of a larger number for some specific purpose. It is thus, that in proportion as the intelligence of the race increases the more general will be the tendency to associate and combine. Or, in other words, the tendency is toward co-operation.

Persons representing all of these tendencies are to be found in every community at all times. At the bottom of the scale we have the purely egoistic who prefer to stand alone without any reference to others, never combining with their fellows for any purpose except in most limited degree. Then a little higher in the intellectual scale, men begin to associate their efforts for a common purpose, and still higher in the scale we find these associations more powerful and comprehensive in their purposes. In every association of this kind for a common purpose, the individual member surrenders some portion of his egoism in exchange for the benefits of co-operation.

This tendency to organize, to associate and combine for a common purpose is always an indication of a quickening of the intellectual faculties, and as we go higher in the scale, this tendency will be proportionately accelerated among the people until it includes the entire mass for the benefit of every individual. This, when complete, will be altruism, which is our next step in progress. It is to this grand culmination that this tendency to combine is pointing. One class of people organize and associate their efforts to secure some advantage for themselves and to the extent that it is successful, other classes are compelled to combine for their own protection.—A. O. Grigsby in Equity.

CRY OF THE POOR TO THE WEALTHY

Impassioned Arraignment of the Capitalist Class of the World by One of the Greatest of French Writers

AN APPEAL FOR JUSTICE.

The Day Foretold When There Will be No More Lords, No More Masters, but Free Men

By Victor Hugo

The poor cry out to the wealthy. The slaves implore the rulers. And as much now as in the days of Spartan Helots. I am one of them, and I add my voice to that multitude that may reach the ears of the rich. Who am I? One of the people. From whence come I? From the bottomless pit. How am I named? I am wretchedness. My lords, I have something to say to you.

My lords, you are placed high. You have power, opulence, pleasure, the sun immovable at your zenith, unlimited authority, enjoyment undivided, a total forgetfulness of others. So be it. But there is something below you. Above you, perhaps. My lords, I impart to you a novelty. The human race exists.

I am he who comes from the depths. My lords, you are the great and the rich. This is perilous. You take advantage of the night. But have a care; there is a great power, the morning. The dawn cannot be vanquished. It will come. It comes. It has within it the dawn of irresistible day.

You, who are the dark clouds of privilege. Be afraid. The true master is about to look out at the door.

What is the father of privilege? Chance. What is his son? Abuse. Neither chance nor abuse is enduring. They have, both of them, an evil tomorrow.

I come to warn you—I come to denounce you in your own bliss. It is made out of the ills of others. Your paradise is made out of the hell of the poor. I come to open before you, the wealthy, the grand azzizes of the poor—that sovereign who is the slave, that convict who is the judge. I am bowed down under what I have to say. Where to begin? I know not. I have picked up in the cruel experience of suffering my vast though struggling pleas. Now what shall I do with them? They overwhelm me and I throw them forth pell mell before me.

I am a diver and I bring up from the depths a pearl, the Truth. I speak because I know. I have experienced. I have seen. Suffering? No, the word is weak. O masters in bliss! Poverty—I have grown up in it; winter—I have shivered in it; famine—I have tasted it; scorn—I have undergone it; the plague—I have had it; shame—I have drank of it.

I felt it requisite that I should come among you. Why? Because of my yesterday's rags. It was in order that my voice might be raised among the satiated, that God commingled me with the hungry. O! have pity! O! you know not this fatal world, whereunto you believe that you belong. So high, you are outside of it. I will tell you what it is.

Abandoned an orphan, alone in boundless creation, I made an entrance into this gloom you call society. The first thing I saw was law, under the form of a gibbet; the second was wealth—your wealth—under the form of a woman dead of cold and hunger; the third was luxury in the shape of a hunted man chained to prison walls; the fourth was your palaces, beneath the shadow of which covered the tramp.

The human race has been made by you slaves and convicts. You have made of this earth a dungeon. Light is wanting, air is wanting, virtue is wanting.

The workers of this world whose fruits you enjoy, live death. There are little girls who begin at eight by prostitution, and end at twenty by old age. Who among you have been to Newcastle-on-Tyne? There are men in mines who chew coal, they fill the stomach and cheat hunger. Look you in Lancashire. Misery everywhere. Are you aware that the Harlech fishermen eat grass when the fishery fails? Are you aware that at Buton-Lazars there are still certain lepers driven into the woods, who are fired at if they come out of their dens? In Peckridge there are no beds in the hovels, and holes are dug in the ground for little children to sleep in; so that in the place of beginning with the cradle, they begin with the tomb.

The Agitation Continues

For three months or more the entire country was in the throes of a wild agitation. No one declaimed against the disputes and distraction. Election day came in due time, the people voted, their verdict was declared, and calm reigned in all the storm centers. The republicans want no more agitation, and as for the democrats, for the second time, the victims of a dead issue, they are as silent as the dry bones in Ezekiel's vision. Not so with the Social Democratic party. Unconquered and un intimidated, the election in November affords no reason why agitation should cease, but a thousand reasons why it should continue with increased determination. Thousands of wage workers who maintain their fealty to the democratic party, satisfied that it is powerless to aid them in any struggle for better conditions, will abandon it. They will not join the republican party, thereby inviting a firmer grasp of capitalism upon their throats, but as the true situation dawned upon their minds will cast in their lot with the Social Democratic party. And the more energetic the agitation the greater will be the number of converts.

It has been written that "he who makes two blades of grass grow where before but one was grown is a benefactor of his race." If this is true, and true it is to an extent not easily determined, what should be said of a member of the Social Democratic party who organizes two branches of the party where previously but one existed? Comparisons in this case, at least, are not odious. The man who made two blades of grass grow where before there was only one might, in the lapse of centuries, clothe Sahara in emerald verdure, but the man who founds an additional branch of the Social Democratic party establishes on outpost in the empire of thought and reform and progress of limitless possibilities.

Under the influence of such a citadel of thought and aspiration, evolution from the lower to the higher conceptions of government and man's preordained destiny will go rapidly forward. Crude conception of duty will take on the form of conviction. Conviction will beget courage, courage action, and thus the man who establishes the new branch of the Social Democratic party becomes permanently a benefactor of mankind.

The American Federation of Labor

This great order of federated workers, made up of national and international organizations, state branches, city central labor unions and federal labor unions, claims that 1,000,000 unionists acknowledge its authority, and that during the past year 294,324 workers have been added to its membership.

In closing his report, President Gompers said:

"The enactment of wise and beneficent legislation in the interest of the toiling masses of our country must still be demanded until all the wrongs from which the toilers suffer are abated. We insist upon the enforcement of the rights to which we are entitled. Unless we, as the organized wage-earners of the country, protest against the wrong, and demand the establishment of the right, we shall lose the confidence and respect of the organized, as well as the unorganized, toilers of America, who will hold that we have failed to avail ourselves of all the opportunities which are presented, in order to seek redress through the proper channels. It cannot be denied that much faster and greater progress can be made, and will be made, provided we are firm in our determination to achieve it, unceasing in our efforts and undivided in our course."

The paragraph we have reproduced brings into bold prominence the fact that the condition of labor demands "wise and beneficent legislation." Who is to enact such legislation? Congress and legislators dominated by capitalism? Never, while rivers flow to the sea! Nevertheless, workers nurse the delusion, and conditions remain practically unchanged. The idea seemingly prevails that capitalism will hold a convention made up of delegates from trusts, corporations, banks, syndicates, land grabbers, etc.—their name is legion—and resolve to abdicate their forts and spike their guns, an event to be hoped for when "Ethiopians change their skin and leopards their spots."

If the legislation of which Mr. Gompers speaks is to come, it will be enacted by the representatives of labor, and since the American Federation of Labor has a million of unionists under its banners it has an opportunity for consolidating the large membership into a labor party, equipped to enact "wise and beneficent" legislation.

Unfortunately, the American Federation of Labor, in its conventions, does not legislate in that direction. The delegates composing its conventions do not realize that labor is powerless while capitalism owns its tools and controls all the opportunities for employment, and that in the wide world there exists no autocracy so cruel and heartless as the autocracy of capitalism.

It is just here that Socialism challenges comparison with all other organizations for the amelioration of the conditions of labor.

It recognizes capitalism as labor's chief enemy, and plants itself defiantly in its spoliating pathway. Its allegations are undisturbed. Its logic has all the force of axiomatic truth. It organizes for battle. It abandons the old trail, in which the tracks all point inward toward the slaughter house, and never outward toward better conditions, and withal a conquering faith in the ballot.

Socialism recognizes the fact that co-operation is as feasible and as logical as organization and federation, and that with co-operation labor regains from the grasp of capitalism its tools and secures its independence.

The American Federation of Labor is a great organization, and is manifestly doing a great work in the way of organization, and in the onward march of intelligence the time ought not to be distant when the great body of unionized labor will keep step to the conquering drum beat of Socialism.

In Union There is Strength

It is held that aphorisms, maxims, proverbs, etc., are of ancient coinage, that they have withstood the test of time and belong to the family of axioms—self-evident truths, which no amount of logic can strengthen, and no amount of sophistry weaken. In the list is found the maxim: "In union there is strength." It is invariably accepted as true and invulnerable without debate. Nations, corporations, combinations of every name, adopt the maxim and make it the basis of action. No school of philosophy questions its wisdom; neither saint, sage nor scientist doubts its power, and it has no stronger advocate than the devil himself. There being no doubt about the wisdom of the maxim, the overmastering question is how to make it available for the welfare of those whose condition and employment require united effort to solve stubborn problems. The field is wide and inviting and thousands are in it exploring for facts. Unionizing labor is a theme which engages the thought of the people from the humblest worker to the most advanced statesman of the period, and a good deal of unionism prevails, which has doubtless accomplished some good, but infinitesimally little compared with what might have been achieved if the maxim "In union there is strength" had been permitted to exert its more than Archimedean power.

We have neither the space nor inclination to indulge in animadversions; it is nevertheless true, though seemingly contradictory, that the greatest obstacle in the way of success of unionism is labor is unionism—union against union. Take, for instance, the late strike of the employees of the anthracite mines in Pennsylvania, about 141,000 of them. Their grievances involved cruelty, impoverishment and degradation. Capitalism had its grasp upon the throats of its victims; wage slavery existed in its most aggravated form; hence the strike.

It was not probable there was a coal miner in the United States who doubted the righteousness of the strike of the anthracite miners of Pennsylvania. Without statistics we assume there are 500,000 coal miners in the United States, most of whom are members of unions, and believe that "in union there is strength," but confessedly working for unjust wages and therefore wage slaves, dominated and robbed by capitalism. These miners tax themselves and accumulate large sums of money to fight capitalism when a strike is ordered. In nine cases out of ten—more likely in every case—when the strike comes the money is speedily squandered, and though it may be given out that the miners have won, capitalism sees to it that conditions remain practically unchanged, and in one way and another the old system of spoliation continues. There is a bond of union existing between coal miners, or at least there ought to be such a bond of union. If such a union did exist, and there is no good reason why it should not, national and vital, a strike for justice in one region would be the tocsin for a strike throughout the country, in which case the maxim "In union there is strength" would mean victory. Five hundred thousand men, grasping the full significance of the maxim, would lay down their tools. In such a contingency a coal miners' strike would not continue for one day; not a dollar would be expended by the miners; not a soldier with a rifle, not a sheriff, with deputies armed with pistols and clubs, with pomp and parade, would be seen. There would be neither noise nor confusion. The miners would simply lay down their tools. They would cease digging coal, without which business would be paralyzed as if by a decree of Jehovah. Capitalism, defeated and dumfounded, would yield to the inevitable rather than see its investments perish. The right would triumph and the blessings which justice bestows would crown the victory. Nor would this be all. One such demonstration of the maxim "In union there is strength" would suffice. It would teach capitalism that the latent power of an old maxim would, in the future, see that its beak, fangs and claws no longer dominated in the coal regions of America. It may be alleged that such a strike would be one of sympathy. The allegation would be at once admitted. The late war with Spain was based upon sympathy. It was a case in which sympathy moved to action the mightiest nation in the world for a wretched and oppressed people. It was sympathy for the chattel slaves of the south that originated the war of the rebellion; and the old aphorism, "In union there is strength," gathers additional force if to its other energies the power of sympathy is added.

NOTES AND COMMENT

If capitalism could be personified it would resemble old King Nebuchadnezzar, who was arrogant, cruel and opposed to the poor. Besides he was proud and boastful. He is reported to have said on one occasion: "Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power and for the honor of my majesty?" Capitalism says, "Do I not own and control all the banks and manufacturing and forges in the land? Do I not own all the herds on the plains and the cattle on a thousand hills? Have I not got in my grasp twenty million or more of wage slaves whom I permit to call their dinner-pails their own? Do I not control all the silver and gold, except what the government claims, but do I not control the government?" In this it is seen that capitalism outboasts old Nebuchadnezzar by several laps. But at the instant of the old fool king's asinine vaunting he was driven from among men and made to eat straw like an ox or browse around in the fence corners like a billy goat or a wandering ass. A similar doom awaits capitalism.

The population of our Philippine possessions is variously estimated at from 7,000,000 to 10,000,000. To convert these "niggers" and enable them to see and appreciate the glories of our Christian civilization, war has raged for two years. We have managed to slaughter 15,000 of them with Christian shot and shell, and about the same number have perished by sickness and famine incident to a hell of war—a total of 30,000, or say, 15,000 a year. How long this Christian war will continue God only knows, but Emperor Billy I. has decided it shall proceed until the "niggers" are converted or annihilated. In the latter event, by applying the good old "rule of three" for the solution of the problem, the war is on for 466 years, or until the year of our Lord 2,366. The time may be reduced by increasing the standing army and in building more warships, and this we are doing. The empire is costly, but the people seem to like it, and be taxed for its extension and support.

Imperialism, autocracy, dictatorship, absolutism, one-man power and other prerogatives along that line were convincingly exhibited in Pennsylvania preceding the strike of the anthracite miners and other employees of the mines, about 142,000 of them. Robbed, oppressed and degraded, they talked strike and resolved to strike. Finally one man said "strike," and their fetters were removed. Then came the command "resume work," and the great industrial army obeyed. The czar of Russia could have done no more.

A statistician guesses that the population of the American republic-empire in the year 2,000 will amount to 441,009,206. If in 1900 we have 76,000,000 population and $90,000,000,000 of wealth, with 441,009,206 population in 2,000 we ought to have something more than $500,000,000,000 in wealth. As only labor creates wealth, the task of the "dinner pail" brigade for the next century is colossal.

Old Lorenzo Dow, the wandering and eccentric evangelist, was noted for short sermons. On one occasion he said: "Love God and hate snakes." If he were now living he might say: "Love the people and damn capitalism"—a distinction, but not essentially different from the other sermon quoted.

When capitalism is told that labor is federating for the purpose of extracting its fangs and clipping its claws, it becomes hilarious and points decisively to the anthracite coal fields of Pennsylvania.

No one knows better than President Gompers that a fine wrapper around poor fillers does not make a good cigar.

England is the great colonial power of the world, and when she seizes a savage or barbarous land her policy is to factionize the natives and set one faction to killing the other faction. The government of the United States regards the British policy as eminently wise and prudent, and General McArthur is to adopt it in the Philippine islands. He will organize a standing army of traitorous "niggers" to kill their fellow "niggers" who are fighting for liberty.

Dismissing the humanity, or more properly, the inhumanity craze, now raging in the United States, Socialists inquire, Who are to furnish the money to pay the expense of the standing army? The answer is always the same—only labor provides revenues and pays debts.

Pope wrote: "Know thyself; presume not God to scan—The proper study of mankind is man."

Andrew Carnegie has made money, lots of it. If the world would know how he secured his vast wealth, the Homestead strike tells the whole story. Hot water, electricity, Pinkerton thugs, robbery of workmen, etc. Now "Ande" poses as a philanthropist, and is giving back a portion of his income to found libraries. "Ande" may yet be converted and become a Socialist.

A correspondent of an Indian newspaper says the word "poo-o-o-o-o-ee," with accent on the last syllable, was used in early times in calling hogs, when they ran to be fed. Just now Mark Hanna is shouting "poo-o-o-o-o-ee!" and the swine are going to Washington in droves.

Neely and Rathbone inaugurated the empire in Cuba like a brace of shahs. They had palaces, plate, carriages, sumptuous bills of fare and all the trimmings galore. When they wanted money they stole it, and the dance went merrily on.

When a man says "I can't" he is as weak as a rope of sand. When he says "I won't" he is as stubborn as an army mule. When he says "I'll try" all the gods clap their hands and shout, "I'll help him."

When you see a yaller dog trotting along under capitalism's carriage, you may feel assured, nine cases out of ten, the canine is a subsidized labor leader ready to bark as its master directs.

Capitalism wears diamonds, lives in a palace, dresses in purple and fine linen and lives and riots upon the earnings of its wage slaves, and may it eventually "lift up its eyes in hell."

Is life worth the living? If a man is free, yes; if he is a slave, no. If what he earns is his own, life is a boon; if he is robbed that others may riot on his toil, life is a curse.

Mr. Bryan, before the election, was 16 to 1. Since Nov. 6 he is less than 1 to 16. The divinity that shaped his ends whittled them down to the size of a toothpick.

The way to organize a branch of the Social Democratic party is to organize it, and the way to subscribe for The Herald is to subscribe for it.

Shakespeare said: "He who steals my purse steals trash." Old Shake told the whole story of a capitalistic wage slave out of a job.

The Prince of Wales has an income of $750,000 a year. His bacarat and turf winnings increase the amount to about $1,000,000.

When a man says "I'll be a Socialist" he doffs the habiliment of a non-combatant and dons the armor of a knight.

In the operation of the mills of capitalism the toll takes about all the grist.

About Selection of Candidates

I desire to caution the comrades about the selection of candidates. I would not fill any office, particularly any local municipal office, with men who hold positions of responsibility or trust under any corporation, because they could not occupy such position and be of any use to us without the fact being known to their employers; and this being the case, the employee could not hold down his job a minute if the corporation did not believe that the kind of employee herein referred to could be made useful to them.

When the results of the late election are sifted down fine it will be found that mistakes of this kind cut a very large figure.

Give leadership to intelligent workers from the rank and file, and let the shop boss go until he is quite certain that he is converted.

This is from an old man who has nothing to expect from Socialism for himself, except the ill will of his neighbors, who cannot understand why he voted for Debs. Horace P. Porter. Port Arthur, Texas.

THE NEW CIVILIZATION

The new civilization's coming by battle, work and prayer;
The glad tidings of its advent are heard around us everywhere;
The morning stars are singing it, and the music of the spheres
Is heralding its coming—the supernal glory of the years.

Do you yearn for its coming? Then gird your armor on;
The battle will be fierce and long ere victory is won.
But all the winds that blow are tongs'd to herald the decree,
That long'd for era's coming when the oppress'd shall all go free.

To ears attuned to songs of hope, to eyes with vision clear;
There's no discord in the symphonies, no clouds of doubt appear;
The dawning streaks of light flame up from out the dark abyss,
The old departs, the new appears, and woe gives place to bliss.

The embattling Socialistic hosts, call heroes to the fray,
Their vision is prescient, it describes the coming day,
When a new civilization with conquering banners high unfurl'd
Shall dominate man's destiny and shed glory 'round the world.

The Modern Saint

By Richard Burton

No monkish garb he wears, no beads he tells,
Nor is immured in walls remote from strife,
But from his heart deep mercy ever wells;
He looks humanely forth on human life.

In place of missals or of altar dreams,
He cons the passionate book of deeds and days,
Striving to cast the comforting, sweet beams
Of charity on dark and noisome ways.

Not hedged about by sacerdotal rule,
He walks a fellow of the scarred and weak.

Liberal and wise his gifts; he goes to school
To justice; and he turned the other cheek.

He looks not holy; simple is his belief;
His creed for mystic visions do not scan;
His face shows lines cut there by others' grief,
And in his eyes is love of brother-man.

Not hedged about by sacerdotal rule,
He yearns to make the world a sunnier clime
To live in; and his mission everywhere
Is strangely like to Christ in olden time.

No medieval mystery, no crowned,
Dim figure, halo-ringed, uncanny bright,
A modern saint; a man who treads earth's ground,
And ministers to men with all his might.

Mercy, have mercy for the poor! Oh, I conjure you, have pity! But, no, you will not. I know ye all. Devils bred in hell, and dogs with hearts of stone. Upward to your golden throne for ages has gone the cry of misery, the groan of hunger, and the sob of despair, and ye heeded it not. What misery hast thou given shall be meted out to you in turn.

Bear in mind that a series of kings armed with swords were interrupted by Cromwell with the axe.

Tremble! The incorruptible dissolutions draw near; the clipped talons push out again; the torn out tongues take to flight, become tongues of flame scattered to the winds of darkness, and they bowl in the Infinite. They who are hungry show their idle teeth. Paradises built over hell totter. There is suffering, and that which is above leans over, and that which is below gapes open. The shadow asks to become light. The damned discuss the elect. It is the people who are oncoming. I tell you it is man who ascends. It is the end that is beginning. It is the red dawning of catastrophe.

Ah! This society is false. One day, and true society must come. Then there will be no more lords; there will be free, living men. There will be no more wealth, there will be abundance for the poor. There will be no more masters, but there will be brothers. They that toil shall have. This is the future. No more prostration, no more abasement, no more ignorance, no more wealth, no more beast burden, no more courtiers—but LIGHT.

The list of subjects announced by Dr. George D. Herron for his coming lectures at Central Music hall indicates that these Sunday afternoon lectures will be of profound significance in stimulating popular thought along Socialistic lines. Cards and circulars giving subjects and other information regarding the lectures may be obtained at the office of the Social Crusader, 609 Ashland block, Chicago.

THE COMMUNIST MANIFESTO

Evolution of Capitalism and the Goal to
Which It Inevitably Tends—Unerring
Forecasts of Marx and Engels

By James O'Neal

The ever-increasing, large dispossessed laboring class are being organized by the development of capitalism for the accomplishment of this end. The accession to their ranks of thousands of small capitalists, who have been beaten in the capitalist game, and many others from the professional classes, commonly termed the "intellectuals," who realize that supremacy for them within the limits of capitalist society is a snare and a delusion, increases immensely. The strength of the class whose mission in history is to inaugurate, or preside at the birth of, the new era. As industry becomes more socialized and reaches its highest perfection in the trust era, the superfluity of capitalists as a factor in industry becomes apparent. At this stage they prove their parasitical character by disconnecting themselves from industry, and the former useful function of superintendence is handed over to a hired employee. They are no longer necessary. All the useful work is performed by hired employees, and these can just as well work for society as a whole. The owner does nothing at this stage of development but absorb the surplus value produced by thousands in common. John W. Gates can go to the Paris exposition and throw five franc pieces from the Eiffel tower, but the steel mills are operated just the same. They never stop because he is gone, for he is unnecessary in the productive process. Gates and his class, by ceasing to perform the functions required of them, must pay the penalty inflicted on all useless organs, whether organic or social; they must cease to exist. They are "unfit to survive." They have demonstrated their incapacity as a ruling class by the recurrent strikes and industrial crises that attend their rule. Their supremacy is conditioned on the further subjection of the laborers and the latter are forced into the industrial arena, like gladiators of old, to fight for the munificent prize their masters dangle before them—a "full dinner pail." Their sway implies an increase in the army which takes away the most vigorous and leaves the weaklings at home to propagate a race of physical degenerates.

The continuance of capitalist rule means the progressive expansion of the slums, which are gradually eating into the heart of the larger cities like a gigantic cancer and threaten the very life of society itself.

The monopoly of the means of communicating knowledge has become notorious, and the subservency of the great educational institutions is in direct proportion to the amount of money bestowed. All these things act as a social barometer, indicating the gradual decay of capitalism. Industrial progress beyond the trust era is impossible within the limits of the old society, which fetters and restrains it, hence the forces which, by the removal of this obstruction, would make for progress, react upon society and stagnation sets in.

The solution of the problem as given by the Socialist is to complete the transformation. Industry outgrows control by capitalists. Its magnitude and proportions as a social institution mark it for social ownership and control. Social production and social ownership must go hand in hand before the contradictions are solved. The proletariat is rapidly growing in numbers, and it is these whom we rely on in the main to achieve this end.

THE FUTURE.

The Socialist has no ideal state on paper for the people to legislate themselves into. Our philosophy is merely an analysis of capital in its development and what it leads to. As to what maxim will prevail in the field of distribution, we do not attempt to say. Whether it will be "every one according to his needs," or "every one according to his efforts" will be decided by those interested. But one thing is sure: With the abolition of class ownership of the tools of wealth production and the substitution of common ownership will also go their power through such ownership to absorb the surplus productions of the working class. With the workers in control of society there will not be much danger of their robbing themselves. The objection that to give all men an equal opportunity on a common plane and each other would abolish incentive and society would stagnate does not hold. To borrow an illustration from cosmic evolution: Life only became possible when the cosmic forces ceased to clash; so social harmony will never be realized until the class struggle is abolished. Those who speak of incentive presuppose its existence at present. To speak of incentive existing among that class who must sell all their labor force to another class at a competitive price is to play with terms. Incentive does not exist for them. They MUST sell. There is no alternative. Their wants act as a lash just as effective as though one were welded in the hands of their masters. Furthermore, incentive implies first an opportunity for all, which does not exist for thousands who have been displaced by machinery. To speak of incentive with the absence of opportunity is absurd. Three classes in modern society look at these questions from a different point of view, and may be divided as follows: The conservative, the reactionary and the progressive. Each corresponds to some class and seeks to express its interests in society. The conservatives are at present triumphant, and would like to maintain things as they are; but the forces at work in society are beyond their control. They believe things as they exist should be perpetuated and that prosperity abounds for all. From their class point of view they are correct.

The reactionary realizes something is wrong and sees it in the monopoly by the conservatives of the productive forces of the country and the centralization of capital. He does not see in this centralization a historical advance beyond the small petty industry which existed some years ago. He can only see in this new development the extinction of the small capitalist producer, which he represents, and seeks an alliance with the proletariat in order to reinstate himself in that position of supremacy once held by him prior to the trust era. Although he appeals to the laborer to help him achieve his object, he is not willing that the latter shall be anything else than a wage laborer, selling his vital force in a competitive market.

In the eyes of the small reactionary capitalist the formation of the trust which displaces HIM means the destruction of civilization, but the introduction of the machine which displaces the laborer is of no consequence. He would reverse the course of history. He does not ask himself if this is possible, he takes that for granted. He believes his interests lie in pursuing this course, and that is to him sufficient warrant for his action. He is willing to go back to the stage of small production by destroying the trust if possible, but would utilize machinery to its utmost regardless of its effect upon the laborers. His program is that of the crawfish. He would go backward if possible, re-invest himself with his petty privileges, and prevent further industrial progress for all time to come. His efforts are as ludicrous as they are hopeless. As well go back to the stone age as to his small and dwarfish methods of production. His class is as certainly doomed in their onward march of industrial development as the present system which he is trying to preserve. His interests are at variance with social progress, and he must succumb to the inevitable.

The progressive, on the other hand, while recognizing the evils that exist, does not advocate the policy of the conservative in trying to maintain things as they are, for he realizes that this is not only impossible, but undesirable. He also disagrees with the policy of the reactionist for the same reason. He is an evolutionist, and believes in allowing the development to proceed to its logical consummation. He believes that capitalism, like other social systems in the past, is but a transient phase in the development of society, and is doomed to disappear like its ancestors by the action of those laws that brought it into being. He believes that we are in the transition stage from the present to the future, which can neither be prevented by reactionary measures nor cleared by bold leaps or bounds, but that efforts should be made to shorten the birth pangs incident to the transition period, so that when the development reaches maturity the transformation may be accomplished with as little friction as possible. He believes that Socialism is the social system of the future, not so much because he desires it, but because capitalism is evolving the industrial structure necessary for its existence and is organizing the class whose mission it is to usher it in. To assume that the development can continue with the willing sanction of that great, writhing, seething mass on whose bodies it rests is to assume a fundamental change in that human nature to which our opponents so strenuously appeal.

The human race started in communism; it will end in a communism of land and capital. This does not mean that we will revert back to the primitive social organization with which the human race started on its tramp toward civilization, but a revival of it in a higher form with all the advantages gained in man's ascent preserved for his contemplation and enjoyment. This peculiarity, wherein the first and last stages of social evolution present such a striking resemblance to each other, and which has analogy in other sciences, has been commented upon by many scientists, both Socialists and anti-Socialists. To quote Hyndman, an English Socialist: "Being now at the point when, after the successive periods of development under private property, we are, as we Socialists consider is demonstrably the case, on the eve of a great transformation back to our starting place on an almost infinitely higher plane; this early communism has a special interest for us. If you look through the development of nature you will find that the same law apparently governs all organic and inorganic growths. In the case of an ear of corn for instance. There is the seed which you sow; this is split up or differentiated in the earth, and then it reappears in the ear again, but on a higher plane. In the celestial sphere we can trace the operation of the same law from the nebulae to the various galaxies back to their point of origin again." To quote an opponent, Loria, an Italian scholar: "One truth, at least, has come to us—and all history confirms it—namely, that the ultimate economic form, while presenting the highest stage of development and nearest approach to perfection, will, at the same time, differ less than any of the preceding systems from the primitive social structure of humanity. This profound identity between the first and the last stages of social evolution corresponds to a logical law which is apparent to all who reflect upon the course of human development."

WHEN PEACE ON EARTH WILL COME AGAIN

(Written for The Herald)

The holy time has come again
Of "peace on earth, good will to men."
So sang the angels in their song
Unto a world of want and wrong
Their jubilation on the morn
When Christ, the Son of Man, was born.
Have all the centuries passed since then Brought peace and good will unto men?
Have twenty centuries sufficed
To realize the dreams of Christ,
Our first and holiest Socialist,
Whom mankind crucified and hissed?

O kings, the favored of mankind,
Rulers and leaders of the blind:
Is it the gospel that you preach
When cannons roar and shrapnels scream?
Bullets and Bibles, can they be Synonymous with piety?

For sovereignty maritime Nations have steeped themselves in crime.

For sway over contiguous lands
They have with blood imbued their hands.

Till war, like some vast python coiled
Around the spoiler and the spoiled,
Has crushed the spirit of the free
And strangled human liberty.
Ages of peace have never healed
The scars of war's first battlefield.

I cannot hold that nation good
Which is opposed to brotherhood;
Or through its laws does all it can
To trample on the rights of man.
Proclaim it through the universe,
Commercial empire is a curse!
It crushes where it should uplift;
It sets all moral law adrift;
Manacles manhood with a chain
Forged by the blood-red hand of Cain;
Pollutes love's temple with its lust,
Breeds avarice, rapine and distrust;
And places Mammon in the shrine
Where Christ should be by right divine.

So long as labor, every age,
Is scarcely paid a living wage;
So long as those who live by toil
Are deemed the refuse of the soil.
While those who ever labor least
Are still the lords of every feast;
So long as Dives sits in state
While Lazarus is at the gate;
So long as want and wealth contrast
So disproportionately vast;
And wealth stalks onward in his pride
A sensuous libertine;
So long as wrong oppresses right,
And law is in the hands of might;
And as in all the ages past
This world is but a world of caste;
However much divinely hailed,
The gospels of the world have failed!

When over all the world will be
A state of pure equality;
When Socialism takes its place
And binds in brotherhood each race;
When men believe not in the creed,
But in the doing of a deed;
When swords will rust within their sheath

And cannons wear the olive wreath;
When men will labor everywhere,
But each according to his share;
And at the forge or mill or mine
Prove human brotherhood divine;
And in the field or in the mart
Build tabernacles of the heart:
When all the world will be one kin,
And no one more or less therein,
But all for one and one for all,
And free from superstition's thrall;
And Christ's great law has come to birth,

And justice reigns upon the earth—
The holy time will come again
Of "peace on earth, good will to men."
But not till then, but not till then!
Lorenzo Sosso.

Socialists, in studying man, have learned that a man who does not own himself, owns nothing. Not even his dinner pail.

Ignized as a Christian-civilization slaughtering machine. England has one of these machines in operation in South Africa, and the United States is also operating one of the machines in the Philippine islands.

To "know thyself" is well, to own thyself is better. To know one's self means study, to own one's self means fight.
Socialism means both knowing one's self and owning one's self, and the good work is going bravely on.

The reason assigned for the increase of the standing army is that the United States has become a "world power" with colonial possessions, and a larger and a more perfect slaughtering machine is required to keep the people in subjugation.

Socialists point out the difference between a freeman and a slave, but the distance between the two has not been computed. We know the difference of situation; that one is on top, the other at the bottom. It is this bottom man that Socialists would rescue.

Already republican leaders announce that the standing army of the United States is to be increased as soon as congress convenes 40,000. That means business. At the same time the Social Democratic Party calls for 100, 000 recruits, and that also means business. The republican party will establish its recruiting stations, supply every soldier with a gun and transport him
10,000 miles to subjugate Filipinos. The Social Democratic party will transform its branches into recruiting stations, and as men flock to its standard they will receive instead of guns, a commission to recruit more soldiers to preach peace on earth and good will toward men.

The general public is under the impression that the infamous permit system among the miners of Idaho has not only been abolished, but that the miners' condition has been materially improved. The permit to work, it is true, does not exist in its old form, but the condition of the miner has not been improved in the least. The mine owners of the state have organized and agreed that not a single company would hire its own men, but that all men shall be employed through a general employment office in charge of the man who formerly had charge of the "permit office."
This means a blacklist against all union men.

In Italy a large per cent of the poverty-stricken people live in houses dark and filthy with little ventilation, and subsist most of their lives on porridge, called "polentea," a sort of salad made palatable by the use of salt. In these caves and dens anarchists are bred and born. Extend the area of such conditions, and you have more anarchists.
But anarchists do not reason well, indeed not at all. They forget that in Europe there are at least fifty palatial breeding pens where blooded stock is put on the market every year, and that now the continent is overstocked with various descriptions of the royal breeds of "divine right rulers." To kill one now and then is scarcely realized. The antidote for anarchism and capitalism, which makes anarchism possible, is Socialism. It levels up and levels down upon the principle of eternal justice.

The Class Trouble

"We shall have to accustom ourselves to class distinctions. * * * We have come nearer being hypocrites on this subject than in any other thing we have said or done. * * * We have shut our eyes as much as possible to these distinctions, and where they could not be hidden from the sight there has been a tacit agreement not to make them subject of remark. * * *
It might be well to ask ourselves if it is worth while to keep up the deception any longer."—United States Investor.

NATIONAL PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights. In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

ATTITUDE TOWARD TRADE UNIONS

In accordance with our declaration of principles we declare that the trades union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the wage-working class. We recommend to the members of the Social Democratic party the following general rules:

First—Join the union of your respective trade.

Second—Assist in building up and strengthening the trade union movement.

Third—Support the union labels of all crafts.

Fourth—Educate your fellow-unionists on the question of Socialism and the labor movement, on economic and political lines.

Fifth—It shall be your duty to work for the unity of the labor movement, thereby recognizing the fact that the emancipation of the working class can only be achieved by the united efforts of this class.

Sixth—Educate the members of the unions in the principles of Socialism and induce them, individually, to affiliate with the Social Democratic party.

Seventh—Trades unions are by historical necessity organized on neutral grounds, as far as political affiliation is concerned. The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for proletarian emancipation.

NOTICE TO BRANCHES

The quarterly dues for the quarter ending Mar. 31 are due at the headquarters, 126 Washington st., Chicago, Ill., on or before Jan. 5. Prompt remittance is of the highest importance to insure the interests of the organization, and the branches are urged to provide for the collection, which should be begun at once.

SPECIAL CONVENTION

OFFICIAL CALL

To Members and Branches of the Social Democratic Party, Comrades:

RESPONDING to suggestions from all parts of the country and a demand from many branches, a special National Convention of the Social Democratic party is hereby called, to take place at the national headquarters, 126 Washington street, Chicago, Ill., beginning Tuesday, January 15, 1901, and continuing in session until the work of the convention shall have been completed.

The purpose of this convention will be to make such changes in the laws of the party and to make such other provisions as may be deemed necessary to meet the growing demands of the organization. It is our purpose to enter at once upon a vigorous campaign of agitation, education and organization, so that the party shall be fully equipped to meet the capitalist enemy on the political battle-fields of the future. Now that the presidential campaign is over, our work is fairly begun and must be carried forward with all possible energy without the loss of a single hour.

The basis and other conditions of representation will be the same as at the Indianapolis Convention, and are here incorporated as follows:

First—Each branch shall be entitled to as many representatives as the individual members thereof in good standing may select for that purpose; provided, that each representative shall be entitled to one (1) vote for each member whose signature is attached to his credential; and provided further, that no member shall have his signature attached to more than one credential.

Second—Branches not sending their own representatives may select those of other branches of the same state to represent them; provided, that in each such case the representative shall hold the proper credential with the signatures of members attached as herein provided.

Third—No member shall be qualified to serve as representative or entitled to representation who has not been a member of the party at least thirty (30) days prior to the opening day of the convention.

Fourth—All signatures of members attached to credentials shall be certified to by the chairman or secretary of their respective branches.

Fifth—The national secretary shall furnish each branch with a sufficient number of blank credentials for the purpose herein specified.

Unaffiliated Socialist clubs or societies whose members may desire to connect themselves with the Social Democratic party, are cordially invited to communicate through their proper officials with the Secretary of the National Executive Board, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

This call is issued to all branches of the Social Democratic party in good standing, as shown by the records at 126 Washington street, Chicago, and organized prior to December 15, 1900. The time and place of meeting and other details will be given in the Herald as soon as arrangements are completed.

SEYMOUR STEDMAN, Secretary.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Comrade MacCartney goes to Philadelphia to speak on the 28th inst.

The Social Democratic party now has fifty-one organized branches in the state of Illinois and more coming.

The S. L. P. (Deleonite) candidate for governor of New York, received about 200 votes more than Hanford, candidate of the "Unionists."

Comrade Philip S. Brown has consented to serve as secretary of the state committee of the party in Illinois. His address will be 126 Washington street.

The following corrections of the vote in the states named have been received and are official: Colorado, 687; North Dakota, 500; New York, 12,869; Oklahoma, 815.

All branches in Illinois are urged to take up the matter of assisting the work of organization and do what they can in maintaining an organizer constantly in the field.

The Social Democratic Party is still doing business for Socialism at the old stand, 126 Washington Street, Chicago. Close up those new branches in process of formation and let us hear from you.

December 22, at National hall, corner of Eighteenth street and Center avenue, the formation of the first Bohemian branch in Chicago will be celebrated. There will be music and dancing and a general good time.

The State Board of Canvassers of New York has made its official report on the state vote. It shows that Debs received 12,869 and Malloney 12,622. Malloney was the candidate of the S. L. P. (Deleonites).

A conference of branches in Worcester county and vicinity will be held on Sunday, Dec. 23, at Worcester, for the purpose of devising ways and means for more thoroughly organizing central Massachusetts.

Comrade F. E. Miller writes from Kansas: "Now that the anxiety over election is at rest, people seem really willing to listen to what the 'pernicious' Socialist agitators have to say upon matters and interests economic."

At a regular meeting of the city central committee of the Social Democratic party in Chicago, held at 52 Dearborn street Wednesday evening, Dec. 12, Comrade Charles Tyl was elected vice-chairman of the committee.

A course of ten or twelve lectures, to be delivered at meetings under the auspices of each branch of the party in Chicago, is being arranged. They will begin in January and run through February and March. Among the speakers will be Jesse Cox, Isadore Ladoff, Philip S. Brown, Seymour Stedman, W. A. Cunnea, Corinne S. Brown, Ellen Edwards, W. S. McSweeney, H. J. Hlavacek, and A. S. Edwards.

Every branch of the party in the country should make a special effort to be represented in the national convention, January 15. The gathering will be one of great importance to the organization and movement and a full representation is desirable.

Only those branch organizations holding a charter from and affiliated with 126 Washington street belong to the Social Democratic party. Unattached Socialists desiring to organize branches or affiliate with the party will address the national Secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

The organization of new branches in Illinois is one of the distinctive features of the growth of the party since the election. At no previous time in the history of the movement in this state has there been so many Socialist organizations as are now affiliated with the Social Democratic party. In a short time we will have a hundred branches in Illinois.

A new political party was sprouted in Chicago, December 15, under the name of the "Socialist Party." The platform, adopted after a long debate, omits a demand for ownership of public utilities, like street railways, and is thus in full accord with the ideas of Charles Yerkes. The meeting nominated John Collins for mayor, and F. G. Strickland for city clerk.

We are pleased to announce that Comrades Cozette Brown, Elizabeth Aldrich, Ethel James and Elizabeth H. Thomas have undertaken to manage an entertainment at an early day in behalf of the organizing fund, and hope every comrade in Chicago will be prepared to push the sale of tickets. Definite announcement as to date and other particulars will appear in The Herald.

The official returns of the state and national election in Massachusetts are as follows:
Debs and Harriman..... 9,606
Bradley, for governor..... 13,260
Wrenn, for lieutenant-governor..... 10,920
Barr, for secretary of state..... 13,532
O'Shaughnessy, for treasurer..... 12,746
Walsh, for auditor..... 12,260
Billings, for attorney-general..... 12,791

A report that two-thirds (and more) of the members of Branch 4, Chicago, have detached themselves from the organization is not true. A few of them, misled and deceived by constant attacks upon "that Washington Street crowd," have withdrawn, but Branch 4 goes serenely on just as potent a force for Socialism as before—perhaps more so. The wind blew the chaff out, that's all—a little wheat went with it, maybe, and now it's sorry it didn't brace against the gust.

Rockville's Protest

At the last meeting of Branch 4, Thursday, Dec. 6, the call for a special convention was discussed, at the close of which a motion was put and unanimously carried to protest against a convention taking place on such short notice and right after the national campaign. The reasons for our protest are, first: If a convention is necessary, we want it to be represented by delegates from all parts of the country, which it will not be if it takes place at that date, as it takes money to send them. Second: It was the unanimous opinion of all the members present that all propositions for changes or additions to the party organization should be published in the party press and be open for discussion for at least three months previous to the opening of the convention, thereby giving every comrade throughout the country a chance to express his opinion. The comrades would know what is going to take place, they would know how to instruct their delegates, for it is our opinion that these questions should be settled at the convention subject to referendum vote.

Richard Niederwerfer, Rockville, Conn.

Michael Britzius

Michael Britzius, who died at St. Joseph's hospital, Denver, Colo., last Sunday, was a member of Branch 18, Chicago, of the Social Democratic party. Comrade Britzius had been ill for a long time, and for many months friends have had no hope for his recovery. He was an old-time, well-informed and faithful Socialist. A few weeks ago he went to Colorado in the hope of bettering his condition, but the end soon came, and those who knew him feel keenly the loss of a true comrade and friend. In 1893 he stood as the Socialist candidate for mayor of Chicago and received 2,064 votes.

Coulter's Victory at Brockton

The voters of the city have rendered their verdict as to who should hold the helm of municipal interests for the ensuing year, and that verdict is for another term for Mayor Coulter. With the exception of the Garfield-Williamson contest three years ago, it is the closest one ever waged in this city, and, strangely enough, Mayor Coulter's plurality is exactly the same that Mr. Garfield received in 1897, thirty-five votes. It is certainly a most substantial tribute to the present mayor that he is returned to office. It practically affirms the satisfaction of a plurality of the voters of the city with the manner he has conducted the affairs of the city—Brockton (Mass.) Times.

Dues and the Herald

Members of the party who expect to receive The Herald must keep their dues paid up. The amount is a mere trifle, and is often overlooked or neglected on that account. We receive numerous complaints that The Herald fails to reach comrades and in almost every case it is due to the fact that the dues of the complaining comrade are unpaid.

Each comrade should see to it that his dues are paid; and the treasurer of each branch should see to it that they are promptly forwarded to headquarters.

TWENTIETH CENTURY BELONGS TO SOCIALISM

Prophecies from Scientists, Literary Men, Teachers and Others as to the Possibilities of 1901 in Social Development.

SOCIALISM IS THE THEME

Yale Professor Declares it is the Next Great Political Creed to Occupy Attention of the World.

From The Chicago American

M. MILLERAND, French Socialist

The Socialistic movement is co-extensive with the civilized world. It knows no national limits. Where civilization is high there collectivism is the strongest. The twentieth century will see it in full swing. It will not retrograde. The hands of the economic clock can never be moved back to feudalism. Socialism cannot remain stationary, for it is a vital force. The only possible evolution for it is in an onward and upward course.

Socialism works for concord and peace. It makes generous hearts and it gives us men of good will. The solidarity of the human race should be the aim of noble minds. Such solidarity enforces the sovereignty of right. Might is not right and never will be with the people. Solidarity of the race breaks the back of mere brute force. Men should not bend the knee to blind power. Solidarity promotes peace. What can be more noble than a festival of work and peace? Honorable peace is more glorious than the most brilliant war.

The grave and delicate questions of social economy are now all tempered by Socialism. Mechanism and invention are of use only in so far as they improve the position of mankind. We measure the degree of a people's civilization not by mechanical improvements, but by the welfare of the men of toil. This is the highest and noblest standard of measurement.

It is generally laid down that man is the architect of his own fortune. But society must let him have the leisure to work it out. He must not be brutalized by a task beyond his strength.

This applies to all nations and races. For sons of different races and citizens of different nationalities belong to the same family. The duty of all is to increase the common patrimony. The legion of unknown toilers must not be forgotten.

In the coming century the organisms of iron and steel will continue more and more to replace flesh and bone, epidemics will be unknown, distance will still further disappear. Science will keep on multiplying the means she puts at man's disposal. The greatest service it can render to man is to teach him the material and moral grandeur of union—of solidarity. Where Socialism holds sway the hatred born of uncultured brains disappears. It vanquishes misery to a large extent.

PROF. HENRY DAVIES, Yale University

Following this harmony [establishment of universal peace] and conditioned upon it will come the co-operative state. As applied to economic reform this implies, of course, the removal of all restriction of individual freedom and the equality of opportunity in all the means of production and of the distribution of wealth. This will be a necessity as far as the United States is concerned. For the population of this country will, at the present rate of increase, be 500,000,000 in 1999. If the wealth increases at the same ratio (which is not likely on account of the depletion of raw materials), there would soon be anarchy under the competitive system. The universality of education will make the competitive principle in any department of human affairs an insult to enlightened intelligence. Socialism is the next great political creed to occupy our attention, and the central problem in this creed is the question of the distribution of wealth. Hopeful signs are abroad that the problem will be solved peaceably, in the slow evolution of things.

ALFRED R. WALLACE, Scientist

I hope and believe that the twentieth century will be a century devoted to social advance and regeneration; but in order to succeed in this great work it must deal with causes and principles, not merely with symptoms. The crowning disgrace of the nineteenth century—that with a hundred-fold increase in our powers of wealth—production adequate to supply every rational want of our whole population many times over, we have only succeeded in adding enormously to individual wealth and luxury while the workers are on the average as deeply sunk in poverty and misery as before—must be abolished forever.

In order to do this we must adopt as our beacon light and guide the fundamental principle of social justice—equality of opportunity—not as a mere phrase or catch-word, but with a stern determination to carry it out to its logical consequences.

I am myself convinced that the society of the future will be some form of Socialism, which may be briefly defined as the organization of labor for the good of all. Just as the postoffice is organized labor in one department for the benefit of all alike; just as the railways might be organized as a whole for the equal benefit of the whole community; just as extensive industries over a whole country are now organized for the exclusive benefit of combinations of capitalists; so all necessary and useful labor might be organized for the equal benefit of all.

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE, Author

I am assuming that in this struggle the workers will come out triumphant. Indeed, dark as the prospect at the moment seems, embattled as are the strongholds of capital, and closed as are all the doors of joy and leisure to the poor workers whose unwilling hands have been forced to build these citadels of oppression, yet the time is surely fixed when these strongholds shall come down as the walls of the Bastille went down before them, and the whole of humanity force its way through those closed doors, into those fair gardens of the world which were made for all men, not merely for a few.

MAX O'RELL, French Critic

The social system of this century is wrong and the twentieth will remedy this. I hope I shall not be taken for a dangerous character if I say that a society in which the workers live in poverty, often in a state of starvation, while idlers live in unbridled luxury, is wrongly organized. Pardon me, if all my sympathies in this world are for those who work and suffer.

NIKOLA TESLA, Electrical Expert

If we want to reduce poverty and misery, if we want to give to every deplorable individual the right to a safe existence of an intelligent being, we want to provide more machinery, more power. Power is our mainstay, the primary source of our many-sided energies. With sufficient power at our disposal we can satisfy most of our wants and offer a guaranty for safe and comfortable existence, except perhaps to those who are the greatest criminals of all—the voluntarily idle.

F. MARION CRAWFORD, Author

A modus vivendi which shall assure a just and permanent distribution of wealth and division of labor. He who solves this problem will be the earth's greatest man.

The New York Journal of Commerce, a paper free from fads and hobbies, discourses in a common-sense way about national thanksgiving, and then indorses the contention of Socialists in the matter of government by saying that "in the 125th year of American independence we cannot refer to our city governments without a blush, and there is only too much in our state governments and in our national government to which we would be glad to shut our eyes. The barbarism bred of slavery survives a generation after its cause, and is not confined to the section where slavery prevailed." Socialists point out lucidly why we are called upon to blush for municipal, state and national government. It is because of barbarism bred by chattel slavery which now exists in wage slavery, bred by capitalism, which has spread throughout the land. The Journal of Commerce has correct views of the situation, which unequivocally indorse the policy of Socialists.

When the constitution was submitted to the thirteen original states for ratification slavery existed in all of them, except Vermont, which declared its extinction in 1777, before she had joined the union, and eighty-six years thereafter, 1863, the fetters fell from off the limbs of every chattel slave in the land. And in twenty years, if Socialists are true to their mission, wage slavery will disappear from the United States.

The earth revolves on its axis, Socialism hews with its axes, and it has got a thousand of them, keen-edged, hewing pathways through the jungle of ignorance and bigotry to highlands of liberty and independence.

The telegraphers on the Santa Fe and other railroads have created an electric storm because they are not getting their share of Mark Hanna's "prosperity."

LABOR AND POLITICS IN OLD ENGLAND

An Interesting Batch of News from Beyond the Seas Prepared for the Herald

By John Penny

The General Federation Trade Unions makes comparatively slow progress as up to the present it only embraces sixty-three societies and 378,870 members. It has, however, a fairly handsome cash balance in the bank. Evidently some kind of a stimulus is needed to make the individual unions see the necessity of federation. Perhaps we shall have that when one of the threatened attacks on trades unionism comes to a head.

That the federation, in spite of its relative slow growth, has come to stay there can be little doubt. Month by month its membership is increasing, and when a union has once joined and paid its fees there is every inducement for it to continue in the fold and reap any advantage the federation may have to give. Withdrawal would mean the loss of the funds paid in, which will probably be a strong factor in the eyes of any society that may be temporarily dissatisfied. Hence defections will be few and far between.

As the federation grows, however, another body, the Trade Union Congress, will probably diminish. The Trade Union Congress has been all along an expensive and more or less ineffective gathering. It has elected year by year a showy, but not very useful, parliamentary committee, whose arduous labors have not brought forth an abundance of good things. The parliamentary committee has not possessed any real power in the trade union world; all it could do was to advise, whereas the executive council of the general federation will sooner or later become practically supreme and will lay down the law as to whether or not there are to be strikes, of this or that section. Such a body with real executive power in its hands is bound to exercise more influence over the unions than the somewhat casual parliamentary committee. The various affiliated unions will find it imperative to attend the federation congress, while the Trade Union Congress will gradually come to be looked upon as a speakers' carnival and will be superseded.

November 1st saw the inauguration of the eight-hour day in the works of Messrs. Brunner, Mond & Co., at Middlesbrough. One can congratulate employers and employed alike on this step, for there is no doubt that it will be advantageous to both. Masters find that high wages, short hours and good results go together as a rule, and that a policy of generosity toward work people produces its reward, while the employees find that the increased leisure gives opportunities for self-improvement involving ultimately a wider horizon and a demand for still further facilities for culture. Nothing could be wider from the truth than the current idea that increased leisure for the working classes naturally implies drunkenness and debauchery on their part. It is often the case, unfortunately, that people who have been tied up in the mill or shop for the greater part of a year seem to run wild when they get a half holiday, but the excesses committed are due to the reaction from the continuous overwork. As people get more leisure and more accustomed to holidays, more rational methods of spending the time will become common than those we sometimes see at the seaside places patronized by the working classes. To spend our leisure well is an art requiring cultivation, quite as much as to make the best of our working hours. Hence a reasonable amount of leisure must always be a necessary factor in building up and developing a nobler humanity.

The coal question is one that looms very largely in people's minds just now, and the resolution passed a short time ago by the Yeoman Urban District council will be read with much interest. The resolution is as follows: "That, having regard to the need for a cheap and abundant supply of coal, the exorbitant demands of the coal mine owners, and the large amount of coal exported annually to other countries, this council is of opinion that the only effectual means of economizing the supply and reducing the price, is for the mines to become the property of the nation, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the prime minister, the member for parliament, and all the district councils in the Otley division, with a request that they will give their support to the same."

It is almost astonishing to see the way in which the elected authorities throughout the country are taking up the question of municipal housing. It is not generally known what extensive powers our local authorities have in this direction, and they can best be described as practically unlimited, save that they must get the consent of the local government board to any scheme they devise. I note with interest that the Merthyr Urban District council has applied to the L. G. B. for permission to borrow £15,000 which it proposes to spend in the erection of workmen's dwellings. If the proposal may be taken as an indication of the movement in the direction of the better housing for the Welsh people, it is heartily worthy of commendation for the working classes in South Wales at any rate are notoriously housed in an infamous manner.

A Revolutionary Party

The Social Democratic party is an uncompromising Socialist organization. It stands today where it did when first organized in June, 1898, that is, as a political opponent of all capitalistic or quasi-capitalistic parties, and the declared adversary of the capitalist system of production.

On its positive side it is uncompromisingly committed to the program of international Socialism; that is, the substitution in place of capitalist industry of a system of society in which all the affairs of men, national and international, will be systematically managed by the social organism for the benefit of all, and no longer by individuals for individual profit and emolument, as, under capitalism, these affairs are managed now.

Any political party with this program is necessarily a revolutionary party. Revolutionary in this respect, that it proposes the negation of private property rights in the indispensable resources of nature and of social productive capital.

No party is worthy of or entitled to use the name Socialist that does not accept without reservation or recourse to base political trickery to deceive the unwary and uninformed, the program of revolutionary international Socialism in its entirety.

No individual, however unctuous his professions of fidelity to "the cause" or yearnings for the "co-operative commonwealth," can trim or compromise the program of Socialism to suit his individual and personal interests without respect to enjoy an unchallenged right to the name Socialist.

No man is a Socialist who does not recognize that Socialism is not a reform, but a revolution; that it is not a scheme but a system of society; a reorganization of the affairs of men from which private individual means and opportunities of appropriating the wealth produced by labor are eliminated.

Socialism, then, is a revolutionary movement, based upon the class struggle, awaiting the action and interaction of social and evolutionary forces for its final and complete supremacy. Of this movement the Social Democratic party in the United States is an organized expression. It has no reason for existence save as a critic of capitalism and an advocate of national and international co-operation.

As proof that the church is run on a straight capitalistic basis, let us consider the Archbishop of Manila's visit to the Pope. He was recently told by a Cardinal that he could secure certain concessions from the Pope if he could guarantee a yearly income to the Vatican of $200,000 from the Philippines. That is odd—but hear the rest of the story. A Filipino commission was also sent to Rome to get control of church properties and another worthy Cardinal "thought the dispute would go in their favor if they could promise the Vatican $200,000 a year." But the latter commission evidently has not sufficient quantities of the "long green," for their money is all gone, after paying fees to Vatican dependents. They were taxed $100 to see a Cardinal and $3,000 to see the Pope. This is business, and business is business. It is a year's subscription to the Herald against a worn out summer hat that the Archbishop of Manila arrives home next month from a very successful business trip to Rome—although the price was rather high.

The Vicereine of India, Lady Curzon, whose former home was the city in which the Herald is printed, entertains her friends with elephant parties. Each lady is provided with an elephant and attendants. The Vicereine's own elephant is equipped with a gorgeous mount embroidered in silk and gold, with huge festoons of pearls hung around the elephant's ears. The "howdah" is of silver protected from the sun by a white silk umbrella, bordered with pearls, while the "mahout" carries a silver goad and fly fan. A "famine in India" is the news that reaches us with due regularity of late years—but perhaps this has nothing to do with the Vicereine and her elephant parties.

SOCIAL REVOLUTION AND THE REFORMERS

The Democratization of Commerce, Trade and Industry the Only Reliable and Safe Guaranty of Social Equality

MODERN SUCCESS WORSHIP

Social Democracy Must Work for Gradual Measures of Relief, but Without Losing its Revolutionary Character

By Isador Ladoff

Social Democracy is a distinctly revolutionary movement. It demands a radical reconstruction of the present mercantile and capitalistic system of society on entirely different planes. It demands that all economic and industrial functions of society should be managed by society in the interest of society as a whole. It considers the democratization of commerce, trade and industry as the only reliable foundation of political democracy and safe guaranty of true social equality.

The co-operative commonwealth advocated by Social Democracy is thoroughly in accord with the results of modern philosophy—science and ethics. Social justice and the light of reason shall regulate the civic, economic and other interrelations of the members of this commonwealth of the future. Blind chance and chaotic play of unrestricted and uncontrolled individual endeavor and action, characterizing present anarchic state of society are favorable for the most brutal struggle for existence between man and man, man and woman, man and child in the field of industrial slavery, a struggle resulting in the survival of the most cunning, unscrupulous and heartless, in a boundless sea of human suffering and degradation, in crime, carnal and moral prostitution.

In our present society the individual or class are allowed to exploit, nay, encouraged to prey upon, the mass of human beings of the downtrodden, exploited and demoralized toiling and moiling masses of humanity, the so-called lower classes. It champions the cause of the emancipation of these lower classes from the unbearable yoke of irrational and unjust social conditions. It proclaimed the identity of the interest of the individual with the interest of the race in general, and is, therefore, an international, world-wide movement as far as general principles are involved. Social Democracy stands for the brotherly co-operation of all the members of the human race for the purpose of exploiting the inexhaustible treasures of our common, benevolent mother—nature—for emulation instead of competition, for the survival of the best instead of the fittest, for the elevation instead of the degradation of the human type, for the entire abolition instead of fostering and artificially creating class distinctions, for the propaganda of race instead of class consciousness.

Social Democracy does not expect to change human nature by elevating the morality of single individuals born, reared, educated and compelled to live in a grossly immoral environment and a state of society inviting immorality by its very construction and putting a premium on immorality by heathenish success worship, as the conservative and revolutionary utopian individualists do expect or pretend to expect. Social Democracy proposes only to direct the instinct of self-preservation, so deeply rooted in human nature, into channels where these most potent social powers will, by the law of social mechanics, turn constructive instead of destructive, organizing instead of disorganizing, humanizing instead of bestializing.

The most rational way to abolish an evil is to remove the incentive for committing it. This is exactly what Social Democracy proposes to do. Where there is no motive for exploitation of one man by another there can be no exploitation. Social Democracy fortunately passed the utopian stage in which the individualists still linger. It builds its magnificent edifice for the future of humanity not on the sand of personal morality, but on the solid rock of knowledge of human nature and the laws of social and economic life. It does not believe in creating social conditions by legislative fiat. It maintains that only such laws are operative which sanctify existing social and economic conditions, laws expressing deep-rooted convictions of the broad masses of the people.

Social Democracy is consequently fully aware that, as Rome could not be

National Vote for Socialism

The canvass of the votes cast for McKinley and Bryan has been completed in all the states. Incomplete returns of the Social Democratic vote gives Debs 85,344, but these figures do not include the vote in California, Maine, Alabama and Georgia; these states increase the vote to 94,604. This is probably less than one-half the vote actually cast for Eugene V. Debs in the country.

Maloney, S. L. P. candidate for president, received 34,007, or 2,557 less than the vote of that party in 1896.

The total vote of the country for socialism in 1900 is, therefore, according to the returns, 128,610, against 36,564 in 1896. It is, however, unquestionably true that in many states the votes of Social Democrats were not counted; they were destroyed or tampered with on the slightest pretext. This was especially true in Indiana and Texas.

The grand total of votes cast for all candidates was 13,969,966. The following table gives the Social Democratic party votes by states:

Alabama	500
California	7,572
Colorado	687
Connecticut	1,029
Delaware	56
Florida	601
Georgia	300
Illinois	9,687
Indiana	2,374
Iowa	2,742
Kansas	1,605
Kentucky	760
Maine	887
Maryland	876
Massachusetts	9,617
Michigan	2,826
Minnesota	3,065
Montana	708
Nebraska	820
New Hampshire	790
New Jersey	4,609
New York	12,869
North Dakota	518
Ohio	4,335
Oregon	1,470
Pennsylvania	4,831
South Dakota	169
Tennessee	415
Texas	846
Utah	720
Vermont	371
Washington	2,006
West Virginia	219
Wisconsin	7,095
Total	94,604

The Social Democratic party will be fourth on the ballot in the next election.

Christmas

In writing of Christmas, the anniversary of the birth of Jesus, in the town of Bethlehem, Judea, a bit of history will not be out of place.

It is recorded that on the occasion of the birth of Jesus an angel appeared to shepherds watching their flocks by night and said: "I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people, for unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. . . . And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly hosts praising God and saying, GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST, AND ON EARTH PEACE, GOOD WILL TOWARD MEN."

Is this a true history of the event? It is so accepted by all Christendom. But neither "on earth peace" nor "good will toward men" has blessed mankind. Nevertheless, the "heavenly hosts" made the announcement. It voiced faith in the redeeming power of human nature, and of a good time coming. Socialism grasps the idea and values it for all it is worth. It believes in a civilization of peace and of good will. Socialism would eliminate from our civilization the savagery of war and introduce "good will toward men." If this cannot be done, then the sooner the earth is transformed into a tomb the better. If peace is never to come, if all the baser elements of human nature are forever to prevail and hold the world in subjection, then what we call "Christian civilization" should haul down its flag and capitulate and permit the devil to have full sway. Socialists do not propose to surrender. They do not treat the announcement of "peace on earth" as a vagary; nor "good will toward men" as a huge delusion.

It will be borne in mind that the "heavenly host" did not say "peace in heaven," nor "good will toward angels," but "toward men." The problem is to be solved on earth, not in some other state of existence. Socialists alone take the "heavenly host" at its word. It is their creed, their ritual, their shibboleth.

We do not say that Christmas should not be celebrated with feast and song and rapturous joy. Socialists do not undervalue the Christmas custom of banquets, reunions and the exchange of gifts and mementos of friendship and good will, but prize the day chiefly because it keeps in perpetual remembrance their mission to establish, as the "heavenly host" announced, "On earth peace, good will toward men." Milton sang—

"Peace hath her victories,
No less renowned than war."

And Socialists, grasping the full significance of the declaration, propose that the victories of peace shall be not only no less renowned than war, but a thousandfold more resplendent.

Confusion Among Unionists

"The committee on platform filed in and submitted a draft of a municipal platform. The draft prepared was discussed at length by the convention, and an attempt was made to insert a municipal ownership plank. However, after more than an hour's discussion, the platform was adopted precisely as the committee had reported it."

The foregoing is taken from the Workers' Call report of a meeting held by some of the Socialists of Chicago, Saturday evening, Dec. 15. This was the meeting that nominated a ticket for the spring election and called itself the "Socialist party." The platform contains no demand whatever for public ownership of street railways, electric or gas lighting or power plants, or any other public or social utilities—the means of production and distribution.

The same meeting adopted the following resolution as a part of its record and to emphasize its "revolutionary Socialism":

"That the Socialists of Chicago stand for a co-operative commonwealth; we recognize, nevertheless, THE NECESSITY OF OBTAINING FOR THE WORKING CLASS ALL THAT IS POSSIBLE UNDER THE PRESENT SYSTEM AS LONG AS IT SHALL LAST."

The "revolutionary" Socialists seem to have slipped a cog somewhere in their deliberations. It did not occur to them that a Socialistic demand for municipal ownership of any public utility is an entirely different proposition from a capitalist demand for the same thing. The meeting turned down a plank for municipal ownership of the means of transportation, gas, etc., on the ground, class "favors that reform." Since when the capitalist class has done anything of the kind is not stated. Yerkes, Louderbach & Co. certainly do not favor public ownership of their properties in Chicago; neither does the People's Gas company. What we are contending for is not that municipalization of anything is Socialism, but that, since the Socialization of "public utilities" cannot be achieved for the general public interest by capitalist parties, it necessarily devolves upon Socialists to pursue a clear-cut policy to accomplish the end sought for—viz., the co-operative commonwealth; in such pursuit and also "to obtain for the working class all that is possible under the present system as long as it lasts," the thing to be done is to educate the working class up to a thorough understanding of the meaning and final significance of every step taken.

A party that refuses to adopt in its program of immediate political demands one declaring for the Socialization of that large class of public utilities operated for private profit in cities, although some of the direct results of public ownership, "while the present system lasts," might be unsatisfactory, and at the same time recognizes the "necessity" mark that, the "necessity of obtaining for the working class all that is possible under the present system," is neither a Socialist nor a revolutionary party. Its utterances are confused and confusing. In its attempt to be heroic it has generated wind in the stomach. It disembowels its own resolutions and platform with the statement that neither are of any account. It favors "the employment of all unemployed citizens by the municipality," but they must be employed in competition with workers privately employed—there is no other way—and may not be given employment on a municipal street railway or in a Socialized electric power plant.

The Social Democratic party is not waiting for a revolution; it is in a revolution already here. Toward the culminating era, the climax of the revolutionary forces operating in society, steps are taken each day and advances are continuously and inevitably made. The security of the future depends largely upon whether these steps are in the right direction, that is to say, whether in the final readjustment from capitalist industry they make for democratic Socialism and the co-operative commonwealth. Therefore the Social Democratic party seeks to build up a powerful organization in community and nation to take possession of the public powers and direct every step made in the reorganization of industry and all the indispensable services of social well-being and enjoyment. Among the latter are municipal transportation and communication services, and these vitally concern the interests of the working class. Nothing can be accomplished for the working class in cities so long as cities are controlled by the enemies of that class.

NOTES AND COMMENT

"Jolly 'em along!" is the idea of plenty of well-known labor leaders who are doing more to perpetuate the fleeing games of the capitalist class than they are to promote the interests of the working class which pays their salaries. At the conference of "labor and capital" in Chicago last week one of these said it would cost the employing class nothing to say to the workingman, "How are you, Bill?" or "How are you, Tom?" and, shaking him by the hand, make him feel that he was a good fellow. Neither would it. And that is all that some wage slaves want. Just "jolly 'em along!" Do nothing that human justice demands, but "jolly 'em along!" Do anything that will cost the capitalist class nothing, but don't get off their backs. "Jolly 'em along!"

A speaker, addressing a meeting of the Methodist Social union of Chicago on the subject of crime, said "it has always been true that where a great many different classes and conditions of people were brought together in a struggle for existence it means crime." True enough; an environment that is essentially brutal and criminal will produce criminals. The capitalist system, forcing upon all classes the struggle for existence, is necessarily a crime-producing system, and the only escape from it is in Socialism, when the mere struggle to live, imposing on every one the necessity of being a social pirate, under the law or despite the law, will give place to social production for use only. Capitalism is crime, and crime is an inevitable consequence of capitalism.

A new industry was started out at Omaha last week. Of all recent ventures in the money-making line few impose less labor or offer inducements for larger pay. All that is required is a good nerve and ability to discriminate between the children of a dollar-a-day wage slave and a millionaire. The originators of the industry kidnaped a young son of Cudahy, millionaire pork packer, hid him away until his wealthy papa was ready with a ransom and, according to report, the promoters' Christmas was merry, even hilarious. The secret of success in this line is to pick out the right kid.

After a hundred years of experimenting with election laws to secure honest elections, each one proving a failure, the machine is to be introduced. It appears plausible that machine politics should culminate in a voting machine. The ballot gives place to the button, and introduces the juvenile game of "Who's got the button?" in a vastly expanded form.

There is no chance under heaven for a workingman to secure wealth until he owns himself. The philosophy of the old ditty 'fo' de wa' fairly illustrates the idea. During a pelting storm he was seen with his hat under his arm, while his head was exposed. Being asked why he did not wear his hat, he replied: "Dis hat is dis nigger's; dis head is Marse Bob's."

As an item showing the progressive character of our prosperity, statistics show that the United States has 250,000 habitual criminals. The number does not include apprentices in crime, nor the various types of well-dressed and educated embezzlers, who are trying to enter upper crust circles to which the passport is money.

If you would be truly wise, be a Socialist. If you would be truly great, be a Socialist. If you would be truly good, be a Socialist. Socialism vitalizes every faculty of the soul, enlarges the domain of effort and creates a never ending series of mind and heart felicities.

The Filipinos are beginning to arrive in the United States. One of them touched Milwaukee, but was denied admittance at several hotels because he looks like a "nigger." When a man looks so much like a "nigger" that an average hotel clerk can't see the difference, his case is rather dark.

Why is food poisoned and adulterated? There is only one reply: It is done for profit. Under Socialism food will be produced for people to eat, and not to sell for a profit. Therefore, under Socialism, people will eat without being poisoned.

There is only one way to be honest, as there is only one way to tell the truth; but dishonesty is as prolific of ways and methods to deceive as capitalism is to steal the earnings of labor.

Chicago has developed a new type of capitalism. It was recently discovered that a footpad had organized a combine in which a number of footpads had their districts and robbed on commission.

THE CAPITAL BURGLARIZED WITH AID OF CONGRESSMEN

Legislation by Which the People are Robbed and a Railroad is Benefitted Passed Quietly Without Protest

The following account of a "good bit of burglary," enacted in the city of Washington, was written by the special correspondent of the Chicago Journal. As an example of modern business methods, endorsed and approved by so-called representatives of the people, it is, as Mr. Gardner says, "unique, one might almost say captivating"—in its impudence:

"Washington, Dec. 15.—While it is not a matter which concerns Chicago or the country at large, there is a piece of legislation now nearing its passage in the house of representatives which has some unique, and one might almost say captivating, features. It is unique in the high degree of impudence which inspires it, and is captivating in that it takes from the treasury of the United States and the District of Columbia a cool million and a half dollars and hands it over to a railroad company—the Baltimore & Ohio.

Even to the disinterested spectator there is a fascination in watching the operations of a burglar or a highwayman; one marvels at the daring of the actors, and there is always an uncertainty, and a corresponding interest involved in the question whether they will get away with the swag. This is the only excuse for troubling the outside world with any mention of the pending bill for the elevation of the tracks of the above-mentioned company at their terminal near the Capitol building.

"Perhaps some soft-hearted reader will drop a tear for the sad fate of a number of Washington's permanent citizens who do not like it—or some features of it—and who are quite powerless to help themselves; but they can be consoled with the knowledge that the majority of the residents are appeased by the thought that three-quarters of a million is taken from the general treasury, and only half of the grab is saddled on them. There are no aldermen here, and while an alderman is a qualified blessing, it is at least possible to get up a lynching sentiment among his neighbors, and thus appeal to his reason.

"But the committee on the District of Columbia, which has corresponding functions, is made up of non-residents, and the dweller in Eckington or on North Capitol street finds that Chairman Babcock's neighbors are all out in Necedah, Wis., and that their interest in Washington track elevation is extremely remote. What do the people of Nebraska or Maryland or Tennessee care whether the Baltimore & Ohio locates its roundhouse on B street or in Pennsylvania avenue? They never saw either site, and are quite willing to leave it to Mr. Mercer, Mr. Mudd, or Mr. Simms.

"And that's how it happened that a delegation of incensed Washingtonians stood outside the locked door of the district committee-room last Friday and the air blue with futile and wicked oaths. They came to lodge a protest, they objected to the location of a roundhouse in their front yards; in response to their appeal the committee sent out the attorney of the railroad to listen to their troubles. It was an "executive session" between the committee and the general counsel of the railroad.

"There is no need to elaborate on the provisions of the bill. Its scope and general character may be judged from the fact that the road is given power to condemn any land it may want for its right of way in the tract bounded on the south by the Capitol grounds, on the west by North Capitol street, on the east by Second street, and on the north by the boundaries of the District of Columbia. It may bring its trains, its freight cars, and its passenger station right up to the nation's Capitol. Further, it is given the right of way to connect with the tracks of the Pennsylvania railroad—a privilege for which it offered $1,250,000 in 1887. It proposed at that time to tunnel Capitol hill. The bill permits the road to close permanently seven of the principal streets in the vicinity of the Capitol. It gives them nearly two whole squares on which to erect a terminal station. It gives them several acres of streets for right of way, and it saddles the damage suits on the District of Columbia.

"In consideration of which, and of the million and a half bonus, or subsidy, or grab, or graft, or whatever sounds most euphonious, it agrees to elevate its tracks. And this in the face of the fact that in less than nine years the road will lose by expiration the franchise which permits it to use steam on the right of way by which it enters from New York. One of the road's lawyers admitted to the committee that the bill for damages resulting from grade crossing accidents was $96,000 a year. He admitted that this was a partial incentive to the road for desiring to elevate the tracks. That much would be saved. The cost of the proposed work is estimated by the railroad engineers at $5,000,000. They say this should not be reckoned as an asset of the road, because their earnings would not be increased.

"The bill has passed the senate—so quietly that there was scarcely a ripple. It went through last session, when nobody cared. Nobody cares if it passes the house—except the railroad, and, possibly, the committee, and a few helpless citizens whose toes happen to be trod upon. The ways are smoothed—it would be unkind to say greased—for this kind of legislation. The gentlemen who vote for it—who vote "to beautify and adorn our magnificent Capitol city"—and to pay a railroad for running its dirty tracks and engines up to the very front door of our legislative halls—will go home and hold up their heads before an admiring constituency.

"But looking at it from the standpoint of the disinterested spectator, isn't it a good bit of burglary?"

"When this bill is put upon its passage—as it is likely to be very soon—there will be a roll-call, which, if anybody were interested, would make thrilling reading for constituents. But who cares?"

H. Gilson Gardner.

The "Grand old oak," with its "fifty arms so strong," or a small specimen of the sturdy tribe, would make an appropriate Christmas tree for a branch of the Social Democratic party. It would typify strength and endurance "when a hundred years are gone." But the orange tree, perhaps, with its perennial foliage and in ceaseless bloom, with fruit in every stage of development, from green to golden yellow, would possibly more fittingly symbolize Socialism in its beautiful philanthropic work.

With an imperial flourish the announcement is made and telegraphed around the world that the crown prince of Germany is "one of the finest shots in Europe." All Germany is taxed to keep his royal dinner pail full of luxuries.

Speaking of holiday gifts, why not give the Social Democratic party a hundred new branches and The Social Democratic Herald a thousand new subscribers? The giving would be scarcely less enjoyable than the receiving.

As an illustration of the opportunities our civilization affords aspiring young men to grow up with the country, it is authoritatively stated that Terry McGovern, prince of the prize ring, has made in a short time $112,000 by the masterful use of his fists. Besides, his reputation as a pugilist has enabled him to rake in several more thousands, until he is now worth about $150,000, and contemplates retiring on his money and laurels to spend the remainder of his days in seeking pleasure. Prize fighting in the United States and bull fighting in Spain civilize downward.

"Fo' de Lord," said an Afro-American wage slave, "I voted for Boss 'Kinley—now jes' look at my dinner pail; hit done hold more'n a quart, and I's gwine to strike for a bigger bucket—I is, suh!"

ROCKEFELLER'S CHRISTMAS DAY

John D. Rockefeller's Christmas song in the morning before going to his downtown office, to advance the price of oil and count his cash, is about as follows:

My life is ever flowing, now, now, flowing—
My life is ever flowing, like rivers to the sea,
And still, O Lord, I'm boring, boring, boring;
And still, O Lord, I'm boring, as busy as a bee.

I am forever piping, piping, piping;
Yes, Lord, I'm always piping the illuminating stuff.

And, O Lord, I'll keep on piping, piping, piping.

Yes, Lord, I'll keep on piping till the world has got enough.

My pumps are always pumping, pumping.
My pumps are ever pumping my life into my tanks.

And, O Lord, I'll keep on pumping, pumping, pumping.

Yes, Lord, I'll keep on pumping and giving thee my thanks.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

W. E. A., Washington.—If you find in this paper no reference or reply to the slanders of such people as are mentioned in your letter, it is because we are indifferent to their ravings and have no space to waste on them. They have all about run out of yarn. As to the petty humbug, C. R. M., whom you think should be singled out by us for a special berating, we will say that his personal and vituperative attacks on the "Washington street bosses" grew out of personal pique because the Herald refused to publish attacks on De Leon from his pen. The "official organ" would have been indispensable and all right had he been allowed to use it as a medium for his brilliant, self-edifying effusions. No; the figures he gives on the manifesto referendum are not correct.

M. H., Illinois.—The communication from Springfield addressed to the National Executive Board of the Social Democratic party, like all documents on "union" emanating from that source, is full of untruths and misstatements. (1) The convention was not called without consulting members of the party. (2) It was not decided upon at a meeting of "one" Chicago local. (3) It is not true that the Socialist forces were split by the "Washington street leaders." (4) Neither the Social Democratic party, its "leaders," nor its paper has ever inaugurated an era of personal abuse. (5) The only "union" which the rank and file in Chicago "forced" was political co-operation for the campaign of 1900. The conduct of that campaign by the "unionists" (in Chicago and elsewhere) nullified any prospect there may have been for organic union. From first to last, discord, distrust and the failure of unity are directly and entirely attributable to those who have been most active for "union."

GROUND WORK OF SCIENTIFIC SOCIALISM

Various Distinct Eras in the March of Human Progress Noted—The Development of Capitalist System of Production

THE COMMUNIST MANIFESTO

Evolution of Capitalism and the Goal to Which it Inevitably Tends—Unerring Forecasts of Marx and Engels

By James O'Neal

That the next stage in human history will be of a communal or social character none can doubt who investigate the industrial forces and social phenomena that are struggling for expression. They certainly do not indicate a reversal back to individual and isolated methods. Whether it will come through a violent catastrophe rests with those who oppose a peaceful solution. The only danger lies in trying to thwart it at the opportune moment when peaceful methods would suffice in accomplishing the change. In this case violence is inevitable. To those who object to the transformation by repeating the Darwinian formula we can say that Socialism does not imply the cessation of the struggle for existence. On the contrary, Socialists rely on this very struggle for the dynamic force to usher in the era of collectivism. The struggle will continue, but its fangs will be drawn. The struggle will be carried to a higher plane with more human weapons and the success of one will not be conditioned on the crushing of another. Your successful advance will leave in the hands of your competitor those advantages he has acquired, instead of appropriating them entirely as is the case now. While equality of wealth will not prevail, the opportunities for acquiring it will be held in common and guaranteed to all. Private property in one's personal products or their equivalent will be held sacred, but the means by which they are produced will be held as the joint heritage of all, thus rendering impossible class rulership and the exploitation which necessarily accompanies it.

The assertion that given equality of opportunity with the full social value of one's toil would only tend to increase population to such an extent that these advantages would be neutralized, is not borne out by the facts of everyday experience. The facts are that population increases more rapidly in those centers where the debasing, instead of the uplifting, influences are at work—namely, the slums. Here where the exploitation, degradation and misery are the keenest will be found the largest families and population increasing faster than elsewhere. The same seems to hold true of animals. Rabbits and field mice that are constantly being preyed upon and hunted down breed faster than those less harassed by these circumstances. The history of the struggle for existence has been characterized by the progressive modification of its severity. Each advance made by man has been followed by the elimination of some of its brutal features. In the ancient world it was a struggle for civic equality, in the middle ages it becomes a struggle for religious equality, and the eighteenth century witnessed the struggle for political equality. All these advantages have been gained and retrogression has not yet set in. Had the Darwinian lived during the days of Plato and Aristotle he would have opposed all these and would have predicted the destruction of civilization on the attainment of each of these advantages by all men.

The threshold of the twentieth century witnesses the struggle of the advantage, equality of opportunity, and to their shame be it said, the majority of scientific men link their energy and talents to the juggernaut of capitalism, and offer their services to the employing class. And the old objections are advanced as an excuse for their action. Such Darwinians to be consistent should cease to tend their flower gardens and let the flowers fight it out with the weeds. In this case there would be no doubt which would be the "fittest to survive," but they would also be conscious that they had the power to fit the flowers to survive had they chosen to do so. The moral is apparent. The trouble with the average follower of Darwin, who is not a Socialist, is his persistency in borrowing a few dogmas from the biological formula and carrying them over into the field of sociology without any qualification whatever and without asking himself whether these dogmas are adequate to express or explain the complex phenomena of social evolution. While this formula is valuable in sociological research, yet it is practically valueless when investigating such phenomena as wages, interest, rent, profits, ethics, morals, etc. These do not appear in the field of biology. They are new factors that appear in the life of civilized man and distinguish him from the brute creation. They of necessity imply laws of their own and these laws cannot be grasped otherwise than by a thorough investigation of the sphere within which they act, that is economics and sociology, and not biology.

The Darwinian who confines himself within the limits of biology has yet to learn with Shakespeare that "there are more things in heaven and earth than is dreamt of in his philosophy."

In conclusion, there are not wanting signs indicating a world change in the capitalist nations of the earth. The present cry of "expansion" is the death gasp of the old order of things struggling against the inevitable. The marvelous advance made in the wealth productive forces, due to the centralization of capital and the perfection of machinery, has been accomplished at the expense of reducing the home market by displacing labor and cutting the wages of those still employed, thus leaving in the hands of the capitalist owners $2,000,000,000 of surplus products on hand and no "effective" demand for them at home. Chauncey Depew admitted this in his speech at the national convention held at Philadelphia a few short months ago. If no demand exists at home then it must be found abroad. Hence the expansion policy is decided upon and every capitalist nation of the earth is scouring the globe for markets to dump their surplus products wrung from those who produced them. But this cannot last long. When foreign peoples are brought in contact with the so-called civilized nations they learn the arts of their conquerors and in time introduce the new methods of production and they soon have a surplus on hand which qualifies them to take their stand with the others in seeking foreign markets instead of providing one. Thus Japan, in the short space of fifty years, has undergone a complete change from feudalism to capitalism, a change which required as much as two and three hundred years in some of the nations of Europe. Japan is now one of the most successful competitors for the markets of the world. The entrance of the allies into China will produce the same result in time, so that when there are no more markets to be secured an industrial world deadlock is inevitable. When no more markets are at hand the surplus productions will flow back to their owners and the capitalist system will reach the climax of its absurdity by presenting the remarkable spectacle of a people starving amidst a deluge of wealth. These are logical deductions from facts and forces at work in capitalist society. Happy be he whose privilege it is to contribute his mite, little as it may be, to the solution of the sphinx riddle that is puzzling millions whose hearts are seared and whose souls are wrenched because of the picture of that one of whom the poet hath said:

"Down all the stretch of hell to its last gulf there is no shape more terrible than this!"

To conclude in the words of a great writer: "It is true our present society carries an appearance of vigor and vitality which seems to defy assault, but if we put our ear to this exuberant life, we can hear the slow rumblings of death destroying it from within. A splendid mantle covers our civilization, but on looking more closely we see that it has already lost its sheen; its brilliant colors are beginning to fade, and ere long this splendid cloak will become the funeral shroud in which capitalist society will sleep its last. Under the apparent signs of health, science must look for the symptoms of disease, and watch for the premonitions of death. It should not, however, attempt to avert an inevitable destiny, but rather endeavor to moderate the convulsions which must inevitably accompany the birth of a new and more vigorous society."

The Children's Aid society of New York deplors the fact that children are pouring into the country from Italy, Austria, Hungary, Russia and other European states, who are to be "educated to lives of usefulness and right living." No mention is made of American children who need education. In the anthracite coal region there are not less than 3,000 "breaker boys" who never went to school a day nor an hour in their lives. They are the young wage slaves of capitalism, and no church nor children's aid society pays any more attention to their education than if they were so many mule colts. Christmas would be a good day to petition the Pennsylvania legislature to enact a law by which these boys, rescued from lives of ignorance, vice and degradation, might become valued citizens of the state and country, and in this effort Socialists might, with eminent propriety, take the lead. Possibly John Wanamaker might be induced to abandon his bargain counter long enough to help such a cause.

A poet wrote: "Earth hath no sorrow heaven cannot heal." Possibly, but there are a vast number of sorrows it does not heal—left, perhaps, for Socialism to find and apply the needed remedy. The work could not have been committed to better hands.

In the march of Christian civilization the standing army of the United States is to be increased to 100,000 officers and men. Capitalism hails this increase of the standing army with special delight.

WOMAN CONSIDERED AS A HUMAN BEING

While I work for Socialism as promising something better than present-day conditions, I cannot bring to the cause that enthusiasm which it would inspire if I felt that Socialists as a class were sincere in their professed advocacy of equal rights to women. I was not surprised to find that woman is just as much of an afterthought with the average Socialist as she was with the Hebrew god. (As all gods look alike to me, I write them all with a little g.) The Socialist papers, conscious that the peculiar injustice which the laboring man suffers has tended to crush his self-respect, spare no opportunity to inspire him with a sense of his dignity and of his importance as a social factor. On the contrary, the Socialist papers not only have next to nothing toward cultivating women to a similar respect, but often give space to matter openly or impliedly contemptuous of womanhood. Perhaps it is well that they do not make a specialty of "woman's cause," unless they could prove themselves better qualified for the task than is the average reformer—man or woman—who essays to defend womanhood, which is usually viewed in a light so intensely sexual that the reader, unless already beyond the need of education on such lines, is sure to confound animalism with motherhood.

The fact is simply that the average man has but so slightly risen above the animal plane—woman, ditto—that he cannot think of a woman first as a human being with human needs, cravings, aspirations. History—ancient, mediaeval and modern—science, philosophy and journalism, past and current, are so exoterically exclusive, so comically masculine, that, but for the Sunday press, "woman's page"—unwitting monument of woman's insignificance—some later race of manlier men might well infer this to have been, in our times and hitherto, a womanless planet whereon every son was born a la Minerva.

When a man sets out to free men he views them in their broadly industrial, political and social relations, remembering them as possible husbands or fathers only incidentally. The "rights of man" are recognized as inherent simply in manhood, regardless of celibacy or matrimony, paternity or childlessness. On the contrary every institution, old or new, must first pry into a woman's personal relations, ascertain whether she be mother, wife, widowed, divorced or celibate, and then determine on those grounds just how few rights she may be allowed, and how many wrongs may with impunity be inflicted upon her. She has absolutely no inherent rights as a human being, no, not the right even to human necessities, which man-ruled society allows her rather by reason of her being some other man's daughter, his wife, "his widow"—one never hears of any man's being her widower.

The average man can abstract another man as kinless, and yet regard him as clothed with all the rights and consequence of a patriarch; he can think of a kinless woman only as a subject for wrongs or for charity.

However far any individual man may be from wronging her actively or passively, what a commentary upon manhood is its own view of womanhood! If a man set out to right the wrongs of some race or class of oppressed men, and the burden of his song were those men's husbandhood and fatherhood, he would be accounted a simpleton. However glowingly a man may extol womanhood, until he proves practically that he accords to a woman solely by reason of her humanhood the same rights which he accords to a man solely by reason of his humanhood, his vaunted reverence for womanhood will be known by the gaudy tatters with which he thinly veils his own animalism.

Certainly such Socialist papers as I have read do not have that tone which one has a right to expect from the press of a class of reformers professedly advocating equal rights. It would seem that Socialists, just as strongly as non-Socialists, are imbued with the absurd idea that man is the race, woman his appendage. His own rights can never be secure until he is sufficiently developed mentally and morally to grasp the axiom that he is but one-half of that humanity of which woman is the other half. His kinship to her, however he may wish it to be otherwise and endeavor so to make it, is not a thing which he can put on and off at will; his destiny is inextricably bound up with hers, and until all womanhood is free some men will necessarily be under some phase of bondage to other men.

Even many advanced reformers do not seem yet to have realized that paper constitutions can never be a guaranty even of masculine liberties; that the only bulwark of free institutions is the spirit of those institutions in the hearts of the people themselves; and the hearts even of the masculine half of the people can never be imbued with the spirit of such free institutions as they ordain so long as manhood is freer, either in theory or in fact, than womanhood; for no statesmanship can keep a son from inheriting the servile nature consequent upon his mother's subordination, let it weigh ever so lightly upon her individually, or even only insensibly by transmission from the feminine sex collectivity.

No theory of government, however perfect in itself, can work out the ends it is designed to work unless the spirit of such government lives in the hearts of the people. If Socialists can realize this, let them prove that they really desire liberty and equality for all by seriously setting about educating Socialist men and working women to a sense of human rights for woman, which shall mean identically what is meant by human rights for man; for Socialist editors cannot be unaware that many men Socialists are far from the idea of sex equality, and that women themselves sadly need to be educated to a sense of their own rights. Nor should the stupidity or pusillanimity of the particular woman be allowed to discourage such effort; for it cannot be successfully disputed that woman, more hopelessly, helplessly and completely enslaved than any race or class of men have ever been or could ever be, has dared and sacrificed more to secure her own freedom than has any enslaved class of men known to history.

H. Augusta Howard.

THE BOGUS UNIONISTS

Editor the Herald: As you probably know, the Socialists of the country are just now being deluged with copies of a paper called the Nebraska Socialist, the reason for such liberality being that this paper has entered the ranks of that motley aggregation known as the "unificationists." It is a psychological phenomena that when there is a row on, or when some people imagine there is, certain types of humanity are attracted to the scene and are willing to contribute any amount of energy in contribution to it, just for the love of rows. And so we have the spectacle at this time, when all socialist pockets are supposed to have been drained by the demands of the recent campaign, of money and activity used practically for a thing that is at best the mere echo of a shadow. It is a pity this energy could not be used for propagating socialism, instead of being used to stir up dissension in the ranks of the organized socialists. These "unity" fellows are loud in their cry that the Social Democratic party (the real and original one—not the counterfeit article) is preventing harmony in the ranks in this country, but these bawlers for harmony show their insincerity when you put some point blank question to them. All you have to do is to ask them some of the following questions:

"If you want a united movement, why don't you join the party as an individual?"

"Why didn't the kangaroos do this in the first place?"

"What interest did they have that prevented such a course?"

"Was harmony secured by ignoring a plain referendum and setting up a rival party, and stealing our party name?"

"If the kangaroos wanted a harmonious movement why did they, and do they seek by all possible means to disorganize and disrupt the party already in existence?"

"As all that is necessary to secure unity is for the bawlers for unity to join the party, are they not the ones who stand in the way?"

"If a unity, so-called, were to be secured according to the program of the unity—or—bust fellows, what kind of socialism would they want us to have, the fusion—Silver Republican—middle class socialism of the Ricker—Kharas hypnotists, or the anti-public ownership socialism of the Chicago kangaroos?"

Other equally pointed questions suggest themselves. But the fact is that the "unity" cry is a bogus one, that the "unity" people are not themselves united as to their motives for working together in this crusade, against the harmony of the Social Democratic party, some having a desire to capture the movement for the sake of certain interests, others from the desire to use the movement for political trading with capitalist parties, others because they dream of great good to socialism by deluging the movement with the stranded radical politicians of the Democratic party, and others still because they like to keep up a row. Heretofore, most of these discordant elements have been held together by the "hot-air reports" of great success in downing our party sent out from Springfield. Now that Springfield is bankrupt and an admitted failure, they are trying to cover up their defeat as well as to provide themselves a crafty retreat, by renewing the cry for "unity."

Loyalty to the Social Democratic party is the short cut to unity.

NATIONAL PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this generation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

ATTITUDE TOWARD TRADE UNIONS

In accordance with our declaration of principles we declare that the trades union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the wage-working class. We recommend to the members of the Social Democratic party the following general rules:

First—Join the union of your respective trade.

Second—Assist in building up and strengthening the trade union movement.

Third—Support the union labels of all crafts.

Fourth—Educate your fellow-unionists on the question of Socialism and the labor movement, on economic and political lines.

Fifth—It shall be your duty to work for the unity of the labor movement, thereby recognizing the fact that the emancipation of the working class can only be achieved by the united efforts of this class.

Sixth—Educate the members of the unions in the principles of Socialism and induce them, individually, to affiliate with the Social Democratic party.

Seventh—Trades unions are by historical necessity organized on neutral grounds, as far as political affiliation is concerned. The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for proletarian emancipation.

NOTICE TO BRANCHES

The quarterly dues for the quarter ending Mar. 31 are due at the headquarters, 126 Washington St., Chicago, Ill., on or before Jan. 5. Prompt remittance is of the highest importance to insure the interests of the organization, and the branches are urged to provide for the collection, which should be begun at once.

SPECIAL CONVENTION

OFFICIAL CALL

To Members and Branches of the Social Democratic Party, Comrades:

RESPONDING to suggestions from all parts of the country and a demand from many branches, a special National Convention of the Social Democratic party is hereby called, to take place at the national headquarters, 126 Washington street, Chicago, Ill., beginning Tuesday, January 15, 1901, and continuing in session until the work of the convention shall have been completed.

The purpose of this convention will be to make such changes in the laws of the party and to make such other provisions as may be deemed necessary to meet the growing demands of the organization. It is our purpose to enter at once upon a vigorous campaign of agitation, education and organization, so that the party shall be fully equipped to meet the capitalist enemy on the political battle-fields of the future. Now that the presidential campaign is over, our work is fairly begun and must be carried forward with all possible energy without the loss of a single hour.

The basis and other conditions of representation will be the same as at the Indianapolis Convention, and are here incorporated as follows:

First—Each branch shall be entitled to as many representatives as the individual members thereof in good standing may select for that purpose; provided, that each representative shall be entitled to one (1) vote for each member whose signature is attached to his credential; and provided further, that no member shall have his signature attached to more than one credential.

Second—Branches not sending their own representatives may select those of other branches of the same state to represent them; provided, that in each such case the representative shall hold the proper credential with the signatures of members attached as herein provided.

Third—No member shall be qualified to serve as representative or entitled to representation who has not been a member of the party at least thirty (30) days prior to the opening day of the convention.

Fourth—All signatures of members attached to credentials shall be certified to by the chairman or secretary of their respective branches.

Fifth—The national secretary shall furnish each branch with a sufficient number of blank credentials for the purpose herein specified.

Unaffiliated Socialist clubs or societies whose members may desire to connect themselves with the Social Democratic party, are cordially invited to communicate through their proper officials with the Secretary of the National Executive Board, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

This call is issued to all branches of the Social Democratic party in good standing, as shown by the records at 126 Washington street, Chicago, and organized prior to December 15, 1900. The time and place of meeting and other details will be given in the Herald as soon as arrangements are completed.

SEYMOUR STEDMAN, Secretary.

FREDERIC HEATH, Chairman.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Ed. Evinger of Terre Haute gave an unmistakable proof of his unimpaired hustling qualities in the Christmas edition of The Toiler. It is a hummer, a recognition of Ed's stalwart service to labor by the business men of the Hut, and a deserved lift for a hard worker in the cause.

The comrades of Liberty branch, San Francisco, cherish the kindly and appreciative words of one of their number, Comrade Gordenker, now living at Glen Ellen, who says: "I want to die a member of Liberty branch, of which I feel proud. In the late trouble they were loyal and honest, and I am very happy at the turn the movement took."

Comrade Peter Curran, delegate from the British Trades Unions to the American Federation of Labor, passed the Christmas season in Chicago. During his stay we had the pleasure of a visit with this sturdy representative trades unionist and Socialist. On Monday he took luncheon with Comrades Theodore Debs, Seymour Stedman, Isadore Ladoff and A. S. Edwards. A more genial or manlier man than Curran would be hard to find. He made friends everywhere.

The "example of the worthy comrades" who have followed the tortuous and deplorable leadership of Ricker of Iowa has led to the formation by that individual of a new reform party in Nebraska made up of Ricker and Kharas, the populists, direct legislationists and silver republicans—all "Socialists." This last move of "unionists" is in line with Ricker's plan of "salvation," a "national convention of all Socialistically inclined persons, to be held in Chicago." 'Rah for "union"!

On the night of Dec. 15 the Social Democratic party gave its first love feast at Odd Fellows' temple. Three hundred Socialists and their friends enjoyed the supper, which was served in style, after which they were entertained by foreign and local speakers. Rev. Father McGrady, the eloquent speaker for our cause, held the audience spellbound for an hour, leaving them, without a doubt, much wiser and well stored with food for thought. His reverence was followed by Comrade Max Hayes of Cleveland, Ohio. The next speaker was Comrade Pete Curren of London, England, international delegate to the A. F. L. convention in Louisville, Ky. His remarks were very interesting and well received by all present. He also addressed Branch No. 4 at its meeting Sunday afternoon. Dr. J. W. Dennis also read a very interesting paper which, it is hoped, he will repeat at one of the branch meetings soon. In behalf of the local comrades the writer extends thanks to the visiting comrades of Dayton, Ohio; Lawrenceburg, Ind.; Aurora, Ind., and other places, who were present at our love feast. Come again, comrades, and bring others with you. A cordial welcome awaits visiting comrades.

R. J. W.

At a called meeting of Branch 4, Chicago, held at 1772 West Chicago avenue Sunday afternoon, Dec. 23, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That a certain resolution 'offered' somewhere (time and place unknown) by J. Wright, and purporting to have been adopted by over two-thirds of the members of this branch, was circulated in a surreptitious and underhanded manner, which no true Socialist would resort to; less than half the members saw it; no meeting of the branch was called to consider it; no opportunity was given for an exchange of opinion; had this been done, we have excellent reasons for believing that not more than half a dozen would have signed it; we, therefore, denounce this action as dishonorable and un-Socialistic and quite worthy of the methods resorted to by those advocating 'unionism' in Chicago."

Brockton Sends Thanks

The city committee, Brockton S. D. P., desire to thank all those that so liberally contributed to the Brockton campaign fund. Without their aid we would have had a hard struggle to meet the opposition that was put up against us. But right won and it is a victory for every Socialist in America. There will never be as hard a fight in Brockton again, for the two old parties did everything in their power to beat Comrade Coulter. Their efforts were in vain.

Any comrade not having receipt for funds sent will please send me their address. I will forward one at once. Thanking all again for their aid,

F. J. Burke,
Sec. City Com.

REVOLUTION AND REFORMERS

built in one day and dawn must precede day, the herculean task of emancipating the human race from its own irrationality and injustice to itself cannot be accomplished by a single stroke of the sword or pen. The masses of humanity have to learn a great deal in order to understand their own interests and how to consciously and rationally modify economic and social conditions in accordance with these interests. The masses have to learn a great deal and forget a great deal more, which latter may be a great deal harder than the first. The masses are born, reared and trained by the dominating and domineering classes in a slavish attitude of mind, in slavish virtues, which are the free man's vices.

There are three ways to learn: By original thinking, by imitation and by personal experience. The most noble of these three ways of learning—the original thinking—is done only by very few (O how few!) geniuses, while the masses of humanity live by the thoughts of other people, mostly of the past generations. The second method of learning is the easiest. Even apes and parrots can imitate. Unfortunately, however, the higher classes represent a very poor paragon for imitation by their high living and low thinking, by their arrogance, ignorance and false pretense. (The morals of the slaveholder were never much higher than that of his slaves and vice versa.) The third way of learning is the hardest and most certain of all three. Personal experience, however, does not enlighten everybody. A slave may know how hard his lot is and yet bear his chains complacently as long as he is a slave in thought and feeling, that means as long as he recognizes the institution of slavery as something legitimate, as long as he objects to slavery only on personal grounds and aspires to a slave driver or slave owner himself and not a free man among equals.

It is obvious that Social Democracy will have to do a great deal of uphill educational work, and for quite a while limit its political activity to gradual measures, to so-called reforms, without, however, leaving out of mind for a single moment the final goal in view. This way Social Democracy, being a worldwide revolutionary movement, may at certain periods in certain countries be engaged in reformatory activity, without being inconsistent, without losing its revolutionary character.

If, however, Social Democracy may at times engage in reformatory work, the question arises, What should be the attitude of Social Democracy toward reforms inaugurated or advocated by middle class parties? Middle class reforms may be divided in the following categories: 1. Reforms in the exclusive interest of the middle class, but pretending to benefit the people at large, as, for instance, the protective tariff in the United States. 2. Reforms having the appearance of radical measures, but destined only as a blind for the voting cattle in the hands of demagogues, as, for instance, the free silver movement. 3. Reforms having in view to discredit directly real radical reforms in the eyes of the unthinking multitude, as were the measures taken by the rulers of Rome during the agrarian agitation by the Cracchi brothers, in France by granting some demands of Blumigny, in Germany during the state-Socialism period of Bismarckian policy, and (4) bona fide reformatory movements of shallow, symptomatic, short-sighted ephemeral kind, as, for instance, single tax, prohibition and such like. We do not need to waste words on the first three kinds of middle class reforms. These reforms have to be fought by Social Democrats with all the weapons within their reach and power as strictly inimical to the interests of the toiling masses.

But what shall be our attitude toward the honest, sincere, fanatical blind leaders of the blind—like the single taxers, prohibitionists, anarchists and all the would-be reformers? All these people are utopians to a larger or smaller degree. They do not realize the complexity and lawfulness of social life, they do not care to study human society as a result of historical evolution and social statics and mechanics; they blindly believe in the miracle-working power of paper legislation. The worst of all is, however, that the middle-class reformers never arrive at the conclusion that it is futile to attempt to introduce a measure, however salutary to the oppressor, which is out of joint with the whole system of the social fabric that such a measure, even if introduced, would be either entirely inoperative or misused by the classes in power in their exclusive interests and to the detriment of the masses of the people.
